Fourier grabbed Ferris’s hand and forced him in front of Marcos—the man who acted formally—with a little push. The suddenness of it surprised him, but Fourier tapped on his shoulder, and…

“This is Ferris. Ferris is my friend, and she is going to be an elite healer in the future. You can depend on her if something happens. Even if your head gets cut off, Ferris will make it grow back safe and sound!”

“Your Highness, don’t you think you’re overestimating me a little?!”

Ferris panicked at his overvaluation. But Marcos narrowed his eyes at what Fourier had said. “Are you from House Argyle by any chance?”

A wave of anxiety washed over Ferris since his family name was suddenly brought up, making his breath catch in his throat. Fourier was tilting his head next to him, but it seemed like Marcos knew about his situation.

After looking at Ferris's animal ears, Marcos touched his square jaw, as if in thought. "No, I did not mean to pry. I was rude to you, His Highness's friend. My apologies if I made you uncomfortable."

Ferris shook his head and rejected Marcos's apology. "No… You didn't say anything bad."

The knight said nothing in reply and looked at Fourier. "You said that she is going to be a healer, so is she the person you mentioned before, Your Highness?"

"Correct! The healers have made the necessary preparations, right? Since that is what Ferris was invited here for."

"Everything has been taken care of. But the soldiers will start their training soon, so I humbly recommend leaving to go there now. And…" Marcos lowered his voice and whispered into Fourier's ear. "Lord Bordeaux Zergev will be coming today to conduct an on-site inspection."

"—? Is that a problem? It is true that Bordeaux is a bit noisy, but…"

After that Fourier frowned, and Marcos didn't look at Ferris so he wouldn't know they were talking about him. "Her ears and tail. Lord Bordeaux doesn't like demi-humans. So it would be better if he does not see him."

"Well, well, that is absurd. If you choose your friends by blood alone, then you will be the one who gets discriminated against in the end. Tell Bordeaux that for me."

"You can tell him that yourself, Your Highness. My status prevents me from making such comments," Marcos replied, taking a step back.

Fourier looked displeased and then gestured at Ferris to come with him. Following his lead, Ferris bowed to Marcos and left.

After they were out of his sight, Marcos tilted his head. “I thought the eldest child of House Argyle was a boy, but it turned out to be a cute lady.”

“I was told you have learned the basic uses of mana. So, you can learn the rest through practical experience. There is no shortage of injured here, after all. He-He-heh.”

The one who said that with his distinctive laugh was a skinny, white-haired court healer. It was the healer that had come to the castle upon Fourier’s request, and he was one of the most excellent healers in the kingdom’s employ. He wasn’t the only one, however, as several more had made their way to the castle as well. Rather extravagant indeed just to train Ferris. Ferris understood that it was Fourier’s good will, but…

“You must be joking again, Your Highness,” said a healer.

“I refuse to take part in this,” declared a third healer.

The number of healers complaining about being summoned unreasonably weren’t in the minority. They might have been talking in secrecy, but Ferris’s ears could easily pick up what they were saying about him behind his back. The thing that Marcos whispered into Fourier’s ear before was no exception.

“You do not look so well, Ferris. Don’t tell me you’re nervous?”

Fourier was being considerate towards Ferris who was facing down without knowing his subordinate’s disrespect and his smile made Ferris sad. It agonized Ferris’ heart further since he was fond of Fourier and felt indebted to him.

“The military training ground is next to the royal castle. It’s where they train the knights and city guards, but their training is intense, not to mention extreme, so they’re basically always bleeding and breaking bones, he-he-heh.”

The Skeleton Healer laughed at the place that pumped out injured people. It was unclear if he liked healing or just seeing blood and guts, but he seemed somewhat better than the other healers.

Ferris followed him around and learned by watching how he healed the injured knights and city guards. “So you don’t heal everything with healing magic,” he observed.

“The amount of mana an individual has is limited. It would be unacceptable to keep healing light wounds and then end up having no mana for the gravely injured. People become reckless when they think that wounds can be healed easily. If perfectly mastered, a healer can save someone on the verge of dying. It is a power that can twist fate depending on the situation.”

“Can save someone, on the verge of dying…”

Ferris reflexively clutched his chest since he was familiar with the situation the Skeleton Healer was talking about. It reminded him of the time he almost killed Crusch and saved her by unleashing some kind of extraordinary power.

“The power to save people is certainly amazing. But refrain from using your power excessively since when people get used to it, they start being reckless and end up losing their lives because of it. He-Heh-heh.”

“I feel like, I have learned a lesson…”

You can perform first aid on a simple cut or bruise by bandaging it or cooling it with water. Anyone can do it if shown how, too. The Skeleton Healer might have been unorthodox in a lot of ways compared to other healers, but Ferris honestly felt like he could learn a lot from him.

While he was in his thoughts, a voice reverberated throughout the training ground.

“—The knights have lost their edge. Everyone lacks spirit. Spirit.”

The voice belonged to a giant bald man standing at the entrance, his arms crossed as he looked around. The man was entering old age, yet his straight posture and trained body were full of youthful energy. There was a light buzz, and the healers—excluding the Skeleton Healer—rushed towards him.

“L-Lord Zergev!” a healer exclaimed. “What brings you to the training ground…”

“Don’t come near me. Such a nuisance. I stopped by since I was conducting an inspection. Fulfil your duty, your duty!” the old man shouted, spit flying, as he stepped into the grounds, driving away those who were trying to butter him up.

The atmosphere of the training ground suddenly grew tense, and the city guards who had been half-assing it until now kicked their training into overdrive.

On the other hand—Ferris hid himself in order to hide from the old man, Bordeaux. He was positive that he was the person who didn’t like demi-humans that Marcos mentioned.

Thinking that he would inconvenience Crusch and Fourier if he got found and worsened the old man’s mood, Ferris tried to make an early departure—but was soon stopped by Fourier, who had grabbed his shoulder. And then…

“Oh, Bordeaux! It has been a while. Have you been well?”

No one knew what he was thinking, but he charged straight at Bordeaux while pulling Ferris along. While Ferris was in a state of bewilderment, Bordeaux noticed them approaching and smiled. “If it isn’t His Highness Fourier. It is rare to see you at the training ground. Oh, maybe that isn’t the case. I have heard about it, Your Highness. That you have recently developed a passion for swordsmanship. If it’s fine with you, would you permit me to teach you a few moves?”

“No stop, you will hurt your back if you do things that aren’t good for your age. More importantly, I want to introduce you to my friend, Ferris.”

Marcos, and Bordeaux was friendlier than expected.

However, Bordeaux's expression turned cold when he saw Ferris. "Those ears and that tail… You are a demi-human—with all due respect, Your Highness, if I may give you any advice, then…"

"If you are going to tell me to choose my friends wisely, I will not hear it. I told you that I was going to introduce my friend to you. The friendship has already been established. Are you ordering a royal to throw away what he has acquired?"

"Y-Your Highness…"

Fourier, who was always smiling and often seemed somewhat oblivious to things, had a tense expression now and his voice was stern. The sight of that made Ferris speechless. Or perhaps you could say that everyone there was equally speechless.

"Introduce yourself, Ferris. In a way that you would not be ashamed to be my friend and Crusch's retainer."

Feeling something moving up his spine, Ferris stepped forward, obeying the command. He reverently bowed to Bordeaux, who was looking down at him. "I am honored to have been given the opportunity to introduce myself. My name is Felix Argyle. I serve as a retainer to the daughter of Duke Karsten, Lady Karsten."

"And Ferris is also a friend of mine. She will be a healer in the future as well. Is that clear, Bordeaux?" Fourier said, wrapping his arm around Ferris and pulling him in. "I will not allow you to humiliate my friend from now on, no matter what the reason may be. If you rashly demean others, your actions will eventually come back to haunt you. Never forget that!"

"Understood." Bordeaux knelt on the spot and bowed—giving his utmost respect. The old man then rose and looked at Ferris. "His Highness has given you his stamp of approval. Be fully aware of how big a deal it is. As long as you live up to his expectations, I will overlook your lineage and evaluate you fairly. You have my word."

Bordeaux lifted his face up and spoke in a voice that everyone in the training grounds could hear. “You knights have lost your edge! However, there is still hope yet for the kingdom we offer our loyalty to! The results of today’s inspection are good just from being able to confirm that. Train hard, warriors!”

Bordeaux took his giant body and left the training ground after laughing in satisfaction. A couple attendants followed after him, and Ferris finally felt himself relaxing.

“There was quite a commotion on day one. I am looking forward to this month-long apprenticeship. He-He-heh.” The Skeleton Healer laughed nastily thinking that it wasn’t his problem, and Ferris sighed.

He looked at Fourier next to him and then hesitated for a few seconds. “Th-Thank you very much, Your Highness. But…are you sure it’s okay to say something like that?”

“Hm? I shouldn’t have to tell you this, but my status is higher than that of Bordeaux’s! I am a royal! Even if he is a member of the Council of Wise Men, I am above him! There is no need for me to feel intimidated! Well, maybe I am, but only a little!”

“Hee-Hee…but it made me happy. Why did you say those things?”

Fourier, now back to his usual self, sheepishly rubbed below his nose with his finger. “Who knows, but my words were genuine. W-Well, I admit that Crusch played a bit of a role too… But you know, Ferris—it is the duty of men to protect women!” Fourier shouted, his arms crossed and wearing his usual cheerful smile.

Unable to hold it in after hearing what he said at the end, Ferris let out a hearty chuckle.

Ex 1:
The Dream the Lion King Saw

Anastasia’s Most Important Travelogue

1

It was a quite pleasant and sunny day.

???: “It’s so sad havin’ to go back and forth from the office on a day like this! I’ll take a stroll, come with me!”

And, just like that, the protest could be heard, along with the sound of a sheaf of papers hitting the desk. Julius, who was focused on reading in a corner of the room, couldn’t hold his giggles.

???: “Oy, Julius? Did ya hear what I said?

Julius: “Yes, of course. I’m sorry, I was lost in your beauty.”

???: “Look at you, talkin’ like that without a speck of guilt. I’m not like these girls from Lugunica that fall for your pick up lines.

Anastasia, the girl who proposed the stroll, was already grumpy and started pouting with the knight’s remark. She had her typical Kararagi accent, but don’t let the cute appearance and innocent mannerism deceive you. The girl called Anastasia Hoshin was, from Julius Juukulius’ perspective, one of the most influential figures in the kingdom today.

Julius: “Well, in any case, I’ll gladly accept the invitation. Will Mimi and Hetaro come as well?”

Anastasia: “Nah, no bodyguards today. I wanna walk alone with you, Julius.”

???: “Hey, I heard that! This is treason! Abultery!”—Mimi, listening to the conversation, didn’t like to be left behind.

Anastasia: “It’s ‘adultery’, Mimi. I’ll get dressed, can you wait for a bit?”

Julius: “Of course, milady. Take as long as you need.”

With that, Anastasia waved her hand and left the room. Ladies usually take a considerable amount of time to get dressed and, even though the president of the Hoshin Trading Company values efficiency above all, she didn't neglect the power of good looks. Which means, this is going to take a while…

Julius: "Mimi, let's wait for lady Anastasia in the living room, shall we? Can you go ahead and ask them to make us some tea?"

Mimi: "Yes, sir! Leave it to Mimi!"

Watching the little girl leaving the room all excited, Julius started to get himself ready to accompany Anastasia. If ladies get all dressed up to go out, it's the duty of men to prepare themselves to live up to them, to be worthy of their company.2

When Julius got to the living room after getting changed, Mimi was seated in front of the table where sweets and teas were served, anxiously swinging her legs. When she realized that the knight had arrived, the little girl's face broke into a wide smile, but soon frowned holding her nose.

Mimi: "Ung? Julius? Why do you smell like that?"

Julius: "I sprayed some perfume. Does it bother you?"

Mimi: "No! I just got a little startled! I'm not very good at diffefe-… differen-… direffentiate people by their faces!"

Julius then sat down in front of Mimi, who was enjoying the sweets on the table and, intrigued by her comment, asked:

Julius: "Does it mean that you guys identify us by our scent?"

Mimi: "If you are alone and you are someone I know, I can tell by looking. But when there are a lot of people it gets really hard. Then it has to be by the smell!"

Julius: "Hmm, I see… I'm surprised that you, cat demi-humans, rely so much on smell. I imagined that this would be the case for Captain Ricardo since he is a kobold."

Although, when it comes to that man, it wouldn't be surprising if he is only half kobold, since they are known to have short stature and Ricardo is over two meters tall.

Remembering the big man who is always speaking loudly with his characteristic Kararagi accent, another question came to Julius.

Julius: "You and your brothers are also from Kararagi, correct? Why don't you three have the typical accent from there?"

Mimi: "Ah, about that. Good question, good question!"—Mimi nodded and explained. —"That's thanks to the Great Elder! Mimi, Hetaro and Tivey learned to speak and fight from the Great Elder!"

Julius: "Great Elder…?"

Mimi: "He was an old man who showed us the way of life! He died in a cool way!"

Because of the way the kitten spoke, it didn't sound as serious as it should have, since it wasn't hard to imagine that this person was like a foster father for the triplets. And, apparently, an elder strong enough to train them to the point of being vice-captains of a troop like the Iron Fang.

And just when the conversation had come to an end, Anastasia appeared in the room.

Anastasia: "Sorry to make you wait. I'm ready."

She had changed into a garment called kinomo, a traditional costume from Kararagi. It was a long dress made from white fabric with aniseed floral patterns. Certainly a type of clothing that you hardly saw in Lugunica, but Anastasia looked great in it.

Julius: "I don't think I'll ever get tired of saying how good you look in your dresses, milady. It is as if they were made specifically for you."

Anastasia: "Jeez, he doesn't know when to give up… Well, not that it bothers me"—she smiled greedily, a little embarrassed. —"Mimi, I'm going out with Julius, but don't mess around. I don't wanna find anything dirty or broken when I get back.”

Mimi: “Hihi! Easy! This is Mimi’s specialty!”

The scene of a little girl hitting the table didn’t inspire a lot of confidence but, at that point, all that remained was to pray and leave the rest to the servants. Julius offered his arm to Anastasia, who gently accepted with her hand.

Julius: “Milady… Are you sure about wearing the scarf? I believe you will feel hot considering the weather today.”

As pointed out by the knight, despite the kinomo, she was still wearing her fox scarf, which, apparently, seemed to be her favorite. Although it was beautiful scarf, and clearly one of the highest quality, it really didn’t make sense to wear it on hot days.

Anastasia: “Ah, well, you’re right, but… I don’t mind it.”

Julius: “… I understand. And where are we going today?”

Sensing that it was a delicate matter, Julius didn’t insist and changed the focus of the conversation. The scarf could be many things, from a simple amulet to a powerful metia. Perhaps, when she feels a greater sense of trust between the two, Anastasia would reveal the truth.

Anastasia: “An impeccable knight indeed…”—whispered the girl, only to herself.

Anastasia: “Today I have no plan or goal! All I want is to clear my head a bit! This is a mission of utmost importance, you know?”

With that premise, the stroll between Anastasia and Julius began. Of course, from the beginning, the impeccable knight wasn’t worried about the “mission”, considering that they were in the capital, the largest city in the kingdom. Going to the commercial district was enough for Anastasia to forget her troubles amid all those shops and stalls.

Stall Owner: “What is it, little lady? Do you have a problem with my appas?”

Anastasia: “No, my problem is with you, the seller! Have you never stopped to think that your scary face and hoarse voice scare customers away? The appas are crying!”

Stall Owner: “Grr…! You brat…!”

Even now, she was arguing with a fruit vendor with a huge scar on his face. Luckily, the guy seemed to be a sensible man and Julius thought it was not necessary for him to intervene.

Julius: “Well… She doesn’t seem too concerned about not attracting attention”—the knight laughed at the scene his companion was making.

Although she was in a more than special position, being a candidate for the throne, there were not many people who knew this yet, so it was a matter that should be handled with great care.

Anastasia: “Phew… In the end he was a surprisingly reasonable man”—said Anastasia when she got back from the fruit stall.

Julius: “If he has the flexibility to accept criticism, he might have a good chance of prospering.”

Anastasia: “Well, that’s something I can’t say… We cannot forget about talent, or the lack of…”

What was hinted by the girl was clear, the fruit vendor had zero aptitude for being a salesman.

Julius: “If we are only talking about appearance, Captain Marcos of the Royal Guard is intimidating as well.”

Anastasia: “True, that fruit vendor would be able to compete with your captain… Humph, look at the subject we ended up in, Julius.”

The girl smiled at Julius’ joke, revealing all her graciousness that was being enhanced with the kinomo. She had an appearance that naturally caught the eyes of men and, as much as she loved saying that Mimi was adorable, she was not left behind. Or, perhaps, she was fully aware of it and used her poison in her favor.

Anastasia: “What? Is there something on my face?”

At the question, Julius shook his head sideways. Regardless of Anastasia’s true nature, the Impeccable Knight had already made his decision. The only thing was, he still wasn’t sure that the mysterious girl from Kararagi would choose him back.

Anastasia: “And here you go again, making this strained thoughtful face. Thinking too much will only end up attracting bugs, you know?”

With that comment, Julius reflexively took a hand to his face, only to realize that he had been tricked by Anastasia, who opened an innocent smile right away.

Anastasia: “I’m not telling you not to think, but there is no point in thinking about something if you can’t come up with an answer. Since I took you out for a walk, how about relaxing a little?”

Julius: “Relax…? Wait, by any chance, was today’s walk because of me…?”—Julius’ eyes widened in astonishment.

Anastasia: “I knew you hadn’t noticed. I could see that you haven’t advanced a single page of your book. Here, eat this appa.”

Speechless, he humbly accepted the fruit that was offered. Julius felt as if he had been scolded, that he wasn’t the only one who paid attention to others and even felt a little ashamed at having lost sight of himself.

Anastasia: “You know, I want to see you being yourself every now and then, without posing as something else. This was the secret goal of today’s stroll.”

Saying that, she rubbed the appa on her clothes and bit, completely ignoring it’s peel. It was not a very lady-like way of eating, but, being influenced by her, Julius did the same and felt the juice filling his mouth.

Julius: “Milady…”

Anastasia: “Hum?”

Julius: “This appa is still green, isn’t it?”

Anastasias: “Oh, true! Jeez, that guy! Even his appas are bad!”

Furious, the girl immediately turned and went straight towards the fruit vendor with the scar on his face. The not-so-Impeccable Knight, watching her back and feeling the slightly sour taste in his mouth, for some reason, couldn’t resist the sudden urge to laugh.

At least, those were his true laughs, without posing, fulfilling Anastasia’s secret goal while she wasn’t looking.

The Saga of the Great Duchess Crusch Begins: Days Without Her Follower

1

The Karsten Duchy in the Kingdom of Lugunica was known for its excellent governance and was one of the best domains in the kingdom. The ducal family there had been serving the royal house for generations, going all the way back to the kingdom's founding, and the current head of the House's—Meckart's—governance was highly regarded by both the kingdom and the people of his domain. For that reason, people had mixed feelings about his successor, who would have to carry on his legacy: his daughter.

The people of the kingdom that believed the rumors about her thought that she was a sword freak. And the people of the domain who didn't know her well thought her an odd girl, but the people who knew her true self had a different opinion altogether.

She—Crusch Karsten—was the only one who was of worthy enough character and skill to carry forth the ducal family name. She never stopped working hard and improving herself. She was uncompromising and hard on herself, so the people who knew her considered her a true noble. She was still so young, yet she shouldered such heavy burdens.

Due to her status, the change in her was immediately felt by everyone close to her.

"It seems like she hasn't been sleeping well at night," commented a servant.

"She hasn't been able to eat much," another servant added. "Lady Crusch used to eat a lot, but she's been leaving leftovers a lot lately…"

"She seems inattentive even when swinging her sword, which is dangerous," a third servant said.

The servants working in the ducal household were troubled by the change in Crusch, who they had known since she was but a babe. Meckart's influential servants, both the military personnel and the civil servants, had sensed the change immediately.

"I haven't seen it during her general culture lessons or while she is studying military strategy books, but…" said one of them.

"Her only acting like that during her free time makes it even more painful to watch," added another.

Everyone close to her agreed that her behavior was typical of her since she didn't try to cause trouble for others in spite of it all. And it rather impressed them. It was an attitude that was very reliable to have from a person that stood above everyone else—a ruler—but it wasn't something a 14-year-old should be prepared to do, much less an only-daughter.

Meckart, after listening to the opinions of the people who cared about her, slowly got up off the chair. It took him a while to get up, not because he didn't want to confront her, but due to being old and having weak joints.

"I have been acting strange lately…you say?" said Crusch, who had been summoned by Meckart, while furrowing her well-defined eyebrows.

She was a beautiful fourteen-year-old girl who looked mature for her age. Her amber-colored almond-shaped eyes and her lustrous, beautiful hair—both were like her mother's, which Meckart saw as his wife's mementos. His wife also had a fierce personality like Crusch's. It would be no exaggeration to say that winning her over and marrying her was the bravest thing he had ever done.

"Father?"

"Hm? Oh, yes, sorry, sorry. Well, it is just that I was thinking that you were starting to look more and more like Helena… Oh no, that is something unrelated. Well, yes, it was about how you have been lately."

"No, I am happy that you said I am becoming like my mother, but I cannot agree with what you said about me acting strange. In what way have I been acting strange?"

"I do not see any problems with how you conduct yourself, your studies, or your noble duties. We still need to talk about you dressing as a man but…the topic is different this time."

Crusch narrowed her eyes in the middle of his reply, giving Meckart the chills.

Crusch had started dressing as a man a few years ago; wearing men's clothing she liked and using strong and hard words. It was around the same time that she began devoting herself to the art of the sword.

Meckart had been trying to persuade her to stop for several years, but he had yet to succeed. However, that wasn't the issue here, and Meckart crossed his arms. "I have heard that you haven't been sleeping well lately. I hear you haven't been able to finish your meals either."

"That is…a periodical thing. Father, you also know that girls have such a thing that occurs each month."

"Huh?! Oh, aah, yes, of course, I know that, but…"

As a father, he could do nothing but lose his composure when a woman's issue was brazenly used against him. He was aware that he was being deceived, however, so he used that to press her for an answer.

"Crusch, stop lying. I know that, your periodical thing, has no relationship whatsoever with how you have been acting. I have already looked into it."

"Father, I can see the wind of lies blowing around you without having to look…"

"A-Anyway! You are acting strange! And I know what is causing that!" Meckart just came out and said it since it seemed like he was easily going to lose the argument.

Crusch seemed somewhat dissatisfied, but it seemed from her expression that she was now curious about the cause. Meckart, feeling like his stomach was churning after being stared at silently by the almond-shaped eyes that were like his wife's, then spoke about the cause of her current change. Which was—

"Crusch…you are in agony now because you are separated from Felix."

Crusch's eyebrow quivered when Meckart pointed it out. Conversely, as it was the only reaction she showed the whole time, he silently praised her willpower.

Felix Argyle—AKA Ferris—was Crusch's retainer, and he didn't serve House Karsten but Crusch directly. Just as the name suggested, his sex was male, but the way he spoke, dressed, and acted were all very feminine, so it was really hard to tell that he was a man at first glance.

He is greatly indebted to Crusch for a certain reason and is serving her with all his heart. Crusch reciprocates his subservience with an equal amount of kindness. Calling them an ideal master and servant—would be an exaggeration, but there is no doubt that they have an ideal relationship.

"Said Felix is mastering healing magic in the royal capital now. How you've been acting recently coincides with the amount of time he has been there."

"Father… I was wondering what you were going to say, but it seems like you are just overthinking things." Crusch smiled slightly and shook her head at Meckart's point. Seeing as her attitude remained unchanged, he was afraid he had missed the mark.

Crusch started speaking to Meckart, whose stomach was hurting, with a sigh:

"It is true that I have been worried about Ferris often while he has not been around. He went there due to the recommendation of His Highness, Fourier, so I am not worried about how they are treating him. It's just that the work at the clinic is extremely rigorous. But if we want Ferris to truly improve, then we need to let him stay there and gain experience in treating people who are close to dying. He is the kind of person who is prone to putting on a brave face. I do feel concerned that he will put others before him and wear himself out. If his healing magic's usefulness gets noticed by the clinic, then they might pull him away from my command…no, I do not think that something like that would happen, but it is obvious that they would want a highly capable healer like him…"

"Hold your earth dragons. I get it, you can relax. I know how much Ferris means to you."

Having talked more eloquently than he had expected, Meckart was overwhelmed.

He faced a similar situation when he made Felix talk about Crusch, but he did not think that he would receive the same passion from her.

It seemed like Meckart's daughter was head-over-heels for that cat-eared retainer—more than he had imagined.

"I hope you understand now."

Looking relieved, it seemed like Crusch was satisfied by Meckart's reaction. Her somewhat happy look wasn't something he could see often on his daughter. So Meckart smiled with a bit of jealousy towards the boy who was her retainer and said:

"Yes, I do—I understand, so let's go to the royal capital soon to see how things are going there."

And he set off to take care of Crusch's anomaly once and for all.

"Ooh! Crusch! Over here! It is I! Glad you came!"

She immediately heard an enthusiastic voice when the dragon carriage pulled up to the main gate of the palace. Meckart leaned out and saw a blond-haired boy—the Kingdom of Lugunica's Fourth Prince, Prince Fourier—welcoming Crusch, who had stepped out before him, with a broad smile.

Meckart, a duke, and his daughter, Crusch, were both in a position where they ought to show him his due respect, but they felt relaxed around him because he had always been friendly with them over the past few years.

“Thank you for taking the time to welcome us, Your Highness. I cannot express my gratitude enough for accepting my father’s request even while being so busy,” said Crusch, who wasn’t all too happy about visiting the royal capital, in a passive aggressive tone that was hard to catch.

“It’s nothing. I could never turn down a request from you. You can continue to count on me from now on! You can contact me if you have any business in the royal capital! Yes!” But the broadminded Fourier accepted it generously. More like, it was written on his face that he was extremely happy to be able to interact with Crusch.

The fourth prince has a crush on my only daughter, and if you were to ask me, ‘What’s so scary about that?’ I could only tell you: everything. But as a father, there is a part of me that honestly feels like it’s a lovely thing. If their relationship continues to grow, them standing side-by-side one day won’t be an impossibility. If that were to actually happen, I would at least—

“Meckart! I appreciate your effort! It seems like you were also worried about Ferris. Well, it is obvious since you are her father figure!”

“Huh? Ah, no, Your Highness, it isn’t like that…”

Fourier talked to Meckart who was pondering, with an unreserved expression and nodded. He tried to correct it but…

“That is right, Your Highness,” Crusch interrupted him. “Father forced me to come here with him this time. I told him that we should wait for Ferris and look forward to seeing how much she has grown when she returns but…he did not listen to me.”

“I see, I understand. But you should try to understand Meckart’s feelings. Parents will always love their children. In cases where someone is entrusted with a child, such feelings might fade away over time, but in Meckart's case, his feelings only grew in strength, so there's nothing wrong with what he did. That is what I think!"

"How profound," Crusch replied. "A great insight indeed… So, where is Ferris?"

Meckart was baffled since a rare thing had occurred during that conversation. Crusch unintentionally hiding her true feelings, Fourier making false inferences as usual but was touching on the core of the matter, and Crusch not being able to hide her true feelings.

Maybe it is due to my age, but I can't keep up with the pace of young people's conversations. Perhaps a change of governance in the ducal house might not be too far away.

"The clinic is really busy today, but Ferris is probably working at the training ground. People get hurt all the time there, so it is a good place to go if you want to improve your healing magic. Now, this way."

As Meckart was feeling like throwing in the towel, Fourier started making his way towards the training ground while explaining things.

Crusch was nodding along, but how much she was actually taking in was a mystery. Meckart followed them and noticed a subtle change of heart.

He wasn't aware of it till now due to being worried about Crusch, but there was something inside of him that was looking forward to seeing Felix at work. It was a surprising discovery for him.

"Though, I did not intend to belittle His Highness's words."

Meckart had never had the nerve to think of himself as a substitute for his father, but Felix was a lovely family member to him. A daughter that acts like a son and a son that acts like a daughter—it is somewhat of a strange combination, but I think I'm starting to accept them deep down.

“The brave men from the order of knights cross swords every day in the training ground. I also join them from time to time so that I might best you with the sword one day.”

“That must be…very stressful training for the soldiers.”

“That is right, that is right! Oh, it’ll come into view any moment now!”

The three of them reached the training ground without it being clearly stated what made it so stressful for the soldiers.

The training ground adjacent to the royal castle was a simple structure, it was just a stone wall built in a circle. The purpose of it was clear due to its simplicity, and the soldiers training there had high morale.

The environment in which steel clashed against steel and voices like angry shouts were exchanged seemed to be free of petty pride and laziness.

The passageway that Meckart and the rest went through led to a service entrance where they could look down over the entire training ground. Meckart looked down at it from there and searched for Felix. He was a boy who stood out no matter where he was, so he thought that he could find him quickly, but…

“There,” Crusch declared.

As one would expect, there was no one better than Crusch when it came to finding Felix. Meckart spotted the cat-eared boy immediately after following her line of sight.

Felix had taken off the girly clothes he usually wore and was wearing the healer uniform of the clinic, which was white and had blue lines. He placed his hand on an injured person and activated his healing magic with a serious face.

“Ooh, so she was there. Then, let us talk to her as soon as she is done with heagah!” Crusch came up behind Fourier, who had noticed Ferris a bit later, and covered his mouth. He squirmed, his face turning red. He did so not because she had covered his mouth, but due to the sensation he felt when she rubbed up against him.

“Your Highness, thank you for your consideration. But…”

“We were thinking of heading back without interrupting her work. Right, Crusch?”

Crusch, who was holding Fourier down, widened her eyes at Meckart’s words. She relaxed her lips and nodded.

She then released Fourier, who turned around with a still-reddened face. “I-I-I-I do not get it but…are you both fine with that?”

“Yes—this is enough. I shall reflect upon the tastelessness of my actions.”

Crusch bowed her head to Fourier, admitting honestly that she was worried about Felix.

Fourier looked troubled, but when he saw Meckart bow too, he said, “A-Alright, I get it. Your feelings were conveyed. That is enough. I will keep what happened today a secret from Ferris. That is what you want, right?”

“Yes. As expected of you, Your Highness, you are indeed most wise.”

“Ha-Ha, that goes without saying. But if you truly do intend on returning now, then you obviously have plenty of time to spare. Crusch, accompany me. A rare flower has bloomed in the garden.”

Crusch glanced sideways at Meckart after getting invited by Fourier.

Meckart smiled gently at his daughter’s gaze and nodded. “You can go. Do be careful not to bother His Highness.”

“Alright. Then I shall accompany you, Your Highness. Do show me those flowers.”

“Sure, sure! Then let us go. It is this way! Follow me!”

Fourier started trotting away, and Crusch followed after him, albeit walking at a slower pace. As he watched the two wander off, Meckart felt like everything was going to be okay.

Crusch will go back to normal now. My daughter’s ability to take care of herself is topnotch to begin with, so if the cause of her change gets dealt with, she’ll easily be able to go back to her usual self. That alone would have been quite the harvest, but I got twice the yield this time it seems.

“Best of luck… Do your best.” Meckart, his back facing the service entrance, narrowed his eyes and looked down at Felix working. It was as if he could see all the hard work Ferris, his son that he was proud of, was putting in.

I feel like the servants’ lukewarm eyes were not only directed at Crusch when they were seeing us off. I see, so Crusch was not the only one who felt lonely. Like daughter like father, we cannot look at ourselves properly, Meckart thought, his shoulders shaking from laughing uncontrollably.

Chapter 54:
Negotiations of an Alliance

1

Life is all about playing the hand you're dealt.

Whether it's your birth, your looks, your talent, skills you've honed through effort, or the goodwill you've cultivated— It all boils down to the same thing.

Subaru is painfully aware that he lacks in every one of those areas right now. Rem, by some miracle, affirms him completely, but he knows full well how far he is from the ideal Natsuki Subaru she sees. Compared to that ideal, the cards in Subaru's hand are few, and their quality is clearly inferior.

However when you're facing a real match, nobody wants to hear your complaints. Everyone has to play the hand they've been dealt.

All that's left is knowing when to play your cards, how to play them, and when to bluff.

"—The White Whale."

That single phrase, the name of a hand that would likely have the greatest impact among his face-down cards, caused a shift in the expressions of everyone in the room.

Crusch narrowed her eyes in contemplation and murmured the name, while Ferris glanced sideways at her master with a hint of worry. Russell, ever the merchant, furrowed his brow in disgust at the detestable name, and above all else—

"—!"

Everyone in the room must have felt a dark, potent surge of sword energy sweep through for a moment. Of course, those involved in combat felt it. Crusch, skilled in martial arts; Rem, of the Oni race;

Ferris, a member of the Royal Knights. However even Subaru and Russell, who had little connection to martial arts, distinctly felt the oppressive sensation, as if it were touching their very core through their skin.

The source was—

“My apologies. I am still inexperienced.”

Wilhelm, who had been meditating with his eyes closed, opened one eye and apologized without changing his expression. The old swordsman, who had apparently brushed every corner of the room with his honed sword energy, touched the hilt of the sword at his hip as if embarrassed by everyone’s gaze.

“I apologize for interrupting the discussion. I wouldn’t mind excusing myself from this place, but…”

“No, you can stay. I wish to hear your opinion.”

Crusch rejected Wilhelm’s quiet suggestion and gave Subaru a meaningful look. She propped her arm on the armrest, rested her cheek on her palm, and prefaced her next words with, “So?”

“The White Whale, a rather sudden word to be thrown out. Am I correct in assuming the White Whale you speak of is the ‘Fog Witchbeast’?”

“Yeah, it should be. The giant whale that spews fog and swims through the sky. —That White Whale. I know its next appearance, both the time and place. I want that information to be considered as leverage for an alliance.”

Subaru tilted his head at Crusch, asking, “What do you think?” and left the judgment to her. Crusch placed a hand on her chin, assuming a thoughtful pose. However, before she could make an initial decision—

“May I ask a question?”

It was Russell who raised his hand, requesting the right to speak. When Subaru nodded, allowing the question, he held up a single finger and said, “Then, if you’ll excuse me…”

“First and foremost, we must confirm something… Mr Subaru, do you truly grasp the value of being able to predict the White Whale’s appearance?”

“…At the very least, it could reduce the number of traveling merchants caught in the White Whale’s appearance. We could revise transport plans in advance, and I think it could reduce casualties too.”

“That thinking is far too shallow.”

Russell’s tone grew stronger as he cut off Subaru’s unconfident answer. He grandly waved his hand, sweeping his arm towards the large window of the hall, pointing outside.

“Do you know how many lives have been lost due to the White Whale, born from the Witch’s hand? Caravans unlucky enough to be swallowed by the White Whale’s fog, vanishing without a trace. The former Royal Knights who sought to subjugate the White Whale, only to be routed halfway through their mission. The White Whale is not just enormous; it is not merely terrifying.”

Russell’s attitude as he spoke of the White Whale’s terror was fervent. Subaru understood that it was an expression of self-mastery born of weakness, seeking to share negative emotions. When faced with an overwhelmingly powerful “enemy,” people tend to protect their fragile hearts by praising the enemy’s might.

“Avoiding it is the most crucial thing of all. At the very least, if one can foresee the appearance of the White Whale, a symbol of disaster for merchants, it holds meaning and value beyond ten thousand gold!”

Clenching his fist, Russell passionately declared the value of the information Subaru possessed. However,

“But,”

He suddenly extinguished the passionate light in his eyes, unclenching his fist and waving his hand flippantly.

"Even that value of ten thousand gold only holds meaning if the accuracy of that information can be trusted. Mr Subaru, you stated that you know the next appearance of the White Whale. However if you have no means to prove it, it is merely wordplay meant to mislead."

"Russell Fellow has largely spoken my thoughts. I would like to hear the basis of your statement."

Crusch followed Russell, who shrugged with a pleasant smile, and questioned the authenticity of the information Subaru presented.

In response, Subaru felt a cold sweat trickle down his back. However, he managed to maintain a defiant smile on his face, struggling to keep any weakness from showing. While enduring, he played his next hidden card to those who had taken the bait. Carefully, exactly as he had prepared beforehand.

"The reason I can predict the White Whale's appearance is due to this."

He spoke, pulling something from his pocket and placing it on the table with a thud. Everyone's expressions stiffened slightly as they looked at what had been slid into the center of the table, surrounded by them all. —Immediately after, confusion uniformly clouded their eyes.

"Natsuki Subaru."

"Yeah."

Subaru responded to Crusch's quiet call of his name, puffing out his chest without fear. Without commenting on Subaru's audacious demeanor, Crusch pointed to the object sitting in the center of the table.

"What exactly is this?"

She pointed at the exotic item from another world, with its striking black sheen —a cell phone— and tilted her head at Subaru.

Subaru's precise knowledge of the White Whale's appearance was a mischievous twist of fate, a culmination of many coincidences. While such twists usually spell fatal situations for Subaru, this time, it worked in his favor.

During his third loop, when he encountered the White Whale, Subaru had his cell phone with him. In the dark carriage, he'd been searching for a light to check the map and had just managed to find his phone in his luggage and turn it on. With only a little power left, the phone brightly cut through the darkness, perfectly serving its purpose.

Though, immediately after, he ran into the White Whale, rendering both checking the map and securing transportation utterly futile—

"In that moment, at that instance."

The carriage next to them had vanished, and Subaru held up his phone to peer into the darkness. That's when his eyes met a massive eye that appeared from beyond the dark, peering back at him.

Immediately after, Rem's preemptive strike plunged them into battle. As he was flung through the air by the White Whale's roar and tail swipe, fragmented, continuous images, like a stop-motion film, burned themselves into Subaru's mind. Among those images was his phone, flying from his hand, and on its screen, clearly displayed, were the numbers: "3:13 PM".

Given that day and night had flipped when he was summoned to this world, that time wasn't a pure indicator of the hour. However, if seen as a reference point from a different scene, it held significant meaning. More than anything,

"It's no wonder you wouldn't know. This is what you'd call a 'magic device' excavated from my hometown. This is the basis of my statement."

—The cell phone itself, with its unknown origin, could be a useful weapon in negotiations.

Russell, eyes wide at Subaru's statement, was the first to reach for the phone. Just before his fingers touched it, he seemed to realize he was being too hasty and asked, “May I touch it?” Subaru nodded, watching him pick it up.

“It has a rather strange texture. It feels like metal, yet it isn’t. The surface is smooth… Does this part open?”

Russell let out a small gasp of surprise as he opened Subaru’s flip phone, a “Galapagos phone” in his world, and light spilled from it. The standby screen usually displayed an anime character, but before this meeting, he had switched it to a standard clock face. Even if someone fiddled with it, they’d only find the sparsely populated contacts list.

“It lights up, and the pictures changes… No, but I can’t discern the content. Are these unfamiliar characters, or perhaps… pictures?”

The screen flickered, displaying a second hand animation, but people in this world, whose concept of a clock’s form was entirely different, couldn’t understand the meaning of the clock face. The numbers at the bottom of the screen, indicating the time, were likewise incomprehensible; at best, they’d appear as geometric patterns writhing about. This was only natural, as Subaru experienced similar feelings of wonder every day.

“You can operate it… is that what you’re saying?”

Subaru chose his words with utmost care in response to Crusch’s question. When facing Crusch —no, in any situation where Crusch was present— there was one crucial condition to avoid. Subaru’s mind was fully engaged, choosing his words to avoid stepping on that landmine.

“So, you are saying this. —This ‘magic device’, as you call it, acts as a ‘warning stone’ that signals the approach of the White Whale.”

“I haven’t heard of a warning stone, but I suppose so.”

From the name, it was likely some kind of magic ore that served as an alarm in this world. He guessed it was a tool that reacted to sounds, presences, or mana movements, emitting light or warning sounds.

“A magic device that signals the approach of the White Whale… What’s your assessment, Russell Fellow?”

“Honestly, I’m at a loss. Magic devices vary greatly from individual to individual, and it’s rare for identical ones to be unearthed. Communication mirrors, for which replication methods have been established, are merely exceptions among exceptions… Therefore, it’s difficult to verify the true purpose of this magic device.”

Asked to judge a tool outside his knowledge, Russell avoided making baseless conjectures. Currently, Russell’s position was not yet aligned with either Subaru’s or Crusch’s; he remained a benevolent third party. The course of the negotiations would significantly influence his own stance. Naturally, his eyes were stern as he assessed which side would benefit him.

As a result, Crusch, having been refused an answer by Russell, furrowed her brow in difficulty.

“In that case, there appears to be no way to verify its authenticity. It is difficult to take your claims at face value. What do you propose?”

“Indeed, it’s a tricky situation. If only there were some way to prove it.”

Spreading his hands, Subaru turned to Crusch with a gesture that implied he was at a loss. She squinted one eye skeptically at Subaru’s attitude and words, then exhaled a small “Hmm.”

“Shall we try bringing it close to a witchbeast to make it activate? Or is there someone who can prove that this magic device reacts to witchbeasts?”

“Let me correct you on one thing.”

Raising a finger, Subaru waved it, aiming to playfully retaliate against Crusch.

“The magic device doesn’t react to witchbeasts themselves. If it did, it would be constantly ringing senselessly due to all the witchbeasts living all over the place.”

“—Meaning it only reacts to the threat of witchbeasts?”

Crusch responded to Subaru’s point, then was about to dismiss it with a scoff, “Such a convenient tale…” But before she could react,

“—Ah.”

Someone let out a small sound, a sigh of understanding. It was none other than Rem, who still had her fingers on Subaru’s sleeve.

She put a hand to her mouth, as if embarrassed that her own thoughts had intervened in the conversation, but before Crusch could hear her apology,

“That was an interesting reaction, Rem. Do you have any idea?”

At Crusch’s probing voice, Rem briefly glanced at Subaru’s profile. Seeing gratitude and concern in his eyes, Subaru nodded to reassure her.

“If you have something, you can tell them.”

“—Yes. If Subaru says so.”

With permission, Rem stepped forward, turned to Crusch, and, pointing to the cell phone on the table, said,

“As it concerns matters within the domain, I cannot speak in great detail, but… Recently, there was an incident involving witchbeasts. Lord Roswaal himself acknowledges that Subaru was the one who acted most swiftly to resolve the situation.”

“An incident involving witchbeasts —and you realized its precursor with this magic device?”

“It was the kind of problem that would have been too perceptive to notice without any reason.”

Fearfully, Rem slightly tilted her head, glancing at Subaru. She must have privately wondered how Subaru had detected the Juggernaut incident. Her doubt, or rather, pure question, was now being resolved by the “magic device” Subaru had presented.

Crusch’s gaze, hearing Rem’s answer, silently pierced her. Her sharp eyes seemed to pour consciousness into Rem’s, creating the illusion of seeing through to her very core. Only a few seconds passed, but it was a period of oppressive pressure that felt as though it drained physical strength.

“—You are not lying.”

Crusch stated, indicating a certain understanding and trust in Rem’s answer. Hearing her words, Subaru struggled to keep his blatant relief from showing on his face, but inside, he couldn’t help clenching his fists and giving a silent fist pump.

Of course, everything Subaru had said about the “magic device” (the cell phone) and its functions was nothing but a grand, utterly baseless bluff. It was a charade built on layers of bluffs, and if the truth of its falsehood were revealed, it would be considered rude at a negotiation described as “equal” and an act of barbarism that could warrant being cut down.

However, Subaru had managed to completely deceive them by carefully choosing his words and skillfully steering the conversation.

In response to Crusch’s questions, Subaru had not lied even once. The cell phone was not a device that randomly rang at the presence of witchbeasts, and Subaru, who was even too lazy to use its email function, certainly wasn’t “mastering” its features. He had navigated situations where he couldn’t get by with silence and diverted the topic, and the most challenging part, getting a third party to affirm the “magic device’s” function, he had somehow achieved by guiding Crusch’s interest towards Rem, who unconsciously spoke in Subaru's favor. Subaru had predicted that if he brought up the "magic device" reacting to witchbeast threats, Rem would connect it to the Juggernaut. Indeed, Rem linked the Juggernaut incident with the phone, and her reaction perfectly captured Crusch's interest.

Rem had simply spoken what she believed to be true. However, that understanding was different from the actual truth.

"You speak as if you can tell whether someone is lying."

"To boast, that is precisely the case. Observation skills—that sounds good, but in reality, it is the blessing of the 'Divine Protection of Wind Reading' bestowed upon me."

Crusch responded to Subaru's probing remark with an unexpected answer. Subaru had always thought Crusch's "ability to see through lies", which she mentioned in a previous loop, was simply due to her sharp insight.

"To read the wind means to use what is unseen as a basis for judgment. Naturally, my eyes can see the 'wind' surrounding a person. When one speaks falsehoods, a certain wind blows around them. —Rem had none of that."

"Oh, oh, I see. I didn't know that."

"A wind of agitation is blowing, Natsuki Subaru. Well, it would be extremely unfair for you not to know about my Divine Protection of Wind Reading in a negotiation."

Subaru struggled to hide his inner turmoil, forcing a strained smile at Crusch's blunt and somewhat malicious remark. A Divine Protection that allowed one to inevitably discern the truth of another's words was a kind of cheat. Even if it was just discerning "yes" or "no," it could be a vile tactic in a negotiation, where words were like cards being played.

At any rate,

"Regardless of your current demeanor, what Rem said contains no falsehood. At the very least, it serves as evidence that you possess a means to detect the threat of witchbeasts in advance."

Crusch, trusting her "Divine Protection of Wind Reading" after questioning the veracity of Rem's words, overlooked the cunning loophole Subaru had prepared. Subaru felt guilty for attempting to deceive such a noble opponent, but he showed no trace of his inner turmoil on the surface. He understood that his excuse, that he wasn't intending to tell a fundamental lie, wouldn't hold water.

They had both clarified their positions and resolved to face each other in a negotiation. Therefore, he should feel no guilt about choosing a method to play the cards in his hand in a way that made them look good to his opponent. Furthermore, lacking the resolve to "lie" completely would be the height of rudeness.

"Can you trust the effect of this magic device?"

"That would be premature. Though I could discern there was no underlying connection, it is still the defense of one's own attendant. This is a judgment that could affect the future of the Royal Selection—and by extension, the future of the kingdom. It cannot be made lightly."

Subaru's plan to persuade her here was, as expected, dismissed. Information on the White Whale's appearance—he seemed to have gained a minimum level of credibility for it, but only enough for it to be discussed further rather than laughed off. To raise that credibility and elicit the answer Subaru desired—

"—Can my company join the discussion about that magic device?"

Suddenly, a voice rang through the room, one belonging to no one else present. Surprised, Subaru hastily turned to see someone leaning against the open hall doors, tapping the door with the back of her raised hand.

"Isn't it strange that the person who called me is the most surprised, huh?"

She looked at Subaru's dumbfounded face, then let her soft features twist into a mischievous smile, gently running her fingers through her wavy, light purple hair. Her soft hair, reaching her waist, resembled dandelion fluff, and her gentle features naturally conveyed a sense of peace to others. However, the eyes that formed her smile held an unwavering, predatory glint, and within her mind resided a monster of the economic world, where numbers fiercely competed.

"—Anastasia Hoshin."

Crusch quietly murmured the name of the visitor in a low voice. In response, Anastasia, whose name had been called, smiled and said, "Thank you kindly."

"I rushed here because I was summoned, but starting a business discussion without me is quite unfair, isn't it? Such an interesting and profitable venture… Can I join in too?"

Saying the opposite of her cheerful tone, Anastasia crossed the hall and moved towards the center. Subaru held his breath as she walked, sending a fleeting, anxious glance behind her. The open doors slowly closed, and no other visitors followed her in—

"Julius isn't coming, so rest assured, okay?"

"—!"

Anastasia quietly revealed this as she passed Subaru, seeing through his inner agitation. When she met Subaru's surprised gaze with her profile, she shrugged with a troubled "Oh, no, no…"

"Right now, Julius is under disciplinary confinement by the commander's orders. He's in the middle of being punished for meddling with another child without his lord's command. What a troublesome knight."

"Confinement…"

Subaru couldn't hide his surprise at learning this unknown fact, repeating the word like a parrot. He had assumed the incident at the training grounds was a consensus among the Royal Knights, and that his humiliation would be buried without ever becoming public.

He glanced sideways at Ferris, who smiled back at Subaru with an innocent expression. If Ferris had known and hadn't told Subaru— That was quite harsh. Or perhaps, had this been Subaru even half a day ago, he would have laughed at Julius's predicament, feeling good about it, and never considered it a lesson for himself. Perhaps his knight had known that.

At any rate,

"You were summoned… Does that mean Natsuki Subaru summoned you?"

"It was his cute girl attendant, actually. Normally, I'd be turned away at the gate, but… being a Royal Selection participant, and hearing talk of selling 'White Whale' information, I couldn't not come."

Anastasia replied to Crusch's question, looking at Subaru. Subaru nodded, dropping his chin in response to her gaze, and felt the situation shift dramatically.

—With this, everyone he wanted at this negotiation table was finally gathered.

Crusch, as an equal alliance partner. Russell, representing the royal capital's merchants, added to contend with Crusch. And now, Anastasia, Crusch's rival candidate, also competing with Russell—

"Excuse me, but I have a question, Mr Subaru."

"Ah, what is it, Russell-san?"

Raising his hand, Russell posed his question, keeping Anastasia in his sight. Subaru nodded, and he touched his chin beard, prefacing his words with, "I certainly hope not, but…"

"I would like to ask the true intention behind inviting Lady Anastasia to this meeting. She is a Royal Selection candidate, and the Hoshin Trading Company, while new, has influence even among the royal capital's merchant guilds. As this makes my position in this meeting unclear, I cannot help but ask."

“Would you be mad if I said it was to weigh options?”

Subaru replied, closing one eye, and the air in the room instantly changed. Russell’s face showed discomfort at his suspicion being confirmed, and Crusch’s meditative expression became stern. Only Anastasia’s demeanor remained unchanged, the predatory gleam in her eyes, present from the start, not wavering in the slightest.

“So, you are saying this? —That you intend to pit Anastasia Hoshin and my house against each other, to see who will pay more for the ‘White Whale’ information, and then choose your ally based on that?”

“…”

“If so, that is a truly shallow choice, Natsuki Subaru.”

Crusch unleashed her assertiveness on the silent Subaru, standing up from her chair and facing Anastasia. Naturally, with their height difference, Anastasia had to look up at her, but,

“Oh, this is nice, Ms Crusch. A person at the top, afraid of being pushed down from below… Seeing that face gives me shivers.”

“I wouldn’t call that good taste. Though, for one who makes their desires the correct path, perhaps it is a natural judgment… However, my stance remains unchanged.”

Crusch received Anastasia’s provocative words with a serious expression, then averted her gaze from her and pierced Subaru with sharp eyes.

“As you’ve heard, Natsuki Subaru. If you are expecting a bidding war between my house and the Hoshin Trading Company, I must tell you you are mistaken. My house has no more reason to cling to the White Whale information than the merchant factions do. Therefore, there is no reason for us to play into your intentions…”

“Whoa, hold on, both of you, calm down!”

Subaru held out his hand towards Crusch, who seemed about to cut off not only the White Whale discussion but also the alliance negotiations entirely, feeling quite flustered internally. Crusch, taken aback by Subaru's words, inadvertently fell silent. Behind her,

"By 'hold on', do you mean your purpose isn't to drive up prices between candidates?"

Russell, who had been observing the scene and hoping to gain an advantage, tilted his head. Subaru nodded in response to his question.

"I don't think I can manipulate anyone that easily. I know very well that my hands are small… I can barely manage to hold just one person's hand."

He idly waved his empty hand, and it was gently enveloped by a warm palm from the side. It was Rem. She softly clasped Subaru's trembling fingers, and when he turned to her, she nodded with a faint blush on her cheeks.

"So, yeah, that's it— I can barely hold anyone's hand…"

"Ah, yes, yes, how touching. So, what happens next with the discussion?"

"My apologies. Um, what I mean is…"

Flustered by Rem, who had become more physically affectionate since his confession, Subaru drew courage from the warmth in his palm and resumed the conversation.

"I played the White Whale card, invited two leading merchants from the capital, and created this grand situation… Now, I have a proposal."

Snapping his fingers, Subaru drew everyone's attention and bared his teeth in a fierce grin. Boldly, confidently, without a hint of weakness or hesitation, Subaru slowly pointed his snapped finger at Crusch.

"Will you listen?"

"—It was I who interrupted your story and stated an incorrect conclusion. Therefore, I have an obligation to consider your proposal. Speak.”

Crusch stood with her arms crossed, facing Subaru with a dignified posture. The oppressive wind intensified, making his skin prickle with unavoidable goosebumps. Even Anastasia looked at Subaru in the same way, the pressure simply doubled—if he were alone, he would have likely joked and laughed it off and fled.

The sensation in his clasped hand returned sharply. He hadn’t been called by name, nor had they exchanged any secret signals. Purely and simply, Subaru was happy with Rem’s feelings. That alone was enough for Subaru to fight even the Witch.

He closed his eyes, held his breath for a moment, and felt thought and oxygen circulate in his brain. They would take the bait, he was sure. He had thought, thought, and thought it through. He had replayed the first, second, and third loops in his mind countless times, gathering the information he had gained and forming a predicted scenario. It wasn’t certain. He hadn’t heard it from anyone’s mouth. However, there was information to be gained from this very negotiation, and that scenario suggested a single possibility. Whether it was a convenient illusion for him, or a miracle that would make his three deaths not in vain— Now, it was time to play.

“Crusch-san, your…”

“…”

“My information will definitely be useful for your planned subjugation of the ‘White Whale’.”

—Subaru’s knowledge of the future and Crusch’s objective.

The shared objective of both aiming for the “White Whale”—that was precisely the basis for Subaru judging her —Crusch Karsten— to be a suitable alliance partner.

Silence fell upon the hall, giving everyone a moment to think.

It gave time to Crusch, Anastasia, Ferris, Wilhelm, and Russell. Each of them, reflecting on Subaru's recent words, closed their eyes as if to ponder their meaning.

That silence, though only a few seconds long, pressed down on Subaru's mind with immense pressure. His stomach ached, his insides screamed, and a high-pitched pain, like an iron bar striking his skull directly, vibrated in his teeth.

He had taken a gamble. He had made his move. From this point on, unlike the previous flow of conversation, this wasn't something he could clearly simulate. He couldn't imagine the reactions of others; he just had to adapt to the flow of the situation. First, how would Crusch react to his opening gambit?

"One thought I must question, Natsuki Subaru."

Breaking the silence, it was Crusch who spoke first. She uncrossed her arms, raising a single finger from them and pointing it at Subaru.

"Where did such a wild idea come from? Why do you believe my house would be contemplating such a thing?"

Her monotonous voice showed no agitation or confusion; no emotion was conveyed. Her dignified demeanor as a ruler permeated her every action, and Subaru, naturally intimidated, looked away, preambling with, "Um…"

"Rem."

"Yes."

"Give me a good smack on the back."

"Yes."

After saying it, he thought, "Ah, 'good smack' might be an overstatement", but it was too late. A tremendous impact, a fierce, dry sound, exploded, and Subaru momentarily thought his insides had all fallen out through his stomach from the sheer force.

Of course, she must have held back to some extent, but the clear, reddish imprint of her small palm must have been etched onto Subaru's back. Setting that aside, Subaru refocused himself with the pain and warmth, and turning to the others who were watching the exchange with surprise, he said,

"My apologies for the unsightly display. I just needed a little wake-up call."

"…To correct oneself's spirit when cowering before a challenge is something everyone can relate to. I shall not blame you. Before tackling something grand, I, too, sometimes rely on the superstition I was taught long ago: writing 'enemy' on my palm and swallowing it, to, in turn, 'swallow' my opponent."

"Lady Crusch, Lady Crusch. Ferris taught you that charm ages ago. Are you still remembering it?"

Ferris approached, confessing his past mischief in a low voice. Crusch, with a slight surprise on her brow, said, "What…?"

"It was a lie?"

"It's not a lie if it helped clear Lady Crusch's mental doubts, even if it's unprecedented. Ferris is happy to be of help to Lady Crusch."

"Is that so? You thought of me? Then I forgive you."

Watching Crusch so easily fall for Ferris's glib words, Subaru felt as if the difficulty of the negotiation had somewhat decreased, and he was a little encouraged. At any rate, with such a surprisingly silly exchange between master and servant unfolding, Anastasia also put a finger to her lips and tilted her head, saying, "Hmm."

"I also do a charm before important business negotiations. If I put gold, silver, and copper coins in a bag and jingle them by my ear, courage wells up… What's with that face?"

"I just thought, 'This isn't the conversation of people competing for the top of the country', that's all."

Subaru decided to dismiss their comments as trivial matters before an important one, and he closed his eyes to their remarks. Anastasia pouted her lips in dissatisfaction at Subaru's reaction, fiddling with the fur stole she was wearing, the same one she wore at the Royal Selection today.

"Well, enough with the breaks… I want to hear the rest of what you were saying earlier. Would you mind continuing?"

"Ah… Sorry for making you go to the trouble."

He muttered the latter part so quietly it was almost inaudible. Anastasia simply waved a small hand in response, not mentioning whether she had heard him. It was clear that her interaction with him just now was a deliberate attempt to buy Subaru time to collect his thoughts. While it was highly likely that Crusch and the others were being genuine, Subaru took advantage of their goodwill to organize his thoughts once more before speaking.

"The first strange feeling I got was when I heard about iron products —in other words, weapons— being bought and sold at high prices."

Slowly, as if savoring each word, Subaru gathered scattered pieces of information. These were bits of knowledge he had gained in the first, second, and third iterations.

"There's a place that's collecting large quantities of weapons and armor that used to be dirt cheap. I found out it was Crusch-san's place by just wandering around the merchant street, more or less."

Was it someone among the traveling merchants who had laughed, wondering if she was preparing for war? In fact, Subaru had deduced that Crusch was preparing for war.

The difference in their thinking was that her opponent was not humans, but a powerful Witchbeast.

"It seems they were collecting them quite rapidly, enough to affect the market. So quickly, and what's more, they were gathering weapons in the capital, not in their own territory. It's only human nature to think something must be up, right?”

“To connect that to the ‘White Whale’ is too far-fetched. The ‘Whi’ of ‘White Whale’ hasn’t even come up. It’s true that my house is collecting weapons and iron, but you can’t assume it’s for the purpose of subjugating the White Whale, can you? It could be that we’re simply gathering forces and aiming to take over the country by force, ignoring the outcome of the Royal Selection.”

If the person he faced was great, then he believed he had enough discernment not to misjudge them. There was likely no one whose character was as unwavering, even from a distance, as Crusch. Could he harbor such doubts about someone who embodied sincerity and integrity?

To Subaru’s reply, Crusch briefly said, “Is that so?” Then, looking at Subaru with an intrigued gaze,

“Even so, I am somewhat surprised. I had fully expected your presence in the lower city during the day to be merely a pastime to pass the time— It seems I was the one lacking discernment. Forgive my underestimation.”

“Yeah, ah, that’s right. I mean, I wasn’t just fooling around, you know.”

Guilt pricked at him as Crusch exhaled in admiration. In truth, her assessment was remarkably accurate. Subaru’s character, as he justified himself after the fact, would be fully affirmed by the underestimation she had held of him until now.

Shaking his head and regaining his composure, Subaru continued, looking at Crusch.

“When I realized you were collecting weapons, I naturally thought it was preparation for war. The question was what you were trying to fight, but… that, well, a certain merchant let it slip.”

“A certain merchant?”

Recalling his earlier wanderings in the lower city, Subaru lightly obscured the part where he had gained the hint. Regarding the part Subaru obscured, Crusch closed one eye and looked meaningfully at Russell with the other. At her gaze, Russell flinched as if saying, “Oh, no,” shaking his hands and head to deny any suspicion. Perhaps finding no deceit in his demeanor, Crusch merely let out a somewhat uncomprehending sigh.

In fact, it would likely be impossible to detect any trace of a lie from Russell at this point. However, the suspicion was not wrong. The one who had uttered the words that made Subaru suspect Crusch was targeting the ‘White Whale’ was none other than Russell himself.

Subaru had first met Russell in the previous iteration when he was returning from a discussion at Crusch’s mansion. At that time, his meeting with Crusch seemed to have broken down, but Subaru hadn’t forgotten what he had answered Wilhelm’s question on his way out.

—That if Crusch’s plans succeeded, it would be a welcome development for merchants like themselves.

If he had made that statement in anticipation of Crusch becoming queen, then the apparent breakdown of the meeting didn’t make sense. Yet, if there were other possibilities that would benefit Crusch and Russell—and by extension, the merchants of the capital —

“Crusch-san is almost single-handedly leading the Royal Selection, but it seems she’s not very popular among the merchants. My usual fruit vendor was complaining about it.”

“I won’t deny it. It’s most profitable to draw money from where it is. I admit that commerce in my territory incurs taxes.”

“However,” she continued, acknowledging Subaru’s point,

“I intend to repay that in the form of security, however— I am aware that from an outsider’s perspective, that benefit is difficult to convey.”

"Indeed. Unlike those who benefit directly in Crusch-san's territory, merchants in the capital can only judge Crusch-san's character based on superficial information."

It was true that she, as a ruler, managed her territory well. However, those not in a position to witness her abilities firsthand could only base their assessment of her on superficial information they had heard or seen.

Just as Emilia was shunned simply for being a half-elf. She, too, was shunned by those who only saw the negative aspects of her harsh way of life.

"So I thought, Crusch-san probably doesn't like people who judge others superficially, but sometimes even those people need to be won over as allies. So, what's the best way to improve their perception…?"

"If people judge you based on bad superficial stories… then you just need to cover up that superficial bad story with a good one, right?"

Anastasia took over the end of Subaru's sentence and stated her conclusion. Then she looked up slightly as if reviewing the current conversation, and a smile spread across her lips.

"Well, it's a convenient story, isn't it? Things aren't that simple, and there's a high possibility of miscalculation to begin with. Aren't you stretching things quite a bit to fit your narrative?"

"I can't deny it. It's certainly true that Crusch-san is collecting weapons and that she's trying to win over merchants with something big. But whether that connects to the White Whale is wishful thinking. Perhaps it is just because I know the White Whale will appear soon, and I'm just linking it to that."

But, he continued, looking directly at Crusch. Crusch's expression, as she met Subaru's gaze, showed no emotion, making it impossible to discern her thoughts. However, no words of denial came out. In that case,

"I'll say it again. Regarding the alliance between Emilia and Crusch, what the Emilia camp can offer is the right to mine ore in Elior Forest, and information on the White Whale's next appearance. In short, the honor of defeating the witchbeast that has troubled the world for so long!"

"…"

"If my words are completely off the mark and not at all what you intend, then by all means, cut me off. If I'm wrong, I don't mind if it's just a transaction for the information on the White Whale's next appearance."

Even with just that information, the two merchants present would likely manage to turn a profit and help Crusch save face. There was a strong possibility that the capital's merchants would also change their perception of Crusch positively. But,

"But if your goal and my wish align—"

Spreading his hands out in front of him, Subaru appealed to Crusch. To take his hand, to prove the value of the future he had seen, and to break down the walls.

"To subjugate the White Whale. —Let's go hunting!"

That monstrous entity, that nightmarish, powerful witchbeast. The symbol of disaster for the traveling merchants, the seed of hateful memories for Subaru. Subaru proposed to Crusch the subjugation of the witchbeast that controls the Fog.

"One question I shall ask."

Looking down at Subaru's outstretched hand, Crusch raised a single finger towards him. Subaru instinctively felt that this question was the final hurdle to overcome her.

Up until now, Subaru had managed to slip past her 'Divine Protection of the Wind Reading' And beyond that, he had succeeded in drawing out his objective, the crucial part of the negotiation. Now, for the final showdown—Subaru held his breath, wondering what she would ask, "Are you—certain you know the time and place of the White Whale's appearance?"

—Ah, no, Crusch.

He murmured inwardly, adding words to the breath he had swallowed and letting them pass his throat.

"Yes, it's true."

—Then you can't make me lie.

"I can guarantee this information, the time and place of the White Whale's appearance. I'd even stake my life on it."

Literally, it was information he had obtained by staking his own life and paying with the lives of others. There was no doubt about its certainty, and this was not the time to be hesitant.

"—There are some doubts, but I suppose it must be said that you saw through our intentions admirably."

Crusch exhaled softly, closing her eyes as if resigned and replying thus. At first, Subaru couldn't grasp the meaning of her answer. But as her words slowly permeated his brain and took shape, their outline became clear.

"Then…"

"There are suspicions, there are doubts. There are many points that don't make sense, making it difficult to readily agree. However,"

Crusch clenched the hand with the raised finger, then extended that hand toward Subaru. His outstretched hand was grasped from above by her hand,

"I shall trust your determination in creating this situation, and I shall trust these eyes."

The negotiation was successful. Seeing their handshake, one person visibly relaxed his shoulders—Russell. He let out an exaggerated sigh, shaking his head as if saying, "Oh dear."

"I was a bit on edge, but I'm glad it worked out. Mr Subaru, you certainly kept your promise before the meeting."

"Yeah, sorry about the short end of the stick, Russell-san. Once the White Whale is dealt with, I'll hand over the cell phone to you, as promised."

Subaru returned a mischievous smile to Russell, who was beaming at the two shaking hands. Hearing their conversation, Crusch blatantly frowned.

"So, it was indeed connected."

"I'm the one who called you here, you know? After your discussion with Russell broke down yesterday evening, I visited him and pretty much laid out the whole plan."

"Please don't take it the wrong way. In truth, we tried not to show any unnatural favoritism. Our relationship is purely in anticipation of the alliance being formed."

Crusch closed her eyes and snorted at Subaru and Russell, who spoke casually.

After finishing his information exchange with Rem before the negotiation, Subaru immediately contacted Russell. He had caught him as he was leaving Crusch's mansion and returning home after their discussion had broken down, and that's when he brought up the current proposal. To an opponent who couldn't see through lies, Subaru had proceeded from the start as if he already knew about 'Crusch's White Whale subjugation', securing the passive cooperation of one of the few people in the capital outside of Crusch's faction who knew of her intentions.

The 'monster alarm' talk using the cell phone was also pre-arranged — Though Russell hadn't been informed that the cell phone wouldn't actually function as an alarm.

Receiving those answers, Crusch now slowly turned her gaze to Anastasia. Anastasia met Crusch's gaze with a gentle smile.

"What's wrong, Ms Crusch?"

"I understand the connection between Russell Fellow and Natsuki Subaru. However that makes your position unclear. Why were you summoned here?"

"Well, one reason is to add to the persuasion, I suppose."

Looking around the room with amusement, Anastasia touched the fur of her collar.

"Two Royal Selection candidates and one of the capital's leading merchants. Bringing so many involved parties to an alliance negotiation means you can't afford careless information or remarks. So, just my presence here will add weight to his words, won't it?"

Isn't that right? Anastasia tilted her head, having read Subaru's intentions. Inwardly, Subaru could only break out in a cold sweat and offer a noncommittal, forced smile. In fact, he had indeed aimed for that. If they even slightly thought that a Royal Selection candidate wouldn't spew outright lies when gathering other candidates, then his plan was working. The fact that Anastasia had read through that and participated indicated that she, too, was far from a simple opponent.

"Then what is the other reason?"

"That's even simpler. —I'm a merchant."

Anastasia put a hand to her mouth and chuckled mischievously, then bounced forward. She then gently placed both her palms over Subaru's and Crusch's hands, which were still clasped together.

"I wholeheartedly support the subjugation of the White Whale. For us merchants, the White Whale's existence is a matter of life and death, and if it's defeated, it would be a huge help. If you patronize the Hoshin Trading Company for preparations and other things, that would be perfect, wouldn't it?"

"Please wait. In that regard, the capital's commercial guild should take precedence. Lady Anastasia, if you're going to interfere, please understand the proper channels."

Russell cut in, speaking up against Anastasia's mercantile spirit. As the merchants exchanged glances, sparks flying, Crusch, having heard their remarks, looked at Subaru with some doubt in her eyes. And then,

“Wait. From what you two are saying, it sounds like time is of the essence, isn’t it?”

“I haven’t heard the crucial details, but the way you’re bringing it up gives that impression. Are you actually feeling a bit rushed?”

Subaru unconsciously held his breath, seeing her narrowed, sidelong glance. However, at this point, concealing any more information would cause problems. Resigned, he said,

“Yes, that’s right. —According to the magic device, the White Whale will appear in about thirty-one hours from now. The location is… near Flugel’s Tree.”

“Thirty-one hours…!”

“Flugel’s Tree.”

Crusch gnashed her teeth at the short amount of time remaining, and Anastasia tilted her head at the appearance location. Yes, it was a race against time. The information on the White Whale’s appearance time and location would only be valuable until just before its appearance. If the goal was to subjugate the White Whale,

“Within thirty-one hours, we must deploy a subjugation force on the Lifaus Highway and immediately defeat the White Whale the moment it appears.”

“What’s needed for that is…”

Subaru responded to Crusch, who had quickly grasped the situation, and looked around the people in the room. Then, the elderly swordsman —Wilhelm— stepped forward, as if continuing Subaru’s words. Breaking his silence, he said,

“First, the formation of the subjugation force. This has already been proceeding smoothly for several days. Indeed, preparations were made to coincide with the White Whale’s appearance period. I believe it is due to Lady Crusch's great fortune that it coincided almost perfectly with the start of the Royal Selection."

"You catch on fast! The White Whale's appearance period…"

Does it have a pattern? Subaru asked in surprise. In previous worlds, from the way Otto and others spoke, the White Whale's appearance seemed completely random in both time and place, which was why it was feared as a phantom monster.

"That's the result of Old Man Wil's persistence. He's been thinking about nothing but that for fourteen years and doing all sorts of things, you know."

Ferris replied to Subaru's questioning voice as he spoke. He stood next to Wilhelm, touching the broad-shouldered old man's arm.

"With Old Man Wil here, there's no need to worry about training or morale, but I can't deny we're a bit unprepared. Everyone would make a fuss if they heard Lady Crusch brought an army to the capital, so we gathered them secretly."

"Indeed. We still haven't fully prepared the weapons and equipment, but…"

Wilhelm nodded at Ferris's words. The old man then turned his sharp gaze to Subaru, and then to Anastasia and Russell.

"That's why you two are here, isn't it, Subaru-dono?"

"Well, yeah, it was a 'just in case' kind of thing, I guess?"

Scratching his head, Subaru answered Wilhelm's words with a weak, humble reply. Receiving Subaru's passive affirmation, Russell touched his chin.

"We've already mobilized the guild and are making preparations. We'll gather everything necessary from all the shops in the capital by tomorrow afternoon."

"Hoshin Trading Company will do the same. The areas outside the guild's jurisdiction are ours, and we've got plenty of other goods prepared, so you can look forward to it.”

Following Russell, Anastasia also declared her strong cooperation. She then shot a glance at Crusch, who looked like she wanted to say something, and stuck out her tongue.

“A merchant never misses a business opportunity. That’s why I answered the summons. Ah, it’s just irresistible, the moment you sell something to someone!”

Anastasia couldn’t hide her shiver, her face contorted in ecstasy as she pressed her hand to her cheek and laughed. Her flushed cheeks and lovely appearance made for a very picturesque scene, but with a greedy disposition at its core, it was hardly endearing.

“It’s not just about goods, but the best thing to sell is a favor. It has no form, no loss—and no price tag.”

“You’re an ally now, so it’s fine, but hearing that again, this merchant is terrifying!”

Subaru shrieked, and Anastasia was in high spirits, saying, “Isn’t it great?” Seeing their exchange, Crusch exhaled as if disarmed.

“You blocked my path before the negotiation, then. I see. In this situation, it seems I was the one lacking resolve. I am impressed, Natsuki Subaru.”

This was the first stage of the negotiation, that is, the breakthrough of one of the walls that needed to be overcome. Although it was the result of extensive prior preparation, it still felt like a razor-thin success. The fact that an irregularity had favored Subaru could also be considered a point of reflection. Still,

“I managed to save face in the capital, didn’t I, Rem?”

“—Yes. As expected, Subaru is wonderful.”

Saying that, he gently squeezed the hand that had been held the entire time, the one opposite to the hand he offered Crusch, sharing the victory of the negotiation with Rem. On second thought, she must be the one most pleased with the success of this negotiation.

When she first remained in the capital, unable to confide in Subaru, she must have faced Crusch in negotiation in solitude. She must have challenged the negotiation with all the authority she was allowed, and yet she was unable to maintain the alliance. If it had failed, the Emilia camp's predicament would remain unchanged, and the future of Subaru's treatment, even if there was a prospect, would be uncertain. There was no doubt that all these anxieties had exhausted her mind and body.

Had he been able to repay her, even a little, for that anxiety and all the worry he had caused her? If so, that alone made Subaru happy right now.

Thats when—

"—Subaru-dono."

As Subaru exchanged joy with Rem, a voice suddenly called out to him. Looking up, he saw Wilhelm, who had approached close by, looking at Subaru with serious eyes. Naturally, as Subaru felt his posture straighten and looked up at him, the old man paused for a breath.

"Thank you."

He said briefly, then knelt down and bowed. Subaru couldn't hide his surprise at this sudden action. However, Subaru was the only one who reacted that way; the others all had expressions that showed a certain understanding of Wilhelm's actions. Even Rem, even Anastasia.

"You have my gratitude, equal to that which I owe my liege, Lady Crusch. I thank you for granting this unworthy body the opportunity for revenge."

"Um, that… eh?"

Wilhelm ignored Subaru's confusion and removed his sword, scabbard and all, from his waist. He then placed the sword on the floor, resting his hands on it in a gesture of profound respect.

“The Trias I previously introduced myself as was an old family name. As the one who took the previous Sword Saint, Theresia van Astrea, as my wife, and thereby sullied the lineage of the Sword Saints— That is I, Wilhelm van Astrea.”

Taking a breath, Wilhelm’s eyes gleamed with renewed vigor.

“I thank you for the kindness of granting this old man the opportunity to slay the hateful witchbeast that took my wife.”

Wilhelm’s words were deep, piercing. Everyone in the room listened intently to his words, all waiting for Subaru’s reply.

Pushed by that expectation, Subaru took a small breath.

“Oh, oh. I-I knew that, of course. Naturally, I thought Crusch-san would go along with the White Whale subjugation because of that, so—”

“Natsuki Subaru.”

Crusch interrupted his slightly stammering reply. She gazed at the flustered Subaru, still holding his hand, and whispered,

“The wind of lies is blowing from you.”

With that, she proved the efficacy of her ‘Divine Protection of the Wind Reading’ by seeing through Subaru’s first lie that he couldn’t completely conceal.

Chapter 55: Outpost

1

“Slay the White Whale—.”

Once the preliminary negotiations concluded and those two words, “slay the whale”, began to take on concrete meaning, those involved quickly sprang into action. Russell and Anastasia, the two merchants, wasted no time, running around the capital to gather every weapon and tool they could find, just as they had promised. Crusch, too, was fully engrossed in assembling the subjugation force and securing the necessary dragon carriages, preparations she had been making for some time.

Watching their movements, Subaru finally understood why, in the previous iterations, securing dragon carriages became so difficult after three days. News of the White Whale’s appearance must have reached the capital, prompting Crusch to deploy her forces onto the highway around that time.

Seeing everyone frantically rushing about, Subaru couldn’t stay still, even though it was almost late night.

“I’ll—”

Just as Subaru was about to offer his help, someone stepped in to dash his spirits. It was Ferris, covering his mouth with a yawn and with tears welling in the corners of his eyes. Subaru glared at his feminine face with a scrutinizing gaze, and Ferris twitched his chestnut cat ears.

“Procuring supplies and organizing the subjugation force aren’t in your domain, are they, Subaru-kyun? You’d only mess things up and make them more complicated, so you should just behave, nya.”

"Like hell I will. Everyone's moving around like crazy because I said I'd do it. I'm just gonna—"

"Nope, that's where you're wrong."

Ferris interrupted Subaru sharply, pressing a finger to his lips. Subaru narrowed his eyes, forcibly cut off, and Ferris then used the same finger to flick his nose.

"Ferris doesn't really—or rather, doesn't like that 'it's my fault' way of thinking at all, nya."

"Why not? In reality…"

Wasn't it Subaru's suggestion that caused everyone to work through the night? For the instigator to just wait around shamelessly…

"Lady Crusch decided to subjugate the White Whale for Old Man Wilhelm's sake, nya."

Ferris suddenly mumbled in a small voice. Subaru instinctively responded with a bewildered, "Huh?"

"The White Whale's subjugation is Old Man Wilhelm's long-cherished wish. When the previous Sword Saint —Old Man Wilhelm's wife— was killed by the White Whale, he apparently wasn't by her side."

"The previous…"

"He desperately gathered information about the White Whale. Where it appeared before, where it appeared afterward. The season, time, weather, and every other condition were laid out, and finally, he managed to grasp a faint pattern. However no one would listen to him…"

Wilhelm, alone, pouring over books and documents, his eyes bloodshot. How many nights had the old swordsman spent waiting for an opportunity to avenge the monster that killed his wife? His persistence finally bore fruit, and Wilhelm found a glimmer of hope regarding the White Whale's movements. That was, “The kingdom no longer had the courage to challenge an opponent capable of annihilating a subjugation force that included a Sword Saint. Even if he tried to find other supporters, it was like shouting into the void. I think Old Man Wilhelm’s state of mind must have been desperate, nya.”

Even if he wanted to avenge himself, he couldn’t even reach the feet of his hated enemy. Subaru understood the despair that such powerlessness could create within oneself. The sin of weakness never let you escape.

“He even considered abandoning everything and challenging the White Whale alone, nya. He probably thought not being able to fight was more shameful than not being able to win. —Men are foolish, aren’t they? His wife surely wouldn’t have wished for such a thing.”

“That’s right.”

It was Rem, standing beside Subaru, who agreed with Ferris. She had been listening silently until now, and as she shook her blue hair, she gently gazed at Subaru’s profile and placed a hand on her chest.

“Rem wants the person she loves to always be healthy. Even if Rem were gone, she would want to be remembered with a smile.”

Unable to bear Rem’s sentimental words, Subaru lightly poked her blue hair. Then, he changed his fist to an open palm and slowly ran his fingers through her soft hair, caressing it. Rem, accepting Subaru’s rough gesture, narrowed her eyes lovingly.

“It was Lady Crusch who spoke to Sir Wilhelm—”

“Lady Crusch, nya~.”

Ferris let out an impressed sigh, as if recalling that moment.

“Lady Crusch is truly a kind person. Even when someone is desperate and grieving, and no one else pays them any mind, Lady Crusch still extends a helping hand. Just like that time—oops, oops.”

Ferris quickly covered his mouth with his hand, sealing off the rest of his words, and then stuck out his tongue with an embarrassed smile.

“Alright. No more talking. In short, what I’m trying to say is that it’s thanks to Subaru-kyun.”

“Thanks to me…?”

“We went off on a tangent, but that’s what we were originally talking about, wasn’t it?”

With the conversation having drifted to Wilhelm’s past, Subaru also recalled the forgotten topic. It had originally been about the frantic preparations for the White Whale subjugation.

“It’s ‘thanks to’, not ‘because of’, nya~. These two might seem similar, but they’re completely different, you know? Now Old Man Wilhelm can finally repay his wife. Even announcing his family name properly…”

“Ferris. You’re a bit too loose-lipped, aren’t you?”

“Nya?!”

Ferris let out a small yelp at the voice from behind and turned around with an awkward expression. Standing there was an old gentleman with his hands clasped behind his back. He stared intently at the shrinking Ferris with narrowed eyes.

“I don’t think it’s good taste to spread other people’s embarrassments, do you?”

“It’s not really exposing the past, but Ferris sees it more like a new anatomical chart of Old Man Wilhelm, nyaa…”

Ferris put his fingers together and pouted his lips, drawing out his words coaxingly. He looked adorable, and with cat ears, he might be tempting, but he was a man. Naturally, his charms had no effect on Wilhelm.

“In any case, it’s not something one should prattle about without the person’s permission, is it?”

“Yes, sir.”

Dismissed unceremoniously, Ferris drooped his shoulders and shuffled away. As Subaru watched his retreating back, a sudden silence fell over the room. Having unintentionally heard Wilhelm’s past, Subaru felt intensely awkward. He considered spilling his own dark history to cancel it out, thinking it would be an even exchange, but he decided against it at the last second, figuring it would make him seem like a cornered social outcast. As a result, the silence continued, and Subaru racked his brain to find another topic—

“I apologize for making you hear such unpleasant stories. It’s merely the trivial, idle time of an old man. Please forget it.”

However, Wilhelm spoke first. Seeing the bitter, weary smile that graced his lips, Subaru resolved to respect his wishes. Do not ask anything; that was the old man’s intent. He would ask nothing.

“—You truly love your wife, don’t you?”

—Rem-san?! Subaru was so startled that he mentally used an honorific. With that much force, Rem had unexpectedly stepped into a minefield.

Oblivious to Subaru’s anxiety, Wilhelm raised an eyebrow and paused for a moment.

“Yes, I love my wife. More than anything, more than anyone, no matter how much time passes.”

Wilhelm’s confession carried the weight of all the years embedded within it. Subaru had heard Wilhelm speak of his loving wife several times in the past. Each time, it conveyed how much Wilhelm cherished his family, but reflecting on it now, knowing she was deceased, brought a different kind of emotion.

"I still have preparations for tomorrow, so I'll take my leave. Both of you, please rest well tonight."

Turning his back to the two silent figures, Wilhelm spoke and walked away.

"Tomorrow—"

Subaru instinctively called out to his retreating back. Wilhelm stopped, but didn't turn around, and Subaru said,

"Tomorrow, both I and Rem will be joining the fight."

"That is…"

"Do you really think allies would just stand by while a powerful foe is being fought? Don't worry, Rem can fight, and… I can do something too."

Subaru rattled off his words, preempting any denial from Wilhelm. Then,

"Let's work together and smash that whale bastard! I'll give it everything I've got!"

Giving a thumbs-up and a flashing smile, Subaru vowed to fight alongside Wilhelm. Wilhelm remained silent for a moment after this declaration, but then,

"My wife was a woman who loved to admire flowers."

He said quietly, his words taking a different turn from a direct response to Subaru's vow.

"She disliked wielding a sword, yet she was loved by the sword more than anyone. She was only allowed to live by the sword, and my wife, too, accepted that fate."

Knowing the power of the current Sword Saint, Reinhard, one could fully understand that such a divine protection was far too much for a human body. It was so immense that it narrowed the future and possibilities of the one granted that blessing to an almost infinite degree.

“It was I who broke my wife’s sword and made her abandon the name of Sword Saint.”

Wilhelm had once told Subaru that he was “untalented”. That was why he had dedicated half his life to the sword to reach his current level.

How many times had this old man suffered setbacks and had his spirit broken before achieving his cherished wish? And then—

“I took her as my wife after she cast aside the sword and became simply a woman. I thought that by doing so, everything would be forgiven, and she could live as Theresia, not the Sword Saint. —The sword did not let her escape.”

Why had the woman who was supposed to have abandoned the sword joined the White Whale subjugation force? Wilhelm’s reminiscence did not touch upon this point.

“Subaru-dono, my thanks.”

In one breath,

“In tomorrow’s battle, I will find the answer with my sword. I will finally be able to visit my wife’s grave. Finally, I can go to meet my wife.”

Leaving those words, Wilhelm exited the room for good this time. Subaru, left behind, couldn’t help but feel a sense of respect for Wilhelm’s resolve, as one man for another. People could truly be that sincere and unwavering in their love.

“Subaru…”

Then, Rem’s voice suddenly fell in the quiet room where the two remained. Subaru silently turned his gaze towards her, and their eyes met as she looked up at him.

“If Rem were gone, would you remember her for just as long?”

"…That's bad luck, so I don't want to answer."

Subaru said with a disgruntled voice and lightly poked Rem's forehead with his finger. She placed her hand on her forehead where his finger had touched, and then smiled blissfully, as if she had received the answer she had wanted.

2

The next morning. Time limit until the White Whale subjugation—Seventeen and a half hours.

"You can count on me, bro!"

In the garden of Crusch's mansion, where the cold morning air still lingered, a cheerful voice boomed loudly. It was a voice that seemed to reach every corner of the spacious estate.

Subaru, who received it up close, directly in front of him, was not amused. He clutched his ears and grimaced exaggeratedly, glaring in protest, but—

"The miss already told me all about it! We're gonna join the whale hunt today, so count on us!"

"You're too loud! Can't you see my expression with those innocent eyes of yours?!"

Spoken to with a voice like a strong gale, Subaru's defiant yell inadvertently grew louder. The beastman with a dog-like face, with sharp fangs lining his wide-open mouth, laughed, seemingly enjoying Subaru's best efforts at shouting.

His entire body was covered in short, reddish-brown fur, with slightly darker, burnt-brown hair decorating his elongated head like a mohawk. His eyes were sharp, and his blade-like canine teeth gleamed in his mouth, but there was a charm to him as he let the corners of his eyes crinkle in boisterous laughter. However, he was easily over two meters tall, and his powerfully built physique, clad in what appeared to be black leather clothing, exuded a sense of wildness and civilization having reconciled after a fistfight.

He called himself a “Kobold”, but by no means did he have the physique of a Kobold. Subaru’s image of a Kobold was a small, bipedal creature with a dog’s face. Two of the characteristics matched, but just that last one being different changed the impression so drastically.

“No, no, Natsuki. Ricardo has ears that don’t hear inconvenient things, you see. The trick to getting along with him is to talk to him from a proper distance.”

“Is that why you, the one who introduced him, are standing so far away?! My carefully styled hair is getting totally messed up! Not that it’s long enough to style, anyway!”

Yelling as he ran his hand back and forth over his short hair, Subaru complained to Anastasia, who was standing at a distance, making no effort to hide her suppressed laughter. Seeing Subaru’s reaction, the beastman—Ricardo—poked his shoulder with his large palm.

“What are you saying to the miss, kid! She’s my employer, so be a bit gentler with her! She usually can’t talk to anyone without thinking about money, so she’s starving for normal friends right now, she’s an easy target!”

“Ricardo. You’re not good at keeping secrets, so it’s best not to say bad things, alright?”

“That’s not a bad thing! I’m worried about the miss! She came all the way from Kararagi and doesn’t have many acquaintances, so she must feel lonely, right?! That’s why, here! Look! Ta-daaa! It’s your friend number one!”

“Don’t chatter away using people as a go-between! And don’t keep shaking people’s heads so much! My neck’s gonna break!”

Having his head shaken with superhuman —or, in this case, literally inhuman— strength, his neck joints seriously made strange noises, so he withdrew from the spot. Tumbling away to escape Ricardo’s range, Subaru checked his muscles by adjusting the angle of his forcibly twisted neck.

“Close call, close call. It wouldn’t be funny if I got injured and withdrew from a casual chat before the decisive battle. Even I, with my mood so hyped up, can’t accept that kind of punchline…!”

“You’re using physical force, aren’t you?! I can’t stand people who are more overbearing than me!”

Shaking his head in a peek-a-boo style, Subaru maintained his distance from the approaching Ricardo by moving in a circular motion. The two continued their standoff, slowly, but without closing the distance. Anastasia observed their exchange from outside the circle, a baffling sight to an outsider. Then,

“It seems you two have met.”

Saying this, the emerald-haired beauty —Crusch Karsten— descended into the garden. She wasn’t in her usual formal attire, but in light armor with greatly reduced ornamentation. The armor had open joints in various places, prioritizing ease of movement, which seemed to raise concerns about its defensive capabilities, but —

“Battle attire should prioritize ease of movement. Don’t worry, it’s armor imbued with the blessing of earth. As long as my mana doesn’t run out, it will exhibit sturdiness beyond its appearance.”

“This world is still cheating with magic and blessings, huh… I wonder if I have some blessing sleeping inside me too, just not awakened yet.”

“No matter how long you sleep, you don’t forget how to breathe, do you? For those with blessings, it’s the same. If you’re not aware of it, you might as well give up.”

Subaru had experienced a similar denial from someone else a long time ago. He pouted his lips and clicked his tongue, discarding his wish. Crusch glanced at Subaru’s childish reaction, then stood in front of him, looking up at the beastman who was scratching his head.

"Indeed. I've heard tales, but you are a soldier beyond rumors. You are Anastasia Hoshin's…"

"I'm just a hired hand. Lady Crusch, you yourself are even more impressive in person…"

Ricardo snorted and looked down at Crusch, who stood with her arms crossed, looking up at his massive form. He wrinkled his snout and chuckled, making a guttural sound.

"You're a remarkable person. This royal selection, it's going to be quite tough, isn't it, miss!"

"That's why I'm trying to gain favors like this, you know. How much is written on the price tag depends on Ricardo's performance, you see."

Ricardo burst into loud laughter, echoing dramatically, at Anastasia's shrug. Subaru worried that Ricardo's blunt attitude might displease Crusch, but Crusch, facing him, showed no sign of minding Ricardo's behavior. She glanced at Subaru.

"Did you rest well last night?"

"Thanks to you, yeah. Though, knowing that you all were busy moving around while I was leisurely sleeping didn't make the sleep feel great."

"A place for everyone, and everyone in their place. Your job was fulfilled last night, when you gathered me, Russell Fellow, and Anastasia Hoshin, and concluded the White Whale subjugation. Though, it seems you have no intention of ending it there."

Turning around, Crusch looked Subaru directly in the eye. Feeling uncomfortable under her direct gaze, Subaru squirmed.

"You said you'd participate in the subjugation battle… Can you fight?"

"Can I fight? No. If you're counting me as a fighting force, I'd say you're a bit too desperate, even if you just need a cat's paw. Make it a dog's paw, though; it's bigger."

"Wasn't I just talking about myself?!"

"No, you weren't! Seriously, you have such convenient ears, oi!"

Yelling back at Ricardo, who had interrupted, Subaru scratched his forehead to compose himself, then prefaced with "However,"

"Against the White Whale, I, as a person, might actually be useful… I think."

"Tell me. What is your basis?"

"I don't really want to believe it myself, but… it seems my body odor has a tendency to attract witchbeasts."

Subaru subtly changed his phrasing as he explained his plan for joining the battle. The lingering scent of the Witch emanating from Subaru's body—the precise circumstances of how it permeated his flesh were unknown, but like with the Great Rabbit, it was reasonable to expect it to play a role in attracting the White Whale.

The problem was that the White Whale's threat was dozens of times greater than the Great Rabbit's, and Subaru alone couldn't even evade the White Whale's approach, let alone intercept it.

"So, riding a fast dragon carriage or something, and constantly racing past the White Whale's nose to distract it… I think that's the most effective way to use me without taking casualties."

Honestly, it was a plan that even he felt dubious about saying aloud. He was offering himself up as live bait, someone not expected to contribute as a fighter, but who could be useful by being thrown around the battlefield. It was a division of labor that would make even a suicidal person blanch, but—

"Surprisingly, there's no hint of falsehood."

Crusch, who had been resting her chin in her hand with a skeptical look, relaxed her shoulders. The "Divine Protection of the Wind Reading" must have exposed the truth of Subaru's statement and led her to consider the effectiveness of his strategy. She nodded once.

"Then, I shall have you use an earth dragon with excellent speed and stamina. If you ride with Rem, there should be no issue with mobility. However, you are fundamentally to follow my instructions."

"Oh, so you're going to the battlefield too, Lady Crusch?"

"Do you think I'm capable of sitting deeply in my mansion chair, waiting for good news?"

Flicking the metal fittings of her armor with a finger, Crusch wore a bold smile on her regal face. Subaru shook his head at her dashing appearance and quietly apologized for asking something so obvious.

"—It's almost time."

Receiving Subaru's apology, Crusch closed one eye and murmured. As if on cue, relevant parties began to gather in the garden one after another.

Leading the way, the figure who appeared was Wilhelm, his attire changed to battle gear. The lightly equipped old swordsman wore only the minimum protective gear guarding his vital points, with a total of six slender swords hanging from his waist, three on each side. Following behind him, Ferris was clad in what appeared to be curved knight armor for women, with only a dagger fastened to his waist. This posture indicated his clear decision to focus on rear support, considering his own abilities.

Arriving late was Russell, with his dull blond hair. His face, after an all-nighter, showed fatigue, but only his eyes shone brightly, indicating his high spirits. As Anastasia and Russell, who had already arrived in the garden, joined up and began some conversation, Ricardo, shaking his massive body, laughed with a ferocious twist of his mouth.

As the main figures began to assemble, they were followed by a continuous stream of seasoned soldiers whose names Subaru didn't know. They were likely members of the subjugation force Crusch had organized. Perhaps only the key figures had been called here, as their number was quite small, about ten. And what's more, "They all look… pretty short on youth, don't they?"

Subaru mumbled the thought that came to his mind. In front of him, the members of the subjugation force were lined up behind Wilhelm, and their average age seemed quite high. Wilhelm, at the head, was over sixty, and the knights accompanying him didn't seem to be under fifty either. As someone who had personally witnessed Wilhelm's strength, Subaru felt no anxiety about the old swordsman's skill, but what about the others—?

"They are all individuals with a connection to the White Whale, apparently."

"Rem, huh?"

"Yes. Subaru's Rem."

Saying this, Subaru turned his gaze to Rem, who had suddenly appeared by his side as if bubbling up. Her expression was as unreadable as ever, and her attire remained a maid's uniform despite heading out to battle. When he had pointed this out during their morning rendezvous, she had replied,

"This maid uniform is handmade by Lord Roswaal and is a combat maid uniform with protective blessings. So there is nothing to worry about."

Apparently. There were uniforms for going out, for cooking, for chores, for entertainment, and for combat—a wide range. Yet, the only option was a maid uniform, so Roswaal's fetish was as expected. Anyway,

"So, 'connected to the White Whale' means… former members of subjugation forces, or something like that?"

"Many of them seem to have retired from the front lines, but they gathered at Sir Wilhelm's call. Their training and morale both seem more than sufficient."

"A situation with old soldiers burning for revenge, huh… That's exciting."

While saying this, Subaru also wondered if their past connection to the White Whale and their inclusion in this subjugation force was also part of Crusch's "kindness", which Ferris had mentioned last night. If that would jeopardize the operation itself, it would be counterproductive, but Crusch didn't seem like the type to compromise on such matters. Wilhelm's persistence, too, shouldn't be so lenient as to lightly bring dead weight onto the battlefield. In some cases, he might even thin out unnecessary burdens before reaching the battlefield.

"Come to think of it, that position is exactly me this time…!"

"Lady Crusch's subjugation force is like that, but… those people over there…"

Setting aside Subaru, who was trembling with trepidation, Rem was concerned about the opposite side of the garden from the old soldiers of the subjugation force. It was a group deployed at the edge of the garden, exuding an atmosphere as if from a different dimension. Following Rem's gaze and seeing that group, Subaru let out a sigh of understanding.

"Those are Anastasia's private soldiers… or rather, the mercenary group she hired, I heard. They're from Kararagi, so their way of speaking is unique, and their appearance is unique too."

"They're full of uniqueness. But, that's them, isn't it?"

He'd probably get used to their Kansai-dialect-like way of speaking eventually, but for Subaru, the problem was their appearance, which was hard to get used to. Anastasia's mercenary group, starting with Ricardo, their leader, was comprised entirely of bipedal animals—in other words, beastmen.

There was Ricardo, who looked highly combat-capable at first glance. There were also others with physiques comparable to his, and even bear-like beastmen with fluffy white fur, no taller than Subaru's waist. Seeing that they carried staffs, they were likely specialized in magical rather than direct combat. About thirty of them were lined up, adding a nice touch of otherworldly fantasy to Subaru's experience.

“Anastasia herself can’t fight, so it seems she’s lending her financial power. I heard Ricardo is just lingering around me, so try not to pick a fight with him.”

“If he doesn’t harm Subaru at all, Rem has no intention of causing trouble herself. Oh, Subaru, your hair is messed up after Rem just fixed it.”

“Oh, that was Ricardo messing it up just now, you know?”

“Let’s smash him.”

“That’s a quick conclusion!”

With his hardly messed-up hair threatening to become a source of conflict, Subaru hurriedly stopped Rem. Then, he casually checked the time—it was almost time for departure.

“Before that, though.”

A tense atmosphere began to fill the garden, and following the already aligned subjugation force, the other relevant parties also began to straighten their postures. Crusch, stepping forward, seemed about to begin her pre-departure address. Slipping through the moment, Subaru, with Rem in tow, headed towards the two merchants who were conversing.

“I’m counting on you two as merchants —people who will at least listen if the money is good enough— and I have something I want to talk about.”

He decided to lay a “groundwork” before the White Whale hunt.

3

The words marked the beginning, spoken as the appointed time arrived and the assembled warriors gathered.

A heavy resonance, a taut atmosphere. Amidst a sharp sensation that felt like pain shooting through strained spines, Crusch, the focus of all eyes, stood proudly. She thrust the Carsten family's engraved holy sword into the ground, placed her hand on its pommel, and in a single breath, swept her gaze across everyone's faces.

"Four centuries have passed since the worst calamity befell the world. The 'Witch of Envy' ran rampant, and the White Whale, born from her hands, turned the world into its hunting grounds, trampling the weak as it pleased."

The Witch of Envy, who in the past destroyed half the world and whose terrifying tales still linger. The Fog Beast, her servant, who even now, with its master defeated, continues to enjoy its freedom. A true monster that has caused countless sacrifices and swallowed up myriad fighting spirits.

"The number of lives taken by the White Whale is immeasurable. Coupled with the insidious nature of its fog, it's safe to say that no one truly knows the exact count of its victims. Over these four hundred years, the number of engraved gravestones, and those without even a name, has only grown."

Some old soldiers bowed their heads at Crusch's words, gritting their teeth to stifle sobs. Others dug their nails into clenched fists, drawing blood. There were old swordsmen who had held an unceasing storm of emotions within their chests, quietly awaiting the chance to unleash their rage.

Their regrets, the grudges accumulated from countless corpses, began to shroud the garden's air in a dark, murky gloom. —But,

"However, those days of regret end today."

"…"

"We will end it. We will strike down the White Whale and bring an end to countless sorrows. We will give proper tears to the sorrow that couldn't even reach sorrow."

"—!"

"We will end this pitiful witchbeast, who, having already lost its master, still obeys an endless command.”

A warmth spread through their chests. Without a word, the same deep emotion that Subaru felt was clearly shared by everyone present.

The old soldiers who had bowed their heads, who had clenched their fists, the old swordsman who had closed his eyes— All now looked up, their eyes fixed on Crusch standing before them. Receiving the heat of their gazes, Crusch thrust her hand forward and raised her voice.

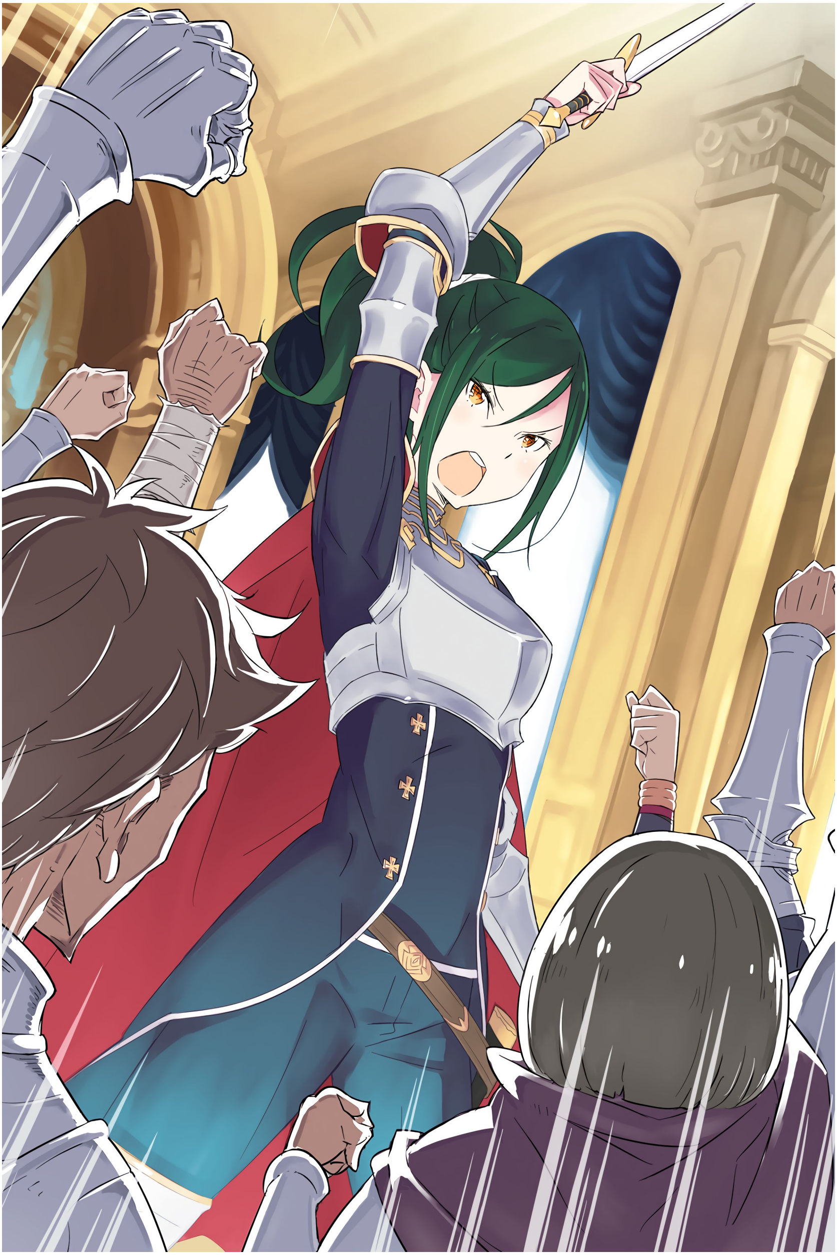
“We march! —To the Lifaus Highway, to Flugel’s Great Tree!”

“—Ooh!!”

Responding voices overlapped, creating the illusion of a thunderous roar shaking the garden as feet stamped the ground. Carried away by the surge of fighting spirit, Subaru also cheered loudly. Amidst it all, Crusch, stronger and higher than anyone else, drew her sword and thrust it skyward.

“Tonight, by our hands—we strike down the White Whale!!”

The White Whale Extermination—the greatest operation since being summoned to this other world, now begins.



Chapter 56:
Start of the Decisive Battle

1

The expedition to subjugate the White Whale will be led by Crusch Karsten.

Crusch has full command over the subjugation force she organized, with the leader of the force being Wilhelm van Astrea, from the lineage of the Sword Saint— The “Sword Demon”.

The subjugation force under Wilhelm is divided into about ten platoons, each led by the veteran soldiers who attended the speech in the garden.

Each platoon consists of roughly fifteen members, bringing Crusch’s total subjugation force to about one hundred and fifty.

However, the total military strength doesn’t end there. There’s also a group of thirty beastman mercenaries, lent by Anastasia, led by Ricardo— Apparently known as the “Iron Fangs”. Ricardo commands the entire group, with two vice-captains under him.

The vice-captains are:

“I’m Mimi.”

“I’m Hetaro.”

They are two cat—no, two cat-like beastmen who give a small bow.

Their short fur is orange, and their height, reaching only about Subaru’s waist, closely resembles Subaru’s image of a dwarf-type beastman.

Additionally, they have very charming faces, and their pure white robes, which completely cover everything but their heads, suit them well. To put it simply:

“They’re so cute, I want to kidnap them.”

“We hear that a lot.”

“Big sister, don’t say things like that again…”

The girl who introduced herself as Mimi nods at Subaru’s comment, and the boy who introduced himself as Hetaro gently scolds her, looking slightly flustered. Apparently, with their identical appearances, they seem to be twins.

Subaru, wondering internally if beastman births are like animals, where many are born at once. Subaru nods to the two of them and asks:

“You said you’re vice-captains… are you two strong?”

“Of course! We’re the strongest when we’re together!”

“Oh… ah, yes. That’s right. Big sister and I will do our best.”

Is their relationship one where the assertive older sister is reined in by her passive and cautious younger brother? It also makes Subaru wonder if all twins in this world have an older sister who leaves the support role to the younger sibling.

Anyway:

“Even though our boss is the leader, when the fight starts, he rushes ahead and doesn’t pay attention to his surroundings at all.”

“So we’ll give instructions to everyone in his place.”

“Ah, I see… I can imagine the struggle.”

Subaru can picture the towering figure of Ricardo laughing boisterously and charging into the center of the battlefield with gusto.

Perhaps their opinions align with Subaru’s imagination, as Hetaro sighs, slumping his small shoulders and saying, “Exactly!”

“We’ll follow Lady Crusch’s command, but we’ll fight the White Whale our own way. In that regard, we hope to avoid causing confusion for Mr Subaru… Subaru?”

“…No, I’m just surprised at how incredibly thoughtful and serious you are. You’re small, but it’s impressive how much you think about things.”

“Hehehe, aren’t I amazing?”

“Big sister, you get carried away so quickly. …Cute.”

When Subaru praises Hetaro, who seemingly showed himself for a perfectly valid reason, Mimi inexplicably puffs out her chest with pride. Hetaro, while admonishing Mimi, quietly lets slip his true feelings at the end. It seems her increasing arrogance might also be her brother’s fault.

Currently, the White Whale subjugation force, numbering approximately one hundred and eighty, is marching towards the roots of the Flugel’s Great Tree, where the decisive battle with the White Whale will take place.

After the preliminary speech at Crusch’s mansion concluded, Subaru and his companions quickly rendezvoused with the subjugation force outside the royal capital and have been proceeding at a moderate pace for about half a day.

According to Subaru’s portable device, there’s exactly half a day left until the White Whale is scheduled to appear. Five hours have already passed since they departed the royal capital, and considering the remaining distance, they are now at the halfway point— They should have enough time to rest before the decisive battle with the White Whale.

“Once we reach the Great Tree, we’ll need to finalize the battle plan again. My role is going to be pretty important too, I think.”

“This time, it’s better for Rem to stay close to Subaru rather than go to the front lines, isn’t it? —Rem absolutely doesn’t want to regret anything like with the Juggernaut.”

Rem, holding the reins beside Subaru on the coachman's seat, who speaks with quiet determination at Subaru's murmur. She manipulates the reins, controlling the ground dragon, while glancing sideways at Subaru.

"Honestly, Rem is against it. Rem think it's too dangerous to attract the White Whale with the Witch's Scent… And besides, for that smell to be coming from Subaru…"

"We'll use whatever we can. If it increases our chances of winning by even a tenth of a percent, it's a bonus. I'm full of shortcomings, so I have to do something like that to catch up."

"Subaru is wonderful."

In the face of Subaru's resolve, Rem stubbornly turns her face away, refusing to budge on that one point. It's a small, sulky gesture, but seeing her emotions overflowing, Subaru can't help but let out a soft, wry smile.

Rem had always strived to be expressionless, calm, and emotionless.

While she had opened up somewhat and shown a softer side of her emotions since the monster incident, the stiffness that was still present in her is now almost completely gone.

Ever since Subaru confessed his inner weaknesses and she, in turn, confessed her feelings for him, the richness of her emotional expressions is incomparable to before.

"Time had stopped, but now it moves", was her own phrase, and it was precisely true.

That's why:

"I want to win."

He quietly voices that hope.

Currently, Subaru feels confident that the situation is far better than in previous loops.

His demands, which no one would listen to no matter how much he pleaded before, have been met, and his relationship with the Crusch camp, which should have coldly rejected or abandoned him, is now good. He also feels that his bond with Rem has grown stronger, despite the embarrassing fact of having spilled his guts.

However on the other hand, it's also true that he's stepping onto a more dangerous path than ever before.

The White Whale's threat is still vividly burned into Subaru's mind from having witnessed it up close.

Even Rem's combat power was completely ineffective, and its colossal body could pulverize even large dragon carriages with a mere flick of its tail, which couldn't even be called an attack. Its open maw swallowed ground dragons whole along with the earth, and the death throes of flesh being ground by its sturdy, millstone-like teeth still echo in his ears.

Just thinking about facing it makes his limbs tremble uncontrollably.

However, every time Subaru's heart leans towards weakness in this way:

"…"

Rem's eyes beside him peer into Subaru, as if seeing through his heart.

That alone makes Subaru's heart blaze, as if forgetting its fear. In front of her, right before Rem's eyes, he cannot allow himself to remain the weak, useless, hopeless Natsuki Subaru.

If he is to regain his composure, optimistic hope is more fitting than pessimistic despair.

Indeed, the current situation forces him onto a dangerous path. It's a situation born of necessity, and he hasn't been given enough time to prepare everything perfectly.

All Subaru could do in the limited time was call upon the best personnel and completely leave all other roles to them— His usual reliance on others.

Even so, they didn't ask for more from Subaru, and they certainly didn't treat him as a useless burden.

He just has to do whatever he can, as diligently as possible, in each moment.

Since his own scope of what he can do is extremely narrow, he must at least properly grasp the breadth of that scope and consider what he can do within that narrow range.

"What's up, bro? —You've got a look of resolve on your face."

Suddenly, Ricardo, riding alongside the dragon carriage, smiles and says this to Subaru.

Subaru glares at the dog beastman with the large axe strapped to his back and defiantly twists the corner of his mouth.

"You bet. It took a while, but it clicked perfectly. I'm amazing when I'm resolved, you know? I'll never give up on the future, even if I die."

"Now that's a greedy thing to say! The lady would be thrilled to hear that! You really are perfect to be the lady's friend, bro!"

"If it weren't for our positions, I wouldn't mind shaking your hand… Ah, but if I try to get along with Anastasia, there's that troublesome guy around."

Subaru suddenly recalls the refined man who would stand by Anastasia's side.

It feels like a long time ago that he was beaten by him and left bloody in the middle of the training ground. Though, in the flow of a world that doesn't share loops, only about five days have passed.

Ricardo places a hand over his large mouth at Subaru's words, letting out a rare, knowing chuckle. Seeing the mischievous emotion in his eyes as he glances sideways, it seems he's heard about Subaru's embarrassing blunder.

Naturally, a sulky sentiment wells up inside Subaru's chest, and he turns his face away.

"If you're going to laugh, then burst out laughing. Even I'm aware of how little I read the room back then."

"Nah, nah, what I'm laughing about is something else entirely. Well, you'll figure it out naturally soon enough, and it'd be uncool to spill the beans here."

Satisfied, Ricardo snaps a thin whisker beside his nose with his finger, concluding the topic.

Subaru tries to protest his suggestive demeanor, but gives up, figuring no good answer would come from pressing him, and decides to bring up another topic.

"By the way, I've been wondering ever since we left the royal capital…"

"What is it, ask anything you want. We're buddies, you and me. Even though we don't know each other that well, I'll tell you if it's not too much! If it's too much, it depends on the money! Money!"

"The way you're so particular about money, you really are from Kararagi… That big dog you guys are riding, it's amazing, isn't it?"

Subaru points to the creature under Ricardo's excited bottom, struggling to find the right words to describe it.

The animal Ricardo and the beastman mercenary group are riding is completely different from the ground dragons led by Crusch's subjugation force.

A large dog, perhaps, is the closest description. Its physique is that of a large carnivore —surpassing lions and tigers in his original world— and despite its low posture, it has a presence that doesn't pale in comparison to ground dragons.

Ricardo nods in understanding at Subaru's question, saying "Hmm," and lightly pats the dog's back with his large palm.

"You don't see them much here, do you? This is a creature called a Liger. They're as prized in Kararagi as ground dragons are here. Due to territorial disputes or something, they're hard to breed in other countries like Lugunica, so there aren't many of them."

"Liger…"

At first glance, based on Subaru's experience, it looks like some kind of Ulgarm subspecies. However there are no horns on its head, and its face is clearly more endearing compared to the fierce appearance of the witchbeasts.

If witchbeasts are more wolf-like, then Ligers can certainly be said to be more dog-like.

However, the sight of Ricardo, a dog-type beastman, riding on such a colossal dog, looks strange from the outside—

"There's something oddly incomprehensible about that image. Don't you feel any discomfort yourself?"

"People say that sometimes, but not really. For us, even if they look similar, we can clearly distinguish between beastmen and animals. Don't worry, I don't feel uncomfortable even if you think that."

"No, I thought it was rude to say, so I apologize properly. My bad."

"Gahaha, you're a proper one, aren't you!"

Ricardo bares his teeth and laughs, then gently strokes the Liger's nape. The Liger remains unresponsive, but the way it carries its master seems to have a dog-like sense of loyalty, just like its appearance. The connection between them, it seems, is a commonality even across worlds.

"Compared to ground dragons, Ligers lose in horsepower, but their agility is incomparably better. When the battle with the White Whale turns into a free-for-all, it'll be our time to shine, so watch closely."

"Horsepower, huh. Even if dragons and dogs are popular, that's still the comparison for pulling power… Come to think of it, I haven't seen any horses."

He'd heard from Emilia and others that they exist. However given that he's never seen one, their prevalence seems quite low.

Subaru then points to the rear, towards the back of the marching subjugation force.

"So, you're pulling one vehicle like a dog sled with a bunch of them? Considering the dogs might get tired before the actual battle, wouldn't it have been better to leave it to the other ground dragons?"

"You gotta manage your own luggage yourselves. While I appreciate the concern, the Ligers pulling the carts are properly trained specifically for that. We can't pamper them, besides the White Whale isn't necessarily our only enemy."

Subaru involuntarily suppresses his inner turmoil from showing on his face. Ricardo, meanwhile, seems oblivious to Subaru's surprise.

"If we get ambushed by bandits on the way, there won't be any time to deal with transferring luggage, right? So, we handle our own business as much as possible."

"…If they had the courage to attack a fully armed group like this, they wouldn't be bandits. If they did, it wouldn't be courage, but simple, roundabout suicide."

"That's right!"

Ricardo laughs heartily and slaps the Liger's back as if to spring it forward. The Liger responds with a low growl and steps forward.

He then gallops towards the front, seemingly heading towards Crusch, who is at the head of the march.

Subaru watches his retreating back and takes a breath, his mind racing.

Even if he overcomes this impending battle with the White Whale —this grand showdown— Subaru still has many more walls to overcome.

“Being a hero is really tough, seriously.”

Despite muttering such a tired remark, Subaru’s expression forms a smile.

What he needs to do and what he wants to do align, and there are people who support him in doing it. —Could there be a more rewarding situation than this?

With their fighting spirit in perfect condition before the upcoming battle— They shall challenge fate once more.

2

Fortunately, the march proceeded without incident and according to schedule. The subjugation force arrived at the Flugel’s Great Tree just as the moon began to rise— The start of the night, with approximately six hours remaining until the White Whale’s appearance.

Last time, due to the circumstances, Subaru couldn’t observe it closely, but the sheer thickness and height of the trunk, surpassing even the thousand-year-old trees estimated in his original world, continued to impress him with its grandeur the more he looked up from its base.

“You seem happy, Subaru.”

Rem, standing beside him, points out with a small laugh as Subaru, his voice filled with excitement, steps onto the massive, undulating roots of the great tree that bulge from the ground. In response to her words, Subaru jumps down from the tree root, saying, “Well, you know.”

“Men are naturally moved by things that are big and look strong. I was impressed when I first saw a ground dragon, but nature is incredible too. Flugel did a great job."

He genuinely praises the sage's great feat of planting the tree. He seems to be a great person who did nothing else but plant trees, but if he accomplished at least one deed that left his name in history, then it's fine. He can only pray it wasn't a result of self-aggrandizement, though—

"Oh, there's a name carved into the trunk. We're not on a school trip, are we? Who actually does this kind of thing? No manners, no manners. Rem, lend me your carving knife."

"Rem doesn't have one, and it's not allowed, even for Subaru."

Rem admonishes Subaru, who tries to carve his unnecessary assertion into the trunk with his palm. She laughs softly at Subaru, who pouts and openly expresses his displeasure, then Rem looks up at the great tree.

"The White Whale appears here, right?"

"Yeah, it does. My phone… This magic device will ring when it's time."

He pulls his cell phone from his pocket, hooks the strap on his finger, and dangles it as he replies to Rem. The timer is set, and an alarm will sound when the White Whale is scheduled to appear— At 03:13 PM.

There's no deception regarding this point, and Crusch and the others were convinced during the meeting after their arrival. Not being able to tell the full truth did stir up some guilt, but for now, he's resigned himself to the fact that they'll just have to be convinced by the results.

Keeping the truth from even Rem requires enduring an even stronger pain, but—

"That magic device will notify you of the witchbeast's presence…"

"Yeah, that's right. Honestly, without this, my value this time is…"

"—You're lying, aren't you?"

Suddenly, Rem, narrowing her eyes, asks this, and Subaru's heart definitely stops.

A voiceless "ha" escapes him, and his heart begins to beat again. What did Rem just ask him? He looks up, meets her gaze, reconfirms that her intention isn't due to his mishearing, and his lips tremble.

"Wh-What are you saying? If this is a lie, how would I…"

"You're speaking like a Kararagin, it doesn't suit you, Subaru."

"No, seriously, what kind of suspicion is it to say this is a lie? Crusch-san and the others were convinced…"

Deciding that deception wouldn't work, Subaru still tries to stick to his lie.

If he were to be pressed, it would undoubtedly worsen the situation. Previously, during the mansion loop, the Witch's Hand had activated even in situations where Subaru was forced to reveal information about "Return by Death".

It wasn't because Subaru wanted to speak. Even in situations where he couldn't get through without speaking, that hand would torment Subaru's heart. —So, what about now, after it has evolved to the malicious extent of crushing Emilia's heart?

—He absolutely must not let Rem know.

"Lady Crusch and the others have simply judged that Subaru has no need to lie. Rather than necessity, Rem believes they considered the disadvantages of lying. If you did such a thing, you'd make enemies not only of Lady Crusch but also Lady Anastasia and the Royal Capital's Merchant Guild."

"Th-That's…"

It's an undeniable truth.

Crusch could have refuted Subaru's clumsy theoretical development endlessly. The same goes for Russell and Anastasia, two people accustomed to negotiations.

Yet, the fact that they're turning a blind eye to some suspicious points is largely due to the circumstances rather than trust in Subaru.

Subaru set up that situation, and there's no need for him to deceive the people present in that situation.

Of course, Subaru understood this when he negotiated the alliance, and he cannot deny the fact that he maintained equality by adding the presence of others to his own insignificance.

That's precisely why it can even be said that Crusch and the others have no need to seriously expose the truth or falsehood of Subaru's "lie". As long as the results follow, any minor inconsistencies in what Subaru said are the kind of things they can simply forget.

However, Rem is different.

Rem's position remains unchanged; she is Subaru's ally. Subaru is well aware that in this other world, she is now the one who treats him with the most genuine concern.

Continuing to lie to her gnaws at Subaru's heart in a completely different way than lying to Crusch and the others. He even wants to pour out his emotions and cling to the pure affection she shows him.

However, such a thing is absolutely impossible.

"Rem, I…"

"It's alright, Subaru."

"Huh?"

Subaru tried to devise a way to protect her with words of excuse.

However, Rem, with a smile on her lips, shook her head, rejecting him.

To a surprised Subaru, who couldn’t close his mouth, Rem looked at him with earnest eyes.

“Rem knows that Subaru is lying, because Rem has been watching Subaru all this time.”

She blushes with an embarrassed smile and playfully puts a finger to her lips. Then she points that finger towards Subaru.

“Rem also knows that you can’t tell her the reason for that lie. There is no need for you to worry about Rem just because you can’t tell her, okay?”

“…”

“Rem trusts Subaru completely.”

At the base of the Flugel’s Great Tree, the wind caresses the space between the two facing each other.

Rem places a hand on her chest and declares before the silent Subaru.

“If Subaru says he knows where the White Whale will appear, Rem believes him. If he says the Witch Cult is targeting Lady Emilia and the others, Rem believes that too. Even if the moon were to fall and the country were to be destroyed, if Subaru said so, Rem would believe it.”

“…I wouldn’t go that far.”

“Yes, that’s right, but that’s how serious Rem is.”

Her smile fades, and Rem then looks at Subaru with a sudden seriousness. Then she quietly lowers herself, holds the edge of her skirt with both hands, and bows.

“This body, this heart, are completely devoted to Subaru. — Therefore, Rem will never, ever doubt Subaru, now or in the future.”

"…"

"So, there's no need for you to push yourself, trying to make Rem believe you or trying to deceive Rem with lies— There's no need at all."

Subaru barely managed to suppress the hot lump rising in his throat.

Then he pressed his temples, looked up, and opened his trembling mouth wide.

"Ah, looking up at a big tree really gets me excited!"

"Yes, that's right."

"I won't be able to calm down unless I keep looking up at the top of the tree for a while. There's absolutely no other reason, but I can't look down for a while."

"Yes, that's right."

To prevent tears from spilling, Subaru kept his face turned upwards, putting on a brave front.

Rem, however, gently embraces Subaru's weak bravado with love and compassion, without exposing it.

Now, once again, Subaru truly understood his own foolishness.

He should have just told Rem everything from the beginning.

Although he couldn't tell her everything, if he had been able to convey the tragedies that would occur, Subaru surely could have avoided the second and third tragedies.

He couldn't explain the reason, because he thought she wouldn't believe him if he told her, Subaru decided he had to do it alone, repeating every failure.

However Rem was different.

She doesn't ask for explanations. Even without being told, she trusts Subaru. Even now, she loves and cherishes Subaru, who cannot speak the truth.

"It's 'thank you' rather than 'I'm sorry', isn't it, in times like these."

Desperately defending the levee of his tears, Subaru somehow manages to lower his face and meet Rem's gaze. Rem nods with a full smile at Subaru's answer.

"You're welcome. Rem is much, much, much, much more grateful to Subaru, so we're even."

"I feel like I'm already getting way more back than anything I've done for Rem, from my perspective."

"That's not true at all."

Rem looks down slightly, shaking her head as she denies Subaru's words.

Subaru raises his eyebrows at her attitude and tries to overturn it by adding more words of denial, but—

"Even though Rem knows talking about this would only cause Subaru pain, it's Rem's selfishness."

"I don't think that way at all. I'm the one keeping secrets, so I'm the bad one."

"It's still selfish. Even so, Rem Apologizes."

Her tone is tinged with self-deprecation, but Rem's face, when she looks up, is clear. Seeing Subaru flinch at her contradictory appearance, Rem tilts her head slightly.

"It pains Rem beyond endurance that she cannot be the kind of person you feel you can entrust even a small part of your burdens to, Subaru."

"I…"

Rem’s resolve, the depth of her feelings, are still conveyed to him now.

Leaning his back against the trunk of the great tree, Subaru takes a deep breath.

The courage to put into words the warm feelings welling up in his chest.

“I-I love Emilia.”

“Yes.”

Once, it was a rehash of words he had exchanged with her before.

Subaru knew that these words would deeply hurt and torment her, yet he spoke them again.

However,

“But…”

“…”

“When I look at you, my heart trembles… You can think I’m a terrible person.”

He himself thinks they are terribly convenient words.

However they were Subaru’s true feelings. He knew he couldn’t reciprocate Rem’s feelings, but her words were the only ones that could warm his heart so much.

Rem lets out a somewhat heated sigh, “Hmph.”

“Subaru, you really are a terrible person.”

“…I know.”

“Just kidding. Rem loves you.”

“I… I know, I said!”

With her feelings clearly stated again, Subaru's face instantly turns crimson.

If it weren't for the night, that redness would surely have been conspicuous. Subaru starts walking, as if to hide his blushing face.

"Let's head back soon. We need to get our minds and bodies perfectly ready right before the White Whale appears."

Before passing by Rem, he takes her dangling right hand.

With her hand held, Rem let out a small "Ah", but quickly matched Subaru's brisk pace, and with a mischievous look, she gazed at the side of the boy's face, who was trying not to look at her.

"Subaru."

"…What is it?"

"Rem doesn't mind being your second wife."

His feet almost stopped at those words.

He couldn't help but glance at her, and Rem, with a mischievous cat-like expression, waited for Subaru's reply, wagging her tail vigorously.

Ah, honestly, this girl, no matter what—

"If Emilia-tan is tolerant of polygamy."

"Then, when we get back, we'll have to convince Lady Emilia, won't we? Rem will do her best."

Clenching her fist with the hand opposite to the one being held, Rem smiles, putting a little spirit into her words.

His tension dissolved by her playful words, Subaru clearly realized his own weakness, that he truly couldn't win against her.

Be it Emilia or Rem, in these situations, a man simply cannot win against a woman.

He didn’t mind admitting that weakness, unlike his previous self.

3

The appointed time was drawing near, and a tense atmosphere of pre-battle anticipation filled the base of the Great Tree.

Having taken turns for meals and naps, the subjugation force was in perfect condition. The ground dragons and Ligers, who had endured the long march, had also gotten sufficient rest and now seemed to be eagerly awaiting their riders’ commands.

Everyone held their breath, calmed their minds, and waited for that moment.

They held their breath unnecessarily, as if even the sound of a sword sliding from its sheath might have some effect, and everyone waited for time to pass in silence.

In the sky above the Lifaus Highway, the clouds moved swiftly on this windy night. Each time the moonlight was obscured by the clouds, people would constantly look up, as if a giant beast had blocked out the light. Such was the level of vigilance it instilled.

“Only a few minutes left until the appointed time”, Crusch murmured quietly, glancing at Ferris beside her, who gave a small nod. Even Ferris, who had served by Crusch’s side for many years and should have been accustomed to such situations, showed no hint of his usual jests. He wasn’t swallowed by the oppressive tension; he understood that he was a lifeline for this subjugation force and was committing to that role.

The final number of victors in this battle would likely change depending on Ferris’s performance. Crusch did not doubt her faction’s victory, but she wasn’t so arrogant as to believe the White Whale could be defeated without sacrifice. However, she was confident enough to believe that she could significantly reduce the inevitable casualties. Whether it should be called confidence, given that it was a reliance on her retainer, Ferris, was somewhat debatable.

Wilhelm had already drawn two swords from his waist, holding one in each hand, ready to charge at any moment. The serene sword energy he exuded was honed to perfection, refined even at this moment, as he approached the realization of his long-cherished desire. Crusch couldn't help but feel a captivated admiration for his pure, unadulterated essence as a "Sword Demon".

She truly believed that a person could, through sheer purity, elevate their soul to such a degree. She sincerely hoped that one day, she too could reach that realm.

Beside Wilhelm, the members of the subjugation force, their faces etched with tension, also showed high morale. Following Crusch's orders, they had already silently completed preparations for a preemptive strike. They, too, must have had their doubts about tonight's sortie. There simply wasn't enough time to build the kind of trust between them and Subaru that would establish the reliability of his information, especially regarding the crucial fine details. Yet, the fact that they didn't voice their objections was out of respect for Crusch's judgment, and Crusch was aware of her duty to fulfill that responsibility.

She could feel a pleasant battle fervor slowly burning within her. As the appointed time drew near, and the scent of death, fire, and blood loomed, Crusch began to truly feel alive.

As a ruler, she tried to discipline herself and strive to be honorable. However, she also wouldn't deny the unchangeable essence rooted deep within her heart. That was—

"—!"

Suddenly, a sound echoed through the Lifaus Highway, shrouded in the dark night.

Light sounds chained together, overlapping to form a natural rhythm that vibrated their eardrums. Looking towards the source of the sound, she could see Subaru, holding a glowing magic device. The music was flowing from that device in his hand.

In other words—

“All units, be on alert—”

According to Subaru’s declaration, the White Whale would appear within one minute of the magic device ringing. If they believed his words, it wouldn’t be surprising if its colossal body began to swim through the sky at this very moment. The location, too, must be correct now that the device had sounded. There was plenty of room for doubt, but Subaru had no reason to deceive them. Naturally, Crusch sharpened her senses, anticipating the appearance of the creature.

However,

“…”

In the silence, there was no sign whatsoever of the mighty witchbeast appearing.

To say she was anticlimactic wouldn’t be accurate, but at the fact that nothing happened even after a minute, Crusch, uncharacteristically, couldn’t help but feel a premonition of unease. She didn’t want to think they had been deceived.

The silence on the Lifaus Highway remained unbroken, and the surrounding scenery showed no change. Even now, the moonlight was obscured by clouds drifting across the sky, and a dark, massive shadow enveloped their vision—

“—!”

Looking up, Crusch immediately cursed her own shallow thinking.

The moonlight was obscured, and a shadow had fallen.

The cloud-like mist that blocked the light slowly descended, looming before their eyes.

It was a witchbeast, its enormous fish-like silhouette floating in the sky.

At the same instant Crusch gasped, almost all of the subjugation force members realized the same truth. As their wills unified, their gazes turned to Crusch.

—They were awaiting the command for a preemptive strike.

They had successfully gained the initiative and suppressed the White Whale's initial appearance. All that remained was to launch their ambush according to plan and dominate the battlefield.

"…"

Taking a breath, Crusch resolved to issue the first command.

The White Whale was still unaware of their minuscule presence. It quietly turned its head, as if trying to ascertain its location, its movements uncertain and, more importantly, full of openings.

"—Everyone—"

She was about to say "full assault", when—

"—Let 'er rip!"

"—El Huma!!"

A command bypassed Crusch, and simultaneously, mana unfurled with the chanting of a spell.

Four incredibly powerful icicles, forged with tremendous density, materialized simultaneously into the world—and were launched, striking the White Whale's torso. A beat later, the White Whale's shriek and gushing blood rained down upon the earth.

Looking in a hurry, she saw Subaru and Rem rushing forward on a single ground dragon. Subaru, clinging to Rem's waist, gave a triumphant fist pump, while Rem, having delivered the preemptive magical strike, wore a look of utter satisfaction, as if she had fulfilled her role perfectly.

The subjugation force was shaken by these two rushing ahead—or rather, leading the charge. Seeing this, Crusch couldn't help but let her mouth twist into a wide grin.

It wasn’t anger. It was from laughter.

“Everyone— Follow those fools!”

Crusch’s command, cutting through the confusion, rang out, and the members of the subjugation force reacted instinctively, commencing their attack.

A tremendous cloud of dust rose, and beyond it, the White Whale’s shriek echoed loudly once more through the night sky of the Lifaus Highway.

The battle to subjugate the White Whale had, at long last, begun.

Chapter 57:
White Whale Conquest Battle

The tremors of the ground dragon transmitted directly to his rear, and Subaru licked his parched lips to moisten them, controlling the bouncing motion.

The alarm on his cell phone rang on schedule, announcing the appearance of the White Whale on the twilight Lifaus Highway. It would appear in about a minute— The problem was that its exact time and location couldn't be pinpointed to the second or by coordinates.

He scanned his surroundings, sharpening his senses, and waited for that moment. Then, just as he thought the moonlight was obscured by a cloud, he realized that the "cloud" was actually the immense underbelly of a giant being, and Subaru witnessed the fulfillment of his memories.

At the same time, others around Subaru also began to notice its presence, and a sense of unease spread. Everyone waited for the signal for the coordinated attack, as planned. However, Subaru and the others were a mere half-beat faster than the moment Crusch gasped.

"—Let 'er rip!"

"—El Huma!"

Responding to Subaru's shout, Rem imbued the mana she had already begun to gather with direction through her incantation. Four massive ice spears, as menacing as bundled tree trunks, shot forth, piercing the wind and slamming into the colossal body's torso.

The sound of the ice spear tips crushing against something hard echoed, but just before they shattered completely, the tips embedded slightly into the witchbeast's belly, widening the wound and drilling inside —gushing blood.

The White Whale's shriek reverberated across the plains, and as they endured the eardrum-numbing atmospheric tremor, the ground dragon carrying Subaru and Rem charged forward.

To be clear, Subaru and the others were by no means rushing. If they hadn't moved at that instant, if their movement had been delayed by even a fraction of a second, the White Whale would have perceived this preemptive strike. That fleeting moment was the watershed. Even Crusch, a master of her craft, gasped in awe before the White Whale's majesty, knowing that the slightest hesitation could mean life or death.

Even if one confidently anticipated its arrival, a ripple still forms in the human heart when the event actually occurs. Even a small ripple can distort thought, distortion leads to stagnation, and stagnation invites defeat—the battle was dangerously close to beginning at a disadvantage for them.

Yet, the reason Subaru and the others made it in time was, in a word, "the power of love". The existence of magic tools and the reliability of their functions— Crusch's group's fraction-of-a-second delay in judgment was caused by a subtle, almost imperceptible, distrust of that. There was also impatience regarding the unseen witchbeast, so it was understandable that a slight shadow fell upon their judgment. But Rem believed Subaru's words, his declaration that the White Whale would appear at that very moment, without a single doubt or shred of suspicion. Therefore, she was able to gather her maximum magical power according to the time Subaru specified, and unleash it the moment she confirmed the White Whale's appearance.

What else could this be called if not Rem's love?

"Analyzing it like that is super embarrassing—!"

"Subaru, hold on tighter. You'll be thrown off!"

As Subaru internally analyzed how they initiated the battle, Rem, who was holding the ground dragon's reins, shouted this. Her words were part of the strategy— The second phase after the preemptive strike.

“Everyone— Follow those fools!”

Behind them, a half-step behind the charging Subaru and his group, the subjugation force, responding to Crusch’s command, ignited their cannons one after another. The loaded magic stones were launched, exploding in mid-air and transforming into destructive power corresponding to their colors, hitting the White Whale’s torso in rapid succession.

Flames, ice, and earth transformed into blades, spears, and hammers, striking and widening the wounds Rem had created. A mist of blood erupted from the writhing colossus, raining a dark, thick downpour onto the road. Dodging the mist-like blood that obscured their vision, the ground dragon deftly maneuvered, aiming for the White Whale’s rear in a wide arc. It was all according to plan.

“Make it aware of my presence, and position ourselves so the subjugation force can attack its back!”

“The crystal of dispelling darkness is about to shatter, close your eyes!”

Already in combat, a pure white horn protruded from Rem’s forehead. Looking up, Subaru hastily obeyed Rem’s bared-teeth instruction, looking down and closing his eyes— The next moment, the world blinked.

A blinding white light exploded in the sky, scorching the world with a brilliant white glow for an instant. The intensity of the light, strong enough to penetrate his closed eyelids and assault his optic nerves, choked Subaru’s throat with surprise. A few seconds later, when he cautiously opened his eyes and looked around,

“Whoa, it’s just as they said. That’s amazing.”

The darkness of the night had been swept away, revealing a world where visibility was secured as if it were broad daylight. Overhead, instead of the already set sun, shone the “crystal of dispelling darkness” launched simultaneously with the preemptive strike on the White Whale. This crystal, when shattered, generated an artificial light source and illuminated the darkness. Though it was supposed to provide only a faint glow to lighten the dimness,

“They bought a mountain of them with money and connections and shattered them all at once. Instant artificial sun, huh?”

“If it could submerge into the night, even the White Whale’s massive body would be hard to find. —Now, this is where it begins!”

The effect of the crystal stones, gathered by the two strongest merchants in the Royal Capital working together and running everywhere. The Lifaus Highway, previously plunged in night, was now filled with the brightness of day, vividly illuminating a world that had until then relied only on moonlight. In other words, it also —

“That’s…!”

—revealed the full extent of the witchbeast called the “White Whale”, which they had never clearly seen in broad daylight until now.

“—!!!!!”

Perhaps angered by being exposed to the light of day, the White Whale opened its massive mouth and roared. The deafening sound was no longer just a mere sound; it was akin to an act of destruction. The atmosphere vibrated, and the violent roar instilled fear even in the trained ground dragons’ primal instincts.

The monstrous form that caused this was bleeding from various parts of its colossal body, yet its movements showed no loss of vitality as it looked down upon the humans challenging it.

“How… big…”

His throat, not intending to tremble, did so, and Subaru couldn’t stop the sensation of his limbs becoming numb as if paralyzed. The threat of the White Whale, which Subaru had seen, touched, and had things stolen by, was now clearly revealed to be merely a fraction of its true presence.

The White Whale— As its moniker suggested, the witchbeast's form was covered in white. Its skin, roughened like bedrock, was covered in countless white hairs, and its toughness prevented all but the most powerful attacks from damaging its interior. Its full form, seen from a distance, certainly resembled a whale as described in lore, but its size exceeded expectations by two full sizes.

To Subaru's knowledge, the largest whale in the world was the blue whale— Around thirty meters in length, literally the largest and heaviest mammal. Howver the White Whale's body, observed visually, easily surpassed thirty meters, approaching fifty meters in scale. At this point, it was less like a living creature and more like a mountain. A white mountain, for some reason, leisurely swimming through the sky.

"Subaru."

A voice called Subaru, whose teeth were chattering uncontrollably from fear, and whose fingertips were starting to tremble. It was the girl, her back to him, holding Subaru tight around her small waist. Just in front of him, close enough to hear her breathing, she didn't turn to face him.

"Are you scared?"

It was an inquiry of trust, not a provocation. Subaru bit down hard, forcibly twisting his mouth, then said,

"Yeah, I'm scared. —Scared of how brilliantly I'll shine in the future after defeating that thing and being praised!"

Subaru cracked a joke to meet the girl's expectations, then patted her shoulder from behind.

"My life is entirely in your hands! Now, let's run like hell!"

"Rem's life is also Subaru's. —Then, let's do it."

Rem smiled gently and cracked the reins at Subaru, who gave a thumbs-up and bravely ordered their retreat. In response, the ground dragon neighed, unperturbed by the monstrosity, kicking up dust as it galloped across the earth. Subaru and the others were heading directly for the White Whale's lower right side, aiming to run diagonally and circle around to its tail.

The White Whale's gigantic eyes turned towards Subaru and the others, who were leading and approaching it most closely. Its jaw, large enough to swallow an entire house, opened, and its mouth, lined with millstone-like teeth, sucked in the air, preparing to unleash a roar at them. Subaru and the others braced themselves for another roar like the one that had broken their initial momentum—but above their heads,

"Looking away so casually, you must think little of me—!"

An invisible blade flashed horizontally, cleanly and shallowly slashing the White Whale's open head in a straight line. There wasn't even the sound of blade on rock; the attack, which smoothly cut through the tough bedrock-like skin, caused blood to gush from the White Whale's massive body again.

Turning and scanning for the blade's origin, Subaru saw Crusch's ground dragon leading the subjugation force, following close behind them. Standing on the back of the sleek black ground dragon, the beautiful woman, who seemed to have unleashed the attack with a valiant pronouncement —in her swung- through arm,

"She's not holding… anything?!"

"It's Lady Crusch's sword skill, 'One Blow, One Hundred Felled', famous for its intangible sword that ignores range," Rem answered in a low voice to Subaru's astonishment. He was unfamiliar with the anecdote she mentioned, but the mere words gave him a general understanding of the situation, and the convincing effectiveness of Crusch's seemingly unarmed combat prowess.

The White Whale's initial movement was thwarted by the invisible attack, and follow-up attacks struck its now stagnant form. Members of the subjugation force continued to launch magic stones, concentrating their firepower on the White Whale's colossal body. Damage accumulated from successive impacts, and the writhing behemoth began to lose altitude.

The White Whale's massive body, which had been at cloud height, began to descend. When its altitude was no longer so high that one had to crane their neck straight up, that was—

"—The blade's reach."

The ground dragon bounded, leaping into the air with a lightness unsuited to its massive size. Still, the difference in mass compared to the mighty White Whale was clear. The ground dragon floating before its nose must have seemed like a mere insect to the White Whale, but——A straight, swift sword flash deeply and vertically split the witchbeast's snout.

The sound of the battle, filled with roars, certainly ceased at the sight of silver effortlessly slicing through white bedrock-like skin. This was not magic, nor power from enchanted minerals, nor destruction brought by an intangible blade; it was proof that a physical block of iron was wielded by human hands. It was proof that the culmination of a human's life, the vast majority of which had been spent training, had indeed reached the snout of the witchbeast that generated fog and dyed the world white.

"—Fourteen years."

Sticking his sword into the split snout, a figure crouched down and muttered. Maintaining his posture by thrusting the sword opposite to the one he had swung, a trained back brushed off the blood that wet his blade from the attack—there, enveloped in sword energy strong enough to distort the air,

"I've dreamed of this day, purely and solely."

The White Whale writhed as the figure straightened his back. As if to shake off what was on its nose, the White Whale's massive body twisted in mid-air, barrel-rolling and sweeping through the air. A fierce wind raged across the sky above the road, and everyone gasped, eyes wide, at the result of the colossal body's maneuvering. But,

"—!!"

The White Whale, twisting back to its original position, roared in pain, spilling fresh blood as it thrashed its tail. The vertical wound on its nose now had a horizontal cut added, forming a cross-shaped wound on its forehead, and the figure lightly stepped onto the White Whale's back.

—The Sword Demon grinned, his wrinkled cheek twisting into a cruel grimace.

"Fall here, and become a corpse. —You lump of flesh."

With that, Wilhelm's body, gripping swords in both hands, cut through the air. He raced along the White Whale's back from its head towards its tail, his swinging blades mercilessly hacking at the bedrock-like skin along the way. Effortlessly slicing through the tough, resilient skin, scattering dark blood mist into the sky as he rushed— He was truly the "Sword Demon".

Gripped to its body, the White Whale, though shaking its massive frame, had no effective way to strike Wilhelm. It twisted through the air again with a hurricane-force spin, attempting to dislodge the lightly running old swordsman, but—

"How cooperative of you, to come so willingly to be cut."

Just before the White Whale spun in mid-air, Wilhelm leaped briefly, stabbing his swords in and lifting himself. As the White Whale spun in place, the impaling blades cleanly sliced through its body, effectively presenting itself to the blades. The Sword Demon, half-drenched in the gushing blood fog, his body mottled red, laughed. Laughing, his old body raised both swords above his head and aimed for the colossal body's flank. The descending blades vertically shaved the bedrock-like skin on its side, and as they swung down in a V-shape, they sliced off flesh. A piercing shriek rang out, and the White Whale's tail lashed out horizontally at the falling Wilhelm. But just before the direct hit, Wilhelm's ground dragon rushed in, scooped up the old swordsman, and smoothly escaped the attack's range. Just as the White Whale, fueled by rage, tried to pursue Wilhelm, “Shut yer trap, ya idiot. We’re your opponents too!”

A single great-axe blow penetrated its oral cavity, gouging out one of the White Whale’s teeth, which was large enough to embrace, from its root. With a dull thud, the yellowish molars flew off. Straddling a liger, Ricardo, who was cheering, then diagonally traversed the White Whale’s face. The great dog, praised for its agility compared to ground dragons, fully displayed its quickness, dashing around the White Whale’s body in the sky with its master on its back.

“Alright, alright, it ain’t over yet!”

From atop the running liger’s back, Ricardo’s great axe, spitting saliva and curses, swung down. The beastman crushed bedrock, gouging out the flesh beneath and scattering blood. The accompanying liger also made full use of its fangs and claws, deepening and sharpening the wounds it created. And following Ricardo’s fierce efforts,

“Alright, here we go!”

“Big sis, don’t get too far ahead! Everyone, now!”

The twin vice-captains, kitten-beastmen riding small ligers, spread out and gave orders, and the beastmen mercenary group’s ligers began clinging to the White Whale’s body one after another, running across its vast flesh and trampling it.

Spears and swords were swung, most of them deflecting off the bedrock-like skin, but steadily inflicting damage by piercing through the shattering outer layer. The sight was like a beast swarmed by venomous insects. As it thrashed its body at the enemies clinging to various parts, incrementally increasing its wounds, and revealing the weakness of its colossal body’s inability to maneuver nimbly,

“—All personnel, fall back!”

Crusch’s furious roar pierced the battlefield, and the mercenary group clinging to the White Whale’s body simultaneously leaped off. The ligers in mid-air landed lightly on the ground, and seeing this, the White Whale made a wide turn to counterattack— However that judgment was a forsake.

“You’ve exposed your flank—!”

Crusch’s second attack from above— A downward slash— diagonally cut the White Whale’s side, and following that single stroke, another wave of attacks followed. This was the attack from the unit that had not participated in the assault until now, focusing solely on casting spells.

“—!!”

Incantations overlapped, creating manifestations of destruction from refined mana. In a contradictory sky where the sun and moon coexisted, a second sun appeared in the low sky. Even understanding that it was a concentrated fire magic, he couldn’t tear his eyes away from the sheer intensity of the world being instantly roasted by the high heat.

A great fireball, over ten meters in diameter, scorched his skin even from a distance, burning so fiercely it threatened to evaporate the moisture in his eyeballs behind his eyelids. When the fireball gained an initial, wavering velocity,

“—Whoooooa!”

That initial velocity immediately transformed into acceleration, and the great fireball directly struck the White Whale’s torso, which had turned its flank— Burning flesh from the created wound, heating and boiling its internal organs. The White Whale’s scream and the explosion roared across the bright night sky.

The shattered fireball scattered burning debris across the plains, and the mercenaries running below hastily evacuated. Subaru and Rem, among them, retreated, their eyes fixed on the White Whale, whose white fur was engulfed in flames. With such overwhelming results —the success of an unprecedented ambush— the White Whale couldn’t even retaliate. Perhaps they could escape with zero casualties, without it being able to do anything.

"That felt like a good hit! Can we keep this up?!"

Subaru clenched his fist in triumph on the back of the ground dragon, which had stopped amidst a cloud of dust, keeping its distance from the aftereffects of the flames. In truth, they had completely suppressed the White Whale so far and inflicted no small amount of damage. It was unclear whether previous subjugation forces had lacked strength, or if it was simply because their preparations were thorough for this moment, but there was a sense of elation, as if victory was already in sight. However, in response to Subaru's words,

"No. —Honestly, Rem wished to bring it down to the ground with that."

Rem shook her head regretfully, glaring at the burning beast floating in the sky. Prompted by her words, Subaru looked up, narrowing his eyes suspiciously as he observed the White Whale. Its white fur was still burning, its entire body being roasted by the flames, and it was writhing, but there was no sign of the fire going out. Injuries from slashes and magic stones were spread across its entire body, and the sight of it dripping blood was visibly painful. However,

"Its altitude… hasn't dropped."

The White Whale's body remained in the sky above. It wasn't a distance that a liger couldn't reach with a jump, but it was still far too high for a single person to challenge. More importantly, they couldn't move on to the next phase of the plan unless it was brought to the ground.

"We used up all our opening gambits. If it still won't fall, then it means they're tougher than us, eh?"

Ricardo, with his great axe on his shoulder, his fur wet with splattered blood, came alongside them. He snorted through his dog-like nose, his whiskers trembling as he looked up at the White Whale.

"From what I can tell after a few hits, it's not easy to get an attack through its thick hide. You need brute force like with my weapon, or skill like Wilhelm's, otherwise it's a war of attrition."

"Physical attacks might be like that, but magic attacks seem to be getting through, don't they?"

"That's also a delicate matter. At first glance, it looks like attacks are hitting spectacularly, but the white fur on its skin scatters mana and reduces the power. Rem's attacks aren't getting through as much as they appear."

Rem spoke regretfully, lamenting that her maximum-power magic wasn't having the desired effect. When Subaru turned to her, he could indeed see that while the White Whale's body had numerous shallow wounds, none were of the type that would immediately impede its combat. But at least,

"That fire magic just now seems to have burned the white fur and is getting through."

"Burn the mana-scattering fur, then you can scrape off the roasted skin underneath with a blade— Simple, ain't it?"

Ricardo bared his fangs in a ferocious grin, agreeing with Subaru's insight. He then lowered his great axe, patted the liger's back, and swung his head around, gaining speed again as he headed for the front lines. Then,

"I'll keep wearing it down like before! Tell Crusch to hit it with those big shots at key moments too!"

He made a presumptuous request, then slipped under the White Whale, leaping again to target its back. Looking over, even Wilhelm, who had supposedly distanced himself, was now aiming for the White Whale's back from its tail end, and the subjugation force, having reached the same conclusion as Subaru's group, was also swiftly moving into action. In other words, they were continuing the all-out attack.

"Right now, the firepower is concentrated, so if we get closer, we'll actually get in the way. Rem, can't you launch any magic?"

"It takes time to cast a spell of the same scale as before… Still, mana is scattered, so Rem's magic won't inflict damage. Anything less than that power simply wouldn't have enough impact."

Following Ricardo's argument from earlier, Rem might have more success by charging into the front lines with her morning star and inflicting physical attacks on its rock-hard body with brute force. However, Subaru would be a hindrance to that, and if they were to follow the strategy Subaru had devised for later, Rem and Subaru couldn't be separated here.

"It's frustrating, do we just have to watch until something changes…!"

"We're just as frustrated as you are, nya."

As he spoke, another ground dragon pulled alongside Subaru and Rem's, which was running at a slow pace. Mounted on the heavily armored ground dragon, equipped with ground dragon armor, was a lightly dressed cross-dressing knight—Ferris. He narrowed his eyes mischievously, looking at Subaru.

"Ferris, with limited offensive means, basically just watches, nya? I'm used to it, if you can call it that, but I always feel this frustration, nya."

"In return, you're the lifeline of the subjugation force, specializing in healing. I can't have you on the front lines. Just focus on that role completely, please."

Subaru responded to Ferris, who maintained his usual demeanor even in this situation. Ferris tilted his head slightly, surprised, saying, "Oh?"

"It feels like your state of mind has changed, Subaru-kyun, what happened?"

"If I had to say, I just became a slightly better man."

Subaru answered with a bitter expression, scanning the moving battlefield. Ferris hummed, touching a finger to his lips and nodding.

"Did Rem perhaps make Subaru-kyun a man, nya?"

The answer was both yes and no. Subaru was irritated by Ferris's crude laughter, giving a thumbs-up. He was about to open his mouth to yell at the knight, wondering if this was the time for such jokes, but—

"Sir Wilhelm—!"

Rem's shout made his gaze frantically return to the front, catching sight of the old swordsman running along the White Whale's back.

Wilhelm, holding his sword vertically with the blade facing down, sliced along the White Whale's back. As Wilhelm's shadow raced from its tail to its back, gushing fresh blood followed like a fountain.

This was truly what they meant by a lion's ferocious charge. Wilhelm's single-handed, almost unbelievable, sharpness of attack boosted the subjugation force's morale, and the continuous throwing of magic stones and the mercenary group's ligers' combined tactics gained momentum.

The White Whale, writhing in pain in mid-air and uttering broken cries, was utterly unable to respond to any of it. The Fog Witchbeast—the monstrous entity that had tormented the world for so long—was in such a pitiful state, and Subaru felt certain that the tide of battle was turning in their favor.

"Chaaaaaaarge!"

With a single shout, Wilhelm's sword strike split the White Whale's head vertically, and the old body rushed through, lightly leaping from the White Whale's tip. As he spun in mid-air, the inverted old man was then—

"Heave-ho!"

Ricardo, who had jumped straight up, swung his great axe. The whirlwind, with its blunt edge, targeted not the White Whale, but Wilhelm, who was inverted in mid-air. Wilhelm met the blow with the soles of his feet, "Shi—!"

Wilhelm's body was launched as if repelled, and the swords held in both hands raged as they passed through the White Whale's face. The White Whale's snout and cheek were brutally torn to shreds. Not content with just the wounds and fresh blood, Wilhelm regripped both swords and launched a thrust— The converging attacks from left and right horizontally sliced above and below the eyeball, and the quickly reversed blades then vertically split the wounds on both sides. As a result,

"Its left eye is falling—!"

Deeply gouged by the rectangular cuts, the White Whale's left eye was severed. Someone's words became reality, and the falling eye, gushing red blood and white bodily fluids, impacted the ground with a tremendous roar, shattering it. A half-beat later, Wilhelm landed directly beside the fallen eyeball. He then thrust his sword into the rolling eyeball, lifted it so the White Whale above could see, and—

"—Pitiful."

He curled the corner of his mouth, uttering a single word with a gruesome smile.

The White Whale, toyed with by the Sword Demon's brutal fighting, had no means to retaliate. With one eye neatly gouged out, the disparity in combat power was clearly not dictated by physical size. But that provocative act—

"The White Whale's eye color…!"

"It's coming!"

"Subaru, keep your head down—!"

The moment they noticed the change, Ferris screamed, and Rem accelerated the ground dragon. Receiving the wind and hastily bracing himself against the sudden acceleration, Subaru imprinted the White Whale's form onto his mind amidst the violent shaking. —That change, that transformation, it was…

"—!!"

It roared, its remaining single eye, filled with rage from having one eye gouged out, glowing crimson. With its blood-red eye, it glared down and tilted its body towards the subjugation force, who were frantically trying to create distance from its madness. Then, a change occurred in the White Whale's body.

—The instant it first appeared, Subaru couldn't suppress a hard-to-describe feeling of revulsion.

The White Whale's mouth opened. No, that description was both right and wrong. To state the fact accurately, it was this:

—Countless mouths appeared all over the White Whale's body, and they all simultaneously bared their teeth and opened.

"—!!"

A piercing shriek vibrated the plains' atmosphere high, causing a discomfort that felt like claws directly raking the minds of those who heard it. Not only humans, but even animals like ground dragons and ligers shivered down their spines at that roar. It appealed to their instincts, making their legs falter, naturally transforming them into vulnerable prey.

Then,

"—Ah."

From every single mouth on the White Whale's body, the 'fog' that dyed the world white was released. It instantly poured across the vast plains as far as the eye could see, stealing the light that had been secured from the world and painting everything pure white.

—The roar of the 'fog' witchbeast rose, and the difficulty of the subjugation battle skyrocketed.

The end of the White Whale's Subjugation was still unclear—.

Chapter 58:
Threat of the Mist

1

A roar echoed across the Lifaus Highway.

The White Whale, majestically swimming through the sky, screeched high-pitched sounds from every open maw on its colossal body. Unlike the earth-shaking roars, the sounds leaking from its countless, unevenly sized mouths were sharp, like wind tearing at something.

Subaru couldn't suppress the revulsion, a sensation distinct from being punched in the eardrums, that made his whole body bristle.

Despite the massive preemptive strike they'd launched, and the furious efforts of Wilhelm and the beast-human mercenary group, the damage inflicted on the White Whale was far from minor.

Their combined firepower would have been overkill even if Subaru died a hundred times, and to compare it to other witchbeast, it seemed powerful enough to wipe out a pack of Ulgarms ten times over.

It had taken all that head-on. So, even if it wasn't enough to end the fight, they had expected it to take significant damage and fall to the ground, but—

"Damn it, the fog…!"

As it shrieked from its entire body, the White Whale's countless mouths simultaneously spewed out "fog." Across a wide area of the road, the encroaching fog falling from the sky invaded the world, gradually painting their vision a hazy white.

This was the true power of the "fog" witchbeast.

The road filled with fog, obscuring their vision and disrupting their coordination. More than anything, despite its colossal, sky-high white body, it seemed to melt and vanish into the white sea created by the fog.

“You’ve gotta be kidding me…!”

“—Subaru, please entrust your life to Rem!!”

In front of Subaru, whose throat trembled at the shocking tactic, Rem leaned forward and shouted. As an answer, Subaru leaned deep into her back and hugged her waist.

The ground dragon spun in response to Rem’s swift handling of the reins, scraping the earth as it began to gallop. Ferris, who had been beside them moments ago, similarly turned his ground dragon’s head through a sharp turn towards the inside of the fog. If the White Whale had entered combat mode, a counterattack was inevitable. Naturally, injuries were unavoidable. In such a situation, that’s where his moment, known by the name “Blue”, would be—

Immediately after,

“—All units, withdraw!!!”

A furious shout echoed from beyond the fog, holding back those who were about to plunge into the white darkness. The voice was unforgivably Crusch’s. Before Subaru could lift his head to ask what was happening,

“Whoa?!”

With a split-second decision, the ground dragon changed its direction of travel, and Subaru’s body, thrown by the centrifugal force, shifted to the left. In front, Ferris’s ground dragon, also making a sudden turn, went right. As Subaru’s group split left and right, right down the middle— A fog with dense mass swept through in a single blast.

The surging fog covered their entire vision, and if their evasion had been even a moment too late, it would have surely swallowed Subaru and their ground dragon whole.

If he hadn’t seen it with his own eyes, he might have laughed it off, asking why they were making such a fuss over just fog, but witnessing its unnaturalness firsthand made it impossible to crack a joke.

The fog gouged out the ground of the plain it touched as if melting it, literally dissolving everything in its path as it swallowed them whole.

If they had been exposed to that, they would have vanished to a place not of this world.

“This is the real ‘fog’…!”

Among the several details about the White Whale’s terror that were briefed to the subjugation force beforehand, one was the destructive power of this “fog”.

There were two types of fog emitted from the White Whale’s mouth: one was a diffusion type that purely obscured vision and expanded its own range of action. The other was the vanishing type that had just now, before their eyes, completely made the ground disappear.

The latter was what the White Whale used as an attack. The terror of that fog wasn’t just its unstoppable power and damage, but its true threat lay elsewhere. That was—

“—Haaah!!”

With a flash of spirit, a valiant voice reached them from beyond the fog, and the next moment, the fog covering their vision was suddenly swept away.

Looking up, they saw Crusch standing on the ground dragon’s back, her arm swung through, beyond the cleared vision. She had probably used an application of an invisible blade to cut through the pervasive fog and secure their visibility.

She roughly wiped her sweat-soaked forehead, then lowered herself onto the running ground dragon’s back and looked around. As if using her as a beacon, the scattered subjugation force gathered, and Crusch spoke to the leading members,

"—How many were taken?"

"Our unit strength is twelve— Three are missing."

"…Who was taken?"

"I don't know…!"

An older squad leader responded to Crusch's question, then shook his head at the follow-up.

It was an incomprehensible exchange. The squad leader, who knew the number of his troops, still said he didn't know the identities of the missing members.

But,

"We are fourteen, one missing."

"Our unit is two. Also unknown."

"Six… I apologize! We were deep in position, couldn't avoid the fog…!"

Similar reports came in one after another, and none of the squad leaders could name their missing comrades.

This abnormal situation was the truly terrifying aspect of the "fog" controlled by the White Whale. In other words,

"The fog of Vanishing…!!"

Literally, any existence that was exposed to the "fog" and vanished was erased from the world itself.

Even if the fact remained that someone had vanished, no one's memory retained who they were. This was the true reason why Crusch had precisely arranged each squad of the subjugation force to fifteen members.

If a squad was short-handed after being hit by the "fog", it was no longer possible to know who had been taken. The number of squads was kept consistent only to recognize the fact of the missing members.

When Subaru had encountered the White Whale in the previous loop, a strange phenomenon had occurred.

That was when Otto, a merchant traveling with him, completely erased the existence of fellow merchants and Rem, who had stayed behind to stall, from his memory. At the time, Subaru had believed Otto had simply erased inconvenient memories out of terror, but it made sense if it was considered an effect of the White Whale's "fog".

The fellow merchant and Rem, who had vanished from the world due to the fog, were also erased from everyone's memory. Just as Ram, her twin sister, had lost Rem from her memory upon returning to the mansion.

And yet, once again,

"Only I remember…"

Subaru muttered this undeniable reality in a daze.

He alone remembered the vanished merchant, and Rem, who had sacrificed herself to let Subaru escape, just as he hadn't forgotten them in that loop.

Among the old soldiers leading each squad gathered around Crusch — The faces of two of the fifteen men had already been replaced.

The original squad leaders had vanished due to the "fog", and their recognition had shifted to the reality that their replacements had always been the squad leaders. Thus, no one noticed the sudden personnel change.

This abnormal situation once again made Subaru realize that this fog witchbeast had a strong connection to the "Witch".

The black, demonic hand that bound Subaru to this world was likely also not unrelated.

"Now that we're immersed in the fog, we don't know where it will try to erase us from next. Bunching up is a bad move. —Disperse, and use the fog-Clearing Crystal Stones."

Crusch looked around at the assembled subjugation force and swiftly concluded the discussion. As she saw everyone nod in agreement, Subaru noticed with wide eyes that Wilhelm and Ricardo were not among them.

—Surely, those two haven't vanished as well.

"You're back, Wilhelm."

However, Subaru's inner trepidation was denied by the figure emerging from beyond the fog.

Slowly clearing the shadows from the depths of the dense fog was Wilhelm, swinging his blood-soaked sword from atop his ground dragon. Covered in splashes of blood, a truly gruesome sight, he wiped his face with his sleeve as he rejoined them,

"I got ahead of myself. —What's the damage?"

"Seventeen in total… roughly one squad has vanished. We can't even properly honor the fallen."

Vanishing, quite literally, meant the erasure of existence.

Only a void remained, the sense that people who were there were now gone from everyone's memory.

Where did the bonds, thoughts, and love that were supposedly there until then disappear to?

Looking, a pack of Ligers appeared from behind Wilhelm, and among them were Ricardo and the two vice-captains riding large Ligers. It seemed that, like Wilhelm, the group that had stayed close to the White Whale in combat had suffered fewer casualties.

"A troublesome fog has appeared. We don't have many Fog-Clearing Crystal Stones… If we misuse them, it's over."

"If we can land another concentrated attack of the same magnitude, it should fall to the ground. Since we've lost sight of it, this is the time to use them to avoid a surprise attack. Any objections?"

Everyone silently affirmed Crusch's words.

Receiving their affirmation, she nodded and looked at the support group led by Ferris,

"Ferris. Launch the Fog-Clearing Crystal Stones. We only have enough for two uses. Handle them carefully."

"Preparation is already complete, yes. Just give the order whenever."

Crusch nodded in response to Ferris tapping his chest, then she looked around at everyone's faces before the battle resumed,

"This is the crucial moment! The effectiveness of our attacks on the White Whale is proven by the feeling remaining in your hands! Indeed, it is formidable. Its true nature is unknown. Our deaths might, at worst, not even remain in anyone's memory. However!"

Crusch, who, though a sword at her hip —the Karsten family's treasured blade— would be useless for her unarmed strikes, drew it and raised it to the sky, her voice rising,

"For the sake of the dead whose names cannot be inscribed on their tombstones, and for the sake of the weak who will likely be exposed to the threat of fog in the future world, we will defeat it, even if it means sacrifice— Follow me!!"

"—Oooooh!!"

Each of them raised their weapons to the sky and cheered in unison.

An immense surge of morale shook the fog, igniting and inflaming their flagging will to fight.

"Fog-Clearing Crystal Stones—Launch!!"

Following Crusch's command, those under Ferris's command simultaneously raised their cannons—and immediately after, with an explosive roar, the crystal stones shot up into the fog beyond,

“The fog, it’s clearing—!!”

The light bursting from the shattered crystal stones instantly swept away the fog that had covered their vision. Of course, it didn’t clear all the fog that covered the entire plain.

It merely thinned the overall density, alleviating a state where securing vision was difficult. But even that was a sufficient effect.

—The “fog” released by the White Whale seemed to be a mutation of the White Whale’s mana.

In short, the directed, materialized dispersal of mana corresponded to the “fog”. Fog-Clearing Crystal Stone was its common name; its correct name was Anti-Magic Crystal— An item that, when possessed, had a one-time substitute function against magic attacks.

Shattering multiple such crystal stones simultaneously produced the effect seen this time. It was a risky gamble, as it would even dampen the power of their own magic attacks if the atmosphere weren’t filled with fog.

“Not enough to clear all the fog, huh.”

“Instead, our magic is also unaffected. Rem is also at full power.”

Rem, clenching a small fist, answered, her horn on her forehead glowing.

Feeling the circulating mana surrounding her on his skin, Subaru nodded, recognizing that Rem was once again channeling her magic.

“—Alright! No time to be scared. I haven’t been any help until now. How about we make our move!”

“Yes! Let’s go!”

The reins clattered beneath the ground dragon’s neck, and the ride bounced with its neigh.

Clinging to Rem’s waist on the running ground dragon, Subaru’s gaze wandered over the thinned fog above, searching for the White Whale.

The subjugation force, spurred on by Crusch’s command, also dispersed and scanned their surroundings, searching for the colossal beast. The tension of not knowing when the battle would begin started to dry their mouths.

The White Whale’s appearance remained unknown. It was similar to the feeling they had before the battle began, waiting for the White Whale’s appearance in the abyssal darkness, and then—

“—Fog.”

Suddenly, a bad premonition ran through Subaru’s mind.

There was no particular basis for it. He was just thinking back to the effects of the Fog-Clearing Crystal Stones, the use of magic when those effects wore off, and even the circumstances of his previous encounter with the White Whale, and this anxiety welled up.

—While different in effect from the Fog of Vanishing, if the fog covering this entire area was also expelled by the White Whale, was its threat truly only for obscuring vision?

However faster than that question could escape his lips,

“—!!!”

A high, high roar echoed through the thinned Lifaus Highway.

And then, madness spread.

2

The first anomaly occurred among the group of ground dragons running alongside them.

Unlike the White Whale's roars until then, the piercing shriek wasn't a low, rumbling vibration of the air, but rather an unpleasant sensation, like sharp claws tearing at one's eardrums.

As Subaru's throat tightened from the auditory assault that raised goosebumps on his back, and even Rem tensed up, Subaru suddenly noticed something amiss.

"Hey! What's wrong?!"

Riders were being violently thrown off the ground dragons running next to them.

Hearing Subaru's shout, Rem, realizing the anomaly, made the ground dragon U-turn towards them. Weaving through the confused ground dragons that had lost their riders, Subaru went to the fallen men.

"Are you okay?! Falling off like that is more than just a minor injury…"

Concerned about the extent of their injuries, Subaru spoke, then his words caught in his throat.

The state of the fallen men was beyond simply assessing the depth of their injuries.

One man was foaming at the mouth, eyes rolled back, convulsing. Another groaned, drooling, frantically tearing at his own arms until they bled. A third gnashed his teeth until they shattered, hitting his head against the ground as if enduring pain.

Their symptoms weren't consistent, but one thing was clear.

"This is…"

"It's directly affecting their minds… it's similar to mana sickness, but far more malicious…!"

Rem answered, putting a hand to her forehead, clearly in distress.

Seeing her state, Subaru softly murmured, "Mana sickness…" then his eyes snapped open, looking around—at the fog.

“Could it be, the effect of this fog…?!”

Surrounding the enemy forces with fog dense enough to obscure vision, then launching a full-scale abnormal status magic from an unavoidable state. —The power and results were plain to see.

It didn’t seem like only a few people around Subaru’s group were affected. In fact, looking as far as their vision allowed, groups everywhere else had similarly stopped,

“So some have resistance and some don’t… I don’t feel anything.”

“Rem is a little affected by the excessive mana density… Rem will calm down now.”

Leaving Rem, who was beginning to take deep breaths, for a moment, Subaru dismounted his ground dragon and went to those affected by the fog. He tried to at least stop their self-harm, but—

“Hey! Stop that! You’ll get hurt… Whoa!”

“Ahhh! Ah-hi-hi-hi-ahhh!”

He reached out an arm to stop them and was scratched mercilessly on his forearm. Subaru groaned from the shallow lacerations and instinctively jumped back to create distance. The man then resumed attacking himself, not pursuing Subaru further. Blood splattered, and whimpering sounds spread through the air.

“It hurts, but isn’t this seriously bad? If this keeps up, they might not stop until they die!”

“Subaru! Your injuries?!”

“It stings so much I’m almost crying, but it’s nothing major! More importantly, if we don’t do something about this, everyone will self-destruct! Can’t we do something?”

He asked the now calmer Rem, but she looked at the knights writhing on the ground and shook her head with a troubled expression.

“Unfortunately, Rem’s healing… its effectiveness is uncertain. If it were just simple external wounds, perhaps, but it’s directly interfering with their insides through their gates. Such powerful mana contamination requires a skill level like Sir Ferris’s to handle…”

“For starters, how much can anyone resist this mental contamination? Besides me and Rem, almost everyone here is incapacitated!”

The unit that had been heading in the same direction as Subaru’s group was almost completely wiped out— Only the squad leader and two others seemed unharmed, desperately trying to stop their self-harming comrades, just like Subaru’s group. With more than half of the roughly ten members contaminated, the extent of its effect was—

“If Ferris, who’s crucial, gets contaminated, we’re completely screwed, what do we do…?”

If this was the situation just for Subaru’s group, then it would be desperate if other squads were in the same state. If key combatants like Crusch and Wilhelm, or vital support like Ferris, fell, there would be truly nothing they could do.

“Those who can move, get the injured to the roots of the great tree! Some forceful action is unavoidable!”

Crusch’s voice rose again from beyond the dense fog, and responding shouts followed continuously. It seemed she was unaffected by the contamination, but it was clear she was struggling to bring the situation under control.

It was a shift in strategy immediately after ordering a full-scale attack. The frustration in her voice was palpable, and even anger surged at the White Whale’s tactics, which didn’t immediately incapacitate but caused endless casualties.

“I’ve heard that injuring people makes it easier to collapse a front line than killing them… but for a monster to use it like this.”

“Sir Felix seems unharmed. If his healing can reach everyone, at least the effects of the contamination should be removed, but…”

Subaru understood what Rem was trying to say as she faltered.

The important thing was that it would tie up Ferris’s hands and divert resources to recover the injured. And above all—

“There’s not enough time. We can’t just wait defenseless for the whale’s attacks while Ferris treats everyone.”

“At worst, the White Whale might swallow us all whole with fog. I don’t want to believe it has that much intelligence… but given it created this situation, optimism is…”

“It might be doing this instinctively… no, either way, you can’t underestimate the hunting methods of witchbeasts.”

Crusch must be prepared to risk danger to rally the subjugation force and have Ferris treat them.

Naturally, she must understand that some breakthrough is needed to buy time. Whether an effective one will emerge, however, seemed quite difficult.

“—Haaah.”

He exhaled deeply, emptying his lungs.

As he removed oxygen from his body to the limit, his chest naturally tightened—he could feel his own heartbeat slowly, rhythmically pulsing.

He was surprisingly calm, and he gave himself a wry smile.

He was always swept away by the situation, tossed about by the events before him, and his heartbeat would constantly race, reflecting his inner turmoil.

Why was he so calm now, facing this decision?

"…Even if borrowed, courage is still courage, huh?"

Patting his chest, Subaru took a deep breath. He held it for a moment, closed his eyes, then opened them as he exhaled. He looked forward. In front of him, Rem, riding the ground dragon, looked down at Subaru.

As if anticipating what Subaru would say, what he would wish for.

"Rem, come with me to the most dangerous place."

"Yes. —To wherever you go."

Rem accepted Subaru's request without hesitation, even with a smile.

In response, Subaru ran to the ground dragon, leaping onto its back, then addressed the knights who remained on the ground, struggling with their rampaging comrades,

"Rem and I will draw the White Whale's attention. While we do that, you all get treated by Ferris. Those who seem okay, after Ferris treats you, rejoin us!"

"Draw its attention?! How on earth will you…?"

"Like this."

Smiling at the old soldier who voiced his doubts, Subaru inhaled, opened his throat, and—

"—Those who can hear, cover your ears!! Those who can't, stay as you are!!"

His full-throated shout echoed through the fog.

Rem listened to Subaru's roar with a comfortable expression, then covered both her ears. The knights closest to them also hastily covered their ears, and presumably, all the subjugation force members within earshot did the same.

Just as Subaru had requested during the pre-operation briefing.

Then—

"—I will 'die'…"

The moment he spoke it, surging terror gripped Subaru's heart.

If his plan failed, and that black, demonic hand reached out to his comrades around him, to Rem right in front of him—

However,

—I'll give you my heart, so lend me your hand!!

Subaru's eyes widened, suppressing his weakness, shouting in his mind— Immediately after, it came.

I love you.

It was a faint, small, fragile voice, like a whisper in his ear.

What was this intensely passionate feeling that made his chest tremble?

Subaru couldn't suppress the emotion that brought tears to the corners of his eyes. He chased the receding shadow of the voice, feeling an urge to embrace it immediately.

In the overwhelming warmth where adoration filled his entire being, his consciousness burned pure white—

"—I'm back."

After a fleeting encounter, Subaru's consciousness reawakened to the real world.

The sensation that had dominated Subaru's consciousness moments before receded, and he couldn't even recall what emotions he had felt then. Only a strange sensation remained, as if the intense pain he had braced for hadn't arrived.

Still,

"Rem, how is it? Does the Witch's scent…?"

"Yes, it smells!"

"It's working as intended, but couldn't you phrase that better?!"

With Rem's endorsement, even though he felt unsatisfied, his goal was achieved.

Subaru clenched his fist and looked around.

"We're leaving here immediately! We'll try to stay away from the roots of the tree as much as possible, so try to rendezvous with Crusch and the others!"

"Understood! Good luck!"

"You too!"

Sent off, Subaru patted her shoulder, and Rem spurred the ground dragon forward.

Currently, the fresh scent of the Witch's lingering presence —a contradictory phrase if taken literally— must be emanating from Subaru's body. The question was how effective this would be on the White Whale.

"Thinking back to the Ulgarm, it had an effect that covered the entire forest, but how about this time…? Honestly, it's an unknown."

When he had encountered the White Whale in the previous world, it had persistently pursued Subaru after he moved to Otto's dragon carriage. Considering Subaru hadn't made any Witch-related statements at that point, a Subaru emanating a stronger scent now should be perfect bait for the White Whale—

He thought that, and immediately after.

"—?!"

The ground dragon, which had been moving forward, suddenly sharply lifted its neck as if noticing something, then spun around sharply on its own initiative—Subaru let out a shriek of "Ugh!" as he was almost thrown off by the centrifugal force, frantically clutching Rem in front of him.

“What is…!”

Right next to Rem, who was pressed close to him, a huge jaw suddenly tore through the fog.

By a hair’s breadth, avoiding Subaru’s group who had moved out of its path, the White Whale’s jaw slid just to their left, chewing the earth and swallowing the grassland in its path.

Rushing past, barely grazing its rock-like, sturdy hide, the White Whale, having passed right beside them, lifted its jaw behind Subaru’s group and instantly swallowed what was in its mouth.

The witchbeast confirmed that no intended target was mixed in with its chewing, flipped its colossal body, and turned its neck towards Subaru’s group, who were retreating at full speed.

A roar chased after them.

“Whoa-oh-oh-oh?!”

Overwhelming pressure from the colossal mass bore down from behind.

Chased by the crushing sensation, Subaru’s ground dragon kicked off the ground with all its might. However, the speed of the pursuing White Whale was extraordinary.

It swam through the sky with a mountain-like body, closing the distance at a speed that seemed to outrun the wind.

Faster and faster, the White Whale approached, as if it would swallow the world whole.

Its snout was incredibly close, close enough for its breathing to reach their backs.

"Rem!!"

"El Huma!!"

Responding to Rem's incantation, three ice spears simultaneously shot up from the ground.

They unerringly pierced the White Whale that was pursuing Subaru's group from directly below, striking its relatively softer underside amidst its hard outer shell— Attempting to stop its movement by impaling it.

But,

"It's not stopping—!!"

The ice spears, as thick as a hundred bundled together, snapped off at their bases, and the sound of crystals shattering echoed with a piercing shriek. As they shattered, the ice spears returned to mana, and blood gushed from the White Whale's wounds, which had lost what sealed them, but its movement didn't falter.

After such injuries and blood loss, where was the end of its unflagging durability? Subaru once again trembled at the high hurdle of bringing down the White Whale.

However,

"Unlike with the Ulgarms, we're not fighting one-on-one here!!"

"—!!"

Subaru provoked the now-distant White Whale by raising his middle finger. Even without understanding the meaning of Subaru's gesture, the White Whale opened its mouth and roared as if feeling anger.

Its colossal body—

"Riaaaaaaah—!!"

From its side, Wilhelm's leaping slash split it vertically.

Wilhelm landed squarely on the White Whale's back, his blade deeply piercing its flesh, and gushing fresh blood created a mist of crimson.

Then, two Ligers aimed for the blood-soaked back of the White Whale. Riding on their backs were two adorable, identical-looking cat beast-humans—.

"Big Sis, match me!"

"Let's go, Hetaro!!"

The Ligers, ascending the back from left and right in a cross, Mimi and Hetaro leaped off their backs. They took each other's hands and landed on the wound Wilhelm had created. Then, looking at each other, they simultaneously opened their mouths and—

"Wah—!"

"Hah—!!"

Immediately after, the White Whale began to bleed again from every single one of its wounds, shaking its massive body violently and rapidly losing altitude.

Writhing in agony, letting out sounds of pain, the White Whale barely avoided crashing. The twins leaped off its back onto their Ligers, breathless.

"Trump card finished!"

"Leader, please!"

"Alright, alright, leave it to me! If the little guys worked so hard, I gotta do my part too!!"

Replacing the two who dismounted, a large Liger climbed onto the White Whale's body from its tail.

As Ricardo's Liger ran like the wind, peeling away the rock-like hide with his great axe to create wounds, fog approached them.

The dense fog spewing from the countless mouths opening on the White Whale's body was targeting Wilhelm and Ricardo, who were on its back. This fog, distinctly darker in color, could be considered the "fog of Vanishing" that erased anything it touched from existence.

Its speed wasn't so fast that it couldn't be evaded, but more than anything, a barrage opened with every mouth. Ricardo's Liger twisted its body with difficulty, and Wilhelm also swiftly dodged the fog with agile movements, his great axe strikes and sword slashes continuing to dance on the White Whale's back.

Vertical slashes cut down mouths that let out distorted roars, and the great axe ravaged the insides of its oral cavities, crushing their function. The Liger's claws, though subtly, also kept the attacks at bay, and more importantly, the cannons of the Beast-Human Mercenary Group, which had caught up, began a renewed offensive of bombardment with magic stones across its entire body.

The White Whale began to be pushed back again by the subjugation force's offensive power. Seeing its colossal body twist and its oral cavities begin preparations to spew fog,

"Rem!!"

Faster than Subaru's call, Rem turned the ground dragon around, making Subaru, who was emanating the Witch's scent, run around the White Whale's snout. The White Whale, its concentration disturbed by this, reflexively turned its head towards Subaru's group— Only for its plan to be thwarted by a slash.

"—!!"

"Don't be so unfaithful as to look away. I've been head over heels for you for fourteen years."

A thrust pierced the White Whale's forehead, and Wilhelm's movement paused as his blade sank into the hard part. But he immediately abandoned his third sword, powerfully kicked the hilt of the released sword to drive the blade even deeper, held his fifth drawn sword in his right hand, and hacked mercilessly at the White

Whale's head with both blades as he moved towards its back.

He literally silenced the mouths in his path one after another with his blade, then rejoined Ricardo, who was rampaging with his Liger, running it crisscross. The dog-faced beast-human laughed joyfully, looking as if drunk on blood.

"This is getting fun! It's tougher than I thought, but it's nothing!"

"No… it feels a little too easy."

Wilhelm responded in a low voice to Ricardo's cheer, biting his lip as he continued to carve its back with light steps.

Ricardo, who peeled off a protrusion on the White Whale's back with a raised great axe and plunged its flat tip inside to gouge it out, closed one eye.

"Are you… worried about something?"

"It's hard to believe that the Sword Saint… My wife, would have been outmaneuvered by a witchbeast of this caliber. Even considering that we seized the initiative and weren't split by the initial fog…"

While Wilhelm was contemplating, swinging his blade, the White Whale suddenly moved significantly.

Its writhing movements, previously aimed at shaking off Wilhelm and the others clinging to its back, suddenly changed. The White Whale turned its head upwards and rapidly ascended into the sky.

On the rapidly tilting footing, Ricardo skillfully commanded his Liger to scramble down the rock face, somehow managing to disengage before reaching a dangerous altitude. Wilhelm,

"Before I dismount, I'll take one more thing—!"

Turning his body, the old swordsman leaped gracefully across the colossal beast.

As the White Whale ascended, Wilhelm, leaping downwards, climbed it in reverse. Weight shifts and forceful posture control by piercing with his blade. With body movements accumulated over years of experience, he ran down the White Whale's body, and Wilhelm's slash at its point of arrival swung widely vertically— One of the White Whale's dorsal fins, which had many mouths on its surface, was blown off at its base.

"—!!"

Hearing the White Whale's scream, Wilhelm kicked off the rock face towards the ground.

A fall from such a high altitude would normally be certain death, but just before hitting the ground, Wilhelm pulled something from his pocket and threw it directly downwards— A small explosion of a magic stone generated a gust of wind from below, and a ground dragon snatched Wilhelm from the side, slowing his descent.

"Wilhelm-san!!"

"…"

Subaru called out, trying to confirm his safety. However Wilhelm didn't respond, his gaze tilted upwards, directed at the sky above.

Subaru followed his gaze and saw the White Whale's tail swimming far above.

Blood dripping from the severed dorsal fin rained down with violent force, dyeing the plain's grass crimson, while the silent Wilhelm's fighting spirit remained undiminished.

Subaru didn't expect the White Whale to escape like this, but its objective in ascending into the sky was currently unknown.

The beast-human mercenary group was also beginning to gather, and the situation of the injured gathered at the roots of the great tree was precarious, but—

"It's coming."

Wilhelm, looking up at the sky, murmured softly.

Everyone’s vigilance instantly maxed out at the sight of the old swordsman, narrowing his eyes and readjusting his grip on his two swords. Holding their breath, they waited for its move—and regretted it.

They should have immediately dispersed, without waiting for the White Whale’s actions above them.

“—The fog is falling!!”

Shouting at the top of her lungs, Rem wordlessly spun the ground dragon around and immediately disengaged from the front line.

The surrounding ground dragons and Ligers also began to run, but there was no longer any time to even look up to check on the safety of others.

—The “Fog of Vanishing”, swelling up to cover the entire sky, was falling directly towards them.

That colossal, cloud-like descent could only be avoided by escaping its range. Resistance was futile against the destruction that swallowed rocks and trees whole.

They could only run, praying they would make it in time.

It was terrifying to even look up, with only the pressure of soundless oblivion descending from directly above.

Clinging desperately to the ground dragon’s back, lowering their posture, they ran to their limits—

“Did we make it?!”

A brightness, as if passing beneath a dark cloud, shone through, and Subaru, turning his head back, saw it.

On the ground being crushed by the fog, there were multiple shadows that hadn’t made it and were swallowed.

Desperate humans, fear and rage etched onto their faces, were swallowed by the fog from the head down and disappeared.

Ground dragons and all vanished, leaving nothing behind after falling to the ground and dispersing. No one's memory, not even their names, remained. Only Subaru remembered their deaths.

"Ugh… ah."

Subaru let out a small groan. In front of him, the scattered figures, broken up by the fog, were distant.

Their numbers were clearly much reduced from the previous offensive. Not just the subjugation force members, but the beast-human mercenary group wasn't unharmed either.

At least the main forces, Subaru thought, scanning his surroundings.

"Wilhel…"

He spotted Wilhelm, barely clinging to the ground dragon's back, having escaped the range of the fog. He tried to call out to him—and then noticed.

—From beyond the dense fog, a witchbeast with a gaping maw was closing in on Wilhelm.

"Run—!!"

"Ngh—?!"

Subaru's shout and Wilhelm noticing the threat closing in from behind happened almost simultaneously. But it was already too late for any effective reaction.

The White Whale's mouth, which had approached silently, swallowed Wilhelm and his ground dragon whole, along with the very ground beneath them.

The earth was scraped away, a five-meter square of ground was gouged out entirely, all into the White Whale's mouth.

"Ah…"

Before that shocking sight, not only Subaru but even Rem lost their voices in surprise.

Knowing his old man’s tenacity, the sense of loss was extraordinary. More than anything, with the main fighting force lost, the situation was rapidly deteriorating.

“This is bad!!”

Then, a different person’s voice rose close by.

Faster than Subaru could react to the voice, their ground dragon was violently struck from the side by a Liger, throwing them off.

“Whoa?!”

They tumbled to the ground with the groaning ground dragon, hitting various parts of themselves and grimacing in pain. The perpetrator of this sudden violent act, judging by the voice, was Ricardo, but before Subaru could question his intention,

“—!”

Suddenly, Subaru saw a red flower scatter before his eyes.

“Eh?”

A mangled Liger carcass, torn apart and scattering chunks of flesh, lay on the plain. The large beast-human who should have been riding it had vanished, leaving behind a massive amount of fresh blood.

The White Whale, swinging its blood-soaked tail, swayed its colossal body and swam through the air.

Whether he was protected, or what happened to Ricardo, these questions floated in his mind.

However a more undeniable fact called out to Subaru.

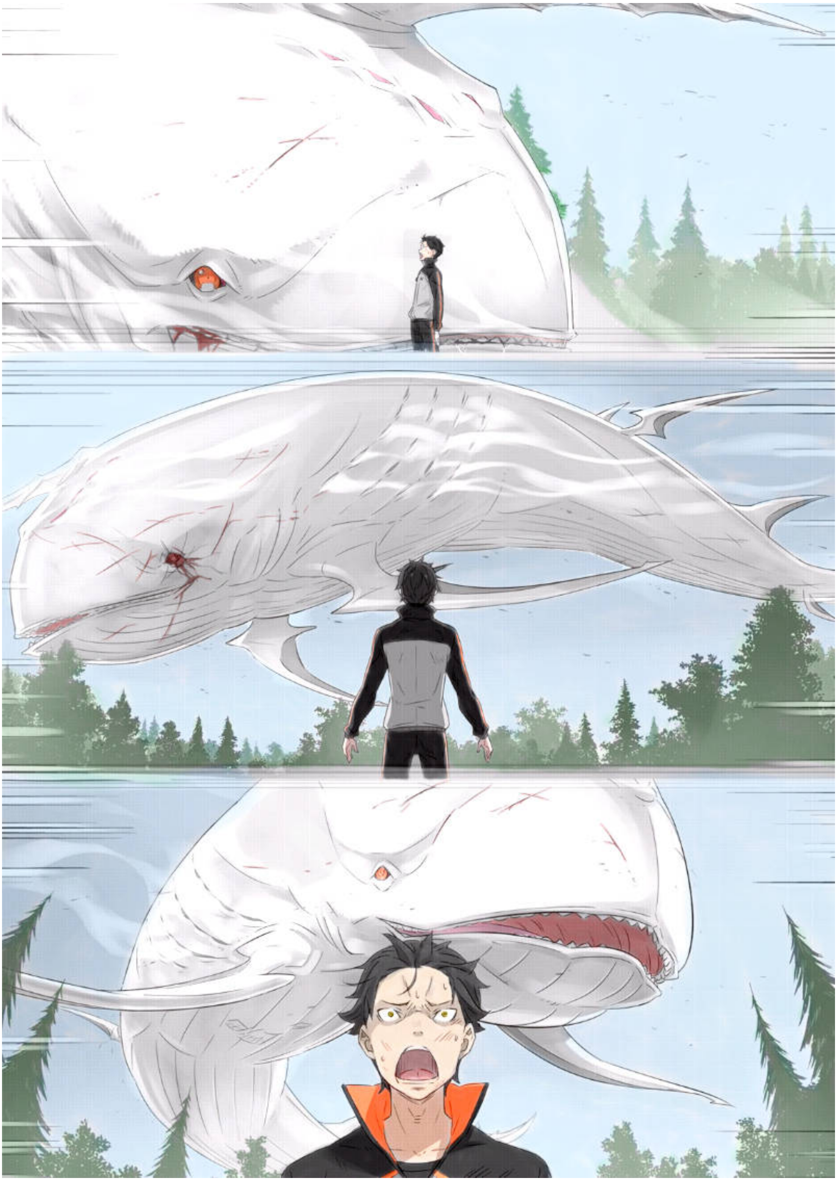
The White Whale swimming before him, which had swept Ricardo away with its tail. And then, “No way…”

Turning back, he saw the White Whale, which had swallowed Wilhelm and the ground, beginning to chew.

In front, and behind—and high above, still shadowing the sky, was a leviathan-like shadow.

—Three White Whales trembled their countless mouths across their bodies, roaring with laughter and stirring up despair.

Slowly, slowly, Subaru felt despair once again tighten its grip on his heart.



Chapter 59:
A Bet Fighting Against Despair

1

High, high, and far, far away, roars of laughter echoed, overlapping.

In a world enveloped by fog, three monstrous fish-like shadows swam, their colossal bodies swaying.

Grotesque beings with countless distorted mouths all over their bodies, continuously emitting piercing shrieks. Products of malice that had devoured countless travelers and brought immeasurable lives to naught.

Even a single one of them possessed enough threat to plunge people into despair, and now, with their numbers tripled, they mocked the humans who dared to resist.

Looking up at the colossal body of a White Whale floating overhead, a faint sound of someone falling to their knees reached them. Gradually, it became continuous, followed by the clatter of weapons dropping.

Looking over, one of the knights who had joined the subjugation force hung his head, his shoulders slumped, crouching with his face buried in his hands. His shoulders trembled, and the sobs rising in his throat could not be stopped by anyone.

None of his comrades surrounding the knight had a single word to offer either.

Despite bringing full equipment, preemptively striking with overwhelming firepower, and launching an all-out assault— They faced this unreasonable situation.

The halving of their forces due to mental corruption was severe, and the remaining main combatants were shattered by a surprise attack from a newly appeared White Whale.

Even if they gathered their remaining strength, it was less than half of their initial force. On top of that, they had to face three times the number of witchbeasts—there was no way they could win.

Everyone instantly realized this, understanding that their lives, their purpose, would end here.

The terror and ghastliness of the witchbeasts. The heavy weight of the precious bonds stolen by those beasts. Their utter helplessness, unable to repay those bonds.

When everything they had built collapsed, and the hearts they had sustained broke, who could blame them for falling to their knees?

When an irrational, unyielding reality pressed down, who could deny surrender?

"—Don't let them swallow us!!"

Suddenly, a roar thundered across the plain, which had almost fallen silent.

Startled, everyone looked up at the voice, seeing a shadow leaping towards one of the White Whales, kicking off the ground—the figure of a young girl, her maid uniform skirt fluttering, a vicious spiked iron ball clutched in her hand.

Enveloped in a powerful gust of wind, the roaring iron ball directly struck the nose of the momentarily halted White Whale. It easily shattered the hard outer skin, gouging and piercing the exposed bone and flesh, still propagating destruction.

A shriek rose, and the White Whale thrashed its tail, lifting its head to ascend into the sky. Its tail was then impaled by blades of ice extending from the ground, halting its movement, and the swirling iron ball struck again. With a single blow from the small girl, the White Whale's massive body swayed violently, splattering blood.

"If we can avoid being swallowed, we still have a chance—!"

Clutching his aching shoulder, a boy, blood streaming from his forehead, shouted.

Stepping forward, he gave instructions to the girl swinging the iron ball, his face contorted with the vexing frustration of his own powerlessness, unable to participate in the fight. Yet, he stepped forward.

As the ground dragon lying beside him slowly rose, he awkwardly, yet firmly, mounted its back, clearly unaccustomed to riding, but gripping the reins tightly and powerfully,

“Not yet!! —Nothing is over yet!!”

In front of the knights dominated by despair, as if to rouse his own spirit, the boy looked up, baring his teeth, eyes wide, glaring at the White Whale, and shouted.

“—Don’t you dare think this level of despair will stop me!!”

Vic.H2o

2

Subaru felt it distinctly— The slow approach of despair's footsteps.

One above, one behind, one in front— A total of three. This was no joke.

How much strength had they poured into just one, and how much damage had they inflicted? And now, when things got tough, they called two more friends for the real show? This was ridiculous.

How much more unreasonably would fate toy with them before it was satisfied?

Thrown to the ground, shielded by Ricardo, Subaru gritted his teeth, still sprawled. If he didn't clench his back molars, weakness, sobs, would surely escape.

A sudden, fleeting sensation of the world going dark. A feeling of disappointment as his brain struggled to cope with the unbearable situation, threatening to lose consciousness entirely.

He could feel familiar despair mocking him, familiarly wrapping an arm around his shoulder.

—Well, isn't it about time you gave up this time too?

A dim, faceless shadow opened its mouth in a crescent shape, urging him to surrender in a familiar voice. Subaru clearly accepted the gravity of the situation before him.

Around him, knights, like Subaru, could be seen here and there, kneeling.

They, too, understood that the situation before them was hopeless. Even the spirit to resist had been stripped away; everyone's eyes had lost their light, and the will to grip their weapons had been extinguished.

He glanced at them, sinking into the voice of despair that had its arm around his shoulder, and then noticed.

Right beside him was Rem, also thrown from her ground dragon like Subaru. Lying on her side, she was propped up on one elbow, her beautiful profile etched with anguish.

Her cheeks were stiff, her lips pale, her eyelids trembling. Looking closely like this, he casually thought, Her eyelashes are long.

—She looks much better when she's smiling, he also thought.

So,

"Your turn's been over for a long time."

He roughly shook off the familiar arm from his shoulder.

He flashed a smile at the shadow, whose mouth was twisted into a frown as if surprised by Subaru's action, then delivered a full-force right hook— The black shadow shattered, and at the same time, his body stopped trembling.

This was pathetic. Disgraceful. There was no time for hesitation, no time to stand still.

So what if two more whales appeared?

His limbs could move. His head could be raised, and his eyes could see. His voice worked, his voice could reach. Rem was here. Rem was alive. This was not the time to give up on picking everything up.

—Stand up.

Again and again, countless times, his spirit had been crushed.

—Stand up.

He had been tossed about by unreasonable fate, each time forced to face the end of despair.

—Stand up.

He had given up everything, thrown everything away, tried to flee to a place beyond, only to be denied even that, forced to confront his own heart.

—Stand up.

For what purpose?

—Stand up!

“For this moment, damn it!”

He slammed his fist into the ground, using the momentum of his propped-up upper body to stand.

Rem looked at Subaru with a surprised expression as he roared and lifted his face. He looked down at her, extended a hand, and glared at the White Whale before them.

“…Subaru.”

“Let’s do this, Rem. It’s showtime.”

Hesitantly, she impatiently grasped his outstretched hand, and he pulled her up.

Embracing the girl who had risen, Subaru faced her close-up, and said,

“Giving up doesn’t suit us. Not me, not you— Not anyone!”

3

Rem, roaring, furiously leaped at the White Whale, plunging her right fist into its rocky hide and scaling its body. As she climbed, her swinging iron ball loudly chipped away at the whale, creating a shower of blood as she relentlessly attacked. The White Whale writhed, groaning in pain.

Rem was attacking the one that had swallowed Wilhelm from behind. Subaru had seen its jaw move for mastication, but it shouldn't have passed down its throat yet.

In the worst case, he might have been crushed by those millstone-like teeth, but—

"As long as his head isn't crushed, Rem will somehow pull him out—!"

Subaru pulled the reins, leaning his weight onto the ground dragon's back, feeling utterly unreliable.

This was almost entirely on the fly for Subaru, not Rem, to handle the reins. The journey to the Flugel's Great Tree and a mere two hours after arriving— That was all the practice time Subaru had to handle a ground dragon alone.

With no prior experience riding horses in his original world, a mere few hours of practice meant Subaru couldn't possibly control a ground dragon freely.

He could only manage to give directions and speed commands, and then cling on for dear life to avoid being thrown off. Still, the intelligent ground dragon seemed to understand Subaru's intentions and limitations, careful not to dislodge its inexperienced rider.

This was a good ground dragon. Fast, strong, and most importantly, intelligent. From now on, your name is Patrasche. Thinking of a loyal companion, no other name came to mind.

"Let's go, Patrasche! Circle around the whale's nose!"

Shouting loudly, he flicked the reins, urging the ground dragon forward. Patrasche responded, surging ahead, suppressing its instincts to charge directly at the massive White Whale.

The White Whale, desperately twisting to shake off Rem clinging to its body, suddenly sensed Subaru's approach and involuntarily turned its head towards him. Right into its side,

"Smelling Subaru is Rem's privilege—!"

Rem leaped, delivering a kick with cannon-like force.

The enormous face momentarily blurred, and then the pursuing iron ball flew, pushing aside the air— Piercing through its cheek, ravaging its mouth, and exiting the opposite cheek, taking several teeth with it.

The White Whale shrieked, spewing copious amounts of yellow fluid and fresh blood. Its body finally crashed to the ground, thrashing indiscriminately like a fish out of water.

The ground was gouged, and clumps of earth scattered violently. Its flailing tail cleaved the earth, swept the wind, and unexpectedly approached right beside Subaru—just barely missing him,

“Meow-meow and Mimi, to the rescue!”

A cat beast-girl intervened just before the strike, swinging her staff to deploy a magical barrier.

The yellow glow repelled the attack, and through the created gap, the Ligers and ground dragons surged forward.

Catching his breath, Subaru turned to the cat-girl, Mimi, who had saved him in the nick of time.

“You saved me! I said something cool about starting a counterattack, and then I almost died immediately!”

“Hehe, you can praise me more! For today, big brother worked hard, so let’s call it even!”

“Worked hard…?”

Subaru tilted his head at Mimi, who puffed out her chest and then smiled at him. The girl then lightly flicked her cheek whiskers with a finger.

“Everyone else was trembling and couldn’t stand up, but you were the fastest to recover, right? You’re amazing, you’re awesome! Second only to Mimi, though!”

"It's nothing much. It's just that this level of despair isn't enough to make me give up."

Subaru bit his lip, responding to Mimi's loud praise.

That's right. It wasn't anything to be praised for. How much hardship had Subaru endured and experienced until now?

Compared to the overwhelming despair he'd faced before, the current situation was still something they could fight through—Why would he have the luxury of wallowing in surrender?

If he had time to play with despair, he'd rather spit up blood looking for hope.

Fighting back was, by far, much, much easier than giving up.

"—!"

As Patrasche surged straight ahead, a fish-like shadow suddenly appeared in front of them, opening its massive jaw.

So close that Subaru could almost see the dark red, grotesque organs deep in its throat, he instinctively leaned to attempt an evasion. But the fog filling the White Whale's mouth erupted slightly faster than his action—

"Close your mouth—!"

An invisible blade, swung down from above, vertically split the White Whale's wide-open mouth from the side. With a shriek, the White Whale's mouth snapped shut due to the force of the slash, and it slid across the ground, writhing, as Subaru and Mimi passed by. Looking up after their narrow escape, they saw Crusch rushing from across the battlefield.

She ran alongside Subaru, looking displeased at the White Whale.

"At first glance, the situation is at its worst. What happened to Wilhelm?"

"The fact that you remember means he wasn't swallowed by the fog, at least… It's up to Rem's struggle."

Subaru replied, turning his head and keeping an eye on the White Whale attempting to turn and pursue them. Crusch, in turn, let her gaze wander similarly. Her eyes stopped at the sight of the White Whale leaping, causing the ground to rumble, and Rem desperately swinging her iron ball on its back, creating a sea of blood.

"What do you make of it, Natsuki Subaru?"

"What do I make of it? What do you mean? If you mean our chances of winning, I'd selfishly say my life or death makes a difference."

"That's not it. Don't you find it strange?"

Crusch's slash from her swinging arm struck the nose of the White Whale attempting to approach from behind. A roar rose, and feeling the vibration of the air on his back, Subaru looked at her, saying, "Strange?"

"The number of White Whales has increased to three. On the surface, it's a desperate situation. However if White Whales are indeed a species that forms groups, how could that fact not have been conveyed to anyone?"

"I don't quite get what you're trying to say."

"There must be some trick to it."

Crusch stated clearly, turning her dignified face towards Subaru.

Naturally, pierced by her strong gaze, Subaru straightened his posture.

"You mean… find it?"

"We will buy time with your evasive maneuvers and our supporting fire. In any case, it won't last long. We must do something— Retreat is no longer an option."

Declaring this, Crusch's ground dragon changed direction, moving away from Subaru.

She made a wide detour, circling the glaring White Whale, and then went to each of the scattered subjugation force units, shouting.

“Stand up! Lift your heads! Grasp your weapons! For what purpose have you come this far!”

“…”

The men, sunk in despair and grief, who had hung their heads, now raised their gazes.

Before them, Crusch stood tall, holding her drawn holy sword aloft to the heavens.

“Look at that man! He is weaponless, powerless, a weakling who could be blown away by a mere gust. A helpless man whose defeat I have witnessed with my own eyes!”

With her sword, she indicated the running figure —Subaru atop the ground dragon— and Crusch raised her voice even higher.

More than anyone else, that man is the weakest.

He has no strength to fight. No ability to survive. A man riddled with defeat, who has been crushed again and again.

Yet, that weakest man is roaring, quicker than anyone, that he can still do it.

The most powerless man in this place is gritting his teeth, enduring pain, holding back tears, spitting up blood, yet still looking up, trying to resist.

“So why, then, should we hang our heads?”

“…”

“Our strength is weak; even combined, it’s uncertain if we can reach the beast’s throat. Even so, if the weakest man hasn’t given up, why are we allowed to fall to our knees?!”

“Oh, oh…”

The demoralized men looked at each other, encouraging their trembling knees to stand.

They picked up their dropped weapons, and their ground dragons, awaiting their masters’ ride, stood beside them.

Reaching out, gripping the reins, the knights who had supposedly fallen to their knees mounted their ground dragons. The ground dragons neighed, and upon their backs, the knights, too, drew their swords and hoarsely roared.

A battle cry erupted. To rouse their own spirits, to take pride in their souls.

Behind the struggling, weak boy, they roared and raged to cast off the foolishness of crouching and hanging their heads.

This emotion was called ‘shame’. ‘Shame’ cut through fear, resignation, and negative emotions, making the knights raise their heads and giving them the strength to step forward.

“Let’s go— All units, charge!”

“Ooooh—!!!”

Swearing on their supposedly humbled souls, the knights advanced again.

Dust rose from the ground dragons’ hooves, and the subjugation force, now fewer than fifty strong, charged down the road, furiously assaulting the two White Whales swimming within striking distance.

Hearing the surging morale of the subjugation force and Crusch’s shout that brought it about, Subaru couldn’t suppress a bitter smile on his lips.

“Calling me a weakling and a loser, saying whatever she pleases…”

The fact that he didn’t even feel like denying it was, indeed, a serious wound.

They could call him whatever they liked, use him however they pleased. It was true that Subaru had come this far by being powerless, by constantly losing, by constantly being broken and giving up.

Knowing that, Subaru could now roar here.

He wouldn't end up constantly losing, couldn't be left constantly broken, couldn't keep giving up, and couldn't afford to be powerless.

"I'm counting on you, Patrasche. One more time, get to its nose and get out immediately!"

The ground dragon tilted sharply, scraping the earth, making a sharp turn, and again charged towards the White Whale.

In front of them, the mixed squad that had separated from Crusch provided supporting attacks against the White Whale, which was frantically trying to shake off Rem clinging to its body. Knight swords sparked, scraping the White Whale's hide, while cavalry riders, maintaining distance, paralleled the colossal body and unleashed bombardments with magic ore.

The White Whale shrieked, thrashing on the ground. Even its writhing movements in pain were unavoidable violence for those nearby. One ground dragon and its rider were sent flying by a single blow, and the sound of bones shattering echoed as they were crushed under immense weight.

Blood gushed, and one life was extinguished. —Subaru burned that image into his mind.

A chill ran down his spine. Failing to make it in time, the inability to save them was the result of Subaru's decision.

The result of Subaru saying they should start this fight. He couldn't avert his eyes. If he did, if he refused to accept it, Subaru would lose to the emotion of 'shame'.

When he had lost to his own heart, when he had faced his most despicable weakness, he had once been deeply and gently rejected for it, so he couldn't afford to be spoiled any further.

The thrashing White Whale sensed Subaru's approach and opened all its mouths.

Feeling a sickening rush of blood draining from his face, he entrusted himself to the ground dragon's full speed, cutting through the wind. —Right beside him, the 'fog of Disappearance' unleashed from countless mouths grazed past.

If even a single finger touched it, he would be erased, and Subaru's existence would end. The imagination of being enveloped by a sense of loss, different from 'death'. sent shivers down his spine.

However,

"El Fula!" "Like we'd let you!" "Where are you even looking?!"

Wind magic dispelled the fog, and roaring blades and hammers crushed the mouths releasing the fog.

The fog barrage slightly thinned with the knights' support. But still, the firepower was desperate. Subaru's nerves sharpened, sensing the end from the encroaching sensation of disappearance throughout his body.

He left the running path to the ground dragon, and on its back, Subaru's body performed evasive maneuvers. He flung his arms up, doing push-ups. He avoided the fog approaching from behind by almost doing a handstand on the ground dragon's back, completely losing his balance and falling off—

"Guts… Ooooh!"

He clung on barely, gripping the reins and hooking his knee into the stirrup. The grip strength he had forged by endlessly swinging a wooden sword for no reason in his original world barely held his slipping palms in check against the vibrations, swaying, and impatience.

A half-dragging escape— Breaking through the barrage.

As his vision cleared, and the ground dragon slowed, Subaru, in a movement that would appear utterly disgraceful from behind, remounted. His already limited stamina was further depleted, and he then turned towards the other White Whale— The one Crusch's forces were attacking.

"Stir things up… Haah. Damn it, it's not just about risking your life, you need to use your head too!"

Exhaling raggedly, Subaru again exposed himself to the life-threatening decoy act, while pondering the 'trick' that had come up in his earlier conversation with Crusch.

Three witchbeasts— Subaru was ignorant and uninformed about the White Whales. Thus, he was completely behind them in understanding the threat of the 'fog', and the long history of their existence in this world.

However, even Subaru had questions. Would Wilhelm, who had pursued the White Whale for fourteen years as his wife's killer, overlook such critical information as 'the White Whale exists in multiples'? If it hadn't been known, could simultaneous appearances like this have never happened before?

"Why did they suddenly increase…? The premise of there being three from the start doesn't fit…!"

He felt like he was grasping at something. But before that, Patrasche's desperate sprint reached the White Whale's olfactory range.

The White Whale's gaze, which had been following Crusch as she sliced its underbelly with her holy sword, swung widely and turned towards Subaru. At the same time, a dense fog accumulated in its opened mouth was exhaled with a roar that tore through the air, becoming an enormous destructive force.

Patrasche sharply changed its angle and charged forward. It evaded the raging fog, but was a mere half-step short of escaping its effective range. —That missing half-step for Subaru and Patrasche was,

“That’s our job!”

“We won’t let you!”

Mimi and Hetaro, who had intervened, bought them time.

Beside Subaru, who couldn’t fully escape, the twin beast-children opened their mouths, unleashing overlapping roars of “wa” and “ha”— The clash of high-pitched sounds created ripples that converted into destruction at a distance, and an enormous shockwave plowed the plains like a surging tide, scattering even the approaching fog head-on.

At Subaru’s concise praise, Mimi puffed out her chest and beamed with satisfaction. Beside her, Hetaro, out of breath, muttered, “Sister, really…” and then, flanking Subaru on both sides with their running Ligers,

“We’ll provide support. Without Subaru’s presence… We can’t see a way to win this battle.”

“Can’t we just go ba-boom, then whoosh-bang, and then zash-pow-bam?”

“To go ba-boom and zash-pow-bam, we need Subaru’s cooperation, Sis.”

“Huh.”

The twins continued their surprisingly tense conversation, sandwiching Subaru.

Subaru ignored Mimi, who seemed to have no grasp of the dire situation, and turned to Hetaro, who seemed more reasonable.

“That combined attack just now, you used it on the White Whale, right? Can you do it again?”

“I’ll squeeze out every last bit of mana, but one more time is my limit. —Until the commander recovers, my sister and I will protect you.”

“Ricardo’s alive?!”

Subaru exclaimed at the unexpected good news, and Hetaro nodded.

Relief spread through Subaru’s chest at his attitude. He had thought that Ricardo’s Liger had been gruesomely killed, and that Ricardo himself might have been obliterated without a trace by the copious amounts of fresh blood.

“Commander has a message for you too, from his deathbed.”

“A message… It’s not ‘that’ll cost you dearly’. is it?”

“I think he’ll tell you that himself later… It’s this. Ahem, ‘Well, it got lighter. Me not dying is proof of that.’ That’s all.”

Hetaro dutifully mimicked Ricardo’s voice, even adopting the Kansai dialect— The Kararagi dialect. Not commenting on the quality of the impersonation, Subaru pondered the meaning of the conveyed words.

It was literally a message Ricardo had delivered to him at the risk of his life. If he focused on the meaning contained within it, and its true intent—

“Your impersonation doesn’t sound like him at all.”

“Yeah, totally not! No talent!”

“This isn’t the time for that!”

Mimi echoed Subaru’s tactless comment, and Hetaro retorted with a voice close to tears, but Subaru ignored them and looked up at the sky.

Two White Whales, entangled with the divided subjugation force, were still locked in fierce combat.

The White Whale floating in the sky was the first of the three witchbeasts to appear, and it had fled into the sky after their initial fierce attack. It continued to look down on Subaru and the others from high altitude, without joining the fight.

Its behavior seemed somewhat unnatural to Subaru.

Their fighting strength had decreased, and the current battle situation was one where the reduced numbers were further divided into two opposing forces. Although Subaru's distraction had an effect, if the White Whale in the sky were to join either battlefield, the tide of battle would turn drastically. If one side were to be devoured, it would be over.

Yet, why was that White Whale doing nothing—?

"Ricardo's message…"

Lighter, Ricardo told Subaru.

That he hadn't died, risking his life, was proof of that. What did that mean? What was lighter? His life? Certainly, life was cheap on the battlefield. However it didn't seem to mean that. Lighter, lighter.

"In this heavy, very hard situation, what the hell is lighter…!"

He surrendered himself to the ground dragon's sway, once again cutting across the White Whale's nose. The White Whale, which had been entangled with Crusch's forces, turned its mouth towards him, but Crusch's invisible slashes and thrown magic ore struck into its open maw, scattering blood fog.

The knights' roars rose. One by one, their numbers steadily dwindled, yet only their unending morale now supported the front lines.

Could people who resolved to resist, even facing imminent death, become this strong?

The full subjugation force had barely managed to challenge the White Whale, and now, having lost their main force and even reduced their overall numbers, their fighting strength was still balanced. —If this wasn't the power of will, then…

"Even so, the idea of the omnipotence of will is an overstatement."

With that thought, Subaru suddenly looked up. He looked back at the White Whale he had left behind, narrowing his eyes and glaring at the retreating beast's face.

Then, he realized.

"If that's the case…!"

He gritted his teeth, a tremor running through Subaru's entire body at the surge of possibility that welled up.

He conveyed his will to the reins, and Patrasche, with a sharp reversal, furiously charged towards the other White Whale. Rem, fighting valiantly, unleashed her Demonic power, making successive wind tunnels in the White Whale's body with her iron ball while riding one of the Ligers. Despite her apron dress being drenched in the beast's blood, she bravely smiled when she noticed Subaru approaching.

Her blood-stained smile only highlighted the horror, but impiously, Subaru found Rem's appearance noble and utterly endearing.

In this truly disadvantageous battle, she still believed in Subaru's reckless resolve.

He had to answer that trust, that affection.

"—!"

Without exchanging words, Subaru's ground dragon and Rem's Liger intersected, and Subaru rode his mount towards the White Whale's nose, while Rem rode hers towards its tail.

There was no need to stop and talk. Both already knew Subaru had his role, and Rem had hers.

Circling to the White Whale's head, the beast, sensing Subaru's approach, turned its head towards him. Multiple mouths appeared right beside its head, beneath its eye, baring fangs, drooling, and spewing white fog. Too slow. Not even a deterrent.

"Boom! Bash! Zumbara-bar!"

Straddling Patrasche in a figure-eight, Mimi's Liger darted around freely. Each time Mimi, striking a pose on the back of the large dog, uttered a made-up sound effect, the tip of the staff in her palm glowed, and the resulting magic barrier blocked the fog, buying Subaru time before impact.

"This is gonna cost you, big bro!"

"When this is over, I'll thank you a hundred times!"

"Then it's a deal!"

Trusting in Mimi's cheap reply, Subaru overtook the paralleling White Whale, forging ahead, and then tilted his head, glaring at the beast. He confirmed the White Whale glaring back at him with its 'single eye,' and a confident grin twisted Subaru's face.

"Just as I thought. You guys weren't three separate whales— You've been splitting!"

The White Whale fighting Crusch's forces also lacked its left eye.

The same was true for the White Whale he had just passed. Of course, the last one, floating wounded in the sky, would be the same. —The missing left eye meant Wilhelm's slash.

The reason why not just one, but the other two, shared the same wound, was clear.

It was none other than the one in the sky splitting and giving birth to the other two.

"The fact that a single blow is light, and that we can fight to some extent, that must be the trick!"

The fact that Ricardo wasn't killed by a single tail strike despite the surprise attack.

The fact that the White Whale, which should have been evenly matched with such a powerful force, could be fought to some extent by a subjugation force with drastically reduced numbers.

—Subaru, the cynic who couldn't believe in convenient plot devices like miracles or the power of will, saw in this the fundamental reason for the appearance of multiple White Whales.

It possessed the one-hit kill 'Fog of Vanishing', the White Whale sacrificed durability for the sake of more attacks. The violence of numbers— If its imposing presence alone broke the subjugation force's spirit, the battle itself would have ended.

It was hard to imagine a witchbeast understanding human psychology to execute such a strategy, but the fact remained that 'splitting' had precisely that effect.

What would have happened if Subaru hadn't roared at that moment?

Subaru didn't know what would have happened if he hadn't roared. He had the potential to see futures where he didn't roar, but he didn't want to see such futures.

He never wanted to see their faces for an extended period again—

"—What is it?!"

Before Subaru, who had arrived at a conclusion, the White Whale, which had been trying to pursue him, changed its movements. It scraped its floating body against the ground, gliding while digging into the earth with its underside. In a gesture as if it could no longer tolerate some foreign sensation,

"Sister, now!"

"It's hard when you're itchy and have no hands!"

Hetaro, seeing an opportunity, leaped forward, and Mimi, moving to encompass, let out a misconstrued comment about the White Whale's movement. Though the twins' communication was questionable, they moved in sync, sandwiching the White Whale's body from both sides, and simultaneously opened their mouths—

"Wa—!"

"Ha—!!"

With the resonant attack from both sides, the White Whale's body significantly warped, and within its constricted body, several organs, unable to withstand the pressure, were crushed. Its hard outer skin also distorted, cracks ran through it, and fresh bleeding erupted from various wounds, giving the White Whale its greatest damage yet— and,

"—Gyaaaaaah!!"

A part of its underbelly, which had been scraping the ground, swelled from within, then burst open, spewing blood and flesh. As a torrent of dark red fluid gushed onto the ground, carried out by the flow was—

"Wilhelm-san?!"

The old swordsman, who had been swallowed whole by the White Whale and whose survival had been despaired of, had returned.

As the subjugation force restrained the rampaging White Whale, Subaru rushed back to the fallen Wilhelm. Wilhelm, covered in copious amounts of blood, knelt on one knee, supporting himself with his impaled sword, and said,

"…Imprudent. I was careless…"

"You don't need to talk! Ah, damn it, I don't know what to do, but if you're alive, that's what matters most. Let's get back to Ferris's place right away!"

Subaru moved to offer a hand, but noticed Wilhelm's left arm—the one opposite his sword-wielding right—was almost completely severed from the shoulder, and dismounted his ground dragon. He then tried to help Wilhelm onto Patrasche by lending him his shoulder, but—

“Not… yet. I am not, yet…”

“Is this the time for that?! You’ll die before the whale does! And don’t give me any of that sleepy talk about ‘this won’t kill me’! When it comes to life and death, I’m the veteran here!”

“What, are you…”

Despite being battered, Wilhelm’s eyes still held the faint light of battle. Subaru silenced his recklessness with a shout and forcefully lifted his body. Then,

“Grandpa came out!”

“Wilhelm, are you alive?!”

The approaching twins saw Subaru holding the old man and came right up to them. They looked at each other and nodded.

“Subaru. Wilhelm to Felix’s place?”

“Felix… Oh, Ferris. Yes. He’s on the verge of death. Honestly, I’d want to take him myself, but…”

Subaru tilted his head, glaring at the White Whale, which was beginning to reactivate.

The wound on its belly was deep, and there was an unending discharge of bodily fluids, but the beast, opening and closing its mouths and emitting faint fog, showed no sign of losing its will to fight.

Currently, Subaru’s distraction was undoubtedly contributing significantly to the balance of power. If Subaru were to carry Wilhelm and leave now, it would be a decrease in fighting strength—

“That would be the best-case scenario. Worst case, I might drag the whale right to where the injured are gathered. Wilhelm-san, can I leave him to you?”

“We’ll do it with our Ligers… Have you thought of something?”

Hetaro took Wilhelm from Subaru, and struggling with the size difference, somehow got him onto the back of his large dog. He then looked up at Subaru, pulling his sister’s hand, who was clapped her hands innocently, saying, “Gotta do my best~.”

“If you have a plan, I’ll listen. If not, I’ll have to take my sister’s hand and escape from here.”

“Eh, why? We haven’t beaten that guy yet…”

“You be quiet, Sis.”

Mimi pouted her lips unhappily at her brother’s sharp retort.

Watching the twins’ exchange, Subaru nodded in understanding. “That’s right.”

“You guys are mercenaries. Unlike me, Crusch, or the knights who resent the whale, you’re just hired for money… You don’t owe us your lives, do you?”

“We just don’t have an obligation to throw our lives away. I don’t want to be misunderstood.”

Despite his timid face and demeanor, Hetaro said what needed to be said with resolve. Looking down at the small beast-person who was only about waist-high, Subaru said, “My bad,” before continuing,

“No time. I think we have a chance. For now, send Wilhelm-san to the rear… Rem and Crusch, huh? I need to talk to the main people.”

Subaru leaped onto Patrasche’s back as if flying and raised his head.

He glared fiercely at the fish-like shadow swimming leisurely in the sky.

"So, the White Whale has split up, huh?"

"Yeah, I'm pretty sure. The location of the wounds, and their strength. Frankly, you guys, who've been directly fighting it, probably feel it more, right?"

"Rem was completely absorbed in the fight, but… yes, that might be true."

Rem and Crusch, who had rejoined them, nodded and expressed their agreement even before Subaru's explanation.

They had sent Wilhelm off to Ferris's side, carried by the Liger Hetaro had been riding, and then picked up Crusch and Rem along with the twins riding together.

The battle against the two White Whales was now entrusted to the subjugation force and the Beastman Mercenary Group. Their high morale and surprising coordination barely compensated for the lack of main combatants.

A few minutes— If Subaru continued his distracting maneuvers around the whale's nose, he could at least buy them time for a strategy meeting.

Riding alongside them on his ground dragon and Liger, Crusch, who had nodded at Subaru's theory, looked up.

"I agree that it's weaker than the original. However what do we do, understanding that? Even wounded and weakened, its threat still surpasses ours. Even with Ferris's healing, those who've fallen won't be able to return to the front lines."

"It hurts that Wilhelm and Ricardo aren't joining us, but we can't be unreasonable. We just have to win without them."

"Killing three White Whales. Easy to say, but a high wall to climb."

"We don't need to kill all three. —Just one should be enough."

Subaru's words made Crusch's eyebrows twitch.

Subaru nodded back at her, seeing her interested gaze, and pointed a finger towards the sky.

“What do you think that bastard is doing, letting its two clones fight fiercely while it watches from above?”

“Healing its wounds, without joining the fight…?”

Rem answered hesitantly to Subaru’s words, but Subaru shook his head.

From what he could see, even though it was a witchbeast, its biological functions didn’t completely deviate from normal creatures. High-speed self-healing—the White Whale didn’t seem to possess such an absurd, despair-inducing ability, at least.

In that case,

“That one’s the main body, then?”

“That’s what I’m betting on.”

Crusch’s realization made her look up, and Subaru also nodded in agreement.

To be frank, it was just speculation.

However, there was no longer any doubt that the three White Whales were a single one that had split. The problem was how to defeat the now-multiplied White Whales, and his insight was aided by the following:

“I think the reason it isn’t coming down, not joining either of its copies, is because it can’t afford to be hurt itself.”

“That makes sense. Conversely…”

“The two below might not cause the main body any real damage even if we kill them.”

Even if they struggled to defeat a White Whale, its corpse might disperse into fog and immediately reproduce into a new individual.

If that happened, they'd enter an endless loop, and it was clear that they, with their limited continues, would quickly give up.

"The reason it isn't coming down and how to defeat it are connected. What do we do then? If it flies that high, we have no way to attack it."

Hetaro, who had been listening quietly, looked up at Subaru, his dark eyes moist with the question. As Subaru was met with the adorable cat eyes, Crusch looked up at the White Whale floating in the sky.

"Even with my Divine Protection, reaching that high is no easy feat. I might manage one strike, perhaps… but I don't believe that would bring it down."

The White Whale that had escaped into the sky had reached roughly the same altitude as the clouds.

Its positioning, even higher than when it first appeared, seemed to betray the unpleasant nature of the White Whale, and Subaru couldn't help but make a bitter face.

At that height, even cannon fire using magic ore would significantly reduce accuracy.

"Rem. Can you, like, float a mountain of ice right next to that bastard…?"

"Rem apologizes. The further mana is from my hand, the harder it is to control. Lord Roswaal might be able to, but not Rem."

Rem's face was filled with genuine regret for not being able to help, despite seeing a possibility that could break the stalemate. Subaru waved his hand at her, bending his neck in resignation.

He had a plan in mind.

After waiting for Crusch's answer, Hetaro's answer, and Rem's answer, if the best course of action didn't emerge, there was a second-best option he hadn't wanted to use.

"I have a plan that's a bit too much of a gamble… Are you in?"

Subaru closed one eye, asking for their resolve before revealing his second-best plan.

It could be said that it was a truly tasteless question.

—Subaru knew that from the moment they rushed to this place, they were all fools who wouldn't hesitate at such a gamble.

5

From high above, the White Whale silently looked down upon the conflict below.

If one were to observe the battlefield, divided into left and right, the struggle splitting the plain was cleanly sectioned by a colossal tree reaching towards the heavens.

In both battlefields, small humans clung to the witchbeasts' massive bodies, plunging in the steel gripped in their hands, brandishing stones that ignited flames, and cleverly resisting.

Flames rose, and each time the beast's groans reached it from below, the White Whale swimming in the sky exhaled white fog.

The fog hanging over the battlefield favored its counterparts below, steadily pushing the struggling, tiny beings into a disadvantage.

The scurrying shadows dwindled in number, one by one, as time passed. Swallowed by the 'fog', their very existence erased.

It wouldn't be long before everything was consumed and this pointless battle ended.

It was only a matter of time before the balance of power collapsed and total disintegration began.

If the White Whale possessed human intelligence, it would have thought so and been convinced of its victory.

However in reality, the White Whale had no such intelligence. It merely acted according to its instincts, to ensure its own survival and to utterly destroy its opponents.

To question why it made such judgments would be tasteless; it was merely beastly instinct.

Thus, the White Whale, guided by instinct, calmly and precisely intended to torment its prey to death.

"…"

It exhaled fog, painting the ground white.

Though interrupted, it had to spread the fog and cover the world below. That, too, was an instinctual command, the very meaning of its existence.

Just as the White Whale had detached its awareness from the scene below, it suddenly swiveled its enormous single eye, refocusing its attention downwards.

It had sensed a tremendous convergence of mana and had seen the source of that flow.

"El Huma."

At the center of the vast swirling mana stood a blue-haired girl.

Kneeling, beside the girl who was giving direction to the carefully refined mana, a long ice spear, revealing a sharp tip, was slowly forming.

A ten-meter-class frozen weapon of destruction aimed its sharp point at the White Whale's underbelly.

Its target was clear, and performing this in such a visible manner was a fatal forsake.

"—Please!"

Receiving the girl's prayer-like cry, the ice spear launched from the ground towards the sky.

Its tip, naturally, aimed for the center of the White Whale's body, soaring through the air.

Accelerating rapidly, the icy intent to kill approached with sky-piercing force—but it was abruptly thwarted, a miscalculation made by the distance needed for acceleration and by being seen at the moment of launch.

The White Whale swung its tail, swimming through the air as it swept aside the wind.

With just that, its colossal body moved out of the ice spear's range. The spear passed right by the White Whale's body, easily missing its target.

The White Whale writhed its massive body, watching the ice spear pass by.

When even the base of the ice column finally moved past it— It could truly be called a miracle that the White Whale heard a faint, tiny sound of something shattering.

—A devilish miracle from God, meant to inform it that this was an irreversible sound.

"—Hey there. Up close, you're even grosser than I thought, aren't you?"

An incredibly light sensation pressed down on the rock-like skin of its massive body.

At the same time it registered the presence that had landed on the tip of its head, the White Whale detected the diffusion of mana as the ice column, which should have passed by, vanished without a trace.

—Then, the source of an unbearable stench floating right before its nose.

"Come on. —Just so you know, I'm a guy with a reputation for being so annoying that you can't ignore me, got it?"

The White Whale heard the stench, its voice laced with a malicious grin, utter those words.

6

The prologue to Subaru's reckless plan was to grab onto the ice spear Rem created and head for the sky, then smash the 'fog-Clearing Crystal' to detach himself—and cling to the White Whale.

Despite Rem's vehement objections, he pushed through by repeatedly yelling, "I believe in Rem!" and received the trump card, the crystal—the 'Devil-Exorcising Crystal'—from Crusch.

He predicted that the White Whale would easily evade a clearly telegraphed finishing move, and this was his trap using Subaru himself. Conversely, if the White Whale hadn't evaded, Subaru, clinging to the base of the ice column, could have been pulverized by the impact. In a sense, it was a razor's edge.

"If we're talking about razor's edges, this situation is one too… or rather, it's seriously terrifying!"

Desperately clinging to the White Whale's nose, Subaru felt its rough skin and fur against his palms, openly expressing his revulsion at the high-altitude wind and the powerful creature's stench.

With Subaru —a being radiating the Witch's Lingering Scent— clinging to it, the White Whale's demeanor visibly changed. The beast, which had maintained a calm composure until then, clearly entered a state of frenzy, drooling fog and saliva from every mouth across its body, wildly welcoming Subaru with roars of laughter.

Of course, Subaru couldn't just unleash a finishing move to bring down this colossal beast while still clinging to the White Whale. Reality wasn't sweet enough for him to awaken power with mere resolve, and even if he were to unleash Shamak with the resolve to sacrifice himself here, it would just be a clumsy fool losing consciousness, slipping, and falling to his death.

So, what Subaru would do, clinging to the White Whale, was:

"So, come and get me. —Be prepared, alright?"

Subaru let go, his body sliding down the rocky skin before the White Whale could even begin an attack— Entering a freefall. The fool, no longer unconscious, began to plummet towards the ground.

The White Whale turned its head towards Subaru, performing this grand suicide, and moved slightly to pursue him, but then stopped its tail, as if hesitating.

It likely sensed, by instinct, that if it let Subaru go, he would only be able to perform the same actions against it as before.

Indeed, a formidable instinct. However, that wouldn't do. Therefore —

"At this height, I don't have to worry about anyone else hearing. This is a special service, listen up! Because of you, Rem died, and I've got some serious trauma, damn it!"

The moment he finished speaking, Subaru's body, which had been cutting through the wind, was severed from the world.

All sensation faded, and his consciousness, which had been dominated by the feeling of his organs being pulled upwards, lost touch with reality, lured into a place where the concept of time did not exist.

I love you.

He felt as if something had whispered in his ear.

The next moment— Agonizing pain surged through Subaru's entire body, as if scorched by lightning.

A hand, entering from an unseen position behind him, slipped through Subaru's sternum and grasped his heart, squeezing it tightly, violently, yet as if confirming something precious.

The unreality of his life-governing organ being roughly handled. The foreign sensation of a vital part being freely controlled by another— The end of a world where he couldn't even scream was heralded by the sound of the wind and his own groans.

Then,

"I'm… back!"

"—!"

Before him, the White Whale, mouth agape, was plummeting directly towards Subaru.

Lured by the increased scent of the Witch from his confession, the beast's instinct was overwritten by an even greater hatred.

Roaring, its eyes crazed as if it had forgotten the struggle below, the White Whale attacked, intent only on erasing Subaru's existence.

Subaru was terrified of the White Whale, which tore through the wind, rapidly closing the distance.

In a state of freefall, Subaru had no way to evade this charge. At this rate, he would be chewed up in the White Whale's jaw before hitting the ground, heading straight for BAD END 10, 'Fish Bait'.

If things remained as they were.

"—Rem!"

"Yes, Subaru!"

To Subaru's roar, which was almost swallowed by the wind, the girl's voice certainly responded.

At the same time, an ice column, emerging from the side, crashed into the White Whale's flank, which had been fixated solely on Subaru. It ravaged the inside of its jaw, breaking several teeth and slowing its movement.

Seizing that opportunity, Rem, mounted on Patrasche, snagged Subaru's body, which was in mid-freefall, with her morning star.

His waist constricted by the iron chain, Subaru groaned, "Guh!" at the sensation of his trajectory being forcibly altered— A familiar sensation. This was the second time Rem had saved him from a falling situation. The first time was during a prank on a dragon carriage on their way to the capital.

“You really should experience everything…”

This time, he managed not to faint.

The chain was pulled in, and Subaru’s body fell somewhat roughly onto Patrasche’s back. Rem was, of course, riding there, so Subaru’s body landed directly into her embrace.

“You saved me!”

“You’re welcome.”

“What are you saying?!”

Subaru retorted succinctly to Rem, who put her hands together in thanks, and then looked up.

Right past them, the White Whale’s face sped by—

“—!”

Unable to kill its momentum, the White Whale’s head smashed into the ground. A thunderous roar and dust cloud rose from the shattered earth, and the ground trembled violently from the impact.

With that tremor at his back, Subaru ordered Patrasche to go full speed ahead—and from behind them, the White Whale burst through the dust cloud.

Its head horribly mangled by the tremendous impact, the White Whale still pursued Subaru, screaming mindlessly.

Its majestic swim, once seemingly surpassing the wind in speed, was now a chaotic mess, a mere shadow of its former velocity. Its intensity was overwhelming.

Scraping the ground, slapping the earth with its tail, the White

Whale furiously bore down on them from behind.

Leaning forward, committing all his weight, Subaru staked his life on Patrasche's hidden strength. This was the ground dragon that had devoted itself desperately and diligently to Subaru. Though for a short time, Subaru had enough trust to bet his life on its run.

"I'm counting on you, Patrasche! You're a dragon, aren't you?! Show me something cool—!!"

"—!"

Patrasche neighed, and Subaru felt its speed pick up even more in the wind.

The White Whale's roar thundered, and he felt his eardrums roughly vibrate, blurring the world.

Straight, straight, just running, running, galloping through.

Swimming, swimming, the White Whale furiously closing in to devour Subaru.

That's when—

"Eat this—!!"

"—!"

Two thunderous roars echoed, followed immediately by a chain of sounds like something tearing away. The undeniably close intervals of sound narrowed, approached, and then,

Casting a mighty shadow, Flugel's Great Tree crashed directly onto the White Whale.

"—!!!"

Magic ore, unseen blades, vibrational crushing— With its base gouged out by a concentrated force of destruction, the great tree planted by the Sage, after hundreds of years, crushed the colossal body of the witchbeast that plagued humanity.

The White Whale, charging straight ahead, was directly crushed from above by the weight of a tree over a thousand years old. Against this fundamentally different level of power than any destruction it had received before, even its formidable outer hide offered no defense.

A shriek rose, a tremendous shockwave swept through the Lifaus Highway, and the blast cleared away the fog.

Pinning the White Whale under the great tree, its pained roar echoed, unable to move. Yet, despite suffering such immense power, its vitality refused to be extinguished.

As the White Whale struggled, trying to escape the immense weight, right at its nose—

"—I dedicate this to my wife, Theresia van Astrea."

Raising the holy sword borrowed from his lord, a single Sword Demon descended.

To bring an end— To this life-or-death struggle, to fourteen years of obsession, and to four centuries of conflict between humans and the White Whale.

Chapter 60:
Wilhelm van Astrea

1

Let’s talk about Wilhelm Trias.

Wilhelm was born the third son of the Trias family, minor nobility in the Kingdom of Lugunica.

The Trias family was an old, distinguished house that had historically governed lands near the border of Gusteko, a northern country located to the north of the kingdom. However, their past glory as a renowned martial family was long gone. By the time Wilhelm was born, they were little more than a minor barony with a small domain and few subjects— In short, an example of fallen nobility.

His elder brothers, though modest, possessed the qualities expected of a lord. For Wilhelm, the third son, the Trias family provided just enough comfort to prevent destitution and a privileged environment that allowed him the freedom to choose his own future.

Being much younger than his brothers, Wilhelm grew up free from the entanglements of inheriting the family. Unlike them, he lacked the talent for civil service. The path that would define his future was revealed through an encounter with a single sword.

Adorning the manor’s great hall was a heavily engraved sword, a relic from a time when the Trias family was celebrated for its martial prowess within the kingdom. Now, it was merely a decorative heirloom, a shadow of its former self, left behind in the Trias household.

The moment Wilhelm picked up the neglected blade and drew it from its sheath, he was captivated by its allure.

Before he knew it, carrying the unsheathed sword and swinging it in the backyard from dawn till dusk became his daily routine.

He first touched a sword at the age of eight. By fourteen, having grown accustomed to the sword's weight and length, his limbs had lengthened, and he had shed his awkwardness. There was no one in the territory who could match Wilhelm in swordsmanship.

"I'm going to the capital to become a soldier in the Royal Army. To become a knight."

At fourteen, he left home after uttering those foolish words, the kind any boy might think of at least once.

The catalyst was his eldest brother, who began to lecture Wilhelm, who was engrossed only in sword practice and spent his time with the local ruffians, pretending to be a rogue. "What will you do in the future?" he asked.

Wilhelm didn't think about the future; as long as he was enjoying the present, that was enough. The moments when he wielded his sword and truly felt himself growing stronger— Those were his only joys.

His brother's words to his own brother, who had no future prospects, were harsh. Bombarded with nothing but logical arguments, Wilhelm was at a loss for words, and out came his aforementioned naive declaration.

What followed was a heated exchange, the inevitable "You don't understand how I feel!" Wilhelm actually ended up leaving with just some money and his sword.

Though his departure was unplanned, Wilhelm's first journey to the Royal Capital was somehow accomplished before his money ran out. He had always intended to eventually showcase his swordsmanship in the capital. The plan had merely been accelerated, and it was an unexpected journey undertaken without his family's permission.

Elated, Wilhelm arrived in the Royal Capital and immediately headed for the Royal Castle, knocking on its gates to join the Royal Army as a common soldier, hoping to make history.

In this day and age, anyone attempting to enter the castle gates in such a manner would be regarded as a rogue and, naturally, turned away at the gate.

However, at the time, the kingdom was embroiled in a civil war in its eastern territories —a conflict with the demi-human alliance—and was so desperate for soldiers that no matter how many volunteers they recruited, it was never enough.

It was into this urgent situation that a young boy, claiming to have some skill with a sword, presented himself. He was welcomed with open arms, and Wilhelm joined the Royal Army without significant obstacle.

Thus, Wilhelm stepped onto the battlefield, untouched by hardship or setbacks. Before the formidable wall of reality, his swordsmanship was mercilessly thwarted, his previous arrogance utterly crushed, forcing him to his knees in a bitter, unforgettable experience—the baptism of a first battle that everyone undergoes.

However, Wilhelm's sword skill at this point already far surpassed that of a fifteen-year-old youth with no combat experience.

"Huh, turns out life's pretty easy, isn't it?"

Upon seeing the young soldier pile up demi-human corpses on the battlefield and plunge his sword into them, everyone couldn't help but imagine that his future would be drenched in blood.

From morning till night, Wilhelm continued to swing his sword until he was utterly exhausted. He maintained this routine for six years, from the age of eight until he was fourteen.

Even after joining the Royal Army in the capital, he dedicated all his available free time to practicing his sword. His swordsmanship was already among the best of the knights with actual combat experience, and the name of this country swordsman, who hadn't even received a knight's investiture, became known throughout the Royal Army with expectation, and to the demi-human alliance as something detestable.

Unbroken by reality, yet never satisfied with himself, Wilhelm continued to wield his sword on the battlefield, burdened by a sense of ennui.

He found a dark joy blossoming within him only at the moment he cleaved through another’s flesh with his sword, bathed in their blood, and proved himself stronger than the life he took.

Before long, Wilhelm began to slay people with a smile, and the name “Sword Demon” began to be uttered on the battlefield with both fear and hatred.

Though his military achievements easily surpassed the fingers on both hands, Wilhelm never received a knight’s investiture. He didn’t socialize with others, was relentlessly dedicated to his sword, and on the battlefield, he rampaged without regard for his allies, plunging into enemy lines and returning after causing a bloody spectacle. Such a person hardly deserved a glorious title like “knight”. Especially in this kingdom, where ancient chivalry still thrived, Wilhelm, despite his contributions to the kingdom, was continuously treated as an anomaly.

Wilhelm had no desire to change this situation.

He couldn’t bring himself to fight with the noble honor of a knight, competing over the lives of others or the purity of his own soul. In battle, people died, blood flowed, and lives were crushed.

He knew he wasn’t suited to be a knight if he enjoyed that feeling, and he certainly didn’t want to become one if it meant losing that enjoyment.

A distorted craving for battle had long consumed the young Wilhelm’s heart.

A crack began to appear when he was eighteen— Four years into his military career in the Royal Army, around the time when no one in the military was unfamiliar with the name “Sword Demon”.

2

She was a girl with long, beautiful red hair, so exquisitely beautiful in profile it made you tremble.

It happened during a day of forced leave. The warfront had expanded, and Wilhelm had been pulled back to the capital from the front lines. His protests that he was unnecessary were ignored.

Suddenly freed from his immersion in the space between blood and death, Wilhelm, with time on his hands, passed through the castle gates, his beloved sword in hand. The Trias family sword, which he'd grabbed when he stormed out of the house as a sort of souvenir, was quite worn, but this sword, his companion for over a decade, felt the most natural in his hand. He could use other swords, but for losing himself in the throes of battle, this one was, after all, the best.

With his sword by his side, Wilhelm headed to the undeveloped district on the outskirts of the capital. "Under construction" sounded good, but he'd heard the work had been halted a long time ago. At least, it had already stopped when Wilhelm first came to the capital, and there was still no sign of resumption. The rumor was it would remain that way until the war with the demi-humans was settled.

The undeveloped district was deserted in the early morning. If anyone was there, they were likely shady characters using it as a hideout. A slight show of his killing intent was enough to send these small-timers fleeing without a trace.

Clearing his mind, Wilhelm calmed his spirit, drew his sword, and—swung. What came to mind were the countless, inexhaustible mannequins he had already fought and cut down thousands upon thousands of times. Dodging, striking with the blade, maneuvering his body, severing heads.

It was practical training he had repeated over and over since childhood. The strength and speed of his imagined opponents grew with each passing year, and before he knew it, the one he was fighting now was—

“You’ve got a nasty look in your eyes.”

—A hollow swordsman with murky eyes, a mouth slack with madness, clearly not sane—none other than his own reflection in the mirror each morning.

Fighting himself, there was no other opponent within the shadows of Wilhelm’s current being who could truly match his skill. Rumors spoke of many skilled fighters among the Royal Army’s elite, the Royal Guard Knights, but Wilhelm’s battlefield offered no opportunity to fight alongside them. Naturally, his opponent became limited to himself.

Whenever he was granted a holiday, fighting his unkillable self became Wilhelm’s routine. Before he knew it, this corner of the undeveloped district had been labeled “Sword Demon’s territory”, and gradually, no one even approached it anymore.

“Convenient”, he rationalized, immersing himself in what could only be called his world of darkness. Within it, swordplay, impossible to wish for in reality, unfolded, and only there could he feel the meaning of his existence.

“—Oh, I’m sorry.”

The unexpected intrusion into Wilhelm’s solitary world was a beautiful girl.

He had stepped into the undeveloped district as usual, intending to swing his sword and engage in his self-inflicted duel, when he sensed an earlier presence and stopped. The section Wilhelm used was relatively level ground, an ideal spot in the abandoned area, spacious and perfect. This intruder, of all people, was occupying Wilhelm’s sanctuary, tilting her head at him.

“Oh, there’s someone here this early in the morning. In a place like this—”

“…”

The girl smiled faintly at Wilhelm and said something—but Wilhelm’s response was simply to unleash his killing intent.

An amateur would have fled immediately, overwhelmed by the intent. Even a professional, sensing Wilhelm's skill, would likely have discreetly left the area.

However, incredibly, the girl—

"…Is something wrong? You look scary."

—casually brushed off Wilhelm's killing intent and continued.

Feeling irritated, Wilhelm clicked his tongue.

An opponent unaffected by killing intent—that meant someone completely unrelated to martial arts. Anyone who knew even a little about the presence of violence would react significantly to Wilhelm's killing intent. But for those entirely unfamiliar with it, it was merely an intimidating presence. For some, that intimidation might even be perceived as simply narrowing one's eyes.

In the case of the person before him, she was precisely the latter of the latter type.

"What's a woman doing in a place like this, this early in the morning?"

Wilhelm sighed, still feeling her gaze fixed on his face, and responded. The girl hummed softly in response.

"I'd love to return the question, but that would be a bit too mean, wouldn't it? And you don't look like someone who appreciates jokes."

"This area has a lot of dangerous people. A woman shouldn't be walking alone around here."

"Oh, are you worried about me?"

"I could be one of those dangerous people, you know."

Wilhelm retorted sarcastically to the girl's jest, clinking the hilt of his sword to assert its presence. But the girl paid no mind to Wilhelm's actions. "This", she said, pointing beside her.

The girl, sitting on a step, pointed beyond a rise in the ground. Wilhelm couldn't see past it from his position, so he furrowed his brow, and she beckoned him over.

“I'm not that eager to see it…”

“Come here, come here. Just come.”

Feeling his lips twitch at her coaxing, like she was humoring a child, Wilhelm closed his eyes to calm himself and approached the girl. He stepped onto the rise, leaned over to peer beyond it, and saw—

“…”

A field of yellow flowers, illuminated by the morning sun, stretched out before him.

“The development stopped midway, right? I thought no one would come here, so I sowed some seeds. I came here to see the results.”

The girl whispered, as if confessing a secret, to the speechless Wilhelm.

He had been coming to this place for a very long time, but Wilhelm had never noticed this flower field. A flower field he could have seen by simply looking a little further in and widening his gaze.

“Do you like flowers?”

The girl asked, looking at Wilhelm's profile, who still hadn't spoken.

He turned his face towards her and stared intently at the girl's faint smile. Then—

“No, I hate them,” he replied, his voice low, his mouth twisted.

3

And so, Wilhelm and the girl's encounters became frequent.

In the mornings, when he went to the undeveloped district during his time off, she would arrive before him, quietly gazing at the flower field, basking in the wind. And when she noticed Wilhelm, she would ask,

“Have you come to like flowers?”

He would shake his head, then immerse himself in swinging his sword, as if forgetting her presence. After sweating, lost in his imagined duel, he’d look up to find her still there.

“You really have a lot of free time, don’t you?” he’d say sardonically, which became their routine.

I think the time they spent talking gradually increased. Conversations, initially only after he’d finished swinging his sword, began to happen briefly before, and extended a little longer afterward. Gradually, he started arriving earlier, sometimes even stepping onto the leveled ground before the girl. He’d even get a slight surge of emotion, a faint smile, when she’d say, regretfully, “Oh, you’re early today.”

It must have taken about three months of these encounters before they exchanged names.

The girl, who introduced herself as Theresia, playfully stuck out her tongue, saying, “It’s a bit late, isn’t it?” When he introduced himself in return, he confessed, “Until now, I’ve just been calling you ‘Flower Girl’ in my head,” which made her pout.

Once they knew each other’s names, I think they began to delve a little deeper into each other’s lives. What had been polite, innocuous exchanges gradually changed in nature.

One day, Theresia asked him why he swung his sword.

Wilhelm answered without hesitation, saying it was simply because he had nothing else.

As ever, his days in the military remained bloody. The war with the demi-humans intensified, and the monotonous work of dodging magic, getting close to an enemy, and slashing them from crotch to jaw continued. He'd charge across the land, break through the winds, leap into enemy lines, and lop off a general's head. Returning to his own ranks with the severed head impaled on his sword, he'd sigh, receiving praise mixed with awe and dread.

He suddenly noticed flowers at his feet on the battlefield, swaying in the wind even as they were soaked in blood.

At some point, he realized he was instinctively trying not to step on them.

“Have you come to like flowers?”

“No, I hate them.”

“Why do you swing your sword?”

“It's all I have.”

Their usual exchange with Theresia— When talking about flowers, Wilhelm could even smile in response. However when discussing his sword, he gradually began to feel pain repeating the same ingrained answer.

Why do I swing my sword?

He thought of the days he had “stopped thinking” by telling himself it was all he had. Seriously beginning to search for an answer to that question, Wilhelm went back to the very first day he held a sword.

What did he think then, as he looked up at the sword in his small hands, too big for his palm, not yet stained with blood, its unclouded blade shining, reflecting the light?

One day, still lost in a swirl of unanswered thoughts, he made his way to their usual spot.

His steps were heavy, and facing what awaited him felt depressing. This might be the first time in his life he’d had to think so hard. He was about to settle on the simplistic answer—that he had kept swinging his sword precisely because it allowed him to avoid thinking—when,

“—Wilhelm.”

The girl, already there, turned to him and called his name with a smile.

Suddenly, his soul was shaken.

His feet stopped, and he couldn’t hold back what welled up inside him. A sudden realization overwhelmed Wilhelm, threatening to crush his very being.

Everything he had discarded, everything he had left behind by sacrificing himself to thoughtlessly swinging his sword, came gushing out. He didn’t know why. The catalyst was unclear. It had always been on the verge of breaking a taut dam, and suddenly, at this moment, it reached its limit.

Why do I swing my sword?

Why did I start swinging my sword?

He had yearned for the sword’s brilliance, its power, and the purity of living as a blade. That was part of it. But the beginning, he realized, must have been different.

“I have to be able to do what my brothers can’t.”

His brothers were completely unskilled in matters of the sword and such.

Yet, his brothers were trying to protect their home in their own ways. So, he wanted to help them, and he sought a different way to protect.

In doing so, wasn't he then captivated by the sword's brilliance and power?

"Have you come to like flowers?"

"…I don't hate them anymore."

"Why do you swing your sword?"

"It's all I… could think of, to protect."

After that, their customary exchange ceased.

Instead, he found himself initiating conversation more often. He realized that his purpose in going there was no longer to swing his sword, but to talk to Theresia. What was once a place for thoughtless sword practice gradually transformed into a place where he desperately racked his brain to come up with topics of conversation instead of sword forms.

It was around this time that the "Sword Demon's" behavior on the battlefield began to change.

Before, he only thought about how quickly he could get close to an enemy and how many lives he could reap. However gradually, his body shifted its focus to how he could fight without incurring losses for his allies. He began prioritizing incapacitating enemies over killing them, and more often returned to supporting allies instead of pressing deep attacks. Naturally, the way people looked at him began to change.

People started talking to him more, and he started talking to others more.

Discussions about a knight's investiture, which had been entirely unrelated to him before, began to surface, and he even started considering accepting it with a slight ulterior motive.

A little more honor, he thought, would add a certain prestige to his true intentions.

“The investiture came up, and I became a knight.”

“Oh, congratulations. You’ve taken a step closer to your dream, haven’t you?”

“My dream?”

“You took up the sword to protect, didn’t you? A knight is someone who protects others.”

In that moment, it felt as if her smile was etched into the very thing he wished to protect.

4

Time continued to pass.

With his new position as a knight and the increasing number of people he interacted with in the army, information naturally began to flow in. The civil war with the demi-humans was escalating, with battle lines repeatedly seesawing back and forth. Wilhelm, too, experienced not only victories but also numerous defeats. Each time, he struggled to protect what he could within his sword’s reach, enduring days of bitter frustration when he couldn’t.

There’s no doubt that the widening circle of his acquaintances played a part in him hearing that the flames of war had spread to the Trias family’s territory.

The civil unrest, which had initially started in the eastern part of the country, had expanded, and a small part of its northern advance had reached the Trias family’s domain.

He had received no orders. If he hadn’t forgotten his position as a knight, his loyalty to the Royal Army he belonged to, then unauthorized actions would have been forbidden. However for Wilhelm, who now harbored the feelings he had when he first grasped his sword, these restraints meant nothing.

The familiar territory he rushed back to had already been largely ravaged by the enemy's invasion.

Confronted by the fading reality of the familiar landscapes he had left behind more than five years ago, Wilhelm drew his sword, cried out, and plunged into the bloody mist.

He cut down enemies, stepped over corpses, shouted until his throat was hoarse, and was drenched in their blood. It was the battle of a demon who lived by the sword, gave life with the sword, and could find meaning in life only through the sword.

They were vastly outnumbered. There were no reinforcements, and their original fighting strength was weak. Unlike fighting alongside comrades, Wilhelm was alone, given no opportunity to withdraw. Realizing how much he had believed he was fighting solely by his own strength, he accumulated wound after wound— Until he could no longer move.

He collapsed onto a pile of corpses, his momentum broken by the unending enemy forces, and Wilhelm understood that death was imminent. His beloved sword, his longtime companion, lay beside him, and he lacked the strength to even grasp its hilt. As he closed his eyelids, his life flashed before him, revealing only himself endlessly swinging a sword.

A momentary scene where he was about to conclude that his life had been lonely and empty— Then, one after another, faces of people flashed before him. His parents, his two brothers, the mischievous friends he had made trouble with in the territory, the comrades he had fought alongside in the Royal Army, all came to mind— Finally, Theresia, with flowers at her back.

"I don't want to die…"

He had always believed that living by the sword and dying by the sword was his true desire. Yet, as he truly surrendered everything to a life of blades, what assailed Wilhelm in the face of the end he had supposedly desired was only an unbearable sense of desolation.

The enemy soldiers, whose numerous comrades he had cut down, would not forgive his faint last words. A demi-human with green scales and an extraordinarily large physique raised the greatsword in its hand, mercilessly bringing it down upon Wilhelm—

"…"

The beauty of the ensuing sword slash was burned into his eyes, never to be forgotten.

A sword-wind raged, and with each gust, the limbs, necks, and torsos of the demi-humans were cleanly severed. A murmur of awe spread like a tidal wave through the enemy ranks, but the speed of the running blade was far, incomparably faster, producing death in masses.

A nightmarish scene unfolded before his eyes. Blood splattered, and demi-human lives were cut down without even a scream. The too-vivid slashes extinguished the light of life without even informing the victims themselves of their demise. Whether it was cruel or merciful, no one could tell anymore. If there was one thing that was clear, it was this:

He would never, ever, in his lifetime, reach that realm of swordsmanship.

He had dedicated the majority of his not-so-long life, unsparingly, to living as one who wielded a sword. It was precisely because he was Wilhelm that he could comprehend the immense height of the relentless swordplay unfolding before him. Also, the truth that it was a realm his untalented self could never reach.

If what Wilhelm had created was a valley of bloody mist, then what spread before him was truly a sea of blood. The size of the piled corpses was incomparable. The swordplay did not cease until the demi-humans who had invaded the Trias territory were utterly eradicated.

Witnessing the overwhelming slaughter, Wilhelm was eventually carried away by his belatedly arrived comrades. While his wounds were being treated, he couldn't take his eyes off that figure. The figure walked away majestically, her long sword swaying. Seeing that not a single drop of blood had touched her, a shiver ran through Wilhelm's entire body. He would never, ever, reach that place.

It was only after returning to the capital that he heard the name "Sword Saint". Around the same time, the Sword Saint's name began to resound throughout the land, replacing that of Wilhelm the Sword Demon.

The "Sword Saint"— A legendary being who once slew the Witch.

Only their divine protection now remained in their blood, continuing to guard one of the family as a transcendent being. The name of the current Sword Saint had never before been revealed— but that was only until this moment.

5

It was several days later, once his wounds had healed, that he could finally make his way to their usual spot.

Clutching his beloved sword, Wilhelm slowly, deliberately, walked towards it. He was certain she would be there. And just as he expected, Theresia was sitting in the same spot, unchanged.

Before she could even turn, he drew his sword from its sheath and lunged. Just as the blade, falling in a clean vertical cut, was about to split her head in two— Two fingers pinched and stopped the tip of his sword. Amazement choked him, and a smile crept to the corner of his mouth.

"Humiliation."

"—Indeed."

"Were you… laughing at me?"

"…"

"Answer me, Theresia… no, Sword Saint!"

He wrenched his sword free and attacked again, but she dodged with movements that didn’t even disturb a single strand of hair. His leg was swept out from under him, and he fell ungracefully, unable to break his fall. An unyielding wall, an immeasurable gap, existed between them.

“I won’t be coming here anymore.”

He lunged repeatedly, and each time, he was met with a counter-attack and struck down. His beloved sword had, at some point, been taken from his hand. Struck by the flat of the blade, his breath was knocked out of him, and he couldn’t move an inch.

Too distant. Too weak. Unreachable. Not enough.

“With a face like that… Don’t you dare carry a sword.”

“I am the Sword Saint. I didn’t understand the reason before, but now I do.”

“Reason…”

“To wield a sword, to protect. I think that’s good.”

He had given her a reason— Her, who loved admiring flowers and couldn’t find meaning in wielding a sword.

Especially her, who was stronger than anyone, and whose sword reached further than anyone. If so, to atone for the sin he had given her—

“Wait for me, Theresia…”

“…………”

“I will take the sword from you. I don’t care about the divine protection or the role you were given… To swing a sword… to appreciate the beauty of the blade, don’t taint it, Sword Saint.”

A foolish demon spoke of the sword to the retreating back of the Sword Saint, who was beloved by the sword. After that, the two never met in that place again.

The figure of the Sword Demon vanished from the Royal Army, and in its place, the Sword Saint began to spread her name throughout the military.

With Theresia's valiant efforts—as if embodying the phrase "a match for a thousand"— The tide of the war quickly turned. Though an individual, her martial prowess was no longer on a personal level. The resounding epithet of "Sword Saint" was despair-inducing even for the demi-humans who knew the ancient legends.

The civil war ended after about two years from the Sword Saint's entry onto the battlefield. The resolution was left to a meeting between the two leaders, and at the very least, the fighting between those who wielded swords had concluded. To celebrate the end of the war, a modest yet grand ceremony was held in the capital.

The ceremony included numerous awards and honors for the beautiful and, above all, powerful Sword Saint. People from across the nation flocked to the capital and the royal castle, eager to catch a glimpse of her, and a wave of fervent admiration enveloped the young hero who had ended the war.

It was then, breaking through the fervor, that the Sword Demon appeared, as if in a sudden dance.

Before the unruly figure who had drawn a sword, the guards bristled. Stopping them and stepping forward was none other than the Sword Saint herself, on the verge of receiving her commendation. Everyone held their breath as the girl, also drawing her sword, faced the intruder.

The beauty of her stance was so refined, it was almost hesitant to put into words. In contrast, how ominous was the figure facing her?

Clad in a brown jacket, every visible patch of skin was taut with dried rain and mud. The sword in his hand looked paltry compared to the ceremonial blade of the Sword Saint; though its hilt was magnificent, the blade itself was warped, even showing reddish-brown rust.

On the dais, the king stopped the knights who moved to assist the Sword Saint. With bated breath, everyone watched the Sword Saint step forward, her swordplay flashing.

Blade met blade with a sharp clang that pierced through the audience. Flashes of light chained together, kicking up wind, and the two shadows began to slide at bewildering speed. Faced with that sight, the hearts of the breathless spectators were overwhelmed by an immense, profound emotion.

Attack and defense changed with furious speed. The two swordsmen exchanged blows, their positions shifting from ground to air, wall to sky. At their sight, some even found themselves shedding tears.

Humans could reach such a realm. A sword could inspire such beautiful sentiment in others.

Swordplay intertwined, blades locked in a struggle, tips flashed, and they struck each other repeatedly. And finally,

"…"

The reddish-brown blade snapped in half, its tip spiraling through the air. Then, the ceremonial sword held by the Sword Saint—

"My…"

"…………"

"It's… My victory."

The ornate treasured sword clattered to the ground, and the tip of the broken sword hovered inches from the Sword Saint's throat. Time seemed to stop, and everyone knew it— The Sword Saint's defeat.

"You, who are weaker than me, no longer have a reason to wield a sword."

"If I don't carry the sword… Then who will?"

“I will inherit your reason for swinging a sword. You just need to become my reason for swinging it.”

He threw back the hood of his jacket. Beneath the reddish-brown grime, Wilhelm glared at Theresia with a sullen expression. She shook her head slightly at Wilhelm’s attitude.

“You’re awful. You’ve made all my resolve and determination meaningless.”

“I’ll inherit all of that too. Just forget about ever holding a sword and live carefree… Let’s see. You can just live peacefully behind me, perhaps growing flowers.”

“Protected by your sword?”

“Yes.”

“You’ll protect me?”

“Yes.”

Theresia placed a hand on the flat of the sword pointed at her and took a step forward. They faced each other, close enough to feel each other’s breath. Tears welled in her moist eyes, then fell as Theresia smiled.

“Do you like flowers?”

“I don’t hate them anymore.”

“Why do you swing your sword?”

“To protect you.”

Their faces drew closer, the distance shrinking, then disappearing. After their lips, which had touched intimately, parted, Theresia’s cheeks flushed, and she looked up at Wilhelm.

“Do you… love me?”

He turned his face away, blurting out the words gruffly. The audience's frozen time resumed, and the guards surged towards them. Seeing some familiar faces among them —comrades he had once fought alongside— Wilhelm shrugged. Theresia pouted at his curt attitude, just like in one of their moments by the flower field, laughing together.

"There are some things I want you to say!"

"Ugh."

He scratched his head, scowling in embarrassment, then reluctantly turned back to Theresia, leaning in close to her ear.

"Someday, when I feel like it."

With that, he masked his shyness with words.

RURANOBE
GISH||PROUD

7

The gleaming treasured sword easily cut through the rock-like hide, and wind rushed past.

“Ooooooooooh—!!”

As the aging swordsman charged, roaring, blood gushed from the blade’s wounds, painting the sky crimson.

He was a wreck. His left arm hung precariously from his shoulder, and the blood soaking his entire body, a mixture of enemy and his own, had turned a dark, murky color. The effects of the healing magic, even for a brief moment, could only staunch the bleeding and restore a fraction of his stamina. He remained in a critical condition, in need of rest.

Yet, looking at Wilhelm now, who would dare mock him as a dying old man? If you saw the light in his eyes, the powerful stride of his steps, the brilliant swiftness of his blade, heard the resounding, tearing cry of his spirit, witnessed the radiance of his very soul before you— Who could mock the culmination of that old man’s life as foolish?

The blade streaked, and the writhing White Whale shrieked, its immense body trembling with agony. There was no hesitation in the Sword Demon’s blade as it raced across the back of the beast, pinned motionless beneath a great tree. The blade entered near its head, exited through its back, and reached its tail. Upon landing, he spun back, tearing through its underbelly, aiming for the head once more.

One swing— A long, deep, and sharp slash that circled around, cleaving the White Whale in two.

Leaping, the Sword Demon landed again on the White Whale’s halted snout. Shaking the blood from his blade, the Sword Demon, reflecting his own image in the White Whale’s right eye —the only one remaining— said,

“I will not accuse you of evil. It is useless to preach good and evil to a beast. Between you and me, there is only the absolute law of life and death, where the strong reap the weak.”

“…”

“Sleep. —Forever.”

With a final, faint whimper, the light faded from the White Whale’s eyes. Naturally, power suddenly drained from its colossal body, its collapsing form and dripping fresh blood creating an earthquake and a crimson torrent.

No one could utter a word, feeling the blood that seeped underfoot. Silence descended upon the Lifaus Highway, and then—

“It’s over, Theresia. Finally…”

Above the motionless head of the White Whale, Wilhelm looked up at the sky. He dropped the treasured sword from his hand, covered his face with his free hand, and the Sword Demon, now without his sword, said in a trembling voice,

“Theresia, I…”

His voice was hoarse, yet it held an undying, overflowing love.

“I love you—!!”

Words of love known only to Wilhelm, words that had remained unspoken. The surge of emotion he had never once been able to express, until the day he lost his beloved.

What he should have confessed when she once asked him, Wilhelm finally uttered after decades.

On the corpse of the White Whale, the Sword Demon, having dropped his sword, wept and cried out his love for his deceased wife.

“Here, the White Whale has been vanquished.”

A lone, clear voice quietly echoed across the plains in the night. The men, who had been speechless at that voice, looked up. Everyone saw the young girl, riding a ground dragon, stepping forward.

Her long green hair was disheveled, and the ornaments on her attire were ruined by the wounds she’d sustained in battle. Her face was stained with her own blood, making her look utterly disheveled. Yet, in their eyes, the girl shone brighter than in any previous moment.

If the radiance of one’s soul determines a person’s worth, then this was only natural.

The treasured sword had been lent out; the current Crusch was not carrying a blade. Therefore, she raised her empty fist to the sky, clenching it for all to see.

“The Beast of the Fog, which has lived for four hundred years and threatened the world— Wilhelm van Astrea has slain it!”

“—Oh!!”

“This battle, it is our victory—!!”

The proclamation of victory rang out from their lord, and the surviving knights cheered. In the now clear plains, the signs of night returned. The moonlight illuminated the people below, as it should, a true night.

And so, after centuries, the battle with the White Whale concluded.

Chapter 61:
The Road to the Mathers Domain

1

Amidst the moonlit plains, cheers erupted.

The sight of the knights' raised swords reflecting the moonlight was even beautiful. The massive body of the White Whale lay beneath Flugel's Great Tree, and a wave of euphoria enveloped the group surrounding it. Everyone was caught up in the thrill of victory, shedding tears of joy at the fulfillment of their long-held desire.

As if to douse their joyous spirits,

"—!!"

Two powerful roars ripped through the air of the Lifaus Highway, which had momentarily fallen silent. These were not the slain White Whale but rather two of its doppelgangers, having lost their main body. Their colossal forms writhed on the ground, raging ferociously, yet somehow their outlines were beginning to blur indistinctly. The supply of mana from the main body had ceased, and they were gradually losing the ability to sustain their physical forms. Left alone, they would likely vanish within minutes—a truly pathetic sight. However,

"Crude."

With a single word, an arm swung, unleashing an unseen blade of wind that cut short their grotesque display. A gusting wind slash entered from the head, easily cleaving through the White Whale's now weakened hide as it writhed in agony. It was struck in two, left and right, its very existence literally scattering into mist.

The remaining doppelganger was pulverized by a single shot from the subjugation force's cannons. Its scattered mana also dissolved into the atmosphere, causing its colossal form to vanish completely. This time, the battle to subjugate the White Whale truly came to an end. But—

"We can't just bask in triumph."

Clenching her fist, Crusch acknowledged the surge of exhilaration within her chest, yet she shook her head, not letting it show on her face. This wasn't a story where everyone cooperates to defeat an evil beast, and the tale ends with "happily ever after." That kind of ending is reserved for picture books. In reality, where "happily ever after" continues, there are endless tasks that need to be done.

They had to rescue the surviving injured, respectfully bury the dead whose bodies remained, and trace the footsteps of those who had died without leaving remains.

As Crusch sighed before dealing with the aftermath, she noticed something. Not far from the White Whale's corpse, the figure of the main contributor was desperately raising his voice.

2

"Rem…! Rem, open your eyes…!"

Subaru desperately called out to the girl limp in his arms, her face drained of color. The ground dragon, nestled close by, nudged him worriedly with its black snout. However Subaru was too consumed by a furious impatience to respond to the affectionate gesture of his beloved ground dragon.

—The strategy to lure the White Whale by Subaru's scent and crush it under the Flugel tree had been a brilliant success.

It was a plan that might have been met with opposition due to the reluctance to fell an ancient tree. However, the pragmatic Demi-beast mercenaries had no compunctions, and even Crusch showed a remarkable open-mindedness, readily agreeing that it was necessary if it came to that. As a result, the plan, which placed Subaru himself at great risk, was executed and yielded unprecedented results. Yet, if this was the price, it was simply too high.

“This can’t be happening… Please, Rem… I can’t do this without you…”

Before him, Rem still showed no sign of responding to Subaru’s desperate calls. Her limp limbs seemed devoid of will, and his tearful cries echoed emptily in the air, passing through her eardrums unheard.

They had sprinted through the approaching trunk of the great tree, hotly pursued by the White Whale. The colossal beast crashed directly into the tree, and the violent tremors and impacts scattered everything indiscriminately. Among those caught in the blast were Subaru and his companions, who had been running right beside it.

Amidst the violent shock that disoriented him, leaving him unable to tell up from down, Subaru remembered being protected by a warm sensation. The moment he realized it, a tremendous impact resounded, slamming him and that sensation onto the ground.

Shaking his head, Subaru emerged from the haze of semi consciousness and realized he was sprawled on the ground. He looked up and saw that he was being held by someone—and then he knew it was her body, the one that had embraced him until the very end.

“…Suba…ru-ku…”

“Rem—?!”

Her eyelids fluttered, and the eyes beneath them reflected Subaru with a weak glimmer. His own reflection in her eyes looked so frail, as if unconsciously accepting the harsh reality that was closing in.

“Thank god… Ah, it’s me. Do you recognize me, it’s Subaru. Rem, your body is…”

“Subaru… Rem is glad you’re safe…”

“…!”

His throat tightened. He saw Rem smile in relief, ignoring her own condition, simply overjoyed to see him unharmed, even as he struggled to utter words of concern through his tear-choked voice.

“The witchbeast… what happened to it…?”

“…It fell. We defeated it. It worked out. Everything worked out! I’m not hurt at all… It’s all thanks to you…”

“Is… that so. Then Lord Roswaal and Lady Emilia… must be alright too…”

“They’ll be fine. Leave it to me. Rem, you don’t have to say anything right now, just rest… No, don’t… close your eyes… Ah, damn it, what do I do…?”

He didn’t want her to force herself to speak. Yet, if her mouth didn’t utter words, his anxiety wouldn’t dissipate. An irresistible force of destiny seemed to be trying to snatch her life from Subaru’s hands, filling him with a frantic impatience. He didn’t know what to do. He didn’t know how to help her.

He didn’t know, all Subaru could do was hold her hand and grip tightly the arm he had wrapped around her.

“It hurts, Subaru…”

“Sorry. My bad. If I don’t hold you like this, you might disappear somewhere…”

“Rem will not go anywhere… Rem will be by Subaru’s side…”

To Subaru, who was whining like a crying child, Rem smiled with a maternal warmth, and then, suddenly, her body went limp. The sensation of her body softening in his arms made Subaru’s throat freeze in terror. He could hear the sound of blood draining from his ears, leaving everything behind.

“Rem…? Rem! Please, Rem… Open your eyes…”

“Rem is so sleepy… Rem Apologizes… Rem will just sleep a little, and when she wakes up, Rem will be right there… For Subaru…”

“I don’t care about any of that! You don’t have to do anything. Just be by my side, that's all I want… So please, Rem…"

Even though she was in his arms, she was gradually slipping away, and Subaru desperately tried to hold onto her, straining his voice. But his voice didn't reach her, though she was right in front of him.

"Can I… be selfish?"

"…! Say it, say anything. I'll listen to anything, and I'll do anything for you…!"

"Rem wants to hear you say you love her…"

In a faint, weak voice, Rem whispered, looking up at Subaru. Subaru pushed away the tears blurring his vision and shook his head. Then he leaned his face close to hers,

"I love you."

"…"

"I love you so much. Of course I do… I can't do this without you."

These were words from the bottom of his heart. If he were to pour all of himself into this moment, it would be nothing but his unvarnished truth. He couldn't have made it this far without her. He couldn't live without her.

"Ah… I'm so happy…"

Tears traced the corners of Rem's closed eyes in response to Subaru's confession. She received his words happily, and a faint blush spread across Rem's cheeks. With that final blush, it felt as if the strength truly left her body.

"Wait…"

"Rem loves Subaru."

"Don't screw with me, stay by my side! Are you going to leave me with nothing but regret again?!"

He couldn't bear the thought of a future he had grasped for that didn't include her. He had known that for a long time, and her presence had only grown immeasurably larger since then. So,

"If you're not there in the future, where we are supposed to laugh and talk… I don't want it."

"Can Rem be by your side in that future?"

"…Of course. I won't let you go anywhere else."

Closing his eyelids, shaking off the tears that threatened to fall, Subaru looked directly at Rem. Then he declared,

"You're mine. I won't hand you over to anyone."

"—Rem will take that as a promise."

"Huh?"

A strangely rational reply came, and Subaru let out a bewildered sound. Then, Rem slowly opened her once-lifeless eyelids and, unbelievably, sat up in Subaru's arms. She tilted her head and smiled at Subaru, who was still stunned and unable to grasp the situation.

"Subaru's side is already reserved by Rem… You can't take it back, can you?"

Completely unlike someone who had been on the verge of death, Rem playfully winked, her finger gently touching Subaru's lips.

Subaru's shoulders slumped, and he sagged to the ground. He let out a breathless sigh, then looked up at Rem with a weary stare.

"You… you, you… YOUUUUUU!"

"Yes, Subaru's Rem. In name and in fact."

The usual answer sounded impudent now, and Subaru couldn't continue his words. Still, the fact that the girl in front of him was safe filled his mind, and even though it was a situation where he should have been justifiably angry, he was too happy.

“After we finally were honest with each other, you’re going way too wild…”

“A girl who is honest about her love is strong, Subaru.”

Subaru was flustered by Rem, who no longer intended to hide her feelings for him. He felt his face redden with embarrassment and other emotions as he let out a small sigh.

“…If you had died, I would have died too.”

“Oh. To be thought of so much, Rem is truly blessed.”

“No joke, seriously.”

Subaru responded to Rem’s slightly laughing reply with nothing but the unvarnished truth. If she were lost, Subaru would surely have reset the world. Even if he hadn’t been given the opportunity to reset, he would undoubtedly have tried. That’s how significant Rem’s presence was in Subaru’s heart now.

“Then, Rem absolutely can’t die, can she?”

“Of course not. Even if you die, I won’t let you die.”

He leaned in, pressing his forehead against hers, gazing into her eyes from up close. Rem looked at Subaru’s gesture with adoration, and Subaru felt a tickle at the closeness of her presence, their breaths almost mingling. Naturally, his gaze was drawn to her peach-colored lips, and he felt his heart rate subtly quicken—

“—You two, isn’t that enough already, nya~?”

Ferris, who had been observing their flirting from a distance, interrupted their crucial moment with an exasperated look, making a grand nuisance of himself. He was undoubtedly doing it on purpose.

3

“Look at Subaru-kyun, calling out so desperately. He’s so cute, like, ‘I can’t live without you!’”

“Shut up! You’re staring, reflect on your terrible taste!”

“Anyway, if you’d just calm down, you’d realize. The fact that Ferris, who’s been going around treating the injured, didn’t immediately go to Rem means her injuries aren’t life-threatening.”

“Is this really the time to be calm?! My favorite…! My beloved…! My precious girl…! My girl is injured and unconscious, of course I’d be confused!”

“The parts that a guy can’t quite say in various situations are a boy’s pure heart, aren’t they~”

Ferris chuckled, unfazed by Subaru’s yelling, as he directed a blue glow from his palm towards Rem. Subaru, despite his mounting frustration, couldn’t hide his relief as Rem’s expression gradually softened.

While he couldn’t entirely agree with Ferris’s words, the fact that Ferris, who treated the seriously injured first, had put Rem off until later, must mean it was true. His master would never tolerate him treating Rem or Subaru, crucial forces from another faction, lightly. As Subaru considered this conclusion,

“Are you unharmed, Natsuki Subaru?”

Came the voice of Ferris’s master, Crusch, as she gracefully stepped through the grass. Despite being stained with blood and mud, Crusch’s upright posture was beautiful. Her inherent, undiminished dignity permeated the aftermath of the battle, embodying the very word “Valkyrie.”

“More or less. I’m glad to see you’re safe, too, Crusch-san.”

“I am. However, the casualties on the subjugation force are by no means small. Even after defeating the White Whale, those who disappeared will not return.”

Crusch nodded in response to Subaru’s raised hand, but her expression turned somber as she looked around. Her gaze fell upon the White Whale’s corpse, still crushed beneath the great tree.

In her line of sight, the less injured members of the surviving subjugation force gathered, apparently attempting to first remove the tree from atop the White Whale.

“What are they doing?”

“We must transport the White Whale’s corpse. Some kind of action is also necessary for Flugel’s Great Tree, which was sacrificed in the operation. After a battle, there’s no rest.”

“Transport it… That huge corpse?”

He asked, thinking he’d misheard, but Crusch’s demeanor remained unchanged. Subaru quickly looked back at the White Whale, gazing at its colossal body, which measured some fifty meters in length.

“Doesn’t that seem impossible?”

“To say it’s impossible is simply not an option. This is a threat that swam the world’s skies for four hundred years. Only with its corpse as definitive proof can people find true peace of mind. At worst, it might only be the head.”

Listening to Crusch speak regretfully, Subaru reconsidered and realized her judgment was only natural. For Crusch, the subjugation of the White Whale held significant meaning as an appeal to the merchants in the Royal Selection. With high public support as the frontrunner in the Royal Selection, and now having also earned the goodwill of the merchants —a former concern— her position was solidified.

“Wait, did I just give her a seriously bad push?”

It was late to realize it, but he couldn’t shake the feeling that he had achieved something so significant it was beyond repair in terms of favoring another faction. A cold sweat trickled down Subaru's back, feeling as though he had inadvertently exacerbated the disadvantage of his own faction. But,

"You wear such a grim expression. —You don't look like the hero who brought down the White Whale."

"Emilia-tan will probably call me a traitor first thing… Wait, what did you just say?"

"The hero who brought down the White Whale. —I would not be so shameless as to claim all your achievements as my house's own."

Crusch turned her gaze from the White Whale back to him, piercing Subaru with eyes as sharp as a sword. Blinking at the dazzling light that seemed to demand he straighten his posture, Subaru met her gaze. As he did, Crusch slowly placed a hand on her chest and,

"My gratitude for your cooperation this time is boundless. Without you, the White Whale would not have been subjugated, and my path would have been cut short."

Saying this, she bowed deeply to Subaru. Subaru froze, caught off guard by the sincere gratitude from such a noble person. In his entire life, he couldn't recall ever receiving such direct appreciation from someone of a higher standing.

"N-No… ZPlease don't. I didn't do anything that great…"

"You accurately predicted when the White Whale's would appear in both time and place, worked tirelessly to gather forces when the subjugation team alone wasn't enough, spurred on the resolve of wavering knights, proposed a desperate, life-risking strategy, and then flawlessly executed it."

As Subaru stammered out his reply, Crusch listed the results of his actions in this battle. Seeing the outcome of his deeds, recounted so clearly, he could only conclude,

"Even I think I went insane with that performance…"

"'Lion-hearted' isn't quite the right word. However, there is no doubt that you are the main player in this battle. If your actions were to be belittled, I would swear on my honor to correct it."

Crusch's praise, delivered with earnest eyes and straightforward words, contained no calculation or hesitation. She was a person who embodied sincerity, and there was surely no trace of falsehood in the gratitude she expressed. This alone made Subaru smile wryly, remembering their relationship just the night before their departure.

"I'm glad to see my evaluation has improved so much."

"There is no need for modesty. I must admit that my assessment of you a few days ago was greatly mistaken. You have brought invaluable good fortune. Normally, for such a feat, I would wish to welcome you into my house and reward you accordingly, but…"

"Please, don't."

Crusch narrowed her eyes, inviting Subaru with a low voice. However Subaru immediately raised a hand to decline her offer.

"It's not about loyalty or allegiance, but my trust is already placed where it belongs. I genuinely think you're a good person and that you'd be a great queen, but…"

Crusch would surely become a king who would lead her people with unparalleled integrity. She possessed such capacity, and her character had been repeatedly demonstrated in this deadly situation. It was dazzling for a small person like Subaru, who had constantly lied, and he couldn't help but admire her with envy.

"—I'm going to make Emilia queen. Not for anyone else, but because I want to."

"…I knew this, but it still stings a bit."

Receiving Subaru's answer, Crusch's lips softened, and she lowered her chin. Then she uncrossed her arms, clenched her white fingers into fists, and extended them towards Subaru.

"Very well. I will reward your achievements in a different way. I swear on the name of Crusch Karsten, that promise shall be fulfilled.”

She declared solemnly, then unclenched her fists and looked at her palms. she then lowered her voice slightly,

“Come to think of it, this is the first time I’ve been so pleasantly rejected. To not even show a pretense of hesitation… It’s almost a refreshing sense of defeat.”

“…I think you’re an amazing person. If I were all alone and drifting, I’d definitely lean on your hand, I think.”

If he were adrift, with nothing decided, and a person like Crusch extended such a hand, he would undoubtedly cling to it without hesitation, relying on it and entrusting everything. However, the current Subaru had someone he wanted to reach out and hold, someone whose hand supported his wavering back.

“As for the alliance, I’ll be counting on you. Even if we end up as enemies in the end, let’s get along until then.”

“Natsuki Subaru. Let me correct your thinking.”

Crusch shook her head at Subaru’s words, her lips tightening into a stern expression. A tense aura once again emanated from her, and Subaru felt a tingling sensation down his spine, his eyes widening. To Subaru, Crusch held up a finger, thrusting it before his face.

“Even if the time comes for us to decide who is superior, I will remain amicable towards you.”

“…”

“Even on the day of our inevitable separation, I will not forget the debt I owe you today. Therefore, even when the time comes for us to be adversaries, I will continue to show you respect and remain friendly until the very end.”

Lowering the arm with the raised finger, Crusch declared clearly in a dignified tone. Her demeanor sent a chill down Subaru’s spine this time. It wasn’t born of negative emotion, but simply from being overwhelmed by something truly great.

—This was the person known as Duchess Karsten, Crusch Karsten.

“If the first and second spots in my heart weren’t already taken, I’d be in serious trouble.”

“Hmph. As a woman, I haven’t considered anything further than that. There were indeed moments that struck a chord, but it’s rather a high price regardless of my own will.”

Crusch chuckled faintly, responding to Subaru’s lighthearted attempt to conceal his agitated feelings. Then she changed her expression, her eyes becoming extremely calm as she prefaced, “So,”

“If possible, I would like to transport the injured and the White Whale’s corpse to the capital as is. However, it seems you still have some mission remaining.”

“…So, people with divine protections can tell, huh?”

“One merely needs to look into a man’s eyes to know. The power of a divine protection is not necessary.”

Gazing intently into Subaru’s black eyes, Crusch closed one eye as she answered. Then she scanned Subaru from head to toe.

“You must not be unharmed either. Is this something you must do, despite that?”

“It’s something I have to do, even if I’m severely injured. In a way, this whale hunt was for the sake of achieving that. No offense.”

“Oh, so this White Whale subjugation was an afterthought?”

Despite the potentially offensive wording, Crusch showed no signs of anger. She seemed intrigued by Subaru’s purpose, whatever it was, murmuring “Interesting” as she rested a hand on her chin.

“The alliance with my house must also have been made with that in mind. If so, I can somewhat guess the role you’re seeking… Do you need help?”

“I do. It’s just… Honestly, I didn’t think it would be this tough.”

Subaru responded weakly, shrugging his shoulders as he surveyed the situation, filled with injured people. What awaited Subaru after the White Whale’s defeat was his return to Mathers territory, where Emilia was waiting, which meant confronting a detestable group. Ideally, he would have liked to borrow the strength of Crusch’s faction for that battle against his hateful opponents, but—

“With this many injured, I can’t ask for too much. You, Crusch-san, have to make decisions as a head of house, not just based on emotion. To ask for help on top of this…”

“Then it would be fitting for this old body to be worked to death.”

Suddenly interjecting the conversation was a tall, quiet figure approaching—the old swordsman, Wilhelm, covered in splattered blood, his left arm still painfully injured. He approached without showing the slightest sign of his injury, extending the treasured sword he held in his right hand towards Crusch.

“Lady Crusch, I return what you lent me. Furthermore, I express my deepest gratitude for this matter. It is only with your cooperation, Lady Crusch, that my lifelong wish has been fulfilled. —Thank you.”

“My purpose and your lifelong wish simply aligned. —You may keep that sword for a while longer. You would be of no use unarmed after this.”

“Yes. Thank you graciously.”

Crusch briefly replied to Wilhelm’s strained words of thanks, and with a nod of her chin, Wilhelm turned to Subaru. Up close again, the smell of blood emanating from him was tremendous, and the surging sword ki inadvertently brought a tension that felt like a blade pressed against Subaru’s timid liver. However, the taut atmosphere from before the battle—he was now freed from it, and it was true that Wilhelm looked brightened.

He looked directly at Subaru, then knelt on one knee. It was the deepest bow, the highest form of respect for an opponent, which he had also shown the night before their departure. And then,

“Natsuki Subaru-dono. This White Whale subjugation was achieved only with your cooperation. It is thanks to you that this body has been able to fulfill the meaning of its life until this very day. My gratitude. My gratitude. —I offer my gratitude with my whole being.”

“…”

Wilhelm, who had spent half his life devoted to the sword and over ten years to exact his revenge. Swallowed by the vast wave of passion in his words of gratitude, Subaru was nevertheless unable to speak, fearing to stammer. He took a moment to compose himself, waiting until he could properly voice his response to the old man’s words. For he absolutely could not show a disgraceful appearance in the face of Wilhelm’s resolve.

“It was your own strength, Wilhelm-san. You thought about defeating that White Whale, researched, trained, and fought without giving up…”

He must have experienced setbacks countless times and almost given up, thinking his tenacity wouldn’t be enough. He couldn’t imagine that he had never been tempted to abandon everything and be freed from his obsession. Because Subaru, who knew more than anyone the weakness of the heart, the pain of losing to oneself, and the unreasonableness of being obstructed by fate, understood the hardships Wilhelm faced in achieving the fruition of his strong resolve. Therefore,

“You loved your wife so much, that you were able to defeat the White Whale. If I was able to help even a little with that, then nothing could make me happier. I don’t know if this is the right thing to say, but… Congratulations. And— Thank you for your hard work.”

“…”

Raising his face at Subaru's words, Wilhelm's eyes, within his wrinkled face, widened. The feelings and emotions Subaru felt were those he had empathized with and imagined on Wilhelm's behalf. He didn't think he could convey it all in those few words, and Wilhelm probably wouldn't appreciate someone speaking as if they understood everything. However, he still couldn't hold back his desire to speak. To the elder who had fought against fate, who had burned with love for his lost wife for fourteen years and kept running until now, words of appreciation.

"—You have my gratitude."

Wilhelm replied briefly, his voice trembling. Then he looked down slightly, waited just a few seconds, stood up, and stretched his back. Then, looking towards Crusch, he received her nod and,

"I have received permission from Lady Crusch. I will place myself at your disposal, Subaru-dono. Please make full use of me for your purpose."

"No, really?"

Subaru looked to Crusch for confirmation, and she nodded, affirming it. He looked closely at Wilhelm again, feeling both reliable and terrified at the unyielding pressure of the Sword Demon, even with his injured arm.

—Wilhelm's cooperation was exactly what Subaru had wished for.

In the current situation, where even a slight increase in combat strength was desired, the power of the Sword Demon, Wilhelm, was something he craved desperately. However, the old man's injuries, even to an amateur eye, were not minor. To Subaru's concerns, Crusch shook her head, saying, "No problem," and,

"Ferris!"

"Yes, Lady Crusch!"

At her sharp call, Ferris appeared swiftly, as if gliding. He bounced to Crusch's side, his cat ears twitching slightly.

"What is it, Lady Crusch? Ferris is currently in a state of grand rotation, but Lady Crusch's requests are of course the highest priority, so it doesn't matter, nya~."

"You, take responsibility for what you're saying midway!"

Subaru interjected, criticizing Ferris's casual abandonment of his role as a healer, and Ferris made a sour face. Crusch then asked him, "What about the life-threatening injuries?" and Ferris put a finger to his lips.

"Most of the emergency treatment is done, so there's no one who'll die immediately if left alone, nya? It's a blessing in disguise, but they were all pretty tenacious."

His affected posture was irritating, but Subaru breathed a sigh of relief at the answer. At least, Rem's body wouldn't be in serious danger. Considering how much Ferris had teased Subaru in the latter half of their conversation, it seemed his worry had been mostly unnecessary, but it was still reassuring to hear of her safety again. At any rate, Crusch responded with a solemn "Understood," then,

"Can the injured be transported? If so, Ferris, this is enough for now. You will follow Natsuki Subaru after this and fulfill your role as an ally."

She commanded Ferris thus. Subaru was once again surprised by her words. Removing Ferris, the 'Blue', from this location meant prioritizing Subaru's needs once the minimum safety of the injured was secured. This was a decision that prioritized consideration for Subaru over her own position, and naturally, it should have caused resentment in Ferris, who was devoted to Crusch—

"Understood. Ferris will accompany Subaru-kyun. I also have to treat Old Man Wilhelm along the way."

"That would be troublesome."

"In return, Old Man Wilhelm will have to swing his sword, so isn't it a fair trade, nya?"

He didn't buy it. Ferris accepted it as a matter of course, and Wilhelm acted as if he hadn't doubted the decision. Subaru couldn't hide his surprise at the exchange between the master and her two retainers. Ferris then glanced sideways at Subaru.

"So, about half of the remaining subjugation force that seems alright… About twenty-something people, nya. I'll bring them to cooperate with Subaru-kyun. Nice to meet you~"

"Nice to meet you~? That's too casual! Is that really okay?!"

"What is?"

"What is what…? Everything. Can you even trust my judgment?"

The more he thought about it, no one else in the capital had poked at his wounds quite like Ferris. Although he always wore a friendly smile and acted charmingly, Subaru somehow knew that Ferris harbored strong contempt for his weakness. Subaru thought it was natural to feel aversion to obeying such a person, but,

"It's not that I trust Subaru-kyun, it's that I don't doubt Lady Crusch's judgment in deciding to trust Subaru-kyun. Don't get that wrong, okay?"

Ferris snorted, as if to emphasize, scoffing at Subaru's thoughts. Subaru resisted the urge for a vein to pop on his forehead from Ferris's malicious attitude, took several deep breaths, and then managed to stammer out, "Thanks." Then,

"Oh, I forgot to mention, Rem will be staying behind… or rather, she has to return to the capital with Lady Crusch, so please understand."

"—Why?!"

Suddenly, a strong voice of denial rang out in response to Ferris's casual remark. It was Rem, behind them, who had been watching the exchange. She sat up halfway, glaring at Ferris with resentful eyes.

"Rem, Rem is fine. Subaru is going somewhere dangerous again, so how can Rem not…?”

“Even if you say that, your body won’t move, will it? You faced the White Whale almost alone and even used the highest-tier magic multiple times… Rem’s body is extremely depleted and empty right now, nya. As a healer, I cannot allow her to push herself any further. Do you understand, nya~?”

“But!”

Rem tried to stand up and argue, as if she couldn’t accept it. But her arms, raised to support herself, had no strength, and she nearly collapsed, unable to support her trembling body. Subaru rushed over and hastily supported her collapsing form.

“Careful. —Hey, please, don’t overdo it, just like Ferris said.”

“But! Rem doen’t want to, it hurts. Rem can’t bear it.”

Looking back at Subaru, who was close by, Rem’s eyes welled up with large tears. More than being left behind, what she feared most was,

“When Subaru is in trouble, Rem wants to be the first to reach out. When Subaru is lost, Rem wants to be the one to push him forward. When Subaru challenges something, Rem wants to be by his side to stop his trembling. That is Rem’s only, only wish. So…”

“Then there’s nothing to worry about.”

“Huh?”

To her tearful voice, to her words overflowing with affection, Subaru felt his lips naturally relax into an embarrassed smile.

“Our hands are always connected, and you’ve pushed my back countless times. Even if I tremble, just thinking of you makes it all okay. —You’ve been saving me all along.”

“…Ah.”

“It’s okay, Rem. I’ll take care of everything. I’m your hero. I decided to take that step. So, there's nothing to worry about."

Her trembling eyes looked up at Subaru, and her heated cheeks flushed red. Subaru smiled at her, baring his teeth in a fierce grin.

"I even brought down the whale. Your hero is super, demonically strong, right?"

"Subaru-ku…"

As if unable to contain what was welling up inside, Rem's attempt to call Subaru's name was cut short. Then she struggled to swallow the impulse several times, taking multiple gasps before finally, tears streamed from the corners of her eyes.

"—Yes. Rem's hero is the best in the world."

She simply smiled, crying.

4

Leaving half the guards with Crusch to escort Rem and the other injured back to the capital, Subaru led the remaining subjugation force straight for Mathers territory.

With Wilhelm and Ferris at the forefront, the subjugation force accompanying Subaru numbered twenty-four. Although significantly fewer than anticipated, they remained a crucial fighting force. Besides, they weren't the only ones joining him.

"Ah, even so, you, big bro, ended up getting all the good parts, didn't ya!"

"Danchō! Mimi too! Mimi tried super, super hard!"

Two demi-beast, riding large dogs, chattered loudly. One was Ricardo, who had almost become "ugly fireworks" while protecting Subaru, and the other was Mimi, who maintained her childlike demeanor even in the midst of a life-or-death battle. Not just the two of them, but about ten more surviving demi-beast mercenaries were also coming along. The remaining injured would apparently return to the capital, led by the other vice-captain, Hetaro.

"Even so, your brother was so out of breath, how are you so energetic?"

"Hetaro's a wimp, see? Unlike Mimi, who trains, he's a total softy. How pathetic!"

She laughed, gleefully mocking her brother's weakness. Subaru figured it was probably just the older sister who was a physical beast. She was the berserker type, who couldn't get enough of fighting. Given her adorable kitten-like appearance, it almost seemed pitiful that she was like that.

"Well, we did a lot, but don't you worry. The young lady asked us, so we'll cooperate with your objective, big bro."

"Cooperate with my objective, you say? Do you even know what I'm trying to do…?"

"You're going to pick a fight with the Witch Cult, aren't you?"

Subaru choked on his words at Ricardo's suddenly low voice. He instinctively tightened his grip on the reins of Patrasche, his ground dragon, and heard the creature whinny softly, as if concerned for its rider. Ricardo bared his teeth at Subaru's stiff profile. "No need to be surprised, is there?"

"For merchants, information is paramount, and we're employed by the young lady. That means we keep our eyes and ears open to a certain extent, including background details. Our big ears aren't just for show, you know."

"Yeah! Mimi's got big ones too!"

"That's not about you, little one."

As Mimi reacted diagonally to Ricardo's joke, earning a wry smile from him, Subaru quietly gasped, realizing how underestimated Anastasia's reach was. However, since he needed their cooperation for his objective, he couldn't stay silent, and it was natural to disclose the information. Though, he wanted to wait until he saw the results of those matters that served as Subaru's insurance—set up before leaving the capital.

"Oh, looks like we're about to link up."

"Huh?"

Subaru noticed Ricardo looking into the distance, and he quickly followed his gaze. But all Subaru saw was the deep, night sky over the plains; he couldn't make out what Ricardo was looking at. As Subaru strained his eyes, still seeing nothing, Ricardo chuckled softly.

"No need to push yourself so hard, you'll see when they get here. Don't worry."

"I want to eliminate uncertainties as soon as possible. Don't hold back."

"Alright then, I won't hold back. —They're a bit far, but coming from that direction is the other half of our mercenary group."

"Half?"

Subaru tilted his head, asking, unsure what Ricardo meant. Half? But the injured were supposed to be with Crusch and the others, returning to the capital.

"Half means exactly that. Originally, we 'Iron Fangs' only sent half our personnel to subjugate the White Whale. The other half had other tasks."

"Other tasks, you say?"

"Someone needed to prevent others from entering the highway and getting caught in the battle, right? So, they were tasked with blockading the other side of the highway beforehand. They left last night, so you didn't get to meet them."

Subaru nodded in understanding as he listened to Ricardo's explanation. Still, it was hard to agree with the point that they hadn't put all their effort into subjugating the White Whale, but there was a possibility that Crusch's White Whale subjugation could have failed with a complete wipeout. In that case, Anastasia's decision to avoid losing all valuable forces was probably not wrong.

For Subaru, who had few cards in hand and no choice but to go all out, it was a completely different dimension of concern. Anyway,

“So, the ones coming now are the rest of your comrades? Do they have a leader too?”

“Mimi’s little brother, Tivey, is leading them. He’s an amazing guy who can do combined attacks with Mimi, instead of Hetaro!”

Mimi puffed out her chest, proudly answering Subaru’s question. Just hearing her reply, his expectations for the rest of the comrades slightly lowered.

“No, but his brother was normal. So there’s a slim chance this brother is normal too…?”

“I know you’re worried, but Tivey’s actually quite smart among us, you know? He handles the finances and negotiations, and he’s good at handling Mimi too. He’s an upgrade from Hetaro.”

“Don’t say that, Hetaro will feel bad…”

Including the fact that he was left behind as expendable, Hetaro seemed almost too pathetic. Putting aside that pity, if such individuals joined and further strengthened their forces, it would be a bonus. They should wait for their arrival and then create an opportunity for another discussion. Subaru racked his brain, wondering how to explain their confrontation with the Witch Cult to the Crusch faction, including Wilhelm and Ferris. Just then, as Ricardo had said, the pride of ground dragons gradually approached, raising a cloud of dust before Subaru’s eyes.

“—Hm?”

Subaru subtly uttered a small sound, noticing a sudden anomaly. Among the group of approaching ground dragons, he saw one distinct shadow mixed in. As the distance closed, and its blurry outline became clearer, a ground dragon emerged in the now distinct vision.

Riding on the back of that ground dragon was…

“—Why are you here?”

“You still have a rather rude way of addressing reinforcements, don’t you?”

Facing each other on their stopped ground dragons, Subaru and the other figure stood opposite. A man with meticulously combed purple hair, clad in the solemn armor of the Royal Guard, a languid smile playing on his lips.

—His fated rival, Julius Juukulius, gazed at Subaru with an elegant demeanor.

Chapter 62:
Settling the Past and the Future

1

Patrasche turned her head with a movement like wrinkling her snout, intimidating the blue-skinned ground dragon glaring in front of her.

Subaru lightly stroked Patrasche's neck, expressing his agreement with the agitated ground dragon in a small voice: "I feel the same way."

Though they'd only known each other for a short time, the bond forged between Subaru and Patrasche was strong enough to have pulled them through the brink of life and death together.

It was as if Patrasche's thoughts were being transmitted directly to Subaru through the reins.

"I hate to interrupt your moment, but could you stop tempting my ground dragon? Yours is quite impressive too. Mine might just follow along."

"What?! Patrasche! You're trying to pick someone up?! Who said I feel the same way?! You're getting all lovey-dovey before a life-or-death battle!"

"That ground dragon probably doesn't want to hear that from you, bro, especially after the show you put on before we left."

Subaru yelled at Patrasche's unexpected betrayal, and Ricardo, who was propping up his cheek beside him, muttered in exasperation.

Subaru gulped and fell silent, and stepping forward from beside him was—

"Fancy meeting you here, Julius. You're living the good life, aren't you? We were fighting for our lives just a few hours ago."

“I have no defense against that. However, allow me to correct you, Ferris. I am not the person named Julius. Let’s see… I’ll call myself Juli.”

Julius shrugged at Ferris’s sardonic gaze and spouted that nonsensical gibberish. Naturally, everyone’s eyes narrowed at the meaningless fake name, but he met their gazes with a cool smile and said,

“Hypothetically, it would be unthinkable for someone of a knight’s standing to join a group of hired hands and stoop to being a mercenary. There is no record of a person named Julius Juukulius joining the Iron Fang; what you have here is merely a man named Juli.”

“Nya-kay. As always, proper knightly chivalry from a respectable house is such a pain, isn’t it? Good thing Ferris’s family is a fallen noble house.”

“I don’t consider chivalry a pain. I do, however, think it’s problematic to have to be so careful just to help a friend. —As an aside, I should also make it clear that the disciplinary suspension Julius Juukulius received was lifted last night, as soon as the day changed.”

“What a ridiculous precaution… Is there even a point to that fake name, then?”

Subaru clicked his tongue and grumbled, listening in on Julius and Ferris’s conversation. His averted gaze and twisted lips made it clear he was sulking, and since that was indeed the case, there was no excuse.

Julius, hearing Subaru’s small grumbling, suddenly looked over. He then advanced his ground dragon and positioned himself directly in front of Subaru.

“I’m glad to see you’re more energetic than I expected. —How is your physical condition?”

“—!”

At Julius's question regarding his health, Subaru's mind clicked.

Julius's question, which was nothing more than teasing or sarcasm, was enough to bring back memories for him from several days ago —though for Subaru, it felt almost two weeks ago.

Receiving such an utterly provocative statement as a deterrent, Subaru felt insults bubbling up to his throat and barely managed to swallow them down and restrain himself.

He cleared his throat, took a deep breath, composed a calm face, and smoothed his short bangs with a theatrical gesture.

"Oh, well, it was just a scratch, right? A little spit and it healed, right? What about you? For someone claiming to be reinforcements, aren't you a bit late to the party? What, were you busy writing a letter of apology to the higher-ups because you got too serious with amateurs?"

Inferring the background circumstances from the topic of the disciplinary suspension, Subaru retorted with his signature taunting attack. At that, Julius's face showed a slight hint of being taken aback.

"I wasn't talking about that, but about your honorable injury from the witchbeast subjugation… I'm glad to see that wound has also recovered. It wasn't as dramatic a wound as it looked, after all. You, who are so good at gaining sympathy, would often writhe around in exaggerated pain."

"Hahahahahahahahaha."

"Fufufufufufufufu."

Dry laughter intertwined between the two, and an explosive atmosphere began to permeate the air.

Just when one might expect the others to intervene, Ferris and Ricardo merely watched with amused expressions, while Mimi had disappeared into the other group, searching for her brother. Inevitably, the role of settling the situation fell to—

"It's good to rekindle old acquaintances, but isn't this hardly the time for it, both of you?"

Stepping forward and admonishing them was the old swordsman on a ground dragon —Wilhelm.

Wilhelm, with the treasured sword entrusted to him by his master at his hip, looked at Julius directly, his calm, authoritative eyes narrowing.

"Your timely reinforcement is beyond appreciated. Our forces were quite depleted from the battle with the White Whale… As one who dragged others into my personal quest, I was indeed anxious."

"Wilhelm-san, that's not…"

Subaru interjected, hearing Wilhelm's lowered tone.

The White Whale subjugation was one of the obstacles Subaru had to overcome due to various conditions. Subaru's self-serving intentions were certainly involved, and there was no reason for Wilhelm to feel burdened.

It was frustrating that he couldn't explain everything, but Subaru raised his voice, hoping to at least dispel that sense of obligation. But before the words could fully form,

"You've truly become a sight to behold, Sir Wilhelm," Julius murmured quietly, looking at the old man.

In front of Subaru, who looked up, Julius noticed the light in Wilhelm's eyes, as if a weight had been lifted.

"You're a different person from when we last met… Even Reinhard will find some solace in this."

"Indeed."

Wilhelm placed a hand on his chin and lowered his eyes.

How much inner conflict must have been contained in that brief moment of hesitation?

Subaru, unaware of the circumstances, could only furrow his brows at the current exchange, but the eyes of those around them, observing them, once again indicated those who knew the story.

In front of Subaru, who was displeased at being left out, Wilhelm raised his lowered face.

“I could not be straightforward with him. Even though I knew he was faultless and meant no harm, I could not forgive him. —Eventually, I will face the consequences.”

“That alone will be enough for him to gain something meaningful.”

Julius affirmed Wilhelm’s bitter words with a nod. Then, Julius slowly turned his intelligent gaze toward Subaru.

Naturally, Subaru straightened his back, bracing himself for a resumption of their earlier verbal sparring, but—

“I must offer my thanks.”

“—Huh?”

As Subaru inadvertently blurted out, Julius gracefully dismounted his ground dragon. He then looked up at Subaru, who was still atop Patrasche, and bowed at the waist.

“The subjugation of the White Whale this time was a heavy responsibility that should have fallen to the Knightly Order. I express my gratitude for putting an end to a calamity that nations had neglected for many years—”

With such a fluent gesture of gratitude, Subaru, whose negative feelings toward Julius had been running high, was instantly unable to respond. At that moment, Ferris, beside a bewildered Subaru, interjected, “Hold on, hold on.”

“The White Whale’s subjugation was, ultimately, led by Duchess Karsten —It was Lady Crusch’s accomplishment, so please don’t misunderstand that. Old Man Wilhelm also defeated it.”

“I understand. I heard from Julius directly —who engaged him in combat— that he himself doesn't possess the power to defeat the White Whale."

Julius continued to maintain the facade that he was a different person from Julius. He acknowledged Ferris's statement, but then added, "However,"

"There's no doubt that his presence played a significant role in the subjugation of the witchbeast. Ferris, wouldn't you agree that's the correct assessment?"

"Nya~. That's… yeah, I guess so…"

Pressing his fingers together, Ferris mumbled and reluctantly backed down. Having talked the cat-eared girl into submission, Julius once again addressed Subaru.

"Thanks to you, people can now forget their days of living in fear of the fog. —Lady Anastasia will also be greatly pleased."

"If it were just the first half, I'd accept it honestly, but with the second half added, it's hard to say yes straightforwardly."

"My friend's long-standing regret… can also reach a turning point."

Julius closed his eyes, speaking as if sighing.

Subaru understood that "that friend" likely referred to the red-haired hero, but he didn't know the details of the handsome man's long-standing regret.

Could such a person also have a past filled with regrets?

At any rate, being straightforwardly thanked was certainly not a bad feeling.

It was something to genuinely celebrate that Wilhelm's long-held wish had been fulfilled, and Subaru was aware that his cooperation had played some part in it. Yet, inwardly, Subaru's feelings toward Julius were extremely complicated.

Though he tried to act tough, the first thing that came to mind in Subaru's heart when facing this handsome man was his weak, intimidated side.

Even overcoming that weak part, the next thing waiting was a defensive rebelliousness, shielded by bravado to hide his weakness. While he genuinely appreciated the reinforcements, his resentment toward the unpleasant character of their liege lord, who would send in separate forces, especially Julius, was a bottomless pit of darkness that could be endlessly listed.

However, Subaru showed none of these negative emotions on his face.

Swallowing his complex and bizarre emotions, Subaru did only one thing instead.

"Ta-da!"

He proudly distorted his cheek and laughed in a way that seemed to provoke his opponent.

"What a villain!"

"That's irritating."

"Oh no, I almost laid hands on him."

"His nostrils are flaring!"

"Hey, hey, the booing from my allies is incredible! Is this what I get for showing off a little and boasting about my accomplishments?!"

Subaru hurled his anger, spitting at the critical audience, then turned back to Julius, breathing heavily. After calming himself with a loud voice and deep breaths, he asked,

"So what do you want, after all? Why did you come?"

"—You really did it, didn't you?"

"Huh?"

Ignoring Subaru’s question, Julius muttered something with a hint of deep emotion.

He shook his head, saying “No,” in front of Subaru, who had asked him to repeat himself.

“To clarify, the ‘Iron Fang’ ,which is under contract with Lady Anastasia, has been lent to Lady Crusch… no, to you, specifically for the duration of the White Whale subjugation.”

“Wait? Was that right? But I thought the young lady’s story…”

“Big sister, please be quiet.”

Mimi tried to interject at Julius’s statement, but she was stopped by the cat-like beastman who had appeared beside her. Subaru frowned, taking in their exchange while listening to Julius’s words.

At Subaru’s attitude, Julius raised a hand slightly and continued, “In short,”

“Once the White Whale is subjugated, there is no longer a reason for our cooperation. Our services are no longer required. —Yet now, what are you planning to do

?”

“Julius is being forgetful. The young lady said all sorts of things before we set off, didn’t she? Mimi doesn’t remember though.”

“Please be quiet.”

The kitten’s comedy routine in the background was a distraction, but Subaru was slowly starting to understand what Julius was trying to say. In other words,

“You’re telling me to choose whether to pull out or continue as reinforcements, right here?”

“I’ve been instructed to sell our services at a high price, you see. Perhaps our strength isn’t needed in this situation?”

Julius pointed behind him suggestively, pressing Subaru for a decision.

However, this was not a situation for a rash decision fueled by irritation. It would be easy for Subaru to give in to anger and send them away, but that would be a foolish act, crippling his own forces before the greatest obstacle still ahead.

Yet, simply accepting the "high price" Julius spoke of was also problematic. Continuing to issue empty promises was a terrible negotiating tactic, and more importantly, Subaru's decision would affect many lives and the future of one young girl.

Subaru glanced sideways at a silent Wilhelm and Ferris, who were waiting quietly without any intention of intervening. If Subaru were to request their assistance here, they would likely take measures such as hiring the "Iron Fang" through the "Crusch Faction" in this negotiation.

However that would only mean the favor was owed to a different party. Currently, Subaru and Crusch were in a balanced state, each owing one favor, and it would be unwise to alter the current situation where Subaru's favor was more heavily weighted due to Crusch's strong sense of obligation.

Next, looking at Ricardo's mercenary group, Ricardo stood with his arms crossed, his dark eyes closed in quiet observation. Mimi also mimicked him, closing her eyes, occasionally twitching her orange cat ears and fluttering her adorable little nose.

Earlier, Ricardo's reason for joining the fight against the Witch Cult had seemed tenuous, but now that Julius had brought up this negotiation, it made sense. He knew it was an unavoidable negotiation and was simply acting as if he was along for the ride.

"Dirty. As expected of a money grubber, dirty…"

"That's quite a thing to say, while you look at my face. I don't really want to do this either, taking advantage of someone's weakness is… It's just that I like money more."

"Your struggle is shallow! I wasn't relying on you in the first place!"

He had no intention of seeking assistance from the enemy leader—even if he was only a nominal boss—Ricardo. In any case, it was an unpleasant negotiation where Subaru's only remaining answer was "yes."

This would put Anastasia in unilateral debt to him, separate from the Crusch faction, which had balanced their favors. It was a bitter pill to swallow, but Subaru had no choice but to clench his teeth and endure the frustration, as he couldn't refuse the reinforcements here.

If only the reinforcements could have passed through without creating a debt problem—

"Fog… White Whale… highway and time limit, and the end… Witch."

His thoughts racing, Subaru suddenly blurted out words that flashed through his mind. These disconnected thoughts began to align, relying on faint clues, and then—

"What if I said the White Whale subjugation isn't over yet?"

"—An interesting statement, indeed."

Julius narrowed his eyes and spoke, reacting to Subaru's seemingly spur-of-the-moment words.

Behind him, not only the beastman mercenary group but also the members of the subjugation party—especially Wilhelm, whose expression was wide-eyed—showed that Subaru's conscience was being pricked.

However, in a different sense than the old man's long-cherished wish being fulfilled, Subaru had realized another problem that couldn't be ignored. That was—

"There's a possibility that the White Whale, the witchbeast of the fog, is a pawn of the Witch Cult. I know someone who said something to that effect."

—Was that during the third world, at the very end of the previous loop?

He thought it was when he was surrounded by the Witch Cult in the forest, defeated by Petelgeuse's Unseen Hand, and utterly overwhelmed by powerlessness as Emilia's corpse was trampled.

At that time, that madman, while cursing him obscenely, certainly blurted out:

The road has been sealed. No one can cross the fog.

Why did he know that? Why did he speak as if it were his own doing? And the clincher was the single word uttered by the beast of the end that froze the world:

"Someone who seemed to know everything called the White Whale 'Gluttony'. If that's true, if it's one of the Witch Cult's hands… then its appearance must be related to where I'm going."

If Petelgeuse had summoned the White Whale to the highway to obstruct access to the Mathers territory, its purpose would, of course, be nothing other than their crazed actions. In other words, the White Whale's blockade of the highway was to attack the mansion—Emilia.

"I need to make the Witch Cult pay for the upper hand they got. For this time, and for four hundred years worth. Only then will the White Whale subjugation truly be complete."

"…"

"This is a job your employer commanded, dangling a reward, mercenary. Don't abandon it halfway. Or will you pay the penalty and back out?"

Subaru challenged him boldly, gauging Julius's reaction.

Inwardly, he was impressed by the flimsiness of his own statement, but the current Subaru had grown capable of putting on a brazenly smiling facade.

It was an inference from scattered information about the future. And even then, it was from more fragmented pieces than ever before, heard in a situation where his consciousness wasn't clear, making its credibility thin even to himself.

He had pieced it together to make it sound plausible, but he didn't know if it would be convincing. But if he could at least gain an opening to continue the negotiation—

"—Let's call that a passing grade, for now."

"Huh?"

"I'll make it sound a bit better on our end, but generally, I'll go along with your assertion. Lady Anastasia's reputation will also be preserved."

"Wa-Wait a minute!"

Subaru held out his palm, trying to stop Julius. However Julius calmly accepted Subaru's flustered state.

"What is it? The mercenary group will continue to cooperate. The payment has already been made by Lady Anastasia, as agreed. There shouldn't be any problem, right?"

"So easily… I mean, what's with this understanding?! You're…"

He was about to say more, but then he realized something deeply unpleasant about himself.

He wished Julius, who was considering his circumstances and willing to cooperate despite his clumsy arguments, was not such a good person.

Subaru realized that deep down, he wished Julius would remain an unpleasant person with whom he could never truly understand.

"Well, it's not like there's no reward, is it? If he were a stupid fool, we'd just fleece him once and be done with it, but with a clever opponent, there are plenty of opportunities to fleece him."

"So you're still going to fleece me in the end, aren't you…?"

Seeing Ricardo interject, Subaru gladly latched onto that. And he hated himself for always taking the easy way out.

Subaru's self-loathing and other-loathing mingled, unilaterally worsening the situation.

However, in the face of this situation, Subaru let out a deep, deep sigh.

"I'm… wrong. Damn it, ok, I was wrong. Fuck. This isn't what I want to say but. Even back then, I was the one who…"

Subaru put a hand to his forehead, struggling to utter a rational answer. But the words wouldn't come. He understood it in his head.

This was a moment to thank Julius, who had come with reinforcements and shown his intention to participate. Even what happened before was a result of Subaru's short-sightedness, and now that he could look back calmly, it was clear who was at fault.

Or even the result of Julius's actions back then.

"…"

Julius stood silently, not reacting to Subaru's stumbling words.

He would probably understand what Subaru wanted to say, and he could even speak the answer before a speechless Subaru.

However he didn't, and Subaru hated him terribly for not doing so. If only he could have continued to hate him and nothing else.

"I was wrong. I'm sorry, I… I apologize."

In a low voice, as if forcing the words out, Subaru spoke them.

For Subaru, it was a memory too loathsome to look back on, but a moment he absolutely had to face someday to move past it, and a person he eventually had to settle things with.

Julius heard Subaru’s spoken apology and quietly closed his eyes. Then he slowly lowered his chin.

“I, too, apologize for my discourtesy. While I won’t retract all of my actions and words from that time, I sincerely apologize for disrespecting you.”

Julius responded to Subaru’s apology with those words.

His words were overflowing with sincerity, and Subaru felt, quite easily, the unpleasant emotions that had been churning inside him simply melt away.

Knowing that, Subaru dismounted, just like the “knight” standing before him, and faced him directly at the same height as his tall stature.

“I was wrong. But—”

“Hm?”

“I absolutely despise you. —I feel bad about it, and I’m grateful you came, but I hate you. Truly, from the bottom of my heart, I intensely, hate, you!”

He broke the last sentence into phrases, pausing after each one as he declared it.

Julius, thus struck head-on, was momentarily dumbfounded, and then suddenly his expression broke.

“That’s fine. I, too, don’t feel much like we’ll ever be friends,” he said, and then, in a truly theatrical gesture, he swept his hair back and laughed.

2

We need to get our heads straight.

They sat in a circle, the key figures facing each other to discuss what lay ahead.

Subaru stood at the center, surrounded by Julius, Ferris, Ricardo, and Wilhelm.

"Uh, honestly, I'm not good at leading stuff like this, so when you look at me with such serious eyes, it's kinda embarrassing, or rather…"

Again, being surrounded by people of higher "human aptitude" than himself made him shrink back. Subaru, originally a shut-in in his old world, had no experience standing in front of people, let alone being the kind of person who could lead others.

However they looked at Subaru with a certain trust despite his apprehension, and to Subaru's consternation, he didn't dislike it.

"Alright, let's sum things up. Uh, where we're heading now is the Mathers domain… or rather, Roswaal's mansion. The Witch Cult will probably —no, definitely— show up there."

"The Witch Cult…?"

At the mention of the Witch Cult, everyone's expressions turned serious. Many of them must have been somewhat prepared from the flow of the conversation so far, but actually knowing their opponent's identity still seemed to hit them hard.

Subaru didn't know how widely known the Witch Cult's existence was in this world, or how they perceived it—but for Subaru, their existence could be summed up in one word: "the worst."

From everyone's reactions, it seemed safe to assume that was a shared understanding.

"Subaru. How did you realize the connection between the White Whale and the Witch Cult?"

It was Julius who called him "Subaru" so casually.

Ever since Subaru's frank confession earlier, Julius's attitude had been oddly familiar. Honestly, Subaru had mixed feelings about that too, but—

"Unfortunately, I've had experience running into Witch Cultists. It didn't end well, and I have plenty of unpleasant memories, but… someone let it slip."

"I see… So the Knightly Order's suspicions weren't wrong."

"That's right. It seems the documents Old Man Wilhelm was chasing also led to that conclusion."

"You knew?"

Julius acknowledged Subaru's words, and Ferris agreed. Subaru expressed surprise at their reactions, but Wilhelm gently shook his head.

"I discovered the connection by chance. The distribution of White Whale appearances and the records of the Witch Cult's activities seemed to coincide in an unusually high number of places. —It's not enough to be called definitive proof, however."

"The White Whale's appearance was the main thing, and the Witch Cult was more like an extra, you know. Even Ferris was skeptical when she first heard about it."

"There were similar rumors circulating within the Knightly Order as well. Although, they were treated as mere hearsay… A laughing matter, if you will."

Julius shrugged, and Wilhelm sighed, "It's understandable." Listening to their exchange, Subaru scratched his head.

"Anyway, it's lucky for me that there was already a basis for you to believe the story. Regardless, believing what a Witch Cultist said… feels pretty unreliable, but I do think the White Whale is definitely connected to them. Originally, aren't witchbeasts creatures created by witches?"

"That's what's said. The existence and origin of witchbeasts are unknown. Sometimes they reproduce like normal creatures, and sometimes they suddenly appear like the White Whale. Though, exceptions like the White Whale are pretty much limited to the Black Serpent and the Great Rabbit."

"I feel like I just heard some words I can't ignore, but can we just move on because it sounds scary?"

After seeing everyone nod that it was okay, Subaru cleared his throat and continued.

After stating that they would confront the Witch Cult, the next thing everyone needed to know was:

"The Witch Cult's target is Emilia, and they intend to burn down not just the mansion but the nearby village as well. So we have to somehow drive those bastards away."

"Drive them away. That's quite a soft thing to say, isn't it?"

Ferris narrowed his eyes alluringly, prolonging the end of his sentence meaningfully as he looked at Subaru. It was a gesture that sent a shiver down Subaru's spine. However, the other party was a man.

"What do you mean, 'soft'?"

"Why don't we just cut all those guys down? From past records, that's the correct way to deal with them, you know?"

"…………"

Hearing Ferris casually declare genocide, Subaru's mouth fell open in surprise.

He wasn't surprised by Ferris's radical statement, but by his own "soft" comment.

He had been repeating in his head that he should kill those guys, that they deserved to die, but he was surprised by the change in his own mindset that led him to use such mild words.

It was probably because Subaru's priorities had changed.

"If we can protect the mansion and the villagers, that's enough for now. Drive away the Witch Cult, or blow them away, or crush them, or kill them, or twist them apart and flatten them and burn them to ashes and pulverize them…”

“O-Okay. I understand the extent of your anger towards them perfectly.”

“—Ha! Damn it. No, that’s not it. It’s not like I’m filled with anger and hatred, prepared for battle. It’s a wicked assumption that that’s why I approached Emilia-tan!”

“No one said that?!”

As he spoke, his anger resurfaced, startling Julius and Ferris. However, his unnecessary excuse-making also yielded something.

Unlike in previous worlds, the motives for Subaru’s actions seemed to be completely unquestioned in this timeline. Subaru wondered what was different.

“After sacrificing yourself so much to take down the White Whale, who would make such a wicked assumption now? Subaru-kyun, you’re surprisingly distrustful of people, aren’t you?”

“Distrustful or not…”

He had indeed been suspected by Ferris and Crusch themselves.

However the laughing Ferris didn’t seem to doubt him at all, in a way completely different from merely feigning it. Was this also a change brought about by Subaru’s altered intentions and actions?

In any case,

“There’s no longer any room to doubt that the Witch Cult will make a move. Given their activities, it was expected once Lady Emilia announced her candidacy for the Royal Selection.”

Julius nodded in understanding, touching his chin. His familiar attitude, and the fact that Subaru had never had the chance to question this before, made Subaru raise a hand.

“I just wanted to ask, where does this conviction that the Witch Cult will move if Emilia-tan gets involved come from? It’s pretty strange how everyone just accepts it… especially since a lot about the Witch Cult's true nature is unknown."

"You say you know the Witch Cult will move, but then you say things like that?"

Ferris tilted his head in exasperation at Subaru's question. Being laughed at for his ignorance was an expected reaction, and Subaru said, "Hold on, hold on," holding up his palm towards Ferris.

"We don't have much time. Let's keep it snappy. So, what's the deal there?"

"I think it's strange for the one who doesn't know to be leading this, but… listen, the Witch Cult devoutly worships the Witch of Envy, Satella. You know this, right?"

"Sort of. Honestly, that's just the surface, like what I read in a picture book."

"Of course. There's hardly anyone left who's seen her in person. Even I only know from hearsay. Well, it's good if you know that the Witch Cultists worship Satella. However what about the fact that Satella, that witch, was a half-elf?"

"That, too, well…"

The picture book Subaru read didn't contain that information, but he had heard it when he asked Beatrice about witches.

In the capital as well, Emilia's appearance and origin were frequently compared to the 'Witch of Envy', often becoming a topic of conversation. Subaru, for one, used to be indignant, feeling it wasn't something she should be blamed for.

"You mean Emilia-tan's appearance is just like the Witch's, right? But that's no reason to blame her. It's misplaced resentment."

"Most people don't think so. That's all Satella did. However, going back to the Witch Cult… simply put, the existence of half-elves is an annoyance to them."

"Huh?"

A surprised sound burst from Subaru's throat.

He turned his head, trying to ascertain the meaning of the words, but the reactions of those around him showed no particular surprise towards Ricardo. That meant it was a shared understanding, and—

"Why? Logically… it's disgusting to even try to trace the logic of people like them, but logically, how could they persecute a half-elf who is like the witch they worship…?"

"Precisely because they worship and believe her to be the ultimate being, they cannot tolerate beings that are similar yet different. Similar yet different, imposters. —That existence."

It was a terribly cold voice, filled with a bone-chilling bloodlust.

Subaru looked up, instinctively turning towards the person who had spoken. That person was also looking at Subaru, their gazes intertwining. Subaru was fixated by the gaze, as if his very soul was being peered into, but the person in question—

"Nya~Nya, Ferris is just making a guess, nya?"

His expression quickly broke as he stuck out his tongue, making the previous atmosphere vanish.

Subaru was speechless at this sudden, almost drastic change, but Ferris, seemingly oblivious to his confusion, leaned forward.

"The Witch Cult's reasons for acting crazy aren't new, so isn't that good enough? The real question, I think, is which leader of the Witch Cult is targeting Lady Emilia?"

"Sin Archbishop, then."

"—?! You know that name?"

Ricardo agreed with Ferris's change of topic, and Subaru pounced on the word that came up.

Sin Archbishop—that was the title Petelgeuse claimed, and he had explained that he was in charge of ‘Sloth’.

“Are the Witch Cult’s Sin Archbishops famous?”

“Just that such individuals exist, yes. Long ago, before the Witch of Envy rampaged, there were other witches besides Satella, apparently.”

“Pride. Wrath. Sloth. Greed. Gluttony. Lust. —Six witches bearing the names of the Great Sins, correct? All of them were said to have been devoured by Satella, who bore the name of Envy.”

Witches bearing the names of the Sins—he had heard that somewhere before.

In this world, “witch” referred only to Satella, the Witch of Envy, and the other witches bearing the names of the Great Sins no longer existed. But—

“I don’t know if ‘executives’ is the right term for the Witch Cult’s higher-ups, but I’ve heard that those in that position take on the names of the Great Sins in place of the lost witches. Envy is the symbol of Satella, whom they worship. So, the other six— six Sin Archbishops.”

“Six…”

Subaru gasped at Julius’s explanation, breaking into a cold sweat at the unfathomable depth of the hostile Witch Cult.

When Petelgeuse claimed ‘Sloth’, he had anticipated that other beings would be in charge of the other Sins. The Seven Deadly Sins, for Subaru, was a fantastic term full of chuunibyou elements familiar from subcultures, but the negative impression of ‘Sloth’ he had personally experienced was too strong for him to embrace it as a heart-pounding concept.

However,

“The White Whale, which was supposed to be ‘Gluttony’, we took down. Another Sin Archbishop should also show their face in the Mathers domain we're heading to. This is a chance to really shake up the Witch Cult."

"Oh, you're confident, nya~. Well, Ferris agrees that this is a good opportunity to crush the enigmatic Witch Cult. Those guys have been pretty disrespectful."

"From the perspective of showing no signs of activity, the Knightly Order has also endured much hardship against them for a long time. Not just me, but many knights as well. It's truly a blessing to have this opportunity."

Ferris and Julius agreed with Subaru's opinion, Ricardo offered a warlike smile, and Wilhelm simply nodded solemnly in response.

With that decided, Subaru's task was to plan a strategy, utilizing their current forces and the information about the future he possessed. —Though, the plan itself was terribly simple, and the groundwork had already been laid.

"This plan, at worst, we would've had to do with half our current numbers, but thanks to Julius joining, the numerical anxiety is gone. I think we can do it."

"I would like to correct one thing. My name is Juli. While I am close to the eldest son of the Juukulius family, I would appreciate it if you'd be careful about that."

"That persona is just a hindrance outside of official settings! Besides, if you were serious about pretending to be someone else, you wouldn't show up dressed as a Royal Guard Knight! Your cover is too shallow!!"

Subaru yelled at Julius, who was putting on a shallow act of concealment, then, still breathing heavily, he looked around at everyone's faces. Then, after a cough,

"Alright, then, a simple explanation of Witch Cult hunting that even a monkey could do—let's begin!"

With a villainous grin, Subaru unveiled his plan.

The plain where the moonlight began to fade—the last night before clashing with the Witch Cult was breaking, and the morning of this loop’s final day was beginning.

Librarian Beatrice's Log: Restart

1

With a soft thump, she gently closed the book she had finished reading.

Shutting the thick, skillfully-bound book that rested on her knees, the girl let out a sigh that seemed incongruous with her child-like appearance, one that somehow carried the weight of years.

The girl sat atop an aged stepladder, constructed of wood. Wrapped in an elegant dress, with her pale, cream-colored hair in curls, she was a person with doll-like beauty.

The girl's name was Beatrice—she was the librarian of this silence-filled library, known as the 'Forbidden Library', and a magic user of rare quality who had passed many a year here.

"No matter how many times I read it, 'The Guillotine of Magritsa' never loses its charm; just a masterpiece, you know."

Whispering in satisfaction, Beatrice's fingers traced the title of the book on her knees.

Countless shelves, and innumerable books collected on them. Story after story acclaimed as masterpieces, specialized treatises from the past that were now difficult to acquire, or even forbidden books that no one knew the history of; the 'Wisdom' that existed in the Forbidden Library in the form known as books was limitlessly vast.

In a sea of books that one couldn't finish reading in a lifetime, it was no surprise that there were stories that Beatrice was fond of, and had read over and over. The book she had just finished reading, too, was one such story.

"What sort of book shall I read next, I suppose?"

The calm that fell over the Forbidden Library was, to Beatrice, who was both a librarian and a reader, the best possible environment.

Through Beatrice's spell, known as 'Door Crossing', the Forbidden Library was entirely isolated from the outside world. Not only were light and darkness shut out, but even bothersome interpersonal relations could not be brought into this place. The only thing that made a sound in the room was herself, and there were countless books to read—truly a utopia that a book lover would drool over.

However…

"Of course, after a tragedy, something that would ease the heart would be…"

"Beatrice-sama…"

"Mhmm, losing oneself in another tragedy while still carrying this feeling of melancholy would be…"

"Beatrice-sama? Where are you?"

"It might be amusing to read the same story again, once more from the start…"

"Beatrice-sama…? Beatrice-sama…?"

"Aagh! Could you be any more noisy, annoying, and clamorous, you know?!"

Popping down off the stepladder, she ran towards the door of the library with the book still clasped under her arm. When she placed her hand on the knob and opened the door, for just a moment, a distortion formed in the space between the Forbidden Library and the outside world it was connecting to. Breaking through that thin, film-like sensation, Beatrice flew out into the mansion's hallway. At the end of the hallway, facing the other direction, was a blue-haired girl; Beatrice glared at her back.

"You've been going on with this noisy bustle for a while now, I suppose! Exactly what business do you have with Betty this late at night, you know?!"

“My apologies, Beatrice-sama. But thank goodness. You were still awake, then.”

As the girl turned towards her, Beatrice still held the book to her chest as she frowned.

In the direction of Beatrice’s pouting gaze, a girl wearing a servant’s uniform approached. She was the younger of the servant sisters who were responsible both for the mansion and its inhabitants—the more capable one. Her name was Rem, wasn’t it?

When Rem stood before Beatrice, she politely bowed her head to one who outwardly looked far younger than herself, and said,

“As it happens, Beatrice-sama, Roswaal-sama is calling for you. It seems there is a matter that he simply must have your assistance with.”

“For him to be leaving it to a servant to summon me, he must be thinking quite highly of himself, I suppose. He seems to have forgotten that there is no hierarchical relationship between himself and Betty, you know.”

“…”

As Beatrice showed the poor mood she was in after having her reading time disturbed, Rem held her silence. Offering her opinion and incurring the displeasure of either Beatrice or Roswaal would be troublesome.

Seeing Rem tighten her cheeks and the corners of her eyes in an effort to remain expressionless, Beatrice sighed.

Even though she exceeded her older sister in capability, there was a part of her that was behind in mentality. It also felt to her like the older sister was simply far above average in that respect, but none of that mattered to Beatrice.

“…Aah. Hurry up and show Betty the way, before she changes her mind, I suppose.”

“…! Yes, thank you. Rem will guide you.”

When she agreed to compromise, Rem gave off an air of relief as she bowed her head again.

The girl wasn't very good at concealing what she was feeling. As it was, it seemed unlikely she'd be able to hide her thoughts from anyone who wasn't truly lacking in perception. There wouldn't be that many people who were so unobservant, though.

While Beatrice was harboring that impression, a voice unexpectedly reached the back of her mind. It wasn't a voice that maintained a distinct form, but due to it being a voice with 'Power', it's intentions were conveyed clearly.

"Mm… I've received instructions from Bubby. It seems you should prepare hot water, a clean washcloth, and a single guest room, I suppose."

"A guest room?"

"That's right, you know. It seems that half-wit girl is bringing someone back with her, I suppose."

With an air that suggested someone was bringing something bothersome for her, Beatrice let out a gloomy sigh.

While following the maid who was thinking over her instructions, Beatrice adjusted her grip on the book she was carrying.

"Good grief, this is honestly so much trouble."

Looking back at it, Beatrice was completely shocked at how bad everyone aside from herself was at handling their responsibilities.

…That was setting aside for now how poorly she'd handled her own responsibilities and desire to meddle in the affairs of others, in that she'd forgotten to tidy up her books, and, unable to tolerate the noise outside what should have been a quiet Forbidden Library, she had rushed out of it.

2

"O~h my, you found her much faster than I had expe~cted. Was this a victory for Rem's dogged determination… or perhaps simply a defeat for Beatrice's will to fight on?"

When they arrived, guided by Rem, at the mansion's entrance hall, a tall man who had already arrived turned to face them.

He was a strange fellow with long indigo hair, white makeup applied to his face, and eccentric clothing. This man with his nonsensical air was Roswaal L. Mathers, both the master of this mansion, and Beatrice's long-time acquaintance.

As he gazed down at her cheerfully, Beatrice narrowed her eyes, and snorted softly.

"You must think quite highly of yourself to summon me like this, I suppose. You really shouldn't be giving such cruel orders to your own servants, you know."

"Despi~te that, I expected that you would be more likely to appear if I had Rem search for you than if I searched myse~lf. Su~rely, if I had started searching the mansion high and low, you'd have been so entertained by it that you wouldn't have come out to see me, wouldn't you sa~y?"

"…Now that you mention it, that might be true, I suppose."

The sight of Roswaal, who never lost his relaxed attitude, walking around the mansion searching for her would be a rare thing. Since it was Rem, she took pity on her and showed her face, but she couldn't deny the possibility that if it had been Roswaal, she'd have taken some time to enjoy it.

"You see, isn't it just like I sai~d?"

"Hmf, having you stand there looking like you've seen through everything isn't much fun. So, is it still not time for the errand you called Betty for?"

"The errand itself should be calling momentarily. …Rem?"

After his pretentious reply, Roswaal called to Rem, who was standing at his side. The girl lightly lifted up her own blue hair, and placed a hand on her well-shaped ear.

"… Yes, the senses nee-sama is sharing are getting closer. It seems they should be reaching the gate soon. Would it be alright for Rem to go and greet them?"

"I'd be pleased if you wou~ld. Ah, I don't think there will be a problem, but… do be careful."

Nodding to Roswaal's instruction, and then bowing to Beatrice, Rem headed towards the entrance. When she opened the large doors and went outside, a cool evening breeze blew into the manor, and one could catch a glimpse of the mansion's front grounds and front gate on the other side of the door. Near the iron gate, a dragon carriage raised a cloud of dust as it arrived.

In the carriage's driver seat, a girl identical to Rem—her elder twin sister could be seen.

"The older of the sisters has returned as well; I'd like to see Bubby soon, you know."

At the return of her only family, Beatrice's expression had softened. The best outcome here would be for this to be simply rejoicing together at meeting again, but there was both the thoughts that were sent to her earlier, and Roswaal's summons. There was no way it would end that easily.

"The return of your dear older brother… bu~t, I'm a little jealous. You and I are old acquaintances, too, but you've never made that face for me."

"You shouldn't say such creepy things, I suppose. And you're being far too obvious, you know. You aren't interested in Betty, or anyone else, I suppose. There's only ever been one person on your mind, you know."

"We~ll, you're not wrong about that. But that doesn't mean that it's a lie to say that I feel like I'd like to get along well with you. … Although this matter is separate from that."

"I can't feel anything but worried about that, I suppose."

Simultaneously, Beatrice’s face tightened at Roswaal’s words, and Rem met up with her older sister Ram in front of the gate. After the sisters had spoken together about something, they immediately moved to the carriage, and a silver-haired girl descended from it. … To Beatrice, it was someone who put her in a complicated state of mind.

But this time, there was someone who drew her attention more than the silver-haired girl. It was…

“It seems there was some sort of blackened, dingy-looking fellow riding with her, you know.”

“I’m not sure if you would say riding, or being carried along. I’m su~re you’ve realized it, but that’s the reason that I ca~lled for you.”

“You can’t be serious, I suppose.”

Realizing that her worries had been right on target, Beatrice furrowed her brow, and waited for the girls to arrive.

The boy being lowered from the carriage was unconscious, and the maid sisters were each lifting one end of his body, which swayed back and forth as they tried to move him.

“Um, um! That boy really helped me out, so… I wish you’d carry him a little more gently… Um, are you listening? That looks rea~lly painful, doesn’t it?”

Near the boy who was being carried, the silver-haired girl ran about, flustered and looking concerned. Neither her shoulder nor her silver hair showed any sign of the little shadow that Beatrice was seeking.

“…It seems I’ve drawn the short end of the stick, you know.”

Beatrice’s sigh reeked of age, completely at odds with her child-like appearance.

It seemed that the boy who had been carried in had made crucial efforts in overcoming a problem that occurred for the silver-haired girl—Emilia—during her journey in the capital.

From what was said, after Emilia carelessly had her precious emblem stolen, not only had he tenaciously determined its whereabouts in her stead, and struggled to do this and that to return it to Emilia, but he had gone on to risk his own life to protect Emilia's.

"Ah, this is much too suspicious, I suppose. There's no doubt that someone like that is a spy or something, you know. It would be best to make a clean break of things here and let him die naturally, I suppose."

"Well, it's certainly true that it's far too convenient. What would you have us do, Emilia-sama? Shall we let him die?"

"Why are you saying such cruel things?! Please, help him."

Flustered by the cold suggestion offered by Beatrice, who had listened to the explanation, and Ram, who had given the explanation, Emilia requested healing for the boy.

The unconscious boy had a fairly serious wound in his abdomen. Currently, the wound had only been closed by simply healing magic, and even if it was only left as it was now, he could be expected to recover if he rested quietly.

To be sure, this was speaking of only if he did absolutely nothing but rest in bed.

And, she got the feeling that this boy, left on his own, definitely would not remain in bed.

"There's little choice so I'll heal him, but… this is something that I normally absolutely wouldn't do. I'm doing you a favor, so tomorrow, I'll have you let me take Bubby all day, I suppose."

"…! Very well. If that's what you'd like, I'll make sure to speak to Puck about it. Thank you, Beatrice. I am indebted to you."

"…That's an old-fashioned way of putting it, you know."

"Huh?!"

Setting aside Emilia as she expressed surprise, Beatrice set right to healing the boy and getting it over with. Before the immense power of Beatrice, the maintainer of the Forbidden Library, it was a trivial task.

Despite that, she'd demanded a proper reward, so the terms weren't bad for her. It would be troublesome if their relationship developed into one where she was called upon casually. Beatrice was no one's errand girl.

Beatrice's role was the librarian of the Forbidden Library, nothing more and nothing less—on that point, she would never budge.

"There now, I've healed him up, I suppose. Take care of the rest as you please, you know. Do make sure not to let him push himself, I suppose."

"Mhmm, thank you, Beatrice. I'm indebt… I'm… I'm most grateful!"

"That's old-fashioned talk, too, you know."

As Emilia smiled openly, Beatrice pointed out the expression she'd used and turned her back.

Such a straightforward gaze was difficult for her to deal with, but Beatrice lacked the will to tell Emilia that directly.

4

With the boy's healing taken care of, Beatrice retired quickly to the Forbidden Library.

Most likely, the boy would wake up sometime in the morning. Although his body had been restored, it would take time for his stamina and such to recover after being so exhausted. Having said that, Beatrice's healing magic was even capable of producing results in restoring said stamina and the like, so it was unlikely that any significant problems would remain.

“It seems that those girls have returned to their room as well; with that, we should be able to get back to a peaceful night.”

Seating herself on a stepladder in the center of the room, she sighed as she brushed at her knees.

The Forbidden Library was essentially safe from the influence of the outside world, but Beatrice’s perception was wide-ranging, and it was that indeed that allowed her to grasp what was going on inside the mansion. In the end, the serenity that Beatrice truly loved would only come when all the residents of the mansion were sound asleep.

However, there had been a few too many fusses tonight. Somehow, she couldn’t even work up the urge to reread the book she was carrying.

“It was such a nice night, and now look what’s become of it, you know. Bubby is out of mana and resting, and I can’t see him until morning; what a day, I suppose. If it was going to turn out like this, why did Betty… Hmhm.”

Just as the day was reluctantly drawing to a close, Beatrice hummed softly to herself at the tail end of it.

Just as was stated earlier, Beatrice knew what was going on inside the mansion like the back of her hand. Something was nagging at her perception. It was…

“That injured boy’s room. He’s woken up, I suppose.”

Paying special attention to his situation, just in case of sudden changes, had yielded results. Sensing the boy get up off his bed and move around, Beatrice pursed her lips.

That was quick, was her first thought. Of course, her healing had been perfect. She was confident that she had restored the boy completely, without so much as a scar. She was confident, but he had gotten used to the healing magic oddly quickly. For this to be possible, either there was something peculiar about the nature of his body, or he had good compatibility with Beatrice’s magic.

“Ah, ew, ew… what a revolting thing to imagine, you know.”

Repulsed by what she’d thought up by herself, Beatrice felt like she was nauseous in her chest. In the same moment, a plot sprouted in her heart to use this boy to clear up the nausea.

“Now that it’s decided, I’ll just play with him a little bit, I suppose.”

While still seated on the stepladder, Beatrice fully mobilized the power of her own shadow magic, she “remade” the space of one floor of the mansion—a corner of it that included the guest room that the boy was in.

Originating from the guest room he was in, she connected the space of the end of the hallway to the other end, forming an endless corridor. An illusion made it impossible to see where the corridors met, and she chose a perpetual darkness for the outside of the windows, with no sign of light.

With this, she had completed the trap. With no way to tell which way to go, and no way out, the boy would be psychologically cornered.

“On top of that, any door except the correct door… the door to the first room, will have a special gimmick, you know. Your body will forget about gravity, your consciousness and awareness of reality will be exactly opposite, and there will even be upside-down rooms, I suppose.”

It felt like she might have gone a bit overboard with her control and alteration of her territory, but she was satisfied with the result.

Incidentally, this prank used many different shadow magic spells that had been lost to time, and some researchers into magic would faint if they saw it mis-used this way, but Beatrice wasn’t concerned about that.

“Now, do a grand dance in the palm of Betty’s hand, you know!”

This, that, and all of it was solely for the purpose of seeing the boy running about frantically, snot dribbling from his nose. She was simply letting off steam after being unable to meet with her brother, so although he had saved someone’s life, he could at least entertain her for a little…

“…Or perhaps, the possibility that the first door is the goal, as it tends to be.”

The Forbidden Library’s door opened with a click, and a foolish face peered inside.

Snap judgement, an instant choice, an immediate breakthrough—feeling a sense of wasted effort that wasn’t suitable compensation for the amount of work she’d expended, Beatrice put on her sourest face.

“…What a profoundly aggravating man you are, I suppose.”

And so, for the first time, she tasted a sensation she would repeat time and time again in the days to come.

It was the beginning of the end of the quiet days she had spent in the Forbidden Library.

The Great Spirit Puck's Nyan Nyan Sunny Day

1

“Hey, Subaru…can we stop doing something like this?”

“What are you talking about, Miss Rabbit? Quitting right now would be like throwing away my manhood.”

“I don't think you would lose it, and who's Miss Rabbit?”

Such peaceful words were being exchanged at Roswaal Manor at noon. A boy and a beautiful girl were exchanging words in a slightly hushed and mature manner. They were Natsuki Subaru and Emilia, respectively.

They were close to each other, moving without making a sound in the hallways of Roswaal Manor, which was where they were currently staying. They were carefully executing a stealth operation—to be precise, they were following their target.

“We'll be in trouble if our target notices us. Emilia-tan, be as quiet as possible… And you smell really good when you're this close. Are you wearing perfume or something?”

“I'm not wearing any, but…leaving that aside, I don't think there's any point in doing something like this. Even if we act foxy like this, we'll be spotted immediately.”

“Nobody uses the word foxy in this day and age…”

“Su-Ba-Ru.”

They exchanged their usual lines, but Emilia looked angry this time, surprisingly. Subaru thought her angry face was cute, too, and at the same time glanced at the end of the corridor again—

“Ah, damn it! We've lost our target! Emilia-tan, dash! Dash while being sneaky!”

"Huh? Wha? Dash?"

"It means to run while being sneaky! Watch and learn!"

"I can't do something skillful like…woah, Subaru, you are good at the sneaky dash."

Emilia hurriedly chased after Subaru, who was ahead of her demonstrating a peculiar running skill without making a sound. She desperately tried to mimic his running style, but it wasn't so easy to do.

Her effort is heartwarming, but for now, our priority is to pursue our target. He saw a long tail disappearing around the corner in the corner of his eye. It was a familiar-looking long tail that must have belonged to their target, a calm and laidback cat spirit—Puck. They didn't know where Puck went after leaving Emilia's side and flied freely around the mansion. To find that out was their goal—to conduct biological research on the great spirit Puck's behavior, that was the duty they were given.

"Oh, Subaru! Look, I was able to do the sneaky dash! Look, I can be reaaally quiet!"

"You improved really quick?!"

Even if you didn't make a sound while running, you wouldn't be able to tail someone if you didn't talk quietly.

It was a desperate tailing scene by two people who needed to look the definition up in a dictionary.

2

It all began after they'd finished today's breakfast and were taking a post-meal break.

Usually, the weird events at Roswaal Manor began with Subaru's words, and mostly when everyone in the mansion had gathered for meals. There was an unspoken agreement that everyone at Roswaal Manor would eat together unless there was a grave issue. It was a loose rule, something that a normal family had, but Subaru liked rules like that at Roswaal Manor. He believed that the more people you shared meals with, the better. In fact, many new discoveries were often made during meals, and it was also fun. The atmosphere where everyone chatted freely was a far cry from the formalities of your typical nobleman's house, and it was a time in which you could relax a bit. Also, him having questions often lead to events during such meals, but his question this time was a very simple one.

And that was—

"Well, what does Puck do when he isn't with you, Emilia-tan?" Subaru asked while tilting his head in the dining room after they'd finished eating and washed the dishes.

"Huh?" Emilia, who was having her after meal tea was surprised when she heard Subaru's words. There was no sign of the cat spirit in question on her beautiful hair or on her thin shoulders. And that was something to be expected since Puck floated out of the dining room alone a moment ago after letting Emilia know.

Emilia widened her eyes at that question.

"No, you see," Subaru said with a shrug. "It's a known fact that you and Puck have a contractual relationship, and I know that Puck is usually by your side, but…there are times when he moves around freely like this, right? So do you know what he does during that, Emilia-tan?"

"Puck when I'm not around…?"

Emilia looked as if she had never thought about it when Subaru asked. It seemed like her policy was to not interfere in Puck's affairs, for better or worse, and to not impose her will too much in Puck's activities during his free time.

"Well, I think the key to making a pet live long is to not stress it out, but I also think they need some tough love sometimes."

"Ah, Subaru, you are making fun of Puck, aren't you? Puck would definitely be angry if he heard that, so don't say something like that," Emilia chided as she lifted her eyebrows sharply, which was unusual for her, after her contracted spirit was treated like a pet.

“Listen here,” Emilia said after lifting her finger at Subaru. “Puck is a lot more mature than you think. I’m sure that he’s doing something reaaally important when he isn’t with me. Puck is, of course, always working hard for world peace.”

“What’s up with that really vague kinda understanding? It’s like the opinion of a kid who doesn’t know what their parent does but thinks that they are probably doing something great!”

Subaru had no idea what his father did for a living when he was a child, but he had such a vague trust in him. He still didn’t know much about it even though he’d grown up. But now he thought that it was something that equaled world peace since it was a job that was enough to sustain his wife and son.

“In any case, since you don’t know about it, I need to get serious and start investigating. I don’t have to work until the afternoon today, so I might as well go after him.”

“That’s in bad taste… I think it’s better not to do it.”

“You can’t stop something that’s already set in motion. And Emilia-tan, aren’t you a bit curious deep down? I’m not saying that he’s doing something bad, but if he is really working hard for world peace then it’s more of a reason to see what he’s doing.”

“Well, that’s…”

“Let’s go check it out!”

“…Ok.” Emilia, who easily gave in when pressured, got persuaded by Subaru while in a state of bewilderment.

This was how the two of them rushed out of the dining room and how they started following Puck.

3

—Luckily Puck, who had left the dining room before them, was found immediately, and the tailing began. However, it couldn’t be said that the subsequent pursuit of Puck was very fruitful. It wasn't that they had lost him or that he had found out about them following him, the problem was what he was doing.

“Puck is scratching the wall of the mansion with his claws, but why do you think he's doing that?” Subaru asked.

“He's probably checking the mansion's durability,” Emilia answered. “Puck is patrolling around checking things like that to make sure that everyone stays safe. He's amazing.”

“To me it just seems like he's taking care of his overgrown nails.”

“Oh, Subaru, look! Puck started moving really fast! He might have found something.”

“He rushed into the restroom with such speed, so isn't it that? The thing called ‘Toilet High’ where cats get really energetic before and after using the toilet.”

“That's not… Oh! He came out just as fast. We are going to lose him!”

“He's flying around the mansion quite energetically. Is something happening in here…?” Subaru wondered.

“I get it!” Emilia exclaimed. “Since we had a witchbeast commotion before, he is checking whether there's an opening in the barrier or not. Or he's secretly putting up a new barrier just in case…”

“To me, it just looks like he is searching for a place to sunbathe, or he's patrolling his territory.”

“He went into the kitchen!” Subaru shouted.

"He probably, has something reaaally important…"

"He got a small fish from Rem and came out eating it."

"Snacking! He's going to get fat!"

"Is that what the issue is?

While they were keeping an eye on Puck, he did whatever he wanted to since it was his free time—a bit too free.

I mean, as far as I have observed, his behavior is completely like that of…

"A cat… And it looks like he's a housecat that has completely forgotten its wild instincts."

"I was thinking about it, but I don't think Puck's nails grow, so he doesn't need to file them. He doesn't need to use the restroom either. And he just needs my hair and shoulders to be his territory. See, Puck isn't weird."

"You found something to cling to, and now you're trying like mad to refute everything I said."

Usually, Emilia often lost against Subaru's arguments, however, she couldn't afford to lose when it was about her only family. She kept pushing back, and she was certainly trying to make a point with her words.

I didn't doubt it till now since Puck was really acting like a cat, but Puck is a spirit, and I don't think he needs to do all the things that cats have to do. It's like Emilia said, there might be a reason behind him filing his nails and being in a toilet high.

"But, snacking in the kitchen doesn't really mean anything, right?"

"Ma…Maybe he is saving up his energy for an important task later?"

It seems like Emilia also doesn't think that it was very convincing since her sentence ended with a question. And the idea of him having an important task later also seems fishy. And if Puck curls up and starts sleeping, then even Emilia would have to admit defeat. But—

"—Alright, I guess it's almost time," muttered Puck, who had become full after swallowing the small fish he'd received.

His voice was deep, and his side profile looked tense—the atmosphere had changed.

"Could it be that he really has something to do…? Is it something like fighting other cats to be the boss cat?"

"There's no way Puck would fight stray cats. Puck's territory is inside my body. It's in here."

"You made an unintentional erotic comment, but Puck is on the move now. Let's go after him."

As Puck floated up with a serious look and started moving in a straight line, they began pursuing him. The way he flew, glancing around, clearly showed a sense of tension and caution that he didn't have before. Seeing things like that made Subaru and Emilia tense.

Eventually, Puck arrived in front of a room with his hair standing on end due to his cautious state. Subaru and Emilia looked at each other after realizing whose room it was.

"…That's…my room?"

"Maybe Puck has some business with you, Subaru…"

Subaru and Emilia looked at each other and tilted their heads. From everything they'd observed so far, they had a pretty good idea as to how Puck behaved. But they weren't sure how it connected with him visiting Subaru's room.

"…" Then Puck put his tail on the doorknob without saying a word and slowly opened the door. It was surprising to know that he used his tail to open doors, but it was even more surprising that he had snuck in without saying anything.

Naturally, Subaru's mind recalled the recent witchbeast commotion.

—He recalled the difficult relationship between him and the twins that had flared up during that. At the time, the two of them suspected my origins and were watching me to see if I was a dangerous person, so maybe Puck is cautious like that.

"Subaru…" Emilia softly called Subaru, who had looked down anxiously with listless eyes.

He came back to his senses after hearing her voice and shook his head, forcing a smile. "I'm fine," he said. "Let's go clear things up."

I'm prepared to work hard and clear up the misunderstanding if Puck is suspecting me. I was able to do it with Rem and Ram, so I can do it with Puck too—

"—Hm?"

He was just about to put his hand on the doorknob and step into the room since he was thinking of talking with Puck. He heard a rather loud rustling noise from inside the room.

Hm? It's sounds somewhat familiar, but I wonder what it could be? Subaru tilted his head in wonder. And then it hit him.

And then—

"Hey, you! You good for nothing cat."

"Meow?!"

Puck, who was frolicking on the bed, got startled when Subaru entered the room. Puck looked back with his round eyes widened, and only half of him was visible for some reason—it was because he was playing around in the plastic bag from the convenience store and making rustling sounds.

"I was wondering what was up with that serious look, and then this turns out to be the punchline! You are a cat! Just a cat!"

“Hey, don’t startle me,” Puck replied. “It’s my private time now.”

“If we are going to talk about private things, then this is my private room! What are you doing playing with someone else’s plastic bag? You are totally a cat!” Subaru shouted at the unapologetic Puck, criticizing his suggestive attitude.

Then Subaru looked back at Emilia and pointed his finger at Puck. “Hey, look, Emilia-tan! This is his true form! He’s a cat!”

“No, maybe he’s just trying to do something great using your white bag… I’m sorry, I can’t do this.”

“Emilia-tan gave up on supporting him!”

At the end, it developed into a situation where Emilia gave up on supporting Puck and the ordeal ended noisily.

After everything was said and done, they came to the conclusion that ‘Puck during his free time is free!’

—After that, Emilia started to be seen making Puck report what he had been doing during his free time at the end of the day. Seeing that, Subaru thought that it definitely looked like a pet being disciplined.

Sword Demon Love Song

Librarian Beatrice's Log:

1

The Forbidden Library was filled at all times with solemn serenity.

Beatrice, who saw herself as the librarian of the Forbidden Library, felt that's how it was, and that was how a library was meant to be. A treasure trove of tales and knowledge only attained it's proper state when filled with blessed silence.

Hence, the Forbidden Library was one of the most prominent sanctuaries for 'Books' in the world—and it now faced an unprecedented crisis.

"Mornin'. Is Beako here?"

"…No, she isn't, you know."

"Ah, she's not, I see… Hey, don't pull that old trick on me. She's right here."

"At the very least, I don't recall having opened the door for you, I suppose."

Roughly closing the book she had been reading, Beatrice jumped down from the top of the stepladder and glared at her visitor. The one who had walked into the library, looking as though he owned the place, was a black-haired black-eyed boy with a cheerful smirk on his face.

Natsuki Subaru—an impertinent fellow who had recently been entering and leaving Beatrice's Forbidden Library as he pleased.

Carried into the mansion only a few weeks earlier, the boy had, since then, worked as a servant, but he'd acted exceptionally familiar with Beatrice. Perhaps his peculiar nature, that allowed him to more or less come and go as he pleased to the Forbidden

Library (where outsiders shouldn’t be able to arrive easily), was a factor in the development of his attitude.

“What on earth have you come here for, you know? Despite what you may think, Betty is busy, I suppose.”

“When you say busy, it’s just reading, right? Children should be outdoors! If you’re going to play, go play outside.”

“Don’t be ridiculous, you know. As if Betty would frolic like a child, I suppose.”

“Don’t go pouting just because you don’t know anyone. Should I go talk to Petra and the others for you?”

“Why do I even bother speaking with you, you know?! No one is speaking of such simplistic things, I suppose!”

When it came to dealing with Beatrice, Subaru’s attitude was always like this. While having her tranquility disturbed by this exchange, Beatrice played with the curls in her hair irritably.

“Regardless! Get to the point, state your business and get out! Come now, quickly!”

“Um, that was my business. I just came to say that since the weather is nice, maybe you’d like to go play outside.”

“…! Mind your own business, I suppose!”

“Geroppa?!”

Towards the one who rubbed her the wrong way more than she would have thought possible, she unleashed a wave of magical force from the palm of her extended hand. Struck by an invisible shockwave, Subaru shrieked as he was thrown out of the room—the door closed, and space itself wavered.

‘Door Crossing’ activated, and the library connected to another door in the mansion. With this, the room’s quiet would return.

Sighing at what had occurred, Beatrice turned to resume reading the book she was holding on to…

“…I’ve entirely forgotten how far I’d read, you know.”

With her desire to read entirely crushed, Beatrice’s ‘tsk’ conveyed annoyance from the bottom of her heart.

She couldn’t help but think that lately, this, that, and everything just wasn’t working out properly.

2

In truth, ever since Subaru had come to stay at the mansion, the environment that Beatrice lived in had been in a state of ongoing change.

It had begun with Subaru, and his over-friendly way of interacting with her, but there had been changes in the others that lived in the mansion as well. For instance, the maid sisters that she had known for a relatively long time were a good example of this.

“Beatrice-sama, pardon me. May I have a moment of your time?”

“…You called me, so I came, but what sort of cargo is that, I suppose?”

Hearing a voice calling, she had connected the door to the mansion’s front entryway. Upon doing so, she found there the peach-haired maid, Ram. Carrying many baskets filled with vegetables, Ram boldly straddled the threshold of the library and bowed her head.

“Oh, it’s just that all these baskets are so much trouble, so Ram was wondering if you would kindly convey her to the kitchen via the library.”

“Since when has Betty become your handywoman, you know?!”

“Well then, that means that you won’t allow it?”

“Mggh… J, just this once, I suppose…!”

After using ‘Door Crossing’ to connect the Forbidden Library to the kitchen, it did indeed reduce the trouble with the packages a little. When Ram passed through the door and gave a quick curtsey in thanks, Beatrice sniffed her nose at her to display her displeasure.

“Ah, Beatrice-sama, please wait a moment.”

“…And now it’s the younger of the sisters. If it’s some foolish errand, I won’t allow it, you know.”

Having been in the kitchen, Rem noticed Beatrice and quickly walked over to her. She shook her head to Beatrice with a ‘I wouldn’t dream of it’, and then, lowering her voice, asked,

“Rem would like to add pepples to this evening’s supper; how many of them can she add before you wouldn’t want to eat it?”

“…If it’s no more than three, I’ll put up with it, I suppose.”

“Understood. With that, we’ll add four, so please try your best.”

“You…!”

“It isn’t good to be picky, no matter the situation. You still have room to grow, Beatrice-sama.”

“What do you mean about the future… no, never mind, you know. I’m starting to get a headache, I suppose.”

In response to Rem speaking to her in a fashion that could only be called motherly, Beatrice bent her lips into a truly impressive frown.

Her attitude was clearly different from the way that she had interacted with Beatrice until only recently. Faltering before that change in the sense of distance between them, Beatrice dejectedly withdrew into the Forbidden Library.

But, as she left, just before she closed the door…

“What did Beatrice-sama say?”

“It seems she’ll do her best with up to four pepples. Let’s put five in!”

Hearing that sort of unsettling conversation, Beatrice at last looked up to the ceiling as though lamenting.

“All of this is from that man’s bad influence…”

3

…As that sort of day piled one on top of the other, the very limits of Beatrice’s tolerance were plumbed.

And the limits of that patience were suddenly, abruptly torn through.

“…Beako! Beako! You gotta get me to my room!”

While narrowing her eyes at the disrespectful tone of voice, Beatrice glared at the room’s entrance. Unable to conceal her irritation at the commotion, she completely forgot her anger at the scene that came next.

“Y…you! What are you doing looking like that, I suppose?!”

As Beatrice spoke in a voice that was all but a shriek, before her eyes was Subaru, dripping wet. Soaked in water from head to toe, he was half-naked, clad only in his underwear.

“Puck got me good! I’m soaked thanks to that jerk! I wanna get changed, so please connect the library to my room. I can’t go around the mansion getting everything wet.”

“It won’t do to get the library wet, either! Quit joking around, I suppose!”

Obviously, simply hanging around the entrance wouldn’t get the books wet. However, this was holy ground where tranquility was prized. Absolutely not a place where a half-naked, half-drowned rat would be admitted.

“You really do the most selfish things… this isn’t funny, you know!”

“I’m sorry, this is an emergency measure. I’ll never use it this way again.”

“You said that last time, too, when you used it as a shortcut to the bathroom! If you think I’ll allow it because you call it an emergency measure, you’re entirely wrong, you know!”

“Yeah, but that was an emergency measure, too, c’mon! I’m sorry about this time, too!”

With her head boiling over at Subaru’s complete lack of any sign of regret, Beatrice snapped her fingers. Just as he’d asked, “Door Crossing” connected the entrance and his private room. However, she had no intention of allowing him to leave peacefully.

“Just like always, get out… I suppose!”

“Bonjobi!”

Struck head-on by the shockwave, Subaru was blown away, tumbling head-over-heels into his room.

Without even watching him go, Beatrice used “Door Crossing” to seal off the Forbidden Library. Hurriedly grabbing a cleaning cloth, she cleaned up the floor that Subaru had gotten wet. And when the cleaning was done…

“That man… he absolutely will not get away with this, you know. He must learn what Betty’s anger means, I suppose.”

With anger smoldering in her chest, and a cloth clutched in her hand, Beatrice’s voice trembled.

4

Closing the door that connected to the Forbidden Library, Beatrice began walking ponderously on the mansion’s carpets.

For Beatrice to go outside of the Forbidden Library, without a specific task in mind, was rare. It was her belief that, as long as she had the role of constantly caring for the library as it’s librarian, she should remain there as much as possible.

Bending that belief, she was now taking action outside the Forbidden Library. The truth behind that was…

“If Betty isn’t inside the library, he shouldn’t be able to come and go so easily, you know.”

She resented it, but the reason that Subaru was able to reach the Forbidden Library was that he had good compatibility with her wavelength.

Put simply, Subaru was finding the Forbidden Library by using Beatrice as a landmark. It was likely that he wasn’t aware of it, but it was irritating nonetheless. Regardless, to prevent his invasion of the library, she was separating herself from it. In a certain sense, she was getting her priorities confused, but Beatrice hadn’t noticed that.

“What’s more, this time I just can’t let it go, I suppose. I’m going to give him a piece of my mind, you know.”

Treating her as a handywoman was one thing, but the vandalism of the Forbidden Library had finally crossed a line inside of Beatrice. With a soaked cleaning cloth in one hand, Beatrice was thinking of providing Subaru with some disciplinary action.

As she was getting goosebumps over her idea, imagining that it would go on to become a revenge drama famed throughout the world, just at that moment Subaru came into view on the far end of the hallway.

“I’ve found you, I suppose. I’ll get right on with…hmm?”

At the instant she’d thought of running over and landing a flying kick, her feet stopped moving as she became aware of a presence at Subaru’s side.

Before Subaru’s eyes, floating in front of his face, was Beatrice’s dear older brother, Puck.

Without thinking, Beatrice held her breath at the sight of the two of them, apparently deep in conversation about something. The air about them suggested she mustn’t disturb them, and yet the one she needed vengeance on was right in front of her; Beatrice was caught between a rock and hard place. On top of that…

“…! They’re coming this way, you know!”

Having finished their conversation, Beatrice saw them heading towards this part of the hallway. Fearing that they’d find out she’d been eavesdropping, she frantically tumbled into a nearby guest room. But, through some twist of fate, she heard them stop in front of the room. To further avoid them, Beatrice hid in the closet.

Not a moment too soon, just as someone entered the room, Beatrice finished hiding. Quietly peeking outside as she heard the door close, she saw Puck floating in the center of the room.

She wouldn’t mind being found if it was only Puck, she thought, but she had no way to explain why she was hiding. Thinking that she had no choice but to stay hidden and avoid being found, Beatrice held her breath…

“…Meow! Meoweow, me~w”

“…?!”

In the room that Beatrice was peeking into, Puck abruptly began rolling on the floor and crying out sweetly. On top of that, as he curled up his tail and looked around with big, round eyes, his charm was off the charts, and Beatrice, not grasping what Puck was doing, could only watch the kitten’s antics in fascination.

…Bubby, what are you doing?! Ah, but how adorable you are, I suppose!

5

“Beako~, you the~re?”

“…I’m not, you know.”

“Are you planning to make a habit of that? You’re right here, aintcha? …Seriously.”

On the afternoon of the same day, Subaru came to visit Beatrice after she'd returned to the Forbidden Library. Glancing at him, she saw he was carrying cleaning tools and smiling weakly.

“What brings you…Please tell me you’re not going to say you want to do some cleaning, and need me to connect to another room, I suppose.”

“Nah, that ain’t the plan. C’mon, this morning I dripped water in the entrance and caused trouble, right? So, I thought maybe I could do some cleaning in the Forbidden Library to show I was sorry…”

“An admirable thought, you know. However, there’s no need, I suppose.”

As Subaru showed a rarely-seen subdued attitude, Beatrice shook her head while smiling faintly. Seeing her reaction, Subaru widened his eyes as though surprised.

“…Your expression is strange, you know.”

“Uh, I’d say you’re being stranger here. Usually you’d be angrier… though I’m glad you’re not angry. You look kinda happy, did something nice happen?”

“Not really… Oh, yes, yes. There was something I wanted to say to you, I suppose.”

“Oh, I know, right? That’s more like my Beako. Alright, bring it on! I can take it!”

As if he were strengthening his resolve, Subaru crouched down where he was, and positioned himself as though preparing to be struck by something. Indeed, this was a posture that might allow him to endure a shockwave.

It’s just that the words Beatrice tossed towards him were, just this once, something else entirely…

“Now and then, even you can do a half-decent job of something, you know. My compliments, I suppose.”

“…eh?”

"You showed me something nice, you know."

The reason wasn't really clear to her, but it seemed that Puck looking cute like that had been an idea hatched by Subaru.

Well then, she felt like she ought to express her unabashed thanks for being able to see it. In regards to having gotten the Forbidden Library wet, she wouldn't mind allowing this accomplishment to offset it.

Subaru's mouth opened in shock at Beatrice's carefree sentiment.

"B, Beako… have you got a fever or something?! This is terrible! It must be because you're stuck in a place like this with no sunlight…! I, I'll call a doctor! You'll be well soon…"

"You should accept someone's gratitude a little more graciously, I suppose!"

"Maikou~~!"

After she reappraised him in only a moment, Beatrice's shockwave washed over Subaru and he was flung from the Forbidden Library.

The noisy boy disappeared, and the serenity it deserved once more descended on the Forbidden Library. Accepting that with a blissful feeling, Beatrice thought to herself.

…For the sake of this feeling of gratitude for the peace and quiet, perhaps she might be willing to allow a bit of noise now and then.

"No, that would be spoiling him too much, you know…"

Raising a hand to her forehead as though exhausted, Beatrice returned to the top of her stepladder and immersed herself in a book.

The faint hint of a smile etched onto her face was something that not even she herself would recall having seen before.

The Great Spirit Puck’s Nyan Nyan Nyan Sunny Day

1

“—Lately, I feel like Lia’s eyes look cold when she looks at me,” Puck said, looking serious with his arms crossed as he floated in front of Subaru’s face.

It was in the morning, right after everyone was done with breakfast. Rem was in charge of cleaning up the dining table, and Subaru was on his way to clean the bathhouse in the basement of the mansion as directed by Ram. As usual, he showed his affection towards Emilia and exchanged snarky remarks with Beatrice, but then he was stopped when he came out of the dining room.

“In the past, Lia believed me unconditionally and was fooled by me, but nowadays I feel like she has become less naïve. Subaru, what do you think?”

“First off, I’m starting to get worried about leaving Emilia-tan in your care.”

The fact that he doesn’t have any malicious intent makes it worse.

Subaru lost interest in taking it seriously and headed for the bathhouse, but Puck didn’t seem to care and followed him, flying around the back of his head.

“Hey, hey, take it seriously. I am serious about it, this is a serious matter.”

“Alright then, I’ll answer you with some seriousness. Since you demonstrated being a really good for nothing cat, she might be pumped up as the owner and wants to discipline you, I guess?”

“Stop that! I’m not in a mood to hear jokes like that. You are quite rude.”

Puck puffed his cheeks as if he was offended and started slapping Subaru’s face with his tail. But Subaru didn’t mean to joke around, and for the most part, it was his honest opinion. It was only the other day that Subaru and Emilia found out what Puck did when he was on his own. His behavior was that of a house cat for the most part, which shocked Emilia, who had believed that Puck was contributing to world peace.

“Until then, Emilia-tan had innocently believed that her parent was doing an admirable job…”

“It’s not good to say things like that. There’s no such thing as a noble or lowly job. Every job is admirable. If you word it like that, then…”

“There’s no such thing as a noble or a lowly job, but in your case, that isn’t a job! It’s just your natural instincts!” Subaru shouted at Puck, who was being shameless, then took his jacket off in the changing room, rolled up his pants, and entered the bathroom with a mop in hand.

He then proceeded to clean it with a practiced hand.

“But even so… I’m worried about Lia. So many things have changed for her, so maybe she’s feeling tired because of that.”

“I think your behavior recently has been her greatest source of fatigue.”

“My my… It’s quite troubling that her greatest source of fatigue is unaware.”

The sources of her headache were blaming each other, but things couldn’t be judged since Emilia wasn’t there.

Puck then clapped his hands as if he’d struck upon a great idea. “Maybe, she is in her rebellious age…? A lot of things would make sense if I think that way…!”

“Does it make sense though?”

“I feel like the skin-to-skin contact between Lia and I has been lacking lately. Lia is busy nowadays, and I’ve been letting her off the hook since I felt like she should be independent from her parent… This isn't good!"

"It's not she who needs to let go of her attachment to her parent, but you who needs to let go of your attachment to your daughter, isn't it? Before you could even do that, you were losing your sanity and about to turn into a cat. Not a stray, either, but a house cat," Subaru called out after he finished mopping, but Puck didn't have any intention of listening to his opinion.

Subaru shook his head at the pondering spirit and pointed at the water inside the bathtub. "Hey, Puck. Use that water to wash the floor in exchange for the consultation fee. It'll be much faster than using the hand tub. You can do that much, right?"

"Hmmmm?"

Even though he was inattentive, Puck extended his hand towards the bathtub at Subaru's request and concentrated his mana. And then—as expected of his large mana reserves—the water in the bathtub rose and started floating around the tub.

"Woah! Amazing! That's sooo cool, man!"

It wasn't quite jelly-like, but the surface of the water rippled as it floated around. And as long as it slowly descended to the floor, Subaru's request would be fulfilled. But…

"—Yeah, I'm sure of it. The thing Lia and I are lacking is parent-child communication!"

"Waiiiii—?!"

As soon as Puck had come to some sort of conclusion to his thoughts, he stopped controlling the solidified water.

Immediately, the de-solidified water came crashing down, turning into an overwhelming wave. The rough waves smashed into Subaru at the waist, flipping him upside down and taking him into its murky flow.

"Bah! Hey! It isn't on the same level as boxers getting wet ya know?!" Subaru shouted while shaking his head after popping his head out from the tub.

However, as the culprit had already disappeared from the bathtub, his cries echoed in vain.

And while Subaru was left soaking wet alone—

“You are making a lot of noise, Barusu. Don’t play around just because no one is looking…”

“Ah.”

Ram had opened the door to the changing room and peeked inside. She looked at Subaru, who was submerged in the bathtub and all wet, squinted at him, and let out a deep sigh. “Do you want to drink the used water so badly that you’d resort to such cheap tricks? Disgusting.”

“I’m not that advanced!!”

In the first place, it’s the warm water that both Roswaal and I have soaked in, and it gets changed every time, anyway.

—I’ve only thought about it once or twice.

2

After the incident in the bathroom, Subaru changed his clothes even after taking Ram’s mild eyes of disdain. Since he’d gotten his servant attire dirty, he was wearing his tracksuit now.

He touched his partially dry hair and walked down the corridor thinking of what to do with Puck. “That piece of shit ran away after doing all that to me. I won’t let him get away with it…” He reached the stairs with that in his heart.

“Oh?”

Something suddenly fell on the stair landing from the floor above. A small ball had hit the wall and rolled towards Subaru’s feet. It was palm-sized and probably something like a tennis ball. He picked it up and found that it felt and weighed like a tennis ball, too.

"Why is there a…tennis ball here?"

"Oh, Subaru."

Emilia had showed herself from the floor above while he was tilting his head with the tennis ball in his hand.

She looked at the ball in Subaru's hand and scrunched up her pretty eyebrows in an apologetic way. "I'm sorry. I didn't mean to startle you."

"I wasn't startled, but is this yours, Emilia-tan?"

"No, it's more like it's Puck's but…no, never mind, it's fine. Can you return that to Puck? Since I'm busy now." After saying that quickly, she tapped on Subaru's shoulder and went further downstairs.

"That's fine by me but…oh well."

Subaru felt like something unusual was going on since she wasn't usually that bossy, but someone else came towards him there.

"Subaruuu."

"What's up with that pathetic face and voice? Emilia-tan said that she's busy."

Puck dizzyingly and weakly swayed down to Subaru. Subaru caught his body with his left hand and Puck started at the ball in his hand with a pathetic face.

"Aah, so you had it… Unfortunately, the communication strategy has failed. I took your advice, but it didn't work."

"Since when did this become my idea? But what did you do? I would hope not, but was it something like you getting the ball that Emilia-tan throws?"

If that's the case, then it is undoubtedly communication between a pet and its owner. And that's not the kind of relationship owners have with a cat, but with a dog.

Puck stretched his ears angrily at that. “It’s not thattt. It’s a game of catch of course, when it comes to parent-child interaction. I wanted to get closer to her by asking questions like ‘What does Lia want to be in the future?’”

“You wouldn’t get it, but what, are you like from the Showa period?! You already know what Emilia-tan wants to become! She wants to be the ruler of this country!”

“No, no, what Lia really wants to become is…oh wait, it isn’t the right time to say it.”

“That’s something deep! No, I don’t need to know something like that!”

Subaru started to doubt if Puck really wanted to repair their relationship as they continued to talk like that. But it seemed like Puck was taking a real toll from his atrophied ears and tail.

“Well, if the relationship between you and Emilia stays cracked then you guys might not be able to coordinate well in a critical moment. That would be troublesome for you.”

“Yeah…so I have thought of my next plan.”

“Tell me.”

“After giving it some thought, it’s possible that Lia has gotten used to my charm. So, I thought of going back to the basics and doing it more unscrupulously.”

“Say what?”

“Weren’t you the one who asked for it?”

“I said that because I was expecting you to say something decent!”

Having come to an odd conclusion, Puck flew off softly from Subaru’s hand. Subaru followed Puck without a second thought as he crossed through the stair landing and went towards the corridor lined with guest rooms. Puck picked one of the guest rooms and energetically turned back at Subaru in front of the door.

“I’m going to train here from now on to overcome my past self. It’s futile to try to stop me.”

“I won’t stop you, and I won’t peek, either. All of our talk up until now was meaningless.”

“—I’ll go, in order to regain our family bond and—to be a family once again.”

“The only thing super cool about it is your dialogue.”

Puck went into the guest room right in front of him with a melancholic air. After staring at the door, Subaru didn’t peek, but put his ear next to the door to listen to what was happening inside.

“—Meow! Meow! Meaaa.”

“…” Hearing the sounds of training, Subaru sighed deeply, then moved away from the door to complete his remaining chores. He dragged his unusually tired body around even though it was only midmorning.

3

“Subaru, isn’t it almost time for a break? Would you like some tea?” Emilia asked after entering the garden to reward Subaru for his hard work as he was putting away the tools after finishing the last chore of the morning, which was tending to the garden.

“Oh, it makes me really happy that it’s an invitation from you, Emilia-tan. Have my daily efforts finally paid off?”

“—? I don’t really get it, but if you are working hard, then I hope they paid off.”

“That answer of yours tells me I’m not putting in enough effort. Thank you,” Subaru said, giving Emilia, who didn’t get it, a wry smile, then washed his hands and joined her.

“Let’s do it in my room,” Emilia said, inviting Subaru.

While they were walking towards her room, Emilia suddenly started talking in a hushed voice. “Hey. Is Puck bothering you?”

“He is bothering me a lot, but it isn’t something you need to worry about. It’s a man’s destiny to get into trouble with his father-in-law… That being sad, he was feeling down.”

“I thought so. Maybe it’s because I’m being harsh with Puck.”

“Oh, so Puck wasn’t imagining it.”

Seeing that Emilia looked serious, Subaru scratched his head.

It seems like Puck wasn’t wrong about Emilia acting like that on purpose.

“Can I ask you why?”

“It’s…well, maybe I am sulking a bit. I thought Puck would be more mature, but I really lost my energy due to that incident the other day.”

“Oh, just like I thought…”

The cause and the things that followed being the same as Subaru had speculated, he put his hand on his forehead, but then immediately laughed at the worried-looking Emilia.

“It isn’t a big deal,” he said. “I can understand your feelings, Emilia-tan, but he needs to learn a lesson sometimes. He wouldn’t bat an eye if anyone else did that to him, so knocking him down a peg like that will do him some good, too.”

“Is, that…so. Yeah, you are right. Puck needs to reflect on things a bit.”

“That’s the spirit! And I really think that there’s something wrong with what he did…”

Subaru had no other option but to be considerate to Emilia.

And Puck brought this situation upon himself for the most part, so he needs to reflect upon it and feel down.

It seemed like Subaru's words had eased Emilia's mind since she didn't look anxious anymore. And then they reached her room.

Let's go in and have some tea—

"Well then, Subaru. I have prepared tea for…"

"—Meowwww."

Emilia's feet stopped the moment she stepped into the room. Her gaze was directed to the front, at the center of the room, from where she heard a sweet, flirtatious cry. Subaru frowned at that and looked inside the room over Emilia's shoulder. And…

"Meo, meo, meow. Meeoowww…"

There was a cat dancing in a cute, calculated manner, twisting his long tail, his round eyes glistening. The sight of his fluffy fur, quivering ears, and the sad purr was a sweet trap that stimulated the primitive human desire to protect something. —It was the ultimate calculated charm, perfected by a house cat.

"Puck…"

"Meow, meow, mew, mew…"

Emilia's voice trembled after seeing Puck like that. Recalling her conclusion from before, it was clear how she would react to the sight of Puck, who had lost his wild instincts. But—

"Oh no, Puck, you are so cute…! What happened to you? Cute…!" Completely losing against Puck's calculated charms, Emilia picked him up, blushing.

She then proceeded to rub her cheeks against his. It seemed like her conclusion and resolute decision had completely faded away.

"Meow…make up," Puck requested in a sweet voice.

"Make up? Yes, sure, sure," Emilia said, easily giving in. "Puck, you are so cute. I am sorry for being stubborn."

Puck thrust out his palm energetically at Subaru, who was looking at them with a blank face.

He’s acting like ‘It all went well thanks to you’, but that’s a false accusation. Anyway, leaving all of that aside… “The reason why a house cat gets too cocky is because there’s a problem with the owner’s way of disciplining it…” Subaru muttered in a resigned voice as he witnessed Puck and Emilia playing with each other.

They probably won’t stop playing until the tea gets cold, he thought to himself.

—And in fact, their adorable merrymaking didn’t end until lunch was called.

Chapters 63-74

Chapter 63:
Flash of Sloth

1

“Among the Witch Cult, the most famous would probably be the two representing: ‘Sloth’ and ‘Greed’.”

Julius told Subaru this as they rode side-by-side on their ground dragons. Subaru was clinging to Patrasche for dear life, while Julius, accustomed to riding, looked effortlessly dashing. Subaru wished Julius wouldn’t ride beside him since he felt so pathetic in comparison, but Julius, whether aware of Subaru’s struggles or not, continued,

“The Sin Archbishops’ names are known, but the two whose names actually come up in their activity records are those two. Sloth is more frequent, but Greed causes more damage.”

“Sounds like bad news… how widely known are they?”

“Their details aren’t that widely known.”

As Subaru reluctantly responded, Julius stroked his swaying bangs and glanced at him. He looked down at Subaru, who was stiffly enduring the shaking, and asked,

“May I continue the story?”

“No need to be so considerate. Back where I’m from, we ride ground dragons like this all the time. Hey, Patra… you! Stop shaking! You lizard!”

“Perhaps your trust in your ground dragon is insufficient. A ground dragon is your legs, but not your possession. You must entrust them with your trust and surrender to the wind to truly synchronize…”

“Enough with the lectures. Just tell me the rest of the story you were talking about.”

Subaru stuck his tongue out at the ever-condescending Julius, and urged him to continue the story, all while trying to synchronize with Patrasche. Julius sighed deeply at Subaru's uncooperative attitude, then shook a raised finger from side to side,

"The Sin Archbishop 'Sloth' has a very high participation rate in the Witch Cult's activities. 'Sloth's' name is involved in roughly over half of the damage the Witch Cult causes in various places."

"So he's a busybody, then?"

"It's presumed he has an extraordinary obsession with being the first to charge into battle. For someone named 'Sloth', he's quite a diligent worker, isn't he? —If only his vigor weren't directed towards heretical deeds."

Subaru recalled Petelgeuse, who relentlessly forced himself to be diligent, and others to strive for the same. Although he bore the name 'Sloth', he himself seemed to despise true 'sloth'. Was that rebellious spirit the reason for 'Sloth's' abnormally high activity frequency within the Witch Cult?

"But if he shows up that often, how come his details aren't known? Couldn't the Knights have cornered him or something?"

"Generally, it's impossible to even sense a sign of the Witch Cult's activities. It's only after the damage has occurred that we realize it was the Witch Cult's doing; they're that kind of group. Simply surviving an encounter isn't easy."

"However, that will not be the case this time."

Julius responded to Subaru's question with a hint of vexation. But the one who powerfully denied the gentle man's answer was another rider, positioned opposite Julius and flanking Subaru—Wilhelm. The old man, with quiet fighting spirit in his eyes, slid the sheath of the treasured sword at his hip,

"If we can suppress them from the outset, it will truly become a battle of pure strength. With myself, the rest of the unit, Sir Ricardo, and Sir Julius joining, I do not believe we are inferior."

"Yes, you're right. I think so too."

Subaru calmly analyzed the difference in their fighting power and affirmed Wilhelm's statement. If they compared pure combat strength, the Witch Cult led by Petelgeuse shouldn't be able to stand against their numerically superior forces. Additionally, Petelgeuse's own combat strength wasn't particularly high. If one could just get close enough, even an amateur like Subaru wouldn't have trouble dodging his attacks. If Wilhelm were to close the distance, he could probably take off Petelgeuse's head in an instant.

—The biggest problem in dealing with him is still his 'Unseen Hand'. The crucial point is whether they can slip through those endlessly extending, black, hazy hands and get close to him. It's no exaggeration to say that this will determine victory or defeat. And only Subaru can counter that 'Unseen Hand'.

"This is the plan, taking that into account. I'm counting on you, Wilhelm-san."

"Understood."

Wilhelm solemnly lowered his chin and replied briefly, radiating nothing but reliability. Next to Subaru, who felt an urge to completely entrust himself to him, Julius nodded several times, saying, "That's right,"

"I, too, have no intention of losing if we can bring this to a direct sword fight. Until now, I've regretted missing those opportunities… but this time, that won't happen."

Quiet anger simmered in Julius's eyes. As a member of the Royal Guard, he too must have harbored strong feelings towards the Witch Cult, who had consistently evaded capture. Subaru completely agreed with him on that point.

"Actually, we got sidetracked talking about Sloth, but what about the other famous one, 'Greed'?"

"Unlike Sloth, Greed doesn't have many reported cases. However, the damage from the incidents where his name was involved was too immense.”

“Immense damage…?”

At Subaru’s uncomprehending words, Julius, bathed in the wind that made his profile serious, closed his eyes in thought,

“The Vollachia Empire, located south of the kingdom. They attacked and took down a city called Garkla, which was known as a fortress city for its impregnability. —By himself.”

“Took it down?! A city? By himself?!”

“Soldiers must always be strong—that spirit permeates their land, and even a single soldier in that country is a demon in battle. A Sin Archbishop calling himself ‘Greed’ single-handedly attacked and brought down the fortress city defended by such soldiers. He even defeated Vollachia’s hero, ‘Eight-Armed Kurgan’.”

Wilhelm continued, adding to Subaru’s gaping astonishment. He spoke the name of the hero said to have been defeated by Greed, and then, knitting his whitened brows, a nostalgic emotion flickered in his eyes. When Subaru fell silent upon noticing that look, the old swordsman subtly shook his head, glancing at Subaru’s reaction,

“I crossed swords with Kurgan several times. —He was a fine wielder. I cut off six of his eight arms, and in return, I was impaled through the stomach. We were both on the verge of death, so it ended in a draw, a mutual suffering.”

“He just casually dropped a brutal old story!”

The episodes from the Sword Demon’s active days were honestly quite like a light novel, and unsettling. While Subaru felt like delving deeper into that, he didn’t have the insensitivity to do so with Wilhelm recounting the fact that his formidable rival had been killed. Still, the story of ‘Greed’ was purely disheartening for Subaru.

“Sloth and Greed. As well as four more… no, three more, excluding Gluttony. It’s going to be tough going.”

"—You're already looking ahead, aren't you?"

"Reluctantly, but I have a strong feeling it's highly probable."

Facing an impending confrontation with the Witch Cult, Subaru looked into the distance, eyes set on the future. The decisive battle with Petelgeuse, 'Sloth', was an unavoidable situation, including his meddling. A decisive confrontation with Petelgeuse meant a definitive conflict with the Witch Cult.

"Inevitably, there will be a moment when we clash with the next Sin Archbishop or whatever… It's an annoying, spiteful development, but if you defeat one, another one comes with their buddies, that's a standard pattern in delinquent manga."

The problem in reality is that things don't just end after a clash and a resolution. If it won't end until one side is annihilated, then as long as Subaru continues to strive forward by Emilia's side, opportunities to confront Sin Archbishops will surely arise.

"My stomach already hurts just from hearing about Greed. Help me."

"It's hard to find the words when you're so dejected about something that hasn't even happened yet. —Subaru, you should focus on the present."

"I know, I know. I'm just a little nervous with Sloth right in front of us."

Subaru lowered his chin at Julius's admonishing words and braced himself. Just before that, he heard Julius softly murmur "Sloth…?" but Subaru dismissed it as nothing important.

The night began to turn white, and faint sunlight began to rise from beyond the dark sky. They had already set foot in the Mathers territory, and the anti-Witch Cult alliance, a merger of the subjugation force and the beastmen mercenary group, was riding their ground beasts with high spirits.

Their path ahead did not lead to Roswaal, the lord's, mansion. Subaru had considered heading straight to Roswaal's mansion and having everyone guard Emilia and the villagers who remained there as one possible strategy. He could even calculate that it would likely be a lower-risk option in terms of protecting them. But,

“I’m the only one who knows they’re definitely coming, and if we go in to guard, the timing will shift. If that happens, I won’t know the future anymore.”

If an armed group entered the mansion, even Petelgeuse might reconsider his plan. That fanatic might still force his way through it, but even that would already deviate from the future Subaru knew. Having defeated the White Whale, the morale of this alliance was currently very high. However, it was difficult to say how long that morale could be maintained against an enemy whose arrival was unknown. Fearing an unknown enemy would weaken morale, and it would also impose a considerable burden on Emilia and the villagers who were constantly being protected. It would no longer be a certainty.

“So, there’s only one way to do this well, in a way that aligns with the future I know—by launching a preemptive strike and finishing it quickly!”

Fearing an unknown opponent was not the course of action for Subaru, who had seen the future. He had to find a way to maximize the chance he had gained through his Return by Death, which shouldn’t have existed. Therefore, that method, that possibility—

2

As he felt the fallen leaves under his soles, Subaru slowly moved forward.

He walked through the dim forest, treading on uneven ground. The sun was already high in the sky, its light filtering through the gaps in the trees. The wind blowing through was damp, and Subaru, aware of his quickening heartbeat, felt the cold sweat on his forehead.

—Subaru was completely alone right now.

Walking isolated through the cold, windy forest, Subaru didn't even have Patrasche, who had raced alongside him on the road. His hands were empty, and his shoulders slumped as he walked, making him look utterly unreliable.

"—I left Patrasche behind. She couldn't keep up with this fight."

Subaru chuckled faintly, letting out a small breath. He had been walking alone like this for quite a distance. He threaded through thin trees, stepped on and broke fallen branches, and carefully descended slippery slopes to avoid falling. The path was barely a path, hesitant to even be called an animal trail, simply obstructing Subaru's journey.

This was probably his third time walking through this forest. Thinking back to the first and second times, when he had held someone in his arms, he should have been much lighter now. Yet, his steps felt heavier than before. Was it a matter of his feelings towards where he was headed? Or was it because the person in his arms back then was someone who made Subaru forget his fatigue?

"Probably both… but it's nothing to be proud of."

Both the first and second times resulted from his inability to protect the person in his arms. And if this third time meant he was empty-handed, then he absolutely had to avoid repeating it. That's why he was doing this now.

"…"

He avoided stepping on brightly colored, poisonous-looking mushrooms and used a nearby tree trunk for support to make a small leap. The moment he landed, he felt the air change on his skin. It wasn't the kind of sensation that made his skin tingle with tension, like before the fight with the White Whale. The current air wasn't tingling; it was accompanied by a clinging gloom, forcing Subaru to become acutely aware of the sweat all over his body, which he hadn't noticed until now.

"Here it is… It's like that feeling when you suddenly realize there's a cockroach in the corner of a quiet room."

A silent standoff with an unmoving black object X. At the end of a solitary struggle that seemed endless, one feels a sense of eternity, as if time itself is stretched out. A simply unpleasant sensation, similar to that moment, crawled all over his body. He sharpened his eyes, and the forest scenery to his right and left looked similar—then, he noticed a strange sense of familiarity, as if he had seen it before. No, he had truly encountered a familiar landscape.

"I walk these unpathed roads and arrive every time, so my sense of direction, or perhaps my intuition, is so sharpened it's almost laughable."

Or perhaps, he should say his nose was getting better. Calling himself a hunting dog specially trained for the Witch Cult would sound cool, but it was a role he'd rather decline. He wanted to return it after this time.

"—Thanks for the welcome."

Subaru squinted into the dimness ahead and offered his thanks. There wasn't an ounce of genuine warmth in his voice, but he knew well that those he was addressing lacked the humanity to care about such things. It occurred to him now, what exactly were they? Like mindless puppets, they writhed without words or claims. What was their true intention?

"I guess they wouldn't answer if I asked them that, would they, Witch Cultists?"

"…"

Suddenly, Subaru was surrounded by men in black robes, blending into the darkness. The sound of the wind and the chirping of insects had disappeared from the world at some point, and the stage for their appearance was already perfectly set. Thus, there was almost no surprise in this encounter. There was only relief, out of place as it was, at their appearance exactly as he had intended.

"I'll ask your leader for the details, so… for now, just disappear."

"…"

“I don’t really get it, but I’m higher in the hierarchy, right? Please.”

He raised a hand, gesturing for them to go somewhere. The black-robed figures bowed their heads as if showing respect to Subaru, and in that same posture, they smoothly melted back into the darkness. This, too, was the reaction he had expected. While somewhat complicated, they held no hostility towards Subaru. As long as he didn’t show ill intent, or unless Petelgeuse gave an order, there was no need to worry about them attacking.

“It’d be easy if they’d just retreat to some other country and never show their faces again, just by me telling them to.”

Subaru sighed, slumping his shoulders as he knew things wouldn’t be that convenient. If there wasn’t a chain of command like Petelgeuse, there was a non-zero chance of that working, given the unfathomable nature of these unseen beings. However, in their current priorities, Subaru’s position was likely below Petelgeuse. He remained a thorn in his side. Nevertheless, their immediate retreat was good news. His preparations were excellent—there was a chance his groundwork could have failed, and a battle might have broken out right here. Even though he acted confident during the current encounter, it was a very close call. He found it a little amusing how much he’d toughened up, able to step into such a situation without fear, considering how cowardly he used to be. He self-analyzed it as being closer to desperation than true resolve, though.

Confirming that the black-robed figures had vanished, Subaru stepped onto the earth again. As he moved through a world dominated only by his own breathing and footsteps, he almost felt a delusion of time stopping, walking endlessly alone in an unending darkness. However, such sentiments quickly ended as the trees opened up to reveal a sheer cliff.

A high, towering rock face spread out before him, the forest abruptly ending as if carved by a giant claw. A massive boulder blocked the ground directly below the cliff, and by some principle, if Subaru touched it, the path to a hidden cave would invite him into its cold, dark walls. But before he could touch the rock, a shadow greeted him, looking his way even faster.

"—I've been awaiting you, desu. Beloved faithful." A man stood with outstretched hands, his face alight with joy. His cheeks were hollow, his eyes sunken. His dark green hair had an unhealthy sheen, and his limbs, visible beneath his black robes, were as thin and weak as withered branches. He appeared to be in his mid-thirties, but his overall frailty made him look fifty, which wouldn't be surprising. Only the glittering light in his unblinking eyes, staring at him, shone with a mad glow, pouring over Subaru as if devouring him. "I am the Witch Cult, Sin Archbishop, in charge of 'Sloth.' Petelgeuse Romanee-Conti… desu!" Drooling from the tip of his extended tongue, the madman—Petelgeuse—cackled, welcoming Subaru.

“—I’ve been awaiting you. Beloved faithful.”

A man stood with outstretched hands, his face alight with joy. His cheeks were hollow, his eyes sunken. His dark green hair had an unhealthy sheen, and his limbs, visible beneath his black robes, were as thin and weak as withered branches. He appeared to be in his mid-thirties, but his overall frailty made him look fifty, which wouldn’t be surprising. Only the glittering light in his unblinking eyes, staring at him, shone with a mad glow, pouring over Subaru as if devouring him.

“I am the Sin Archbishop of the Witch Cult representing ‘Sloth’. Petelgeuse Romanee-Conti…!”

Drooling from the tip of his extended tongue, the madman —Petelgeuse— cackled, welcoming Subaru.

3

Facing his archenemy, Petelgeuse, Subaru realized he was surprisingly calm.

He probably hadn’t hated anyone more in his short life.

He’d thought only of killing this man, his vision going red, his thoughts consumed by a burning murderous intent.

This man was the worst disaster, mercilessly and cruelly slaughtering the people he cared about, those he held dear.

He’d sworn he’d break this man’s neck with his own hands, but now, facing that gaunt, menacing figure, all Subaru felt was a strange sense of relief.

It was the same kind of relief he’d felt when he’d successfully made contact with the Witch Cultists earlier.

“Welcome, beloved child, favored by the Witch! Wonderful. Wonderful. WONNNNDERFUUUUL! How profound is the love that cloaks you! How lofty is the love that envelops you! How fervent is the love that embraces you! For a devotee of such favoritism as yourself to reveal themselves here! How truly, truly wonderful!”

As Subaru was having these thoughts, Petelgeuse was already in top gear. He thrashed his head, clawed at the back of his bony hands, profusely bleeding from self-inflicted wounds, unable to contain his joyous frenzy.

The first time, it was fear. The second, hostility. But now, seeing it for the third time, it finally settled into the natural emotion of disgust. All Subaru felt towards Petelgeuse’s way of life was an unknown revulsion for an incomprehensible being.

Subaru suppressed the urge for his cheek to twitch and took a deep breath in front of Petelgeuse. Calming himself, he lightly raised a hand.

“I’m flattered by the grand welcome. Though I’m not entirely sure it’s sunk in yet.”

“That’s understandable! My own beginning was sudden as well. Everyone, on a certain day, realizes they are ‘loved’. Once you realize it, you can never let go of that love. —For love is everything!”

Petelgeuse gleefully latched onto the topic Subaru had thrown out, trying to find an opening in the conversation. He spread his outstretched hands, his blood-dripping hands trembling, and sang praises of love, heedless of his own easy trampling of others’ lives. A horribly twisted kind of love.

“To love! To the love that has been bestowed! I, we, must respond with diligence! Thus, ordeals, I give trials. I hurl trials. To find meaning in my receiving the Witch’s favor in this world, this era, these days, this hour, this instant, this very moment, to love, to love, to love, to love, to love, to love, to love, to love, to love, to love, to LOVE LOVE LOVE LOVE LOVE LOVE LOVE LOVE LOVE LOVE LOVE LOVE!”

“So, you can’t be lazy, huh? You have to be diligent to truly repay that love.”

"Exactly—!"

Petelgeuse looked up, overjoyed beyond measure at Subaru's apparent understanding of his words.

Subaru didn't want to agree with or understand a madman's opinion, but he continued to suppress the rising disgust, facing him. To buy time, to gain something, however small.

"Uh, so, am I supposed to join you here? Are there any procedures, like, papers to sign or stamps to press? I don't have my official seal, so is a thumbprint okay?"

"I feel that the love bestowed upon you is too pronounced for you to join me here and now… This rich scent of the Witch hasn't even been granted to me. Perhaps 'Lust' or 'Wrath' would surely envy you… Could it be, are you perhaps 'Pride'?"

"Pride…?"

Petelgeuse took a step closer to Subaru, tilting his head ninety degrees as he asked.

Subaru could only respond with confusion to the direction of the question. He had no answer to whether he was "Pride". What he called "the Gospel" was also beyond his comprehension.

Unable to give a proper answer, yet also forbidden from letting the moment pass in silence, Subaru fell silent. Petelgeuse furrowed his brows in suspicion, then,

"—My brain… trembles."

Petelgeuse muttered, a small, hoarse voice.

From that faint voice, the trembling, all the joyous frenzy from before, had vanished, leaving only an extreme emptiness that instilled unease and dread in anyone who heard it.

Just facing him, a gnawing unease welled up, and Subaru realized his breathing had quickened.

His heart pounded, rattling his sternum so hard it caused pain.

His knees began to tremble uncontrollably, and he felt an oppressive force that would make it difficult to even stand properly without conscious effort. In that wind of pressure, Petelgeuse tilted his head the other way, raised his right hand, and bit down on his fingers, crushing them in his mouth.

“Present the ‘Gospel’. The proof of your love—”

He reached his left hand inside his black robe and pulled out a book bound in jet black.

Skillfully opening the book, about the size of a dictionary from Subaru’s original world, he flipped through the pages, his bloodshot eyes scanning them. And then,

“Your description is not in my Gospel. So, why exactly have you appeared here, visited, and what meaning do you bring to me?”

“If that book’s called ‘The Gospel’, then, well. A few things happened, and I don’t have it on me right now.”

“A few things, you say?”

“Yeah. —I used it as a pot holder and it got all dirty, so it was gross and I threw it away.”

—This was the turning point.

The moment Subaru’s flippant answer reached his ears, Petelgeuse’s expression twisted into a savage sneer.

Immediately after, the madman’s shadow expanded explosively, and from it, countless black demonic hands stretched into the air. Each palm was a manifestation of nightmare, possessing the power to effortlessly tear apart a human body.

They soared high into the sky, glaring at Subaru like rearing snakes, then accelerated sharply, leaping to entangle him.

—Just before,

"Follow, ME!!"

Pulling his palm from his pocket, he tossed the magic stone he'd been holding skyward.

Stained red, it was an attack color, yet its destination wasn't Petelgeuse but the sky. It rose high, and the magic stone thrown into the dawn sky burst, emitting light.

At the same time, Subaru backstepped with all his might. He gained even a little distance from Petelgeuse in front of him, getting out of the range of the black hands that were closing in to sever his limbs.

"How naive! Naive naive naive naive naivenaivenaivenaivenaiveNAAAAAAAIIIIIVVVVE! It is!"

As Subaru began to flee, Petelgeuse stepped forward, extending his "Unseen Hand" to attack him.

Seven demonic hands swirled from all directions, above and below, left and right, closing in on Subaru, eager to bring down divine punishment upon the apostate who had disregarded the Witch's favor.

But—

"Wah—!"

"Haa—!!"

Overlapping roars shook the air, causing immense destruction to erupt from the earth.

The rocky ground peeled back, clods of dirt swirled up in the wind, and the resulting fissures created a spiderweb of cracks across the land, leaving gashes on the sheer cliff face.

"Wha—?!"

Before Petelgeuse's eyes, as he turned back, the combined attack of the twin beast-kin siblings shattered the large boulders piled high at the base of the cliff. —This meant they had also blocked one of the Witch Cult’s meeting places, hidden behind the rocks.

“Bury me alive, I dare you. —Suffer and atone for what you’ve done.”

Subaru flipped him off, baring his teeth, and roared his defiant words.

Before the trembling Petelgeuse, the rock face, unable to bear the destruction from the cracks, crumbled for the most part, crushing the Witch Cultists hidden beneath it.

Dust rose, and the impact vibrated through the ground as a tremor. Isolated, Petelgeuse opened his mouth wide, tears streaming from his eyes.

“What… what have you…!”

He clawed at his own head with raised hands, digging in his fingers and pulling out clumps of hair. Hair tore in his rough movements, blood spilled from his scalp, and still consumed by unending fury, he stamped his feet,

“My fingertips… to be so brutally, mercilessly, chaotically, randomly, carelessly, meaninglessly, murdered, killed, annihilated… Oh, oh, oh! My brain! My brain! My braaaain… trembles, tre-tre-tre-tre-tre-tre-tre-trembles!”

“Ew, that old man’s kinda scary~”

“Witch Cultists are all like that, big sis.”

The beast-folk siblings, Mimi and Tivey, watched Petelgeuse lamenting like a child, whispering conspiratorially with disgusted expressions.

The two had been accompanying Subaru, masking their presence, and at the signal of the magic stone Subaru threw, they leaped out, blocking the path of reinforcements exactly as planned.

Petelgeuse slowly glared at the two who had achieved a feat worth a thousand gold.

Mimi, who had never once shown any negative emotion until now, let out a small,

“Eep…”

Shuddered, her eyes wide, at whatever expression she saw on Petelgeuse’s face, invisible to Subaru who was facing away.

Tivey, her younger brother standing beside her, though resembling his sister, had a more intelligent gaze, now mixed with revulsion and fear, and his body stiffened, unable to make a sound. And then,

“Be ‘Slothful’—”

The moment Petelgeuse uttered those words, a black mist exploded across the world.

With a force and speed that completely enveloped his vision, Subaru, who had no means of resistance, felt his throat freeze as the jet black mist pressed in to crush him.

He hadn’t expected such a hidden card beyond the “Unseen Hand”—

“Huh?”

A dumbfounded sound escaped his throat, and Subaru tilted his head, looking at his raised palm.

The black mist was supposed to have struck his entire body. It had undoubtedly swept over him, yet he felt no abnormality whatsoever.

“What…?”

Checking his unaffected limbs, Subaru voiced his confusion and blinked. But as for Subaru, who was unharmed,

“—Agh,”

The two beast-kin let out pained gasps and collapsed to the ground.

Mimi and Tivey's faces were contorted, sweat pouring down their faces, struggling to breathe as they gasped, opening and closing their mouths.

This was the damage from Petelgeuse's actions just now.

As the two stopped moving, Petelgeuse's elongated shadow began to writhe again, and his black demonic hands pointed their fingertips at the two—

"—Hey, you! Don't you dare ignore me! Your opponent is me!"

"…Oh, right, it is."

Subaru stomped the ground and roared, spitting. Petelgeuse, hearing him, looked back as if regretting his immediate reaction, staring at Subaru with empty, hollow eyes that reflected nothing. Those vacant eyes vaguely reflected Subaru, and,

"As I thought, it has no effect on you."

"Huh?"

Unlike Mimi and the others, Subaru was unaffected by Petelgeuse's declaration just now.

Petelgeuse then fixed his gaze on Subaru with a calm expression, the frenzy gone.

"Good. Good. —That is good! Good good good good good good good good GOOOOOOOOD!"

He lowered his head forward, then arched his back as if to spring up, shouting and cackling. After laughing for a while, Petelgeuse pointed at Subaru with an unprecedented vivacity, blood dripping from his mangled fingertip.

"Good. I understand! Let us do it, let us do it. Let us compete, you and I, to see who is more worthy of favoritism, of love, of receiving the Witch's passion! Oh, to love, to love, to LOOOOVE!!"

"…Sorry to interrupt your excitement, but…"

Tapping the ground with his toe, Subaru looked at Petelgeuse, who was loudly proclaiming a challenge.

Petelgeuse narrowed his eyes suspiciously at Subaru's attitude, which was far from warlike.

"What is it?! Now! Right now! I! Am about to stake my fate and challenge a trial—"

"I've left your opponent to someone else."

Subaru told Petelgeuse coolly, as he pointed a finger and tried to say more.

Petelgeuse's eyes widened at the answer, and just as he was about to voice his question—

"DIIIIEEEEEEEE—!!"

Leaping through the gaps in the trees, a blade fell in a diagonal cut, entering Petelgeuse's right shoulder—and exiting his left side, bisecting his body diagonally with the old swordsman's strike.

Chapter 64:
Circumstances of the Witch Cult Hunt

1

“The gist of this Witch Cult hunt, which even a monkey could do, is simple… it’s like fishing for the White Whale. I use my scent to lure others, then defeat the ones who bite. Easy, right?”

The faces of those gathered in a circle contorted uniformly at the flippant nature of Subaru’s proposed plan. While their reactions varied—some bewildered, some worried, some anxious, and some simply mimicking the strange expressions of their neighbors—they all shared the same fundamental assessment. Namely:

“Isn’t it dangerous to treat them like unintelligent beasts? No matter what, they can’t be so easy an opponent that they’d be reeled in with the same tactics as a witchbeast.”

“They are easy opponents, believe it or not. At least, if it’s the pattern where competent people, like those who can erase their presence, follow behind me, it should work with high probability.”

Subaru shook his head at Julius’s remark, recalling past memories.

In the forest, where the Witch Cult had set their traps, Subaru’s presence seemed to be known to them instinctively. No matter which route he took, they would always appear before him. This was undoubtedly proof that the lingering scent of the Witch, which they could detect, emanated from Subaru’s body.

However, there was a suspicion that while the Witch Cultists could sense Subaru’s presence, their ability to detect other presences wasn’t particularly superior.

“The last time the Witch Cult and I were involved, they were so obsessed with me that they didn’t notice another opponent who flew in from behind.”

Subaru vaguely remembered a moment in his hazy memories when a Witch Cultist, reaching out to subdue him, had their head crushed by an iron ball.

—It was a memory from when Rem desperately tried to protect Subaru from the Witch Cultists after he'd been thrown from the dragon carriage, battered and groaning.

At that time, they hadn't noticed Rem's presence until she launched a surprise attack.

This was partly because they were overly focused on Subaru, and also largely due to Rem being skilled at masking her presence in the mountains.

In other words:

"If I dangle myself as bait, they won't notice anyone else who isn't in their line of sight. That way, we can lure out the ones who should be scattered throughout the forest and locate their hideouts."

"Then raid the discovered hideouts, huh? —But the anomaly would quickly spread. It's clear that the cultists in other hideouts would then start to move."

"That's why we need numbers. We monitor the discovered hideouts, and after the appropriate signal, we launch a simultaneous attack to capture them all at once. What do you think?"

As Subaru punctuated his proposal by raising a finger, Julius touched his lips in thought. Beside him, Ferris nodded in admiration, saying, "Nya-tural-ly." Ricardo and Mimi, from the mercenary group, also expressed their approval, deeming it worth considering. Amidst this,

"There's just one thing that concerns me, though,"

A small beast-man, Tivey, raised his hand as he spoke. He was roughly the same height and had a similar face to Mimi, with a monocle adorning one eye, making him an adorable boy.

Introduced as the youngest brother of Mimi and Hetaro, he looked at Subaru with eyes that glowed with even more intelligence than his sister and brother.

"Our employer seems to know an awful lot about the Witch Cult's affairs, but can we really trust this information? We're talking about the Witch Cult, after all—the enigmatic, vague, and ambiguous one."

Tivey voiced his suspicion, casting a doubtful gaze at Subaru, who seemed to know too much. At his perfectly reasonable question, Subaru clicked his dry tongue softly.

"I have a… history with them. Honestly, I figured you'd try to out me like this. I figured it, but… you just have to trust me."

He couldn't explain.

If he spoke of Return by Death, his heart—whether his own or another's, he couldn't tell—would be wracked with pain like the end of the world.

So, this was the absolute limit of what Subaru could do. If they demanded anything more, he couldn't comply.

Upon hearing Subaru's answer, Tivey narrowed his eyes further, about to press for more. —But,

"Honestly, just telling us to trust you without any basis…"

"I don't know what you're worried about~. You gotta be more big-hearted, aren't you a boy, Tivey~?"

Mimi, Tivey's sister, laughed boisterously and gave him a hard slap on the back of his head.

There was a tremendous thud, and Tivey's neck lurched forward as if it might snap off. Mimi grabbed him by the back of his neck as he stumbled, turned his face toward hers, his eyes wide with confusion.

"This big bro here, he tried really, really hard to beat that big fish, didn't he? Someone who tried that hard wouldn't be thinking anything bad about us, Mimi and the others. You don't even have to think about it, you're so silly~!"

"Sis, you…!"

Tivey shook his head, trying to refocus and retort, but Mimi, laughing cheerfully again, cut him off at the knees. She matched the timing by thrusting her forehead at Tivey's forward-leaning face—they collided, and sparks seemed to fly from Tivey's eyes.

"Ow!"

"You're always, always being so… 'cocky'? No, 'cocky'? 'Too clever by half'? 'Prissy'…?"

"S-Sophomoric?"

"Yeah, that's it! If you keep being like that, you won't grow big~!"

The sister who had head-butted her brother poked his newly-formed bump on the forehead with her finger, making his eyes tear up even more, then glanced back at Subaru.

"Tivey didn't fight that fish just now~. So maybe he can't believe this big brother, but if that's the case, you can just believe in your big sister!"

"…………"

"Because your big sister believes in this big brother, Tivey, you should believe in your big sister, and then, on top of that, try believing in this big brother too. And if anything happens, your big sister will protect only you~!"

Mimi patted her brother's shoulder, laughing. Tivey's eyes widened in surprise for a moment at her words, but he soon let out a sigh, his expression deflated.

Seeing Tivey's reaction, the surrounding people who had been watching their exchange burst into smiles. As laughter filled the air, Mimi tilted her head, looking puzzled.

"What's wrong?"

"Don't worry about it. Actually, you're fine just as you are. Well said."

A large palm completely covered Mimi's small head from directly above, roughly stroking her.

Ricardo continued to playfully stroke Mimi, who closed her eyes, seemingly tickled, as her neck was twisted and turned.

"There are some things that bother me, but now's not the time to doubt our big bro. We passed that stage a long time ago."

Ricardo winked at Subaru, who was left bewildered by the flow of events. Following Ricardo's lead, Wilhelm nodded, saying, "Indeed."

"My long-cherished wish was fulfilled thanks to your cooperation, Subaru-dono. Therefore, it is inevitable that I respond to your plea. There is no need for doubt or suspicion."

"I…"

Subaru's lips trembled at the trust in Wilhelm's eyes.

No excuses came. He couldn't tell them everything. Yet, Wilhelm, Ricardo, and Mimi still believed him. This was,

"That is the trust born from the results you achieved, Subaru-dono."

Even without knowing the full story, the track record Subaru had built was enough for them to trust him.

Just as Rem had unreservedly trusted Subaru, they too, though perhaps bewildered by the veracity of Subaru's words, harbored no doubt about his true intentions.

Repeating "Return by Death", and finally gaining a way to convey future information to them—that connection was now, right before his eyes, solidly established.

“N-Not that I’m happy they believed me! These aren’t tears of joy; they’re just from remembering when I forgot to record the final episode of my favorite anime, so don’t get the wrong idea and think I’m happy!”

—This shy deflection by Subaru at the end of their exchange is another story, but the Witch Cult hunt operation proceeded swiftly as planned from there.

Subaru entered the Mathers territory alone, heading into the forest where the Witch Cult was likely hiding. Behind him, individuals skilled in stealth, like Mimi, Tivey, and Wilhelm, followed closely but discreetly. If Witch Cultists appeared, drawn by Subaru’s scent, they would let them lead them to their hideouts. Then, a portion of the subjugation force would be laid in ambush, repeating the process.

“If we take what Pete-ko said at face value… there are probably ten hideouts.”

Petelgeuse had referred to his subordinates as “fingers”, if Subaru remembered correctly. He also recalled Petelgeuse calling the group Rem fought and annihilated during Subaru’s recapture the “ring finger”. If that was accurate, then including Petelgeuse’s own hiding place, the Witch Cult was likely divided into ten small groups this time.

Indeed, thanks to Subaru’s efforts wandering through the forest, spreading his scent, they successfully found seven hideouts. However, by the time they had two left, the sun was quite high, and spending any more time could risk exposing the ambushers. Based on that judgment, despite some lingering anxiety, Subaru proceeded through a familiar patch of woods toward the cliff where Petelgeuse waited. There, he confronted the aforementioned “Sloth”—

“Did we get him?!”

Wilhelm’s leaping slash struck, cleaving Petelgeuse’s slender body diagonally from behind. Petelgeuse’s face contorted in shock, cut from shoulder to hip, and his bloodshot eyes glared at Subaru.

“No way—”

What the madman was about to say would remain unknown forever. The silver flash arced, shedding blood and cutting through the air, sweeping horizontally, and the madman’s head flew lightly into the sky, gushing a fountain of blood.

Subaru was speechless at the gory sight of a head flying off in front of him. Immediately after, a massive figure leaped down from directly above, swinging a long cleaver held in both hands, crushing the headless, collapsing torso with a messy, forceful blow. The loud squelch of flesh being squeezed between earth and steel echoed, and hearing a wet gurgle, Subaru felt a surge of nausea. He managed to endure the burning sensation in his throat, forcing himself not to vomit, and squatted down, looking up with tear-filled eyes.

“If it ain’t over after this, I’ll start believin’ in that Witch’s blessing stuff myself.”

Ricardo, cleaver resting on his shoulder, replied to Subaru’s timid question. Subaru averted his gaze from the sight of him scraping bits of flesh off the blade with his finger, and looked down—at the remains of Petelgeuse, which no longer retained any semblance of its original form. With a body so utterly destroyed, it felt almost artificial and unreal. Relieved that the nausea was receding, he thought,

“I wonder if everyone else managed alright.”

“Although the Sin Archbishop was our main target, our main force was concentrated here. —However, I trust Ferris and Sir Julius to command without issue.”

Wilhelm, having checked the severed head and returned, shrugged slightly. The old swordsman vouched for them, but Subaru couldn’t shake his anxiety. They had the numbers, and it was a surprise attack on known hideouts. He had instructed them not to hold back, and the primary goal was to bury them alive, so problems should be unlikely, but—

“Witch Cultists are pretty formidable fighters. Even Rem struggled against them.”

“Aside from Ferris, That boy Julius should be fine. Among us, only Wilhelm and I can genuinely contend with him.”

“…Is that so? He’s that strong?”

Subaru’s feelings were somewhat complicated by Ricardo’s answer. He was thrilled that Julius was strong, as he was a reliable ally, but his lingering aversion to Julius made it subtly difficult to accept. At any rate,

“This hole’s plugged up, no reinforcements, right?”

“With my and Big Sister’s resonance wave, the cave under the cliff completely collapsed. If anyone was inside, they’re out of luck, sorry, sorry.”

The beast-kin siblings returned after confirming the collapsed, buried cave. Receiving Tivey’s report, Subaru was again relieved that the danger here had been eliminated. Then he squinted one eye, looking at what remained of Petelgeuse.

“Taking him out in one swift, unexpected strike. —Honestly, it was a questionable method, but don’t take it personally. You’re far more of a scumbag.”

Though it had been averted in this world, Petelgeuse’s actions were still unforgivable to Subaru. He had heard that this man, calling himself “Sloth”, had caused similar widespread devastation in various parts of the world before. There was no room for leniency.

The Witch Cultists buried under the collapse could probably be considered equally guilty. Looking back, Subaru didn’t recall them directly harming him, but remembering how badly Rem had been hurt by them, a simmering rage welled up within him.

“Witch Cultists… what are these guys…?”

“Hm?”

“What are these guys trying to do, by doing all this? Witches are these incomprehensible beings hated by everyone in the world.”

Everyone tilted their heads at Subaru’s muttered question. Only these four had accompanied Subaru for the Petelgeuse subjugation. Wilhelm furrowed his brow thoughtfully, Ricardo wrinkled his nose with apparent disinterest. Mimi was kicking dirt onto the decaying Petelgeuse, and the only one left to speak was the remaining person.

“Perhaps they have a death wish? Otherwise, it could be decadent thinking, or they believe they’re the most unfortunate in the world and want company in their misery?”

“That’s so negative. I can’t say I don’t understand a single bit… though I’d choke on my words if I did.”

A death wish, the desire to engulf everything and make it all disappear, is something anyone pushed into a desperate situation can probably relate to. Subaru, in particular, had a strong tendency for it, so he understood it to some extent.

As Subaru spoke these sentimental words, Ricardo shot him a sharp look, waving a hand dismissively, baring his fangs.

“No good, don’t you dare sympathize with these types. You can’t understand these guys, not one bit, not even a single hair. Otherwise, they’ll pull you in thinking you’re one of them.”

“I’m not talking about anything that grand! It’s just scary to think there are people like us who you can’t understand even one thing about what they’re thinking!”

“That’s where you’re wrong.”

Ricardo poked Subaru’s forehead with his finger, then pointed that same finger at the cave, and at Petelgeuse’s body being buried under the earth.

"You can't think of them as 'the same kind of human'. We and they are different creatures. That's why we can't understand each other, and words won't get through. If you seek understanding, don't be surprised if the 'Gospel' is delivered."

"Gospel… you know something about it?"

That word, Petelgeuse had uttered it many times. "Gospel"—Subaru had always thought it was referring to the black-bound book Petelgeuse held, but—

"I'm also curious why you were so eager for the Witch Cult hunt. Do you have a history with them too?"

"…Listen, bro. Since you don't seem to know, I'll tell you: it's common sense to avoid getting involved with the Witch Cult, and to not try to understand them. Just like how Witches are so hated, it's common knowledge. The Gospel isn't some difficult, complex thing either."

Ricardo shook his head, brushing off Subaru's question as if it were bothersome. Subaru opened his mouth to object to his attitude, but before he could, Wilhelm interjected,

"The 'Gospel' is something that all members of the Witch Cult possess… yes, you could even call it a scripture."

"Scripture…?"

"Apparently, it's sent to anyone who shows promise of joining the Witch Cult. Once you get your hands on it… poof, you're a Witch worshiper, just like that."

"Wha—?!"

Subaru gasped involuntarily at Ricardo's jocular explanation. If he read deeply into those words, did it mean that people who received the book called "Gospel" could be brainwashed by it and unwillingly forced into the Witch Cult?

"If that's the case, then the ones who got buried alive were just caught in the crossfire…"

"Subaru-dono, that is incorrect."

Wilhelm quickly calmed Subaru, who was pale and flustered. He nodded deeply, reassuring Subaru, whose eyes were darting around.

"By the time the 'Gospel' arrives, that person can no longer turn back. When they open it, their will is clear. There is no such salvation as being brainwashed for those people. Did the Sin Archbishop you faced seem sane to you?"

"N-No, he didn't, but… I felt like he was an exception."

Petelgeuse's deranged behavior, in a different sense from brainwashing, raised concerns about the extent of the Witch Cult's corruption. Honestly, it was difficult to draw a convincing conclusion based on that, but Subaru couldn't imagine Wilhelm offering false comfort, so he swallowed his concerns and put them aside.

"Hey, hey, isn't it good enough now? There's no point chitchatting here, let's go back to everyone else already~!"

Mimi, who hadn't participated in the conversation until now, spoke up impatiently. Wagging the tail sticking out from her lower garment, she finished roughly burying Petelgeuse's corpse, then bounced up and down in place.

"We already killed the enemy, so we have to go check if everyone else managed to kill theirs, right? Come on, let's go~!"

"Your way of speaking is so drawn out, but when I listen closely, you're saying some pretty dangerous things. Combined with your cute appearance, I'm actually experiencing quite a culture shock."

"Hehe~, saying I'm cute makes me blush~!"

Subaru sighed at Mimi, who only heard the convenient part and blushed, then turned around. The cave was completely silent, and there was no shocking sign of Petelgeuse's remains starting to regenerate, at least for now. It was quite an anticlimactic situation, but as Mimi said—what could be done here, and at least today's confrontation with the Witch Cultists, was over. And in the best possible way: a complete victory for Subaru's side.

"No, but… do you really think it went that well? It's me, you know? How many times have I sincerely tried my best only to be betrayed? There's no way a story like that… there has to be some kind of pitfall, somewhere…"

"What are you being so paranoid for? Let's go already! We're gonna keep them waiting!"

Ricardo said with an exasperated look at Subaru, who was muttering, unable to fully believe his own success. At his call, Subaru mumbled a reluctant "Oh, right", still holding onto a subtle disbelief, and followed them, leaving the spot. They had to circle the forest and reunite with their comrades placed in various locations. Only after confirming their safety could this battle be concluded as a victory. And then,

"—Isn't this a flag that he's going to revive after pretending to be gone?!"

Subaru ran back, kicking up dust with a slide. He looked up straight ahead; Petelgeuse's crude grave was still there, and there was no sign of anything crawling out from underneath. No revival flag, it seemed.

"Phew, of course not, that's such a third-rate horror."

"What are you doing now?! Get back already or I'll get seriously angry!!"

Ricardo punched Subaru, who couldn't shake his paranoia, and roughly hoisted him onto his shoulder. Carried by the tall beast-kin, Subaru finally left the spot. This time for good. And then—

"Since big bro is so noisy, just in case~"

Mimi launched a magic stone, blasting Petelgeuse's grave to smithereens. This time, without a doubt, Petelgeuse, the Witch Cult Sin Archbishop 'Sloth', was utterly pulverized.

“Well, it seems things went smoothly on your end, then,” Julius said, a smile on his face as he looked up at Subaru, who had picked up Patrasche midway through their journey through the forest and was now mounted on her back.

A soft sigh escaped Julius’s lips, his bangs slightly disheheveled, and his dignified Knight’s uniform bore a few spatters of blood. Watching him wipe the blade of his slender sword, it seemed their side hadn’t achieved a crushing victory through a preemptive strike.

“When your signal went up into the sky, four individuals unfortunately happened to be outside. We had no choice but to simultaneously destroy their hiding place and eliminate the cultists. One might say it’s fortunate I was here. Ferris would have had a bit more trouble.”

He finished speaking, sheathing his cleaned sword. Where he turned his head, as mentioned, lay the bodies of four black-clad figures. They were neatly dispatched, each with a single blow, not marring his elegant demeanor. Each had been pierced in the neck or torso, bleeding out onto the ground. From Subaru’s memory, they should have been quite skilled, subtly proving Julius’s high level of ability.

“So, the Sin Archbishop?”

“Wilhelm lopped off his head, and Ricardo crushed his torso. After that, the little cat sister playfully blew his corpse to smithereens, so he’s definitely gone.”

Even Subaru was surprised that the grave itself had been pulverized, but if Mimi insisted she did it for his sake, it was hard to complain. He still did, though. Incidentally, Mimi, who had been mercilessly scolded by everyone, was now completely sulking, her lips pouting as she curled up on her brother’s back. Her brother, being carried, was completely caught in the crossfire.

As Subaru nodded reflectively, Julius’s gaze shifted behind him—towards Wilhelm. Receiving the meaningful look, Wilhelm quietly affirmed, “There’s no mistake.” Only then did Julius break into a full smile.

“Hmm, I’m relieved. If Sr Wilhelm says so, then it must be true. At the very least, it seems we’ve broken the Witch Cult’s command here.”

“You didn’t trust my answer, did you?! I wasn’t messing around; I checked with my eyes peeled! In fact, I checked two or three times!”

“My apologies. Now that I’ve apologized, let’s move on.”

“Don’t you ‘move on’! That’s what I hate about you!”

Subaru stomped his foot, openly enraged by Julius’s aloof attitude. Julius glanced at Subaru as if he were looking at something mildly amusing, then surveyed his surroundings.

“Ricardo is nowhere to be seen, where is he?”

“That fake kobold is with Ferris. Wilhelm-san said there’s currently no sign of combat in the forest, so we thought it would be faster to split up and meet them.”

At worst, the lack of combat might mean the fighting was already over. In that case, it would be a terrible situation, with the group including the combat-inexperienced Ferris having been annihilated in an instant.

“Well, that’s why I had them gather strong fighters with Ferris. This way, even if she’s specialized in healing and useless at attacking, somehow…”

“Thanks for your concern, darling~”

A breath feathered into his ear from behind, and Subaru’s limbs stiffened in shock. He glanced back with just his eyes, seeing a small, pretty face staring at him up close. Knowing it was a man, his face didn’t turn red; it went pale instead.

“Who benefits from this, really? Stop it, seriously stop. I’m not kidding, if you do that again, I’m going to punch that cute face of yours with my ultimate punch. A Big Bang Attack.”

"Oh, you're just so shy, you're adorable. Don't worry, Subaru-kyun's Ferris came back just for you, okay?"

Disgusted by Ferris's wink and blown kiss, Subaru checked his condition, shoulders slumped. At a glance, he looked no different from when they parted. Unlike Julius, it seemed things had gone perfectly well on their side. Ricardo, who had returned with Ferris, was followed by the other members who had been with Ferris. So, it seemed—

"Everyone's reunited safely… no one failed, right?"

"It seems combat occurred in two locations, including here, but there were no problems. As expected of those trained under Sr Wilhelm. Their fundamental strength is different."

Subaru had heard that the members accompanying Ferris were particularly chosen. Given the rarity of Ferris's "Blue" moniker and his skills, this was expected treatment. But if that was the case, he still didn't quite understand Crusch's intentions in readily sending him to the front lines.

"That's Lady Crusch's sincerity, duh. Don't make me spell it out, idiot."

"Ugh…"

Subaru's thoughts seemed to be entirely transparent, as Ferris completely read his mind and verbally abused him. At any rate,

"Most of the Witch Cult is annihilated, but… the problem is that two hideouts are still missing. We've crushed the head, so optimistically, I'd think they'd retreat, but…"

"They're the Witch Cult. Thinkin' normally, you'd best not."

Ricardo, arms crossed, affirmed Subaru's concern. The surrounding opinions seemed to agree with him, many pulling their chins down heavily, their expressions grim. Indeed, Subaru also considered leaving these uncertain elements unattended to be out of the question. Therefore, he chose a solid approach for them as well.

“We’ll search the forest and hunt down the remaining Witch Cultists. It’s not about a violent massacre, but… at the very least, I think they’re worth capturing.”

“I think there’s a high probability they’ll commit suicide… It’s always been that way.”

Julius calmly stated this, as if to correct Subaru’s overly optimistic view. Subaru gasped, but Julius too had a pained look on his face.

“If we can avoid killing them, it’s certainly best to do so. I agree with prioritizing capture and searching for the remaining cultists. However, I also think it’s about time we report the situation to Lord Roswaal, don’t you agree?”

At that suggestion, Subaru suddenly remembered a reality that had completely slipped his mind. Subaru had deliberately chosen not to rush straight to the mansion and remove Emilia from danger, but instead prioritized the swift elimination of the Witch Cult. A large part of this was to avoid shifting the known status of Petelgeuse’s attack by changing the future too much. Now that he had successfully defeated Petelgeuse himself—

“I… can go back to the mansion, can’t I…?”

As soon as he muttered this, a sudden sense of reality washed over Subaru. Blood began to rush to his face, and a sensation he hadn’t consciously felt in a long time made his whole body intensely hot.

Now, he could return to the mansion with his head held high. He could proudly show his face to Emilia, boast of his achievements, and apologize for his clumsy behavior and various betrayals of trust from a few days ago. He could wholeheartedly apologize to her, whom he had so unconsciously hurt when he was only thinking of himself. And only after reconciling could Subaru truly restart his relationship with Emilia.

“Oh crap, I’m fired up! If that’s the case, I want to go home as soon as possible. Go home! Yankee go home!”

"You're free to get all excited, but prioritize our discussion here, okay? So, what are we actually going to do? About the Witch Cultists, that is."

Seeing Subaru squirming impatiently, Ferris narrowed his eyes mischievously and admonished him. Subaru choked on his words, and Julius, shaking his head resignedly, raised a finger, gathering everyone's attention.

"Let's do this. We'll split into two groups: one heading to Lord Roswaal's mansion, and the other continuing to search the forest for the Witch Cultists. Subaru, as the messenger and, more importantly, a concerned party, should go to the mansion. There's no guarantee they won't be attacked by the Witch Cultists en route. Sr Wilhelm and a few others for escort should be sufficient. The rest of us, led by myself and Ricardo, will explore the forest. How does that sound?"

Julius, having swiftly summarized the plan, looked at Subaru for confirmation at the end. An unnecessary sense of defiance welled up in Subaru, given Julius's expression that practically said, "I've saved you the trouble," but Subaru took a deep breath and suppressed it.

"Let's do that. Everyone, please follow Julius's arrangements."

"Understood."

When Subaru made his request, the old swordsman nodded in response. That set off the agreement of the others present, and the matter was settled. With everyone's will unified and gathered together, Julius suddenly raised his hand, prefacing with, "May I?"

"I am not Julius, but Juli, a wandering mercenary. Just don't get that wrong."

"Nobody remembers that setting anymore!!"

And so, a unified cry from everyone echoed through the forest sky.

"This is bad. My heart's pounding so hard I feel like I'm going to throw up."

Patrasche whinnied softly at Subaru, who leaned against her, muttering weakly. The somewhat displeased attitude was probably because the intelligent ground dragon sensed that Subaru on her back was genuinely feeling nauseous. Yet, the fact that she didn't throw him off showed the trust that had grown between them, at least for now.

"Perhaps the fatigue from riding an unfamiliar ground dragon has settled in now that you're at ease?"

"That might be part of it, but probably not all. …To be honest, the thought of facing Emilia-tan again is just making me explode with fear."

After all, he'd left her on the worst possible terms. For Subaru, that had been over two weeks ago, and the intense emotions of that moment had largely dissipated. But for Emilia, it had only been four days. Unlike Subaru, she likely hadn't experienced any dramatic emotional shifts since then. This had already been confirmed in the previous loop, during the brief time he had spent with her. The same went for the terrible mistake Subaru had made back then.

"I don't know the full details, but I believe you two had a rather… heated parting?"

"You hit the nail on the head, and it's brutal. That's why it's so awkward to face her. Ugh… my stomach, my stomach hurts. And my chest hurts from lovesickness."

"You seem to be suffering more than when you faced the White Whale. I understand the feeling."

Wilhelm smiled at Subaru, who was trying to distract himself with jokes. Surprised by his gentle demeanor, Subaru exhaled a "Huh," impressed.

"Wilhelm-san, did you also feel heavy-hearted when you fought with your wife?"

"Of course. In my case, if I angered my wife, I physically couldn't win. I was often forcibly cut down by her sword."

"A Sword Saint is really something else, huh?!"

"Afterward, I would hold her tightly in my arms until her anger melted away."

"Man, you really go for the intense wife stories, don't you?!"

Fired up by the tales of his resurrected wife, Wilhelm looked rather refreshed. Envying his uninhibited attitude, Subaru slapped his own cheek hard. His senior was going out of his way to try and soften his hardened heart. To disregard that sentiment would be a failure as a man.

"You're not seriously going to keep pushing the 'wife stories' in an innocent way, are you?"

"I'm not sure what you're implying. —Oh."

Wilhelm responded with an unconcerned expression to Subaru's timid question. Then, suddenly, his eyes narrowed as he looked ahead. Following his gaze, Subaru realized they had unknowingly entered a wider, main road—the one leading to the mansion and the village—and were now close enough to see the village itself. Wilhelm's gaze was fixed on the slightly visible entrance of the village.

"That's the closest village to the mansion. Oh, Wilhelm-san knows that, right?"

"Yes. I visited the mansion once with Ferris. We passed through the village too, but… it's strange."

Wilhelm, still with narrowed eyes, began to exude a subtle tension. Stirred by his ominous demeanor, Subaru felt a bad premonition welling up from the pit of his stomach.

"Wh-What's wrong? Is something weird…?"

"An unusually large number of dragon carriages are stopped in the village. —Subaru-dono, please wait here. I will go and check."

With that, Wilhelm gave similar instructions to his accompanying subordinates. Then, lightly kicking off the ground, he sprang forward with wind-like speed, seemingly gliding into the village in an instant.

Approximately three minutes passed after Wilhelm rushed inside. Subaru gnashed his teeth, his anxiety mounting, wondering if the anomaly he had avoided had returned. What flashed through his mind were the gruesome deaths of the villagers he had seen twice before, and Petra's emotionless face was clearly etched in his memory. He never wanted to see that again. And yet, he had tried so hard to avoid it, so why—?

"Subaru-dono,"

A knight suddenly called out to Subaru, who had closed his eyes and was on the verge of tears. He instinctively turned his head, and the knight pointed towards the village, indicating something. Following his finger, Subaru saw Wilhelm waving at the village entrance. There was no trace of the previous tension in his posture, and rushing over, Subaru finally understood why.

Inside the village, numerous dragon carriages, over twenty of them, were lined up. Naturally, the ground dragons pulling them and their drivers were also in the village. Where this unfamiliar fleet of dragon carriages had come from, the reason was—

"Oh, right. That's my insurance, isn't it?"

"It appears so. You arranged this when you left the royal capital?"

"Yeah. I asked Anastasia and Russell-san for a little favor."

Subaru gave a wry smile at the impressive sight of the lined-up dragon carriages, then looked towards the center of the village. There, a scene unfolded where what appeared to be the representative of the dragon carriage fleet and the village representative were arguing. They were likely at odds because of a miscommunication between the two parties. If the arrival of the dragon carriage fleet was as Subaru had intended, it would take some time to smooth things over, so now was precisely the time for mediation.

“Hold on, hold on! Okay, listen up! I know you both have a lot to say, but first, hear me out!”

Subaru dismounted Patrasche, rushed over, and stepped between the two parties, who were on the verge of a heated argument. The two arguing individuals were a man and a woman. Subaru first looked up at the man, who seemed more agitated. Seeing the man, Subaru involuntarily let out a small “Ah.” It was a familiar face. He was the person who had introduced Otto to Subaru during the very first loop, and—

“Your name is, uh, I forgot… but you’re a merchant who came here on an announcement from the royal capital’s guild, right?”

“Yeah, but… who are you? You don’t look like a merchant.”

“I’m more on the employer’s side. There’s just a slight mix-up in communication. I’ll smooth things over with both the higher-ups and the people here.”

If the letter he had entrusted had been delivered to the mansion, this confusion shouldn’t have happened, but it probably hadn’t reached Emilia yet. If she knew the situation, she would have made the best judgment.

“Well, anyway, stop please.”

Subaru gestured for the man, who was about to press further, to stop, and subtly scanned his surroundings. He wondered if Otto, the merchant he had many dealings with, might be among them, but he didn’t see him after a quick glance, which left him a little disappointed. Then, he turned and faced the woman. She seemed to be standing as the village representative, with reddish-brown hair softly grown out and slightly upturned eyes—.

“Just listen to me for now. For the sake of this unforgettable, friendly sanpaku-eyed person—who are you?”

At Subaru's words, the woman in front of him furrowed her brow as if to say she didn't understand. However her reaction was what Subaru couldn't comprehend. Because,

"I know everyone in this village by face, and I'm confident they know me. But I don't know your face… so who are you, standing here acting like a representative?"

Driven by his impatience, Subaru grilled her with rapid-fire questions. That was Subaru's first and most critical slip-up since he had been maintaining his vigilance up until this very moment of this very day.

—Suddenly, as if exploding, the woman's shadow in front of him rapidly swelled.

"—What?!"

Subaru was speechless at the familiar sight, and by the time he realized it, it was too late. The swelling shadow rose into the sky, swirling and spreading, transforming into countless black demonic hands like unraveling threads—and attacked everyone in sight.

The assembled merchants, the villagers observing from a distance, Wilhelm and his subordinates who had rushed forward sensing Subaru's anomaly, and Subaru himself, the only one who had noticed the phenomenon happening before his eyes but had frozen, missing his chance.

Black arms wrapped around everyone's necks, completely immobilizing them.

"This can't be… but this is…"

Gasping under the intense pressure on his throat, Subaru's forehead drenched in sweat as shock permeated his entire body. This phenomenon, this event, was undeniably that of the one he had supposedly killed—.

"Ah—my brain, it trembles."

Subaru heard a woman murmur this from in front of him.

Subaru’s eyes widened in horror as he stared at the person before him. At a distance where he could almost reach out and touch her, the woman, with her face cast down, put a raised finger into her mouth and violently bit off its tip. Blood dripped, and as everyone immobilized by her actions held their breath in the strange, silent world, the woman lifted her face.

Her mouth was stained with blood, adorned with a gruesome, mad laugh—.

“I am a Sin Archbishop of the Witch Cult…”

Heheheh, heheheh.

“—Representing ‘Sloth’—”

Mad laughter, roaring laughter, mocking laughter, echoed—

“—Petelgeuse Romanee-Conti!!”

He heard the woman loudly proclaim the name of the man he had killed.

Heheheheheheh, the mad laughter echoed.

Heheheh, heheheh.

—Heheheh, heheheh, heheheheheheheheh.

Chapter 65:
The Consequence of Sloth

1

Hearing the echoing laughter, Subaru desperately fought back the dread rising in his throat, his sluggish thoughts suddenly kicking into overdrive.

—It makes no sense. Why is the woman in front of me claiming to be Petelgeuse? I killed him, blew his body to smithereens. He should be dead. Were there more of them? That's ridiculous. The White Whale was enough of that absurdity!

"You… what did you…!"

"Oh my, you seem quite surprised, don't you? To elicit such a reaction, it makes my return all the more worthwhile!"

Snapping her fingers, the woman pointed at Subaru with the hand opposite the one she'd presumably crushed. A crazed grin plastered on her face, she opened her mouth wide enough to show the back of her throat and licked her lips.

A shiver ran down Subaru's spine at that laugh, and he clearly saw the commonalities with the madman he'd killed. The way she spoke, the way she laughed, and above all, the presence of the 'Unseen Hand'—

"Wait… you only had seven arms… didn't you…?"

As far as Subaru knew, Petelgeuse's black demon hands had totaled seven.

At least, Subaru hadn't seen more than that, and Petelgeuse, who should have gone all out against Puck, hadn't displayed more arms than that number either.

However now, the number of arms he saw easily exceeded seven, and the extended limbs were already close to twenty.

“You… you can see the ‘Unseen Hand’, can’t you?”

Narrowing her eyes, the woman’s voice was sharp with menace at Subaru’s question.

Even in the previous iterations, Petelgeuse had harbored strong hostility towards anyone who could see his demon hands. That didn’t seem to have changed, even now that she’d become someone else, and she harbored more hatred than ever for the content of Subaru’s words, saying,

“My love’s answer, given only to me… why can you… see it?! Oh, favored believer, surely you aren’t…!”

“Get away from Subaru-dono—you.”

A sharp voice suddenly cut in as the woman’s lips trembled.

Beyond the woman, whose bloodshot eyes glared in that direction, the one who spoke was—

“Wilhelm-sa—n…”

It was Wilhelm, his neck clutched by a black witch hand, his feet slightly lifted from the ground.

His movements sealed by an invisible arm, the old swordsman struggled to free himself, but the fierce intensity in his eyes showed no signs of fading.

If there were even a moment when the ‘Unseen Hand’ released its grip, the old man would, in a flash, cleave the woman’s neck and cast Petelgeuse back into hell once more.

Before the oppressive killing intent emanating from the Sword Demon, the woman—though Subaru resisted calling her Petelgeuse, Petelgeuse distorted her otherwise plain yet refined girlish face into an ugly grimace, saying,

“Ah, you seem to be a diligent one. I understand. I understand, don't you think it's understandable?! It's wonderful, beautiful, truly noble, a steadfast spirituality is evident! The proof that what one believes in! What one pushes through! What is firm is established within oneself! It's… really, really good!"

"Stop spouting nonsense, you lunatic."

"Lunatic! That's a truly correct assessment! Yes, I am mad with love! With love, reverential love, bequeathed love, compassionate love, grateful love, craving love, benevolent love, respectful love, family love, ultimate love, selfish love, pure love, doting love, affectionate love, intimate love, trusting love, deep love, humane love, carnal love, regretful love, earnest love, exclusive love, hatred love, loyal love, favored love, poor love, biased love, blind love, fraternal love, pitiful love, love, love, love, loveai ai ai ai ai ai iiiiiiiiihh!!"

Her eyes wide, her tongue extended, Petelgeuse arched her back and tore at her head.

Wilhelm looked at her madness with eyes that saw something abominable. Looking around, the other captives, their faces contorted in agony, similarly showed disgust at the madman's distorted display of love.

While in the center of this maelstrom of negative emotions, Petelgeuse repeated her twitching smile several times, then slowly scanned her surroundings, saying,

"Ah, it's lonely not to hear the praise that should be heard… Perhaps I should exert myself a little!"

"No, stop…!"

Petelgeuse lightly raised both hands, making an unreasonable demand of her unresponsive surroundings. Subaru, imagining the worst of what the madman intended, called out to stop her, but Petelgeuse smiled much faster than his voice could be uttered, and,

"Now— Be 'Slothful'."

In a different way than his worst imaginings, 'Sloth' raged through the village like a disaster.

Until then, all those whose movements had been sealed shared one commonality: though their faces were contorted in agony, they suppressed their voices. This was likely due to a self-preservation instinct to not draw Petelgeuse's attention, but a larger reason was simply that their throats were being compressed.

The numerous extended arms gripped the throats of everyone they restrained, lifting their bodies as if stretching them slightly. Their breathing wasn't stopped, but it was just short of allowing them a full breath to counterattack—such was the malicious act.

Now, with Petelgeuse's single word, that restraint was suddenly released, and—

"—Aaaahhhhhh!!"

Within the village, the overlapping screams of those released from the pressure on their throats reverberated.

2

There was a man, drooling and banging his head against the ground.

There was a woman, eyes rolled back, foaming at the mouth from her body's disobedience.

There was a merchant, covered in blood from self-mutilation, exceeding even Petelgeuse's self-inflicted wounds.

There was a knight, his magical power rampaging, bleeding from every orifice of his body.

The village echoed with screams and shouts, a horrifying scene of apparent madness.

"This is…"

It was eerily similar to a phenomenon that had occurred just a few hours earlier, during the battle with the White Whale.

The phenomenon on the foggy road, when those who heard the White Whale's roar lost their minds, collapsing and unable to move.

However this situation, triggered by Petelgeuse's single word, was far more devastating than that.

"You resisted more than I expected."

Petelgeuse tilted her head slightly from side to side as she spoke, gazing with amusement at the people still screaming, their throats seemingly about to burst.

Her demeanor, as if she might hum a tune in the face of such devastation, left Subaru no doubt that she was indeed the same being as that man. But,

"Why are you… here…?"

"We were in the middle of our conversation, and I hadn't yet performed the ordeal, that was my reason for coming here. — Although, thanks to you all crushing most of my fingers, only this frail body remains."

Speaking in a syrupy tone, Petelgeuse sensuously ran her hand over the contours of her own body. Subaru felt nothing but disgust at her suggestive gestures and glared at the witch hand still gripping him, trying desperately to pull away. But,

"Damn it, I can see it… but I can't interfere!"

"As expected, you can see the 'Unseen Hand', can't you? It's extremely unpleasant, but if you are 'Pride', then it makes sense…"

The madwoman observed Subaru struggling, leaning closer with interest.

Her judgment was that it wouldn't be dangerous to approach Subaru, who was floating and unable to move. And indeed, her judgment was correct. Subaru could do nothing.

—Subaru,

"Get her—Patrasche!!"

"What—"

The moment she spoke, reacting to Subaru's cry, the ground dragon lowered its body and violently slammed into Petelgeuse from the side.

The 'Unseen Hands' had extended to the necks of all survivors present, but they were solely focused on restraining humans. They hadn't interfered with the ground dragons left behind near the village entrance. Subaru, whose restraint was looser, had noticed Patrasche circling around Petelgeuse and bought some time.

"Guh—!"

Even with the body transfer, the new body was as slender as it appeared.

The charge of a ground dragon, weighing hundreds of kilograms, possessed more than enough force to easily send the diminutive figure flying.

Petelgeuse, flung through the air, bounced off the ground and slammed into a nearby house. Dust rose, and as her form vanished, leaving behind a cry of pain—the 'Unseen Hand's' restraint released Subaru.

"It's off! Now… Wilhelm-san!"

"—I'm alright, somehow. But this…"

Rubbing the bruising on his neck painfully, Wilhelm, who seemed to have escaped the effects of the mental contamination, looked up at his surroundings. The 'Unseen Hand's' influence was temporarily lifted, but the mental contamination affecting the others had not ceased.

Even now, the suffering people continued to bleed from self-mutilation, nightmares, and fatally worsening physical conditions, screaming ceaselessly. If this was of the same quality as the mist emitted by the White Whale, then—

"Only Ferris can cure this?!"

"Or perhaps if we strike down the source, it's the kind of curse that will cease."

As despair caused Subaru to clutch his head, Patrasche, who had saved him from his predicament, nudged his nose against him as if to say, "Calm down", pressing against his shoulder.

Taking a deep breath at the ground dragon's gesture, Subaru looked at Wilhelm's profile as he drew his treasured sword.

"Is there a chance we can defeat her? Or in the worst case, should we retreat and call Ferris…?"

"It would certainly be more reliable if Ferris were here. However, can we afford to leave that being here and retreat? If we return to the forest, there's no doubt that she will next head for Lord Roswaal's mansion. —Lady Emilia would be in danger."

"—!"

That, above all, had to be avoided.

He didn't know why. He didn't know, but Subaru was certain that Emilia and Petelgeuse must not meet.

If she and that lunatic met, it would undoubtedly lead to something terrible for Subaru.

That, he absolutely could not accept.

"It seems your resolve is firm, Subaru-dono. Please stand back and observe."

"His method is to bind us with invisible hands. No matter how strong Wilhelm-san is, those hands…"

"If one knows there are invisible arms, there are ways to fight them. More importantly, Subaru-dono, are you certain it is 'Sloth'? I certainly have the memory of having slain 'Sloth'."

“…I don’t understand the principle, but I think that’s certainly true. In the worst case, like the White Whale, this could be the main body and the previous one a fake. And I just didn’t know that.”

“I am not doubting you.”

Wilhelm gave a wry smile at Subaru’s somewhat apologetic words. At the elder’s magnanimous attitude, Subaru felt ashamed of his own small-mindedness showing even in such a situation.

However, before he could respond,

“—Ah, it hurts. It hurts. It hurts. My brain trembles. It trembles.”

An arm stretched from the wall of the collapsed house, and Petelgeuse, her upper body stained with blood and dirt, peered out. Deep lacerations were visible on the upper half of her body as she crawled out sluggishly, clearly indicating the significant damage from Patrasche’s unprotected charge.

Yet, despite that, there was no sign of fading vitality in her glittering eyes; rather, it emphasized her vengeful madness.

“Good. The ground dragon is good, after all. Friendly to humans, loyal, and above all, wise and diligent! Wonderful! Adorable! Diligent! Yes, being diligent! It is a virtue to be praised above all else! If being slothful is the most shameful sin, then being diligent is the most praiseworthy virtue! If sloth is faithlessness unworthy of devotion, then diligence is the act of a believer worthy of favor!”

Swinging her arms, shaking her head, stamping her feet, extending her tongue, and drooling, Petelgeuse lavished praises on Patrasche with a face full of insane laughter.

As for Patrasche, being praised in such an odd manner seemed to be unacceptable even across species, and with the most difficult-to-read reptilian expression, she showed her utmost disgust, leaning towards Subaru as if choosing him. A cute and reliable companion.

“My hardworking partner isn’t happy about it, you perverted… Ah wait, are you a perverted woman now? I get that there’s a certain demand for gender-bending stuff, but who benefits from your gender-bend, you piece of trash?”

“Gender-bend? I don’t understand what you’re saying, but whether the recipient is pleased or not by the lavish praise has no bearing on me! I thought it was wonderful. The emotion welling up in my chest, to be slothful enough not to express it in words is something I can never forgive. I cannot forgive, I must not forgive, it must not happen. Therefore, I will use every word, love, love, love love love love love!”

“An impossible conversational partner is troublesome in any age. — There is no longer any meaning or purpose in words. Wilhelm van Astrea, here I come!”

Lowering his stance, Wilhelm declared his name and moved with the speed of wind.

The Sword Demon’s body dashed across the ground in a single bound, attempting to leap before the slowly moving Petelgeuse. However Petelgeuse, as expected, seemed wary of that first strike.

“Oh, scary. You are also diligent. Therefore, I shall do this.”

‘Unseen Hands’ erupted from the ground, forming a wall that completely covered Petelgeuse’s front. If he charged straight in, his entire body would be ensnared by the unavoidable witch hands.

Subaru, knowing the unseen threat that Wilhelm couldn’t perceive, shouted at the top of his lungs,

“Arms in front! Fall back—!”

“—Understood.”

Wilhelm abruptly halted his momentum with his right foot and dodged the wall looming before him. Leaping sideways, the old swordsman spun around, raising his drawn sword vertically, and—

“Tch—!”

The ground, struck by a diagonal slash, split open, and a rain of dirt poured down on Petelgeuse.

If it had been a strike powerful enough to shatter the very earth, it might have held meaning as an attack, but—

“That’s just harassment…”

“I don’t understand the action, but surely you’re not being slothful, are you?”

Petelgeuse seemed to share a similar impression of Wilhelm’s actions, sighing and overlaying Subaru’s hoarse voice. Without replying to her disappointed tone, Wilhelm continued to move across the ground, his swinging sword continuously showering dirt.

With a casual flick of her arm at the unpleasant gesture, Petelgeuse muttered, “That’s enough” and,

“Even if diligent, an incompetent worker is as repulsive as sloth. If you still won’t cease your futile struggle, then so be it—before the favor granted to me, be torn apart and vanish vanish vanish vanish vanish vanish vanish vanish vanish vanish vanish vanish!”

Shadows exploded, and Petelgeuse’s ‘Unseen Hands’ rushed towards Wilhelm.

Their number exceeded thirty, incomparable to what Subaru knew of Petelgeuse’s. Subaru, who had been trying to verbally convey the approaching demon hands, found his throat choked, the situation unchanged even if he managed to convey one or two.

That fatal delay directly led to Wilhelm’s life—

“Wilhelm-sa—”

The ‘Unseen Hands’, which mercilessly destroyed whatever they touched, assailed the entire body of the old swordsman, who could not perceive their existence. Subaru lamented his powerlessness, hallucinating the sight of the approaching fingertips ravaging the old body. But,

“I told you.”

He ducked under the outstretched fingertips, sidestepped as he spun, dodging the relentless demon hands one after another. Slipping through the gaps between the arms, the old man, having evaded every incoming threat, wore a defiant smile on his cheek, saying,

“If one knows there are invisible arms, there are ways to deal with them.”

The Sword Demon had indeed proven the truth of his earlier words right before their eyes.

“Impossible. Impossible, impossible, impossible, impossiblepossiblepossiblepossiblepossiblepossible—”

It was Petelgeuse whose throat trembled at Wilhelm’s exceptionally curt words.

The madwoman scowled at the fact that her trump card had been easily evaded, biting into her molars with the fingers of her raised right hand one after another, her bloodshot eyes darting in every direction,

“Unbelievable, unbelievable, unbelievable, unbelievable, unbelievable, unbelievable, unbelievable, unbelievable, unbelievable, unbelievable, unbelievable, unbelievable… Even you, can you really see my ‘Unseen Hand’?”

“I can see it. —Once the trick is known, it’s nothing more than a child’s parlor game.”

Wilhelm declared with an air of boredom, and with the tip of his spinning blade, he once again scraped the earth.

The falling rain of dirt struck the still trembling Petelgeuse, serving as the ultimate provocation to the madwoman.

However, through the repetition of that action, Subaru realized Wilhelm’s intention. And he could only marvel at the Sword Demon’s terrifying tactical insight.

The reason Wilhelm had been raining down dirt wasn’t simply to provoke Petelgeuse’s short temper through harassment.

By raining down dirt, Wilhelm had created a situation where he could visually ascertain the trajectories of the ‘Unseen Hands’ as they manifested.

The ‘Unseen Hand’, which physically interferes with the human body, is a mysterious phenomenon that simply cannot be seen. He likely interfered with mana to deploy such a spell, but Wilhelm had turned that against her.

That is, he judged that the arms would pass through the gaps in the dirt rain and diligently evaded those points. Nevertheless, the onslaught created by over thirty arms was not easily avoided, and it was indeed a feat of divine skill, thanks to Wilhelm’s superhuman reflexes.

“Now, you’ve had enough surprise. —Are you ready to be cut down?”

Pointing the tip of his blade, Wilhelm threatened in a low voice.

The chilling killing intent contained within it sent a shiver down Subaru’s spine, even though the blade wasn’t aimed directly at him. Of course, Petelgeuse, who was directly exposed to that killing intent, must have felt even less alive.

In fact, Petelgeuse, who had been in a crazed state, seemingly losing the boundary of reality, now seemed to regain a sense of it as she panicked,

“Wait, wait. This shouldn’t be happening, this situation, this development, this predicament, it shouldn’t befall me! I was diligent! I refused to be slothful, and to repay love! For love! For affection! To repay favor as a believer, I was more devout and diligent than anyone! And for that, I…”

“You are loved because you did this. You are loved if you do only this much. My ears rot from the superficiality of the ‘love’ you speak of.”

Wilhelm dismissed Petelgeuse’s pathetic screams as if he had heard utterly repulsive delusions. In his eyes, a fierce sword aura, separate from killing intent, burned, and,

“Love is not something to be forced, begged for, or stolen. What you speak of is not love, but mere self-satisfaction.”

“—What do you—”

Ignoring Petelgeuse as she tried to speak, Wilhelm made a final, grand sweep to churn the earth. He showered Petelgeuse with the falling rain. However within that dark rain, Petelgeuse carved a delighted, insane laugh,

“Then, how about this?!”

She screamed, extending both hands towards them.

In response to her arms, ‘Unseen Hands’ slithered across the ground, lifting the bodies of the knights who had been lying there, suffering from mental contamination.

These sturdy men were all survivors of the subjugation force, clad in the same equipment as Wilhelm, comrades bound by strong ties —she had set her sights on them.

Her eyes gleaming with madness, Petelgeuse opened her throat as if to applaud her own actions,

“Now, how is this?! Your friends, colleagues, subordinates, comrades, allies—held hostage like this, what kind of pathetic spectacle will you make—”

“—Don’t underestimate knights, you scoundrel.”

Leaving her mutterings behind, Wilhelm’s body shot forward like a bullet.

His stomping foot gouged the earth, and in the blink of an eye, the old body flew, leaving even time behind. Petelgeuse, with a stunned expression, instinctively pulled demon hands from the shadows—but it was too late.

A deeply embedded blade pierced her lower abdomen and protruded from her back, and the two, face-to-face at close range, exchanged expressions.

One was plastered with dazed shock, the other's eyes burned with a too-quiet rage,

"When one grasps a sword to protect, and becomes a knight, one does not regret one's own life. Stop insulting my—our comrades, enough is enough."

"Ah… how, could…"

A trembling hand reached for her own wound, touching the blood flowing along the sword and widening her eyes. Then Petelgeuse turned her blood-soaked hand towards Wilhelm's face, and the old swordsman did not dodge. The Sword Demon, who had cut down countless lives, knew that she no longer had the strength to do anything.

"You… ah… truly, truly, truly, diligently…"

As if adoring him, Petelgeuse's fingertips patted Wilhelm's cheek.

The old swordsman allowed the madwoman to do as she pleased, slowly drawing the treasured sword's blade from her abdomen. A large amount of blood spilled, and Petelgeuse, losing strength, collapsed to her knees.

"Do you require assistance?"

"—No need. Ah, the sensation of life draining away is wonderful. Blood flowing out. The source of life pouring away. The diligent things that have supported my body until now, lost, gone, vanished, vanished, vanishedvanishedvanishedvanishedvanished."

Collapsing sideways, Petelgeuse watched with amusement as her blood stained the ground even deeper. With joyful, joyful, joyful trembling lips, her eyes lost focus, and eventually, the light died.

Witnessing this, Subaru let out a breathless "Ha." Before a battle that made him completely forget even to breathe, it was as if his body had forgotten it could move.

“Is it… over…?”

“I have stopped her breath. And those around, it seems too.”

To Subaru’s hesitant question, Wilhelm, wiping his sword blade, replied softly.

Looking around at his words, indeed, the people who had been suffering from mental contamination earlier had calmed down, and despite their wounds, it seemed no one had died.

Even those who were last used as hostages, though barely, were still alive.

It seemed that this time, truly, it was alright to feel relieved.

“What was that all about, in the end, this thing?”

Subaru stamped his solidified feet on the spot to loosen them, and after confirming they obeyed, he turned towards Wilhelm.

In front of the standing old swordsman, the fallen Petelgeuse No. 2 was completely silent, and her dead form, if judged by appearance alone, seemed like nothing more than the corpse of a completely unrelated woman.

However, in reality, this woman had been Petelgeuse just moments ago.

That madness and the authority of the ‘Unseen Hand’. Those couldn’t have been illusions or anything of the sort; a convincing conclusion had to be reached for the phenomena that had occurred, even if forced.

“Like the White Whale, were there multiple ‘Sloths’? If so, it would make sense of the stories of them causing havoc in various parts of the world…”

“I have never heard of multiple Sin Archbishops carrying the same ‘Sin’, but these are individuals whose true nature is opaque. We cannot definitively say it is impossible.”

Bringing up the White Whale caused Wilhelm's tone to drop slightly.

Indeed, if the current hypothesis were true, it would be a grave situation. The possibility of multiple beings like Petelgeuse existing was unthinkable.

“Worst case, this woman isn't the main body either… like the White Whale, could there be another main body? If we don't even know if one has appeared this time, how can we deal with it?”

“I am also concerned about the other members exploring the forest. We were able to deal with the invisible arms thanks to Subaru-dono being here, but they have nothing.”

“—! That's right! Then it's bad, we need to go back and link up immediately!”

There were two remaining groups of Witch Cult remnants in the forest. He didn't want to think that another Petelgeuse might be in either of them, but the possibility couldn't be denied.

Subaru turned around, reaching for Patrasche's reins right beside him, intending to return immediately. But,

“Anyway, we need to go back right away… Patrasche?”

Subaru reached out his arm to jump on, but Patrasche didn't accept him. Instead, the ground dragon slightly lowered its head and snarled ferociously, glaring at Subaru.

Her posture was as if she were looking at an enemy—

“No way… possession…?!”

Realizing that possibility, Subaru recoiled in terror.

If that were true, Petelgeuse might be able to possess even a different species like Patrasche—

“Wilhelm-san! This is bad, that bastard, Patrasche—”

“Bluh.”

A gushing, suffocating smell of blood splattered across his face as he turned around.

“Huh?”

Stunned, Subaru received the lukewarm substance on his face, his mouth agape, blinking.

In front of him, the old swordsman who should have been standing where he turned was gone. No, he wasn’t gone, but he wasn’t in the form Subaru knew.

Wilhelm’s tall, well-trained body, perhaps ten centimeters taller than Subaru. Above those broad shoulders, there was no neck.

A twisted, ugly cross-section was exposed, and a rising black mist was seen writhing and dancing beyond the blood-gushing torso.

“Eh… heh… Unseen, Hand…?”

He stared blankly straight ahead.

Before him was Patrasche, whom he had assumed was possessed by Petelgeuse.

Her neck, too, was violently torn off right before Subaru’s eyes, and flung away with a heavy thud. Her massive body crashed to the ground, a not-insignificant tremor running through his feet.

At the same time, Wilhelm’s torso also lay on its side behind him. Before and behind Subaru, the lives of his reliable comrades, with whom he had just shared victory, were lost.

“This… huh? What… what…?”

His thoughts turned completely white, unable to form anything coherent.

He turned and looked down at the fallen Wilhelm. His head was nowhere to be found. There was no way to stop the gushing blood, nothing to do but watch as red stained the earth.

Suddenly, he noticed he had pulled the treasured sword from Wilhelm’s corpse.

He extended his arm as far as it could go with the long blade, aligning the tip with his own throat.

With difficulty, he finally aimed, and Subaru tilted his head.

“What… happened…?”

He understood nothing.

Understanding nothing, he pulled his extended arm sharply towards him.

A hot sensation rushed through his throat, and all strength drained from his body.

He understood nothing. He couldn’t comprehend. But there was one thing he did understand.

—Ah, he was dead.

Chapter 66:
—Fight

1

A swaying, drifting sensation, as if floating in water, permeated my entire body.

It was a dark world, endlessly dark.

No light source could be found; I couldn’t tell up from down, left from right. I felt no contact with anything, and before that, I couldn’t even feel my own limbs or the workings of my sensory organs like eyes and ears.

Even my consciousness was hazy, my thoughts unsettled.

Where was this? What was I? Why was I like this? Only aimless thoughts drifted and overflowed.

“—doing”

Suddenly, someone’s voice reached me from within the pitch black.

It wasn’t a sound that reached my trembling, earless eardrums, but consciousness itself. Hearing it, which directly shook my thoughts, I turned my awareness without finding the owner of the voice.

“—loving”

It was terribly fleeting, a sound that squeezed the listener’s heart with sorrow.

Thus, my own heart, hearing it, was painfully, agonizingly squeezed. But this sensation was accompanied by a somehow nostalgic sense of relief, incessantly evoking a beloved feeling that brought tears to the verge.

If I had fingers, I’d reach out to the voice’s owner.

If I had a mouth, I'd call the voice's owner's name.

If I had arms, I'd embrace the voice's owner.

If I had legs, I'd run to the voice's owner's side.

If I had a body, I'd never have to let go of the voice's owner.

Now, in this place, none of that was allowed to me, and it was terribly sad, irritating, painful, frustrating, and utterly regrettable.

"—I love you"

The same feeling.

Clearly, words took shape, vibrating as if striking my emotions, and a non-existent mouth cried out an explosion of feeling aloud.

The same feeling. No, more than that. No matter how much warmth was given, piled up, it surely wouldn't measure up to this burning desire for the other person.

Even if the other person felt the same, mine was still greater.

Love accelerated as if in a competition, yet the only one missing was the person to whom it should be delivered.

Swelling emotions, overflowing affection, brought forth unstoppable sins.

—The sloth that couldn't wipe away tears of sorrow.

—The lust that yearned to melt and become one.

—The gluttony that desired to devour and seize everything.

—The greed that wanted to love, seek, desire, and obtain everything.

—The wrath against an unreasonable world that wouldn't allow it.

—The pride that scorned everything but her.

The space, stained black, was being painted over with immense love.

My heart trembled. My soul was screaming. My very existence, having lost its form, yearned for it.

To give up everything, to expose everything, to vanish into this void. If only I could do that—

“Really?”

Suddenly, the call changed its tone, unsettling my heart.

Words that questioned my resolve. Words that asked if I affirmed shaping my current emotions into reality.

Of course, it’s obvious, what is there to hesitate about? So I thought.

However something was different. Something was catching. Something stopped my heart.

There was bewilderment. There was hesitation. Confusion. What on earth was this so—

“Can you end it?”

—I can’t possibly end it.

To the question, an answer came instantly, for some reason.

I didn’t know the beginning or the end, what I had seen or what I had sought, anything at all.

Full of unknowns, with nothing but unknowns, my emotions refused to accept remaining in ignorance.

I can’t end it. I can’t possibly end it. It hasn’t ended. I won’t let it end.

“What do you want to do?”

I want to do something about it. I will do something about it. Doing something about it is what I—

A voice escaped.

I realized my feet were on the ground. I had feeling in my limbs, and I clearly understood myself.

I still didn’t know what I had left behind. But I knew I had to run somewhere, that there was a place I had to rush to.

“You can’t meet me yet.”

“I know.”

I understood nothing. However I understood that.

Suppressing the urge to reach out, I turned my back on the voice and started running.

If I stopped for a moment, the lingering regrets would surely be too overwhelming to start running again. So I wouldn’t look back. I wouldn’t even turn my attention. Leaving it behind, abandoning it, moving further and further away—but one day, I would surely take that hand.

“—I love you”

The voice faded, and the world collapsed as if peeling away.

In front of me, in the pitch-black world, a single white light, the end of the darkness, became visible.

I ran, ran, ran, getting closer. When I reached it—

“Subaru.”

Finally, Natsuki Subaru felt his name called by that beloved voice, and he—

"—Bro?"

"Huh?"

Suddenly, my name was called, and at the same time, I felt a hand shaking my shoulder.

Pushed by a rough, firm palm, Subaru's consciousness returned to reality.

—The instant he grasped that, an immeasurable shiver ran through Subaru's entire body.

In just a few blinks, Subaru understood everything.

The blank space that had just appeared in his continuous consciousness—it was the disappearance and rebirth of his existence after experiencing death, something he'd gone through countless times before.

And then,

"No… way…!"

After overcoming such immense hardship, such dire straits, he had lost his life once again.

As a result, Subaru had lost every step of the process he'd gained on his way to that place—

"What's up, bro? You just completely zoned out, seriously."

Looking back in a hurry, Ricardo's dog-like face, with a suspicious look, was right there. A beastly breath wafted over his face, and Subaru instinctively,

"Frandass?!"

"Ow! What're you doing?!"

He unintentionally slapped Ricardo's snout away with his arm, and Ricardo, suddenly subjected to such rough treatment, blinked in confusion. At Ricardo's cry, surrounding gazes also turned their way, wondering what was happening.

Within that storm of gazes—Julius was there. Ferris was there. Mimi and Tivey, members of the subjugation force were also present, and above all,

"Are you feeling the fatigue, Subaru-dono?"

There was Wilhelm, speaking those words, showing concern for his condition.

"Ah…"

A breath escaped, like air letting out, and Subaru gently relaxed his shoulders, slumping, only now realizing he had been sitting on the ground.

Feeling the cold earth on his backside, Subaru lightly clenched the fist resting on the ground, confirming the rough sensation of grass and dirt within it, then murmured,

"The save point… it was updated…"

A narrow escape from death— It was a stroke of luck, not even a laughing matter, that brought him relief.

3

As far as I could tell from listening to everyone around me, Subaru had apparently returned right in the middle of a Witch Cult counter-strategy meeting, after the battle with the White Whale and his reunion with Julius.

Apparently, while I was giving a brief lecture on "Witch Cult hunting, even a monkey could do it," from their perspective, I suddenly seemed to have zoned out, my consciousness tripping to another world. In reality, given that I had regressed at that point, their interpretation wasn't wrong, but anyway.

"It was Petelgeuse… right? No, not 'right'."

Subaru wore a complex expression, caught between the good fortune of being able to return to this scene and the misfortune of being forced to 'Return by Death' in the first place.

'Return by Death' was nothing but a blunder, but the most important thing was that he had returned to his current location. At worst, there was a significant chance that he would have returned to the perpetually wounded face of the struggling greengrocer.

"Come to think of it, I remember going back to the old man's place the first time too… What is this? What kind of connection is this? Does this world have some kind of save point function attached to old men?"

There are all sorts of save points: public phones, mysterious crystals, old typewriters, or even confessing to a priest at a church.

"When you think about it, an old man as a save point is a fresh concept… Ricardo's similar in type too, so is that the connection for 'here and now'?"

"What's wrong with you, bro, staring at my face so much? Something wrong?"

"Nothing."

Subaru quickly averted his face, letting out a sigh to keep Ricardo from seeing his current expression.

He sighed, let his thoughts drift in a random direction to calm himself, just enough to barely disguise the uncontrollable trembling of his fist.

It wasn't that the fear of death, or the relief of being able to regain his life after falling, didn't contribute to the trembling.

They did, but what truly shook Subaru to his core was a different emotion—no, a passion.

The unquenchable, furious passion he held for his hateful, worst enemy, Petelgeuse Romanee-Conti of 'Sloth'.

That was the fundamental reason why Subaru was now burning with an uncontrollable tremor from within.

“Possession—that’s what I should call it. Abandoning his original body and moving into another, and that’s how he… Wilhelm-san and Patrasche.”

Subaru had witnessed, right before his eyes, the brutal twisting off of two heads—one human, one animal. Immediately after, his thoughts were hazy about what he was thinking, but he knew the outcome of the actions he took with that hazy mind.

He pulled the sacred sword from Wilhelm’s corpse and pierced his own throat.

It was true that he was shocked by the old swordsman’s death, but Subaru didn’t treat his own life so lightly or carelessly as to immediately commit suicide and wish for a redo.

It was possible that he considered it and chose the same outcome, hoping for a redo, but even then, he would have thought more thoroughly before doing so.

Which means,

“I don’t want to believe it, but… he got inside me?”

It was the worst situation imaginable, even just by its description, and the most awful state to even think about.

Of all things, to share a body with the most despicable being in this world, and even worse, if you looked only at the result, to have lost the struggle for control and been forced to commit suicide.

He had thought he’d been closely bound as a vessel and soul for seventeen years, but he was forced to realize how cold their relationship had been. Easily taking on other souls, what a loose body.

“That damn bastard, I already thought he was the worst… but now the meter’s completely red. What am I supposed to do?”

Subaru placed a hand on his chin, unable to do anything but gasp at the terrifying nature of Petelgeuse's authority.

If he could possess anyone he chose, without picking, and prolong his life, that would mean the inevitable eradication of his existence.

No matter how many times you killed him, if he could possess those around him and survive, then you wouldn't be able to destroy him unless you wiped out all of humanity.

He wanted to believe that he didn't possess such an unfair ability.

"In this kind of pattern, how can he be defeated? If possession has conditions, that's the easiest scenario to understand, but it's hard to discern. A limit on uses… I don't know that either."

If there were conditions for possession, even discerning them would be difficult to hypothesize.

His first body was a thin man, then a woman in her late teens or early twenties when they next met. Finally, Subaru's body. No commonalities could be found.

If there was a limit on uses, that would also be troublesome; he couldn't see a limit, and currently, he would have to be killed at least three times to die.

"If I knew one kill wasn't enough, I could probably mention it to Wilhelm-san and just defeat him… but if I can't see the endgame, even killing him will turn into a war of attrition."

At this point, Subaru realized the high difficulty of completely defeating Petelgeuse.

Looking back, even his fearlessness of death hinted at this possibility. If he could survive by switching bodies one after another, as he did when Puck froze him in the previous world, it all made sense.

At worst, truly the worst-case scenario—

"Giving up on defeating Petelgeuse… is that an option?"

If he prioritized Subaru's original objective, then it was indeed one of the means he should choose. It was a frustrating thought, though.

Natsuki Subaru was rushing back to the Mathers domain with his companions for no other reason than this: he desperately wanted to save the people in the mansion and village, more than annihilating the Witch Cult.

There had been a time when those feelings wavered, and he sought revenge with the annihilation of the Witch Cult as his supreme goal, driven by hatred. But now, that passion had subsided.

The one who made Subaru think this way was none other than the blue-haired girl.

Without her dedication, Subaru would still be wandering in deep darkness, lost without an exit, his heart worn thin.

What she told Subaru was not "defeat them".

It was to not give up on the lives of those important to him.

It was humiliating. He couldn't suppress the urge to gnash his teeth in frustration.

However even that was one way Subaru could help— No, one way only Subaru could save them.

Only Subaru, knowing of the Witch Cult's attack, could preempt it and rescue Emilia and the others. Prioritizing the Witch Cult's annihilation was merely about eliminating the root cause; if survival was the priority, then the option of escape was also worth considering.

Above all, the White Whale was defeated, and the alliance was still ongoing.

This time, they lacked sufficient preparation to defeat 'Sloth'. If they solidified their preparations to defeat 'Sloth' beforehand and devised a strategy similar to the White Whale, an opportunity to destroy him would naturally arise.

Therefore—

“Subaru-dono.”

Suddenly, his name was called in a quiet voice, and Subaru, who had been lost in a sea of thought, looked up.

In front of him, Wilhelm was looking at Subaru with eyes as clear as a reflected lake. His heart pounded loudly. It felt as if his very core was being seen through.

“Do you have some concern?”

“Ah, no…”

“It would be best to speak it. There is no need to bear it alone.”

To the stammering Subaru, Wilhelm pressed on as if to say he understood.

Noticing their exchange, the people around them also began to gather their gazes.

Feeling uncomfortable and embarrassed by the vortex of gazes, Subaru shook his head slightly.

“No, it’s not like that. I was just trying to organize my thoughts. It’s pointless to talk when things aren’t sorted out, right? So…”

“So, you were about to head towards the option of giving up, were you not?”

“Giving up, that’s not… it.”

Though gently, Subaru felt one of his considerations being denied and twisted his lips. ‘Giving up’ was a poor choice of words. Subaru simply wanted to avoid losing sight of his objective.

He had lost so many things because he had lost sight of it before, so now that he was given a chance to redo it, he wanted to make sure he didn’t let it slip from his grasp this time.

However to Subaru's thoughts,

"Subaru-dono, it may be the height of tactlessness for me to say this, but I will say it."

"O-Oh. It's a bit much when you're so formal. Yeah, I'm listening."

"—Fight."

Low, it was a 'word' that made the air tremble.

However, Subaru's body, his heart, his soul, certainly trembled upon receiving it.

Opening his eyes, Wilhelm —the Sword Demon— was staring directly at Subaru.

The demonic aura leaking from his entire body enveloped Subaru, gripping him and refusing to let go.

"If you have resolved yourself to fight, to resist, then fight with all your heart and soul. Do not give up for a single moment, a single second, not even an instant, but greedily cling to that single point of victory you envision. There must be no compromise, none whatsoever. If you can still stand, if your fingers can still move, if your fangs are not yet broken, then stand, stand, stand, stand, fight. —Fight."

"…"

It was strikingly similar to the words Subaru had once received from Wilhelm.

In the garden of Crusch's mansion, when Subaru was beaten down with a wooden sword, Wilhelm had, for that moment alone, shown a glimpse of the Sword Demon within him and spoken of the mindset for battle.

At that time, Wilhelm had called Subaru, who heard those words, a "person with no desire to grow stronger," and indeed, Subaru hadn't been serious in facing him.

However now, it was different. He believed so.

Because he felt he could be different, that he wanted to change.

“You’re saying, don’t compromise?”

“—Yes. No matter how difficult the path.”

“By choosing to fight, I involved many people in the battle with the White Whale. Now too, I’m involving everyone here by deciding to fight. —People will die, you know.”

As he spoke, he could feel his own courage shrinking.

The lives of others weighed heavily on Subaru’s judgments, thoughts, and actions. He now clearly realized that this had always been the case.

In the battle with the White Whale, Crusch’s intentions were also at play. The countless casualties and the weight of those lives in that battle rested on the shoulders of both Subaru and Crusch.

However the coming battle was different. This was a battle Subaru chose, Subaru desired, and Subaru started, involving others despite it all.

Subaru had to bear the lives of all those standing around him, equally, as they challenged this battle. This wasn’t a matter of duty or responsibility. It was a matter of soul and pride.

“Even so, you’ll go along with my selfishness? You’ll entrust your lives to my greedy, self-serving whims?”

“Why bring that up now, is it?”

To Subaru’s question of resolve, Wilhelm even offered a small smile.

Looking around, the others were also watching Subaru with similar expressions. Only Ferris had a grim face, which was entirely characteristic of him.

To Subaru, who was unable to move, surrounded by such gazes, Wilhelm nodded.

“To act in order to protect what you wish to protect—that is precisely the way of a knight. Therefore, as those who share the same aspiration, who among us could object to Subaru-dono’s path?”

“—!”

At Wilhelm’s words, the knights simultaneously drew their swords.

The beast-kin mercenary group, slow to react, saw this and, all with slight wry smiles, responded by drawing their own weapons and raising them slightly.

“I understand the feeling of lamenting insufficient power even when one has the will. —That is why we are here. We are now Subaru-dono’s sword. We are the power to grant Subaru-dono’s wish.”

“Sword…”

“Let us do what must be done. Not for anyone else. For your own—not selfishness, but your own wish.”

Subaru felt something drop from his chest, like a weight.

It was the same process as the dark thoughts surrounding Subaru clearing, and at the same time, an almost itchy embarrassment welled up.

—Above all, an unbearable euphoria of reliability.

“I have to save Emilia and the others.”

“Yes.”

“But it’s also true that I have to confront the Witch Cult bastards.”

“Yes.”

“Honestly, I thought it might be better to run. There’s a possibility this fight could be more troublesome than I thought. At worst, just knowing they're coming is a big win, so I thought maybe running was an option."

If it were the Subaru from before, he would surely have chosen that option.

He would have rationally reconciled his emotions and continued fighting down a less-than-ideal path until he achieved a passable result.

However when the knights affirmed him to this extent.

If he didn't respond to this—would he even be a man?

"This is the only chance to strike 'Sloth' of the Witch Cult. I can't predict when he'll come next, and there's no guarantee what form he'll take next time either."

"…"

"That guy, I have to finish him here. —Absolutely."

If he put it off, if he just escaped this time, there was no way he could escape the demon's clutches. He was tenacious. It was certain he would extend his demonic hand again somewhere, in a form Subaru didn't know. And when that happened, Subaru might not be in a position to intervene.

He should consider that such an opportunity as this time might never come again.

To be so pride as to think there would be a next time, or to be so clever as to compromise for the next best thing.

"Save Emilia and the others. Take down the Witch Cult. The tough part is having to do both. Are you ready? I… I've finally made up my mind."

"—Shall we go?"

"Yeah, let's go. It's a race against time. I'll get my thoughts in order on the way."

There were still things Subaru had to think about, obstacles he had to overcome, and hardships he had to endure.

Even so, because there were people who would lend their strength to the powerless Subaru. Because there was someone who would support the weak-willed Subaru's heart. —He could look forward, without bowing his head.

He would resist 'Sloth', which obstructed fate.

He would confront his own 'Sloth', which tempted him to escape to the easier, weaker path.

That is what it means to fight, and what it means to live.

Natsuki Subaru's battle to defeat 'Sloth's Petelgeuse.

—Natsuki Subaru's battle, once again begins.

Chapter 67:
Spirit Knight

There were countless things they had to consider.

As Subaru and the others resumed their march to the Mathers territory, cutting through the wind, two main objectives lay before them:

“Keep Emilia and the villagers safe from danger at the mansion.”

“Fight the Witch Cult planning the attack and take down Petelgeuse, the ‘Sloth’.”

Last time, they prioritized the latter, hoping to achieve the former simultaneously by succeeding. However, Petelgeuse’s unexpected tenacity in clinging to life thwarted that plan.

They didn’t know the extent of his possession, under what conditions it worked, or on whom. However the fact remained: he had gotten ahead of Subaru and the others, ambushed them at that location, and caused that catastrophe.

Overconfidence was forbidden—no, they had to employ every possible measure to achieve the best outcome.

“In that case, temporary evacuation —at worst, abandoning the mansion and the village— is essential.”

Subaru understood how heartless this decision would be for them.

It wasn’t easy for people to accept throwing away their familiar lives and running off with just the clothes on their backs. However they had to do it.

Their lives should be more important.

While he knew there were times when things had to take precedence over life, life itself should still be the highest priority, save for a very limited number of possibilities.

That was one thing Subaru absolutely wouldn't compromise on.

"Considering the time, we'll have to handle the evacuation and the Witch Cult Hunt simultaneously."

It was unclear how thoroughly Petelgeuse had prepared, but given that he'd hidden a group of that size around the mansion, it was too convenient to assume the village remained completely unaware of any unusual activity. Nine times out of ten, there would likely be lookouts, just as there had been when they attacked Subaru's dragon carriage on the highway.

If they rushed the evacuation, there was a higher chance the Witch Cult would discover it and act. Therefore, they needed to crush the Witch Cult before they could make a move.

"The procedure from last time should mostly be fine… Though it bothers me that we only found eight hideouts. But if we can find the remaining ones this time,"

Their chances of victory would significantly increase. At the very least, they could completely eliminate the possibility of being ambushed by unseen Witch Cultists. If the threat they had to deal with was limited to Petelgeuse, that would still be a sufficient outcome.

As for dealing with Petelgeuse, the biggest concern,

"It's no use if I'm not there to counter the Unseen Hand."

That was the one line he could never concede.

Last time, by prolonging the conversation and drawing Petelgeuse's attention, Wilhelm's surprise attack had allowed them to defeat the first Petelgeuse. This time, the flow of events could follow that precedent. The problem was encountering him a second time or more—

"No, should we consider capturing him alive? If he dies and then possesses someone, then if we don't let him die, it might work…"

Saying it aloud, it felt like a surprisingly huge blind spot.

Petelgeuse had seemingly possessed people twice before, both limited to when the possessed body died. They hadn't been able to narrow down the conditions for subsequent possessions. But if they could create a situation where he couldn't possess anyone in the first place, that would change everything.

If the surprise attack worked, creating that situation might not be so difficult.

"That's right. Just because we have to 'take him down' doesn't mean we only have to think about killing him! I don't know if there's a method like sealing him, but if it's possible,"

He felt it was doable.

If they knocked him unconscious with a surprise attack, they could gag him and tie him to a tree. If they isolated him at a distance where even his Unseen Hand couldn't reach, he'd just be a powerless madman, screaming and raving.

After that, it would be even better if they could ask Puck to put him in a cryo-stasis-like state and display him somewhere in an inaccessible, secluded area.

"You look like you're thinking something wicked."

Julius spoke to Subaru, whose lips twisted into a villainous smirk as a ray of hope appeared. Running alongside, he had silently observed Subaru lost in thought, but he must have noticed the change in his expression and realized a breakthrough had been made.

With a slight softening of his handsome profile, he lightly brushed back his wind-swept hair and said,

"If your thoughts have come together, I would like to hear them. Your judgment, having decided to fight."

"There might be holes, so I want to refine it a bit more… Time's short, but should I ask everyone to stop again?"

In any case, he needed to add several clarifications and changes to his earlier explanation.

Calling out to each person in their marching group and gathering them in a circle again would take a fair amount of time. It was irritating to feel like it would dampen their spirits when time was of the essence—

“No, there’s no need for that. I’ll take on the responsibility of relaying your words.”

Shaking his head slightly, Julius dismissed Subaru’s decision as unnecessary. Unable to grasp the intention behind his words, Subaru furrowed his brow slightly. Then, in front of him, Julius lightly flicked the fingers of his raised right hand, and the next moment—light overflowed.

“What—! You, that’s…”

“The faint glow of will that fills the atmosphere. If you’ve been by Lady Emilia’s side, you must have seen this beauty, haven’t you?”

Julius smiled back, pride in his eyes. Surrounding him, faint lights swam, accompanying him as he rode his ground dragon.

Subaru knew the true nature of those lights. He had seen them countless times, up close, beside that beloved girl.

It was—

“Lesser spirits…”

“To be precise, buds before they gain the status of spirits. They are what you might call—Quasi-Spirits.”

“Quasi-spirits… Don’t say it like ‘Quasi-Knight’.”

Subaru managed to respond, his lips twitching at Julius’s insistence on the term.

His face twitched not because he was depressed comparing his own face to Julius’s perfect one radiating self-satisfaction. Putting aside such trivial thoughts, Subaru considered Julius’s identity, accompanied by quasi-spirits—which meant,

“You were a Spirits Arts User?!”

“It would be more accurate to say ‘I am also a Spirits Arts User.’ As a knight, I believe I haven’t neglected my efforts in refining my sword skills. To call me more precisely, I would like you to call me this:”

As Subaru gasped in surprise, Julius closed his eyes, creating a brief pause. Subaru opened his mouth.

This flow, and this development, meant the next line to be spoken was—

“Grand Magus—!!”

“Spirit Knight… Mmm?”

He was wrong.

Julius gave Subaru a puzzled look as he stammered, trying to echo a famous line. Subaru quickly flushed with embarrassment and waved his hands, trying to cover his blunder, saying, “Oh, no, that’s not it,” as he fumbled.

“Ah, ahh, ahem. So, Spirit Knight! Yes, Spirit Knight, then! I see, hmm, that’s amazing, I’m convinced. Yes, truly. Spirits, huh… Spirit Knight?!”

“I’m glad you’re surprised. I didn’t expect it to be quite so much, though.”

Julius gave a wry smile as Subaru pretended to be calm, trying to process and understand, then spitting out his surprise.

As he gently extended his arm forward, shimmering lights gathered, as if perching on his arm. These were six different kinds of spirits, each emitting light of a different color. Recognizing this fact, Subaru realized.

Commanding six spirits of different colors meant, "Could it be that you can use all six types of magic?"

"—I see. You're quite quick-witted to notice that point without prior knowledge. It seems you haven't been spending your time under Lord Mathers doing nothing."

"No, it's not like I really received any magical instruction from Roschi… Ah, I guess there was a little bit in the bath."

The memory of receiving a brief lecture on magic while they both dangled their bits in the bath was a distant one now. Looking back, that too was an experience lost in this world.

Putting aside Subaru's muttering, which only a time traveler could understand, Julius showed him the spirits circling his arm.

"As you've guessed, with the cooperation of these children, I can wield all six types of attributes. For now, they are still just quasi-spirits, but the day will surely come when they bloom as beautiful flowers. That will be the true moment for me and them to stand as Spirit Knights."

"Sorry to interrupt your moment, but do quasi-spirits have genders? When they become full spirits… are spirits all like Puck, with strong personalities and physical forms? He seemed to think of himself as a male, or rather, a man."

In Puck's case, he seemed to view himself as Emilia's father figure, so his gender was likely correct. Sometimes he even showed the complex feelings of a mother, and you could glimpse his struggles.

Anyway, Julius tilted his head as if it were obvious in response to Subaru's question.

"How could I not treat such beautiful, radiant children as females? What is it you're wondering about?"

"It makes me sick to think we might understand each other on that point! Can we move on, because this isn't getting us anywhere?!"

"Just a joke, have a graceful heart. —Now, In and Nes. I ask of you."

Julius shrugged dramatically at Subaru's outburst, then called out to the two lights—white and black—perched on his fingertips. The spirits suddenly began to glow brighter.

"These are In and Nes, the quasi-spirits who govern yin and yang. By combining elemental magic and harmonizing their interference with mana, you can achieve something that's usually considered difficult."

"Something like…?"

"A will that's conveyed without words—that is, the advanced mind-reading magic, 'Nect'."

He winked with one eye, and the light rushed to engulf the group.

And then, in Subaru's mind, swallowed by the light, suddenly began to flow—

SETOWI

“I’m hungry~! I’m hungry hungry hungry hungry! Riger’s back fur is so warm~, I’m sleepy~, but if I sleep I’ll get yelled at~. Tivey always takes away my snacks when he gets mad~, that’s so mean~, Mimi’s supposed to be my big sister, booo. I want a ringa~!”

“SHUT UUUUPPPP—!!!”

Thought waves from an impossible distance and mind poured into Subaru with incredible force. Whose they were, there was no need to consider, but the surging waves didn’t stop with just one person. That’s right.

“About two more hours until Mathers territory, then a battle with the Witch Cult. A visit to Theresia’s grave will have to wait until we return to the capital.” “Damn, these injuries are really starting to ache. This isn’t the time to complain, but if I can’t take it anymore, I might have to get serious.” “Big Sis is making that face she makes when she’s hungry. I shouldn’t spoil her, but if I don’t, it’ll be a hassle. My brother isn’t here so I have to suffer like this.” “It’s a command so I guess I have no choice, but I’m worried about Lady Crusch~. I hope she returns to the capital safely. We defeated the White Whale, so now the Royal Selection is like Lady Crusch’s solo run, stable and all? Ahh, I want to go home and be praised soon!” “Chikuwa Daimyojin.”

“Who was that just now—?!”

“That would be you. Let’s lessen the empathy a bit. Perhaps your mana interference is a bit weak. Having it be too strong is also a problem.”

Seeing Subaru almost short-circuit from the massive influx of information, Julius instructed the pair of spirits to reduce its intensity.

Once the flow of others’ superficial thoughts subsided somewhat, and he confirmed that he could now filter information, Subaru turned back to Julius.

“So, this ‘Nect’ magic… is the reason we don’t have to stop?”

"It's a perfect magic for strategy meetings. Its effect isn't very long, nor does it work over a wide range. Furthermore, to share consciousness to this extent requires a certain degree of trust between us. It can also serve as a test to gauge whether one trusts another. It's difficult to apply in combat, though."

"Is that so? If you could hear people's thoughts, wouldn't you be super strong in a fight?"

In manga and anime, telepaths are often among the strongest characters—that's practically a trope.

However Julius smiled faintly at Subaru's simple idea and shook his head.

"I said it was empathy. If it's too weak, thoughts won't reach as they are now, but if it's too strong…"

"Then what?"

"You would lose the boundary between yourself and others. Don't you think it's a rather terrifying thought to be cut down and die by your own hand?"

"Ugh… Is that how it is?"

Apparently, intruding into others' thoughts carried unexpected dangers.

Subaru grumbled softly about the convenience offset by such difficulties, but Julius continued, "However…"

"It's rare for In and Nes to misjudge the Nect magic. Perhaps, Subaru, you have a high affinity for spirits."

"Affinity for spirits, you mean like we get along well?"

"That would be it. This is largely an innate quality. Whether one can become a Spirits Arts User hinges entirely on being familiar enough with spirits to form a contract with them. Have you had any such experiences before?"

"Even if you say so…"

Holding the reins, he couldn't cross his arms and frequently tilted his head in thought. However, in Subaru's original world, the very existence of spirits wasn't acknowledged. Even after coming here, he hadn't had any opportunities for a Great Spirit to rush in and go "ear-bone!" during a crisis. In fact, his experience with spirits was…

"The most I've done is occasionally glimpse Emilia-tan talking to the lesser spirits in the mansion garden every morning. Other than that, I've only talked to Puck… Oh, my experience level is so low…!"

"If you haven't been blessed with opportunities, that can happen. Perhaps after this is all over, you might consider asking Lady Emilia for guidance. I think there's a possibility."

Subaru furrowed his brow at Julius's words, his lips softening.

Julius maintained his elegant composure at this reaction, asking, "Is something wrong?" Subaru replied, "No," averting his gaze from him.

"I was just wondering why you're being so cooperative. Don't you have some ulterior motive?"

"Spirits Arts Users are simply few in number. It's rare to find someone with whom one can share such topics. Therefore, I won't hesitate to offer a helping hand."

"If I could use it right away, I'd consider it, but it's not really that kind of situation… Well, I'll gratefully accept your goodwill, though."

Despite the unexpected possibility offered to him, Subaru put off considering it. He had been told he had no talent for swords or magic. While he had no expectations for his own talent as a Spirits Arts User, right now, he simply couldn't afford the time.

"For now, about that Nect… that's what it was, right? I'll take it. Make it weak, just enough to be convenient like telepathy. I'm done with people's thoughts flooding into my head."

"I've roughly grasped the wavelength from before. There's no problem. —Nect."

Julius pressed a finger to his lips, and the pair of spirits dwelling there began to glow.

Immediately after the pretentious incantation, a faint light enveloped their surroundings as before.

"Ah, ahh, how is it? Can everyone hear me?"

Hesitantly, Subaru transmitted his thoughts. The intention behind it was for it to reach them; if the magic had misfired, he would just be a pitiable chuunibyou patient convinced there was a mind-reader present.

"We hear you, Subaru-dono."

"We hear you, don't worry."

"Mmm-hmm! I know it! You're trying to read Mimi's mind! You spy for the enemy organization!"

More or less, the replies Subaru expected came back. Only one person seemed to be acting like a cute chuunibyou patient, but he gently ignored that and continued.

"With Julius's magic, it's like telepathy, or something similar. I have a few additions to what we discussed earlier, so please just listen for now. Questions and anything else are welcome as we go."

Relieved that he felt everyone's consent, Subaru began to recount his earlier draft plan. It was an amateur's plan, full of holes, but if they all put their heads together, it would become something decent.

Searching for solutions, and never stopping thinking and acting to achieve the best outcome.

That was Subaru's way of fighting, for someone who couldn't swing a sword, use magic, or do anything.

“So, the first change is, I need some of you to go into the village ahead of us. There, I want you to rendezvous with the insurance I arranged.”

“Insurance, you say?”

What reached his mind directly was hard to distinguish by tone, but instead, he could identify the speaker by the emotional waves transmitted. Naturally, the calm tone was Wilhelm’s, and Subaru found himself nodding in response to the mental voice.

“Oh, I accidentally nodded. That Japanese part of me, bowing politely over the phone, showing up here…!”

“Bro, you’re getting all emotional at a weird time, but you should really make good use of the magic. That Young Master Julius is scary when he gets mad.”

“I don’t possess such narrow-mindedness to get angry over something like this. However, I must give a lower evaluation for squandering limited time.”

“I’ll—I’ll do it properly! I was just about to do it! The insurance! The insurance thing!”

Ricardo and Julius’s exasperation reached him, and after experiencing the strange sensation of stammering mentally, Subaru slowly began to outline the strategy.

“Before we left the capital, I asked Anastasia and Russell to spread the word: ‘Lord Mathers wants to hire merchants heading for the capital along the highway. He’ll buy their cargo at their asking price, so he wants them to lend their services.’”

“—! Subaru, that’s…”

“It’ll be a painful expense… but it’s not worth the lives of the territory’s people. As a lord, that’s just common sense, isn’t it? Especially since that guy’s, well, absent or something and useless when it matters most.”

It was a rather terrible reason—if a situation could be solved with money, and it wasn't his own money, there was no reason to hesitate—but Subaru's plan seemed to be working.

Indeed, last time a considerable number of merchants had gathered in the village, lining up dragon carriages and ground dragons at the edges of the village, preparing.

Preparations to evacuate Emilia and the villagers, carrying them all away at once.

"I've had an envoy leave the capital with a letter, sort of a formal dispatch. It says the Witch Cult might attack and asks them to evacuate using the merchants' dragon carriages. I don't know if there's any complicated handwriting analysis or judgment needed here, but I think Emilia-tan will make the right call."

He thought there would certainly be confusion at first.

In fact, even if the letter arrived safely, Subaru knew its contents wouldn't be easily accepted. That's why he believed the problem lay elsewhere.

It was:

"To make them judge the letter's contents quickly, it's not just the merchants, but someone who thoroughly grasps the situation should go."

"You're quick on the uptake, that helps. In reality, it's almost certain that the villagers and merchants will quarrel. We need to smooth that over and get them to evacuate quickly. Honestly, I know it would be quickest if I went myself, but…"

Subaru was well aware that as someone they knew and who had earned a certain degree of the villagers' trust, his persuasion wouldn't take much time.

As someone with no combat ability, it was certainly best for Subaru to go to the village as an envoy and persuade Emilia and the others at the mansion. But that wouldn't do.

If Subaru went there, dealing with the Witch Cult would inevitably fall to the remaining main forces. He didn't even consider the possibility of them losing to mere Witch Cultists, but Petelgeuse was a different matter entirely. To confront him head-on,

"To face a Sin Archbishop, I have to be there. As it stands… only me and Wilhelm-san can defeat him."

"—May I ask for your reasoning? Without conceit, I don't believe my skills would be a hindrance to Sir Wilhelm. Moreover, sending you to the main battlefield…"

It was Julius who immediately countered Subaru's words.

Subaru understood the meaning and basis of his pride. Indeed, in terms of sheer skill, Julius could certainly handle Petelgeuse. But that wouldn't do.

When facing that madman, skill or resolve didn't matter.

"The Sin Archbishop uses some kind of strange trick, I don't know what it is, but it makes the victim lose their sanity and become unable to fight. I call it 'mental pollution,' and the only ones I can think of who can withstand it are me and Wilhelm-san."

"Mental pollution, you mean like the White Whale's mist?"

Ferris's voice reached him, and Subaru sent a thought of agreement.

Then, he turned to Julius, who was riding alongside him, without speaking.

"The White Whale used that same method of making people lose their minds. In that battle, I saw those who didn't lose their sanity… but I don't know your resistance, since you weren't in the White Whale fight."

"If I were to lose my sanity on the spot, I would become a hindrance to your fight… Is that what you mean?"

Julius closed his eyes regretfully, he probably couldn't think of a logical rebuttal.

His struggling expression and strong regret directly conveyed to Subaru made him understand the pain of his inability to participate in the White Whale battle.

Subaru averted his gaze, sensing that directly touching his emotions any further would become troublesome.

“So, Wilhelm-san. I want you to fight the devil with me.”

“My body is now Subaru-dono’s sword. You wield it, and I will cut. —To question my resolve on that path would be uncouth.”

“Oh my god, that’s so cool I’m getting wet.”

“Where? What?”

“Big Sis should be quiet.”

While Subaru trembled, overwhelmed by the cool declaration that made him want to be embraced, the siblings were performing their comedy routine.

It had to be said that this was an utterly irreverent turn for a strategy meeting, but it was also part of their current charm. After all, they weren’t functioning as an army; they were just a motley crew of misfits united by a common goal.

Since he was the one leading them—a listless, powerless, ordinary, and morally questionable person—that’s how it would be.

That’s why Subaru didn’t hesitate, nor did he feel overly pressured.

He would entrust what could be entrusted, do what needed to be done, and somehow make everything work out.

“Alright, then I’m counting on you. —I’ll rely on you, cling to you, and let you carry me.”

Chapter 68:
Sloth Capture Front

1

Subaru felt a clammy, unpleasant sweat trickle down his forehead.

How many times had he ventured alone into the dark forest now? If he counted the times he was chased by the Ulgarms or his twilight chases with Rem, Subaru was quite used to scrambling through exposed dirt in the mountains.

However, each of those instances had been urgent, and he certainly had no memories of calmly traversing beast trails. The sensation of treading on grass in those recent days had been utterly dreadful, and nothing had changed, even now, with the same objective.

No, with his hatred for his rendezvous growing, one could say his mood had soured even further.

Subaru inhaled, then exhaled, trying to control his quickening pulse. The cold sweat reminded him of the malice awaiting him, and his spirits sank.

He yearned for a calm heart, to possess a heart of steel.

He wished for a strong, resilient, and unwavering spirit that wouldn't be swayed by any passion or cower before any malice.

If he could achieve that, he thought, surely he could have avoided hurting many people and handled many situations much better.

Why was he, weak, fragile, and utterly helpless, standing in such a place? Why him?

Weakness threatened to crush Subaru's spirit. His trembling knees seemed to root him to the spot, anticipating the impending disaster.

A part of him thought, "Couldn't it be someone else?" Then, "You said you wanted me."

Now, Subaru stood, clinging only to those words.

He encouraged his trembling knees and chastised his faltering heart, his face set forward.

Wiping away his sweat and gritting his teeth to keep them from chattering, he knew his destination was just ahead.

"…"

The shadows surrounding Subaru bowed respectfully, as if paying homage. Previously, Subaru would have felt intense disgust at being treated as a superior being.

Not now. Now, he smirked triumphantly at the reverence from those detestable beings—because they had made him this way.

"This is actually the ninth time I've said this in this forest, but get lost. Go back to your nests quietly and don't show your faces for a while. I have important business with 'Sloth' up ahead."

"…"

With a wave of his arm and a somewhat determined expression, Subaru spoke, and the figures in black melted into the darkness. They were still as enigmatic as ever.

Compared to the easily identifiable Petelgeuse, their threat level might be lower, but perhaps their unknown nature made them even more unsettling.

Leaving such thoughts behind, he walked straight down the path created by the vanished figures in black.

He leaped over slippery moss and stepped over winding tree roots. Suddenly, his vision opened up to a sheer cliff face blocking his way, towering high.

Directly in front of it, the malice that awaited him stood.

"I've been awaiting you, favored believer—"

Petelgeuse stood there, arms outstretched, his face alight with joy as he adopted a welcoming posture. This was the third time he'd heard these familiar welcoming words. Their unchanging nature somehow conveyed the genuine depth of the man's intentions.

"I am Petelgeuse Romanee-Conti! Sin Archbishop of the Witch Cult, representing 'Sloth'!"

"I know", Subaru almost spat out in irritation, but he managed to stop himself just short of interrupting the declaration.

Even though he had resolved to remain calm and solemn, Petelgeuse's madness alone grated on Subaru's nerves, provoking him beyond measure.

Subaru exhaled, then inhaled, re-acknowledging the weight on his shoulders. This helped him regain some composure, and he allowed a small, easygoing smile to form on his lips.

"Thanks for the grand welcome. To be greeted personally by an Archbishop is a great honor… I didn't think I was worth that much myself."

"There's no need for modesty. The dense favor overflowing from your body. It cannot be hidden, and surely you are not unaware? The affection you embody already rivals even a Sin Archbishop!"

Waving his arms at Subaru's words, Petelgeuse vehemently lectured, stamping his feet on the ground.

His eyes, lit with a manic gleam, shone brightly, and he extended his tongue, licking Subaru with a literal gaze from head to toe.

"When I sensed it, I thought 'no way', but truly… are you not 'Pride'?"

"Even if you say 'Pride', I don't quite understand. Could you tell me a little more, in detail? About the Archbishops… and the ordeals?"

The word "Pride" had come up in conversation, and Petelgeuse's suspicion of Subaru being Pride had been a recurring exchange in previous loops. Subaru seized the opportunity, trying to extract information about the “ordeals” Petelgeuse had mentioned repeatedly.

The ordeals, in other words, likely referred to the entire assault plan. If he could get that information, it would be easier to formulate a countermeasure. If asking this enraged Petelgeuse — though a bit early— it would simply signal the start of the battle.

In response to Subaru’s somewhat resolved words,

“It’s fine. Information about the road blockade will likely take some time to spread. The same goes for the start of the ‘ordeals’—we still have plenty of time.”

“Oh… a road blockade, huh?”

Far from getting angry, Petelgeuse seemed rather pleased by Subaru’s seemingly cooperative attitude. He clapped his hands gleefully and stepped towards Subaru.

Feeling cold sweat on his back from the madman’s approach, Subaru maintained a composed demeanor, tilting his head.

“A road blockade? Are you playing some kind of trick?”

“It’s ‘Fog‘. I think that explains enough?”

“I see. That explains it.”

Subaru responded curtly to the brief answer.

With just that exchange, he was now certain that Petelgeuse and his group had not yet heard about the White Whale’s defeat.

While he knew the White Whale was an agent of the Witch Cult—in this case, “Gluttony”—their coordination had been an unknown factor, but now it was clear.

If they believed the road was blocked by fog—there were likely no other Witch Cult members stationed on the road. Letting Emilia and the others proceed straight down the road now seemed like a viable strategy.

“But blocking the road with fog and conducting your ‘ordeals’ without any interference, huh? You play dirty, Petelgeuse-san.”

“The ordeals are sacred and inviolable! No matter the hardship, one must overcome all difficulties to face them, or else it is disingenuous to love! Yes! To love! To the love directed! To the love given! We! Must respond!!”

“Ah, crap, I hit his switch.”

Subaru’s careless turn of phrase seemed to have flipped Petelgeuse’s “love” switch.

Petelgeuse arched his back, looking upwards, eyes wide as he roared. Subaru’s voice couldn’t reach him. He fervently stretched his arms towards the sky, as if some unseen entity existed there, shedding a single tear amidst his madness.

“Everything is for love, to die for love! To the existence itself, the outrageous silver half-elf, and the sin of bearing it! An ordeal of whether she can still walk that path! We must test if she is truly worthy! Whether she can be diligent, not slothful! That path! With my own hands, with this body, with this —love!!”

“Test if she’s worthy…?”

“Yes! That is what the trials are for! Therefore, one must be tested, one must test! To incorporate the Witch Factor, to see if one’s body is suitable for the vessel—!”

Petelgeuse fumbled in his robes and pulled out a black-bound book.

He lovingly turned its pages with his fingers, caressing each word of the densely packed text like a madman.

“My role recorded in the Gospel, a testament of love I must fulfill! If you are ‘Pride’! You should understand this surging emotion of mine! For us Sin Archbishops to gather all at once, it has been four hundred years since such a thing last occurred!”

“Wait! Witch Factor, ‘Pride’—this conversation isn’t making any sense yet…”

“The Gospel! I demand the presentation of the Gospel! I want to burn the love you have been bestowed upon my eyes! That’s right, RightRightRightRightRightRightRightRightRiiiiigghhtt!!”

Petelgeuse lunged forward, his face so close Subaru could feel his breath. A putrid odor reached him, and his extended tongue almost touched Subaru’s nose. A sudden surge of disgust made Subaru leap back slightly.

Petelgeuse’s gaze followed him, as if Subaru’s reaction was unexpected, and he tilted his head ninety degrees, forming a grotesque posture.

“The Gospel, the presentation of…”

Hearing him say that in a quiet voice, with those mad eyes, Subaru decided this was as far as he would get.

There were still countless things he wanted to ask, and what he had managed to extract was hardly substantial. But for now, nothing more was possible. So,

“Alright, just wait.”

Subaru reached into his robe, complying with Petelgeuse’s demand.

He wasn’t pulling out a Gospel, but rather, the answer that would show the madman, who demanded proof of his allegiance, exactly who Subaru was.

“This is—my answer!”

He shouted, swinging his drawn arm straight up—and instantly, the light of the magic crystal blazed, a white flash visible from anywhere in the forest.

Petelgeuse shielded his eyes from the blinding light but immediately judged Subaru to be an enemy.

“Bearing such favor upon your person… what insolence—!!”

Petelgeuse glared at Subaru with an enraged expression. His shadow exploded, and the black, murderous demonic hands stretched out.

The demonic hands rushed directly for Subaru’s neck. Subaru ducked low, sidestepping past their fingertips.

“Wilhelm-san! Twins!”

At Subaru’s call, Mimi and Tivey, who had been stealthily following behind him, burst out of the forest.

The siblings simultaneously kicked off trees and soared through the air, spinning as they leaped over Petelgeuse’s diminutive figure towards the cliff face—opening their mouths, a roar reverberated.

“Wha—!”

“Ha—!!”

A resonant wave ripped up the earth, and the rock face, engulfed by the vibrations, collapsed with a thunderous sound. The second successful burial surprised Petelgeuse, who blinked at the sheer destruction. And from behind his wide-open guard,

“To turn your back on an enemy—!”

Wilhelm dashed forward, low to the ground, like a serpent.

The old swordsman’s speed was like the wind. Petelgeuse, noticing his approach, turned around—but it was far too slow.

The shadows lunged at the Sword Devil, but the raised blade swung up and down far faster.

The slash landed with a dull thud, severing Petelgeuse’s right arm midway up the bicep. Time seemed to freeze at the vivid wound, but the blade’s movement was uninterrupted. It flashed white and spun around—and with a resounding smack, the flat of the sword struck the back of Petelgeuse’s head.

"—Gah!"

The sharp blow instantly unfocused Petelgeuse's eyes, and he collapsed to his knees without resistance. At the same moment, a torrent of blood gushed from the wound where his right arm had been severed.

Subaru stared blankly at the ground, which was now thoroughly stained crimson, then hurried towards Petelgeuse. He pulled a handkerchief from his pocket, intending to staunch the bleeding, as he couldn't afford for the madman to bleed to death, but—

"Subaru-dono! It's still dangerous!"

"Dangerous, you say… whoa?!"

Wilhelm's sharp voice stopped Subaru. As Subaru started to turn, he was startled to see Petelgeuse lurching upright in front of him.

The madman swayed violently, still with his eyes rolled back, foam bubbling from the corners of his mouth, yet he managed to turn his head.

"The response from my fingertips… has ceased… what did you do…?!"

Spewing a fatal amount of blood, Petelgeuse paid no mind to his rapidly shortening lifespan, sticking out his bloodied tongue and performing his madness.

He must have resisted losing consciousness with pain so intense it almost made him bite off his tongue. It was a method only possible for a mind that didn't flinch from self-harm, but at this point, it was extremely bad.

"Wilhelm-san! It'd be bad if he dies, knock him out and tie him up!"

"To subdue without killing—it's not my strong suit, but as you wish!"

The Sword Devil replied, swaying his body up and down, and leaped forward with an uncanny motion.

Petelgeuse, still with unfocused eyes, turned his face towards Wilhelm, extending the swelling shadow hands towards the old swordsman. But,

“They’re erratic… because of the head damage, huh!”

The number of extending arms increased to thirteen, fourteen, fifteen, but their movements towards Wilhelm were uncoordinated. They wavered, trembled, and created useless, undulating motions, unable to catch up to Wilhelm, who moved like the wind without any intention of avoiding them.

Above all, Wilhelm’s bewildering footwork didn’t allow it.

“Seriously?!”

Wilhelm’s figure blurred slightly as he swayed up and down, and in the next moment, the old swordsman seemed to be simultaneously present both above and below. One clone kicked off the ground from above, while the other moved low to sweep at the feet—a masterful body-splitting technique. Even Petelgeuse foamed at the mouth at this extraordinary feat.

“A pitiful fool who knows nothing of favor—!”

“I know nothing of the love you speak of. This body is busy enough loving just one woman—!”

A battle cry met his challenge, surpassing it with sheer swordsmanship. Petelgeuse, pale-faced, swung his unseen hands. Perhaps his rage had overcome his injuries, for they relentlessly pursued both of Wilhelm’s split images, raging as they tried to entangle and tear apart the old man’s body with their fingertips.

“I got —you!”

“Unfortunately,”

However, Petelgeuse’s triumphant smile instantly vanished as the images disappeared beyond his grasping fingertips.

Wilhelm’s figures, which should have been attacking from both above and below, vanished—and then, neither above nor below, the figure of the old swordsman running straight across the ground materialized directly in front of the madman.

“Im, possible…!”

“The essence of killing intent, sword energy, and footwork application—did you enjoy the exquisite swordplay, I wonder!”

He twisted his body, and the groaning flat of the sword struck Petelgeuse’s left temple.

A sharp, steel-on-flesh impact echoed, and blood momentarily spurted from his cracked forehead. Petelgeuse, who did not lose consciousness even after taking that blow, moved his neck, still feeling the cold touch of the blade on his left cheek.

“Your sword’s brilliance is tremendous… you are truly a diligent person… bleh?!”

“My apologies,”

Petelgeuse tried to extend his tongue towards the blade still pressed against his cheek. However the scabbard of Wilhelm’s treasured sword, drawn from his waist, struck the opposite side of his face.

“I, Im… Possible…!”

He swung both hands, sheathing his treasured sword with a light clink. Then, in a flowing motion, he returned it to his waist. Immediately after, Wilhelm gave a faint smile to Subaru, who watched in astonishment, and bowed at the waist.

“As per your instructions, the Archbishop—has been captured alive.”

As the old swordsman transformed into an old gentleman, the unconscious madman finally collapsed to the ground.

“He’s unconscious now, right? Are you sure? Is it safe to approach? No, I can’t have him die, so I need to give him first aid quickly.”

“You’re such a scaredy-cat, mister. It’s fine if this guy just dies, isn’t it?”

“Big sis, you were supposed to have been told that his death would cause problems. Anyway, I’ve managed to stop the bleeding for now.”

Around the collapsed and motionless Petelgeuse, Subaru hovered nervously while Mimi pointed and laughed at him. Ignoring the two useless individuals, Tivey efficiently wrapped cloth around Petelgeuse’s arm, dressing the wound to stop the bleeding.

Meanwhile, Wilhelm surveyed the collapsed cave. The old swordsman returned and gave a generous nod to Subaru, who urged for results with his eyes.

“From what I can see, it’s completely buried. I don’t think there’s another exit to the cave, so it’s safe to assume the Witch Cultists inside have been annihilated.”

“I see… I guess that’s not exactly news to pump our fists about, though.”

“Why not?”

Even though they were enemies, it was a situation involving life and death.

Subaru wasn’t yet so accustomed to the ways of this other world that he could openly celebrate such news. Finding this strange, Mimi, despite her adorable features, spoke with a cruel view of life and death.

“If you think about complicated stuff when you’re beating up enemies, you’ll never finish. You beat up enemies, you save everyone. You get money, you sleep in your futon. I think it’s better to do that than to think about complicated stuff.”

"That's a good, simple outlook… No, it's probably just me being too soft. I'm not going to argue about that. More importantly…"

Subaru's gaze drifted towards the forest, thinking of the others who should have acted on his signal. Since they were largely following the previous plan, the surprise attacks should have succeeded for every group.

However, this time, there were two more hideouts to attack than last time. Additionally, several people had been sent ahead to the village, which meant the combat strength in each location was reduced.

He had struggled to reassign Ricardo to a different position and ensure that the groups that seemed to have struggled last time didn't lose strength, so he hoped no mistakes had occurred.

"Besides, we've got the crucial Petelgeuse secured here."

He nudged the unconscious Petelgeuse with his foot, flipping him over.

His limp body, combined with his thinness, looked frail. Without his usual madness, he could easily pass for a sick man. His black robes were now soaked with his own blood, making him appear even closer to death.

"So, what will you do with him? Will you leave him behind with a guard?"

"That's a tough one. There's no guarantee he won't wake up and escape with his 'Unseen Hand', and if he gets away, we might not be able to deal with him… For now, we have no choice but to take him with us."

"The 'Unseen Hand', you say… It may be ungraceful to mention the inscrutability of the Witch Cult now, but a spell different from both magic and spirit arts is unsettling, isn't it?"

"It's also different from curses or that kind of thing. If I compare it to my world's common sense, it's closer to psychic powers. You could even say the Unseen Hand is a variant of psychokinesis."

Following the caster's intent, invisible hands perform actions.

It was precisely that; if applied to modern knowledge from his original world, it would fall under psychokinesis. The fact that Subaru could see it meant it was likely a different category altogether.

"Anyway, there's no way to prevent it. Even if we bind his hands, it probably won't affect the 'Unseen Hand.' Speaking of which, how do you restrain mages?"

"If your opponent is a mage, you simply need to cover their mouth to prevent them from chanting. It's difficult with spirit users, as spirits themselves can manipulate mana."

"I see. Indeed, Puck doesn't seem like the type to stay quiet even if he heard Emilia-tan was captured."

After seeing his true form, Subaru's perception of that small, grey-furred cat had changed considerably.

Regardless of Puck's usual demeanor, his entire being was devoted to Emilia. Even if the aforementioned situation occurred, scattering everyone other than Emilia would be a trifle for him.

Subaru wasn't confident he could calmly converse with the usually peaceful Puck again. He didn't want to believe things had changed, but…

"And what are you doing while I'm lost in thought, little one?"

"Not 'little one', it's Tivey. Yes, just a quick search of his belongings."

Tivey rummaged through Petelgeuse's pockets after finishing the treatment.

The black robe's pockets seemed surprisingly deep, and Tivey pulled out item after item that had been stowed inside.

"Portable food and a lagmite stone. Oh, he even has a wallet."

“That’s a surprisingly mundane item list for someone like him. Also, that’s not very polite, no matter that you’re a mercenary.”

“I pride myself on being the intellectual of the group, but at heart, I’m still a mercenary. Taking spoils from the vanquished is… what is this?”

While uttering such stark realities, Tivey tilted his head, holding a black-bound book. Subaru recognized it and let out an “Ah!”

“That’s the book Pete-ko called the Gospel.”

“—! This is the Gospel! Ew, I touched it!”

Tivey reacted instantly with revulsion at Subaru’s words.

He dropped the Gospel he was holding as if it were hot, threw it on the ground, and then kicked sand over it as he backed away. He looked just like a panicked kitten.

"Be careful with books… as a book lover myself, that's a bit disheartening. Even if they're just light novels."

Recalling the many stories he had devoured, Subaru picked up the fallen book and brushed off the dust. However Tivey shook his head at him.

"Y-You should let go of it right away, I think. The Gospel is like proof of initiation that reaches the Witch Cultists' hands. If you touch it, your head might go crazy, you know?!"

"I don't think my mental damage resistance over the past few days has increased enough for me to be driven mad by just one book… I can't read what's inside."

He flipped through the contents, but the writing was in some mysterious language that was neither the I-script, Ro-script, nor Ha-script Subaru had been studying.

It looked somewhat like overly artistic hiragana, but it was too stylized to read, making comprehension difficult. Regardless,

"I'll keep it, just in case. Even if I can't read it, someone else might."

It was an Archbishop's possession. Perhaps this "Gospel" could provide a clue to understanding their true nature.

That was the hope behind keeping it, but Tivey's gaze, watching him, still couldn't hide his apprehension.

"Don't be so scared. Besides, for someone so scared of the book, you were pretty diligently searching his pockets, weren't you?"

"Between a cursed person and a book that might curse me, I'm more afraid of the latter. Besides, if I and Big Sis are here, defeating a cursed person is no problem."

"Oh, yeah! Mimi and Tivey can do it easily!"

Still not engaging with the content of the conversation, the older sister agreed with her brother's words through her actions.

Feeling even a touch of amusement at their exchange, Subaru, still clutching the Gospel, looked down at Petelgeuse lying on the ground.

"So, were there any other notable belongings? If there was a map, we might find a rendezvous point for his subordinates, or if we're lucky, even a Witch Cult meeting place."

"I don't see any such belongings. Aside from that Gospel, he looks like he came out with only the clothes on his back."

In terms of light clothing, Petelgeuse's attire was indeed peculiar. But twisting his head wouldn't provide an answer.

Deciding that no further gains could be made here, Subaru turned around.

"For now, restrain him tightly and keep watch so he doesn't wake up. If he does wake up, just hit him once to knock him out again. It's brutal, but can I count on you, Wilhelm-san?"

"I am called the Sword Devil; I shall undertake it. What's next, evacuation?"

Wilhelm tied Petelgeuse up with a rope and, hoisting the small figure onto his shoulder, asked. Subaru nodded, confirming, "That's right."

"Regardless of clearing out the Witch Cult, getting Emilia-tan and the others to safety is the priority. After we get everyone away from 'Sloth', we'll decide what to do with him."

"Dropping him into the outside world from the Great Waterfall while he's unconscious. Or perhaps sealing him in a magic stone like the Witch they worship, that's also an option."

"I want to hear more details, but let's put it off. It's good to have options."

They would iron out the details of Petelgeuse's fate later.

Wilhelm’s vigilant eyes would eliminate the possibility of escape and suicide. All that was left was for the other teams’ attacks to succeed and for them not to make any missteps.

“Alright. Well then, finally, after a long time… shall we go meet my goddess?”

In some ways, this required even more nerve than facing Petelgeuse.

With his heart burning with such resolve, Subaru and the others headed towards the village, aiming for a rendezvous.

3

Exiting the trees and rejoining the road, Patrasche and the other ground dragons, who had been waiting, greeted Subaru’s group.

The plan was for successful assault teams to ride the ground dragons they’d left behind and rendezvous at the village. So, by the time Subaru arrived, only one team remained unaccounted for.

Though he felt a slight unease, that dissipated when he realized the remaining team included Ricardo and Lyra.

“Well, I think we’re over the hump. You got your revenge from last time, too. You can praise me, Patrasche.”

Subaru, with a hint of self-importance, addressed Patrasche, who knew nothing of his previous demise—being strangled by a thick neck. The ground dragon, as if reluctantly humoring her rider, rubbed her snout against him.

“Whoa, whoa, what’s this? You actually have a cute side… Ow, wait, that hurts, your scales are rough and scratchy, ow, ow, ow, hey, come on, cut it out…!”

Subaru stumbled backward and fell to the ground, but Patrasche continued to rub against him relentlessly. As a result, Natsuki Subaru was left helplessly rolling on the ground, his best clothes ruined and covered in dirt.

He stood up grumbling, glaring at Patrasche, but the noble ground dragon feigned ignorance in front of her dirt-stained rider.

“To think there were days I believed we understood each other… What kind of treatment is this? You just wait, you lizard! Someday, I’ll ride you until you’re whimpering!”

“I’ve been meaning to tell you for a while, Subaru-dono, but the ground dragon you’re riding is female.”

“You’re a girl?!”

Subaru was aghast at the unexpected revelation of his companion’s gender.

That changed the meaning of their recent displays of affection. If this were a light novel, he might expect a personification development in the future, but—

“My hands are already full with my heroines, so no can do! Your feelings are appreciated, but even if you’re personified, I can’t accept them… cough!”

A sideways swing of her tail landed perfectly in his ribs, making Subaru choke and writhe in agony. Patrasche, as always, looked down at him with cool eyes. It seemed that only a parameter of affection existed between Subaru and her.

“F-From now on too… I’m counting on you.”

Patrasche, as if to say, “That’s fine”, lowered her back, and skillfully let the wobbly Subaru climb on. Together, they headed towards the village.

Along the way, there was a moment when Wilhelm struck the reawakening Petelgeuse, knocking him unconscious again with a blow that made one want to avert their eyes. While this was happening—

“I can see the village now.”

“—It seems the others have already arrived.”

As the village gradually came into view in the distance, Wilhelm narrowed his eyes and reported this to Subaru. As always, no matter how hard Subaru squinted, he could only vaguely make out the village's shape. How different were their physical compositions?

Nevertheless, Subaru breathed a sigh of relief upon hearing that their companions, who had been leading the waiting ground dragons, had arrived safely.

This time, there was no worry of Petelgeuse having gotten ahead of them at the village, as he was secured. If they could successfully evacuate Emilia and the others from the village, they could face the Witch Cult without any lingering concerns—

"…I sense some trouble."

"Huh? No way. Why? Didn't we handle things pretty well this time?"

However, leaving Subaru's sense of relief behind, Wilhelm's face clouded over. Subaru didn't believe he would lie pointlessly here, so he urged Patrasche forward and galloped into the village grounds.

And there, Subaru saw,

"I humbly implore you. —My name is Julius Juukulius. A Royal Guard Knight, belonging to the Royal Guard Knights of the Kingdom of Lugunica!"

Kneeling, bathed in the gazes of the villagers and merchants surrounding him, the handsome man loudly declared his name—it was Julius.

Chapter 69:
The Fragments of Each Day

1

—An unusual atmosphere enveloped the village.

At the center of the village, the Witch Cult subjugation force could be seen, led by Julius, who was on one knee with his head bowed. None of them seemed to be severely wounded, so it was safe to assume the surprise attack on the Witch Cult itself had been a success.

After that, the plan was for each team to enter the village and guide the evacuation, but…

“What in the world is going on here?”

Unable to grasp the situation, Subaru furrowed his brows, seeking an answer from the scene before him.

In the village center were Julius and the subjugation force. Standing behind them, as if hiding, was a group of merchants who appeared to have just arrived. As before, it was the familiar faces, minus Otto, lined up side by side, their profiles etched with deep anxiety and confusion.

Facing this group were the villagers, all familiar faces to Subaru as well. The children seemed to be hidden indoors, while the adults, including the youth group, stood face to face with the knights.

At the head of these villagers, directly confronting Julius, was—

“—Ram!”

A lovely girl with short, pink hair, looking charming in a delicate apron dress. Yet, her expression was sullen, and the arrogant way she folded her arms sharply distinguished her from her sister.

She was a major source of Subaru’s emotional support, and the fact that she had the same face only amplified the sense of discord, a significant incongruity upon reflection.

"Subaru, you're here—"

"…Barusu, you're back."

At Subaru's loud call, the two leaders of the groups reacted simultaneously.

Julius's face lit up as if he'd seen a ray of hope, while Ram's expressionless face, devoid of emotion, formed a displeased frown.

Feeling a complex reaction to Julius's welcoming mood and a wry amusement at Ram's unfriendly demeanor, Subaru dismounted Patrasche and rushed toward them.

"Whoa, whoa, whoa, whoa, I don't get the situation, but calm down anyway. How about you let me handle this problem?"

"Barusu? That's utterly ridiculous… Anyway, what nerve do you have coming back here?"

"I'm glad your sharp tongue is still intact. Don't think that'll get me down."

Ram gave Subaru a dismissive, cold stare, but seeing him effortlessly deflect her sharp words, a hint of surprise flickered in her eyes. Finding a certain pleasure in this, Subaru cleared his throat and turned back to Julius.

"What happened… I'm dying to ask, but first, a confirmation. It's safe to say the surprise attack went well, right?"

"Flawlessly, thanks to the signal you sent up. Although, a few of them had gotten out of their hideout, so we couldn't avoid drawing our swords."

"It's fine as long as there are no casualties on our side. We handled things well too. Wilhelm has custody of the Sin Archbishop."

Subaru pointed, and Wilhelm, positioned slightly away from the commotion, raised a hand. At his feet lay Petelgeuse, wrapped in a mat, and Wilhelm's hand rested on his sword hilt, ready to act instantly if anything happened.

Seeing this, Julius let out a sigh of relief and said, "As expected."

"The preliminary stage of the operation has largely succeeded, I suppose. However, a problem has arisen."

"So it seems. I don't know what's going on, but…"

A gaze pierced the back of his head, where quiet, hushed discussions were taking place. Turning to the source, he met Ram, who stood with folded arms, trying to burn Subaru with her gaze.

Subaru sighed, shrugging his shoulders with a weary expression.

"After days apart, don't be so prickly. I'm not asking for a hug, but I think I can expect a warm word or two, can't I?"

"Do you want a sharp insult, one that brings warm blood to the surface? I can't indulge Barusu's masochistic tendencies. What is this group doing here?"

"What do you mean, 'what are they doing'? I painstakingly wrote that letter, didn't I? If merchants are here, then envoys from the capital should have arrived too."

"Subaru, that's the problem."

Subaru tilted his head, confused by Ram's questioning. From behind him, Julius reached out, touched his shoulder, and presented the issue. But Subaru still couldn't quite grasp its meaning.

"The letter… the official letter, you mean. Yes, indeed, the envoy brought a letter. An official letter, they called it."

In a low, quiet voice, Ram reached into her maid's uniform.

Subaru recognized the lack of intonation in her voice and blinked, wondering what was happening. It was a prelude to Ram feeling an unbearable anger.

“An official letter delivered with a grand envoy—a blank official letter, how amusing. May I ask what this means, Barusu?”

The letter, thrust out as if to accuse him, was unfolded before Subaru’s eyes.

For a moment, his vision blurred out of focus, then, startled, Subaru took a step back and saw it. The letter in Ram’s hand—the official letter—was completely blank.

“Blank?! Why?! That can’t be right… because!”

“I opened it, expecting important news, and this is what I got. On top of that, unknown people have been barging into the village, and now even an armed group. It would be crazy not to be on guard.”

“That’s not it! These people are from Crusch-san’s camp, and Anastasia-san’s mercenary group… no, first of all, the content of this letter is…”

“Su-ba-ru-kyun~!”

Snatching the letter from Ram’s hand, he stared intently at the blank page. He then tried to blurt out a confused, excuse-like explanation, but it was cut short by a finger that suddenly reached out from behind him.

He turned, wincing at the pain in his ear, to find Ferris’s cat-like smile close to his face. Ferris flicked Subaru’s nose with the hand opposite to the one pinching his ear.

“Ow!”

“Calm down, take a deep breath, and let’s sort out what needs to be said, ‘kay? No need to rush, most things are going smoothly, so don’t you worry. Right?”

“Even if you tell me to calm down, it’s not that easy to just calm…”

“Shall I kiss you with my tongue to forcibly calm you down?”

“I’m calm! My blood just rushed away at an incredible speed!

Cooldown!”

Before the mischievous eyes could come any closer, Subaru straightened his back and retreated from the spot. He put some distance between them in a triple axel-like stance and then looked down at the letter in his hand again.

It looked exactly like the letter he and Rem had painstakingly written together at Crusch’s mansion before leaving the capital, meant to be carried by the envoy Anastasia had arranged.

However, it seemed the contents had completely vanished, or rather, had been swapped out.

“So, this uproar is the result of the preliminary information not getting through. Then, what was Julius shouting his name about earlier?”

“I was getting carried away and almost started a conflict, you see. I had no choice but to reveal my name and try to calm things down. Your arrival made that worry moot, however.”

Julius stroked his purple hair, then sighed wistfully, “However…”

“Now everyone knows I am Julius, a Royal Knight.”

“Just so you know, everyone who knew your face and name already knew, okay? —Putting that aside, I appreciate you stopping what was almost a riot.”

“No, it’s a knight’s duty.”

Julius smiled, not taking offense at Subaru’s indirect thanks. Feeling a vague irritation at his demeanor, Subaru cleared his throat and looked at Ram again.

Her sharp gaze had grown even more intense, two shades sharper than before, after having her conversation interrupted multiple times. He felt a strong premonition that he might physically be cut at any moment.

“The official letter being blank was… well, a misunderstanding on our part. The main points are two: the Witch Cult is lurking, targeting the mansion, and we've prepared dragon carriages with the help of the merchants for an evacuation. We want you to ride in them with the villagers and flee to a safe place."

"Are you going to tell me these heavily armed gentlemen are merchants too?"

"Ah… no, these people are…"

Subaru stammered, responding to Ram, who maintained her hostile stance. But the answer to her last question came not from Subaru, but from—

"We are reinforcements, preceding the alliance recently formed between Her Grace Duchess Crusch Karsten and Lady Emilia."

A chestnut-haired figure stepped forward and knelt. His respectful, deferential bow was flawless, and his graceful movements were proof of excellent training.

The knight, dressed in women's clothing and adorned with cat ears, delivered his formal address with a refined posture that was unimaginable from his usual whimsical, mischievous demeanor.

Ferris looked up at the standing Ram and said in a quiet voice,

"My name is Felix Argyle. I am the foremost knight of Her Grace Duchess Crusch Karsten and her representative for this alliance. Words cannot express my apologies for any communication failures, but… I would humbly request that you prioritize listening to Sir Subaru's explanation now."

"…Alliance."

Ram muttered softly, then looked at Subaru. She touched her thin lips, a difficult frown creasing her brow.

"It seems you fulfilled your role in the capital."

"I think if you'd just made it clearer what you expected of me, I wouldn't have struggled so much."

Subaru, without boasting about his achievements, simply stated his honest feelings. Roswaal's secret orders were too obscure. He'd died three times and received countless hints from Rem before finally grasping a clue. It was a true 'first-time killer' type of challenge.

"So, I've mainly fulfilled my role in the capital. Now I just need to achieve the purpose of my return, and I want to welcome tomorrow with everything in order. Therefore, I'd like to expedite the evacuation, but…"

"…Ram noticed the strange presence lurking in the forest too. It was quite unsettling because it didn't directly show up on her Clairvoyance. Yes, the Witch Cult."

Ram's Clairvoyance allowed her to synchronize with the vision of beings whose wavelengths matched hers, then move from one vision to another. If her words were accurate, it seemed she couldn't find a single Witch Cultist with a matching wavelength. Whether to rejoice or lament was debatable, considering the pros and cons.

"We've largely defeated them, about eighty percent. We've captured their commander here too."

Subaru reported the current results to the displeased Ram. Hearing this, Ram blinked in surprise, the first time she had done so in this situation.

"Doesn't that mean they're pretty much annihilated?"

"When it comes to these guys, if you see one, you should assume there are thirty. We can't rest easy until we've hunted them all down. So, to be absolutely safe, evacuation is essential."

"Is holing up in the mansion a bad idea?"

"They'd burn it down without a second thought. If you don't want the mansion, full of our memories, to be incinerated, it's better to just run."

As Subaru offered this rather chilling analogy, Ram visibly winced. She seemed to have reacted to the word "burn," perhaps having a bad memory of fires. Something Rem had once mentioned briefly crossed his mind, but he couldn't quite recall it.

Anyway,

"We've secured enough personnel to safely transport the villagers and the three of us from the mansion. Roswaal isn't here, is he?"

"No. Lord Roswaal is currently at the Sanctuary… with Garfiel. Ram has been ordered to wait here for Lady Emilia's decision."

"Emilia-tan, huh…"

Subaru looked around at Ram's answer, searching for the silver-haired girl. But it seemed she hadn't yet come down to the village, as she was nowhere to be seen.

At Subaru's gesture, Ram let out a small sigh.

"Lady Emilia is resting at the mansion. —She's had to endure a bit too much recently."

"Endure?"

"You'll understand soon enough, Barusu."

Subaru tilted his head, puzzled by Ram's cryptic words, but she didn't elaborate. Deciding that he wasn't getting anywhere with her, Subaru clapped his hands to gather everyone's attention, intending to at least get this group onto the dragon carriages.

"Alright, everyone, listen up! Good morning, everyone, it's been a while! My name is Natsuki Subaru! It's only been… a week, I think. I don't want to believe I've been forgotten, but I'm back!"

As he called out loudly, villagers who had been watching from a distance began to peek out one after another. Their suspicious expressions fixed on Subaru, then, recognizing a familiar face, their features began to relax slightly.

As the intensity of their gazes softened, Subaru raised both hands for everyone to see and spun around.

"I'm sorry to ask this so soon, but I need a small favor. It's a simple request. Think of it as a little picnic. I've rented dragon carriages and reserved seats for everyone. The seats are a bit hard, but they're special models with divine protection, so they won't be too bumpy. Please form groups with your friends and get in. It would be a huge help if you could go out and play for half a day, or a full day."

Subaru, by saying something akin to "Alright, everyone, form groups with your favorite people!" was unwittingly picking at his own old wounds. When that kind of announcement was made, Subaru, given his social awkwardness, would usually be immediately relegated to the 'leftover' group, and even then, he'd still feel out of place.

As he recalled such unpleasant memories from the past, the villagers exchanged glances at Subaru's present call.

"Why do we have to run away by doing something like that?"

A man with a crew cut hesitantly asked this question. The representative of the youth group, constantly touching the hilt of his sword, looked at Subaru.

"You're trying to keep things light, but you mean we're running away, right? Abandoning the village… why do we have to do that?"

"This is just how I am, so don't try to find any hidden meanings, but there's no need to exaggerate by thinking about abandoning the village, okay? Really, just give us half a day…"

"—It's the Witch Cult, isn't it?"

When the crew-cut youth quietly murmured this, a ripple of unease spread throughout the village.

It wasn't just the villagers; the group of merchants, who had been watching to see how the discussion would turn out, also reacted. Their faces were etched with tension, and their lips trembled.

"It really is the Witch Cult."

"How terrifying… why are such dangerous people here?"

"It's obvious. It's just obvious. Damn it, what was the lord thinking…"

"Why would a half-demon… a half-elf…"

"Hey, hold on."

Subaru held up a hand, silencing the villagers' quiet yet unmistakable words that trembled the air.

With a throat that felt dry and constricted, Subaru walked toward where the voice had come from. He turned to one of the slender young men and asked,

"What did you just say?"

"I-I didn't say anything wrong, did I? In fact, them coming here too…"

"I just asked! What you just said!"

Subaru snapped, his eyes sharp, his tone almost like he was about to grab him.

Immediately, the young man, who had been subjected to the angry outburst, his eyes darting miserably, looked around for help, but everyone looked down and didn't respond.

Abandoned by his unfeeling surroundings, he looked back at Subaru with resignation.

"I-If you get involved with a half-elf, the Witch Cultists start causing trouble. That's common knowledge. Even children know that. Yet the lord, of all people, apparently recommended a silver-haired half-elf to the King…"

"What does that have to do with what we were just talking about?"

"Because! Can't you see?! For the lord to openly support a half-elf is going to provoke the Witch Cult! In fact, you're here because of that, so if that's the case… then!"

"—Don't you dare say something stupid like 'if only such a child never existed', alright?"

The youth, carried away by momentum, was about to say something he shouldn't. But Subaru, who had anticipated his words, was quicker.

Subaru pushed the breathless youth's chest with his palm and looked around. He saw that everyone had the same fear in their eyes as the young man, and Subaru let out a deliberately loud sigh.

"Who do you think put this village in danger?"

"…"

"Who exactly committed such evil deeds that they're feared as witches or whatever?"

"…"

"Aren't all of you looking at the wrong people? I get that it's easier to vent your frustrations on someone you know is there, rather than unknown entities, and I'm one of those people, so I can't really lecture you, but…"

Everyone's frustrations flow from top to bottom.

Everyone prefers to direct their grievances and whispers toward those weaker than themselves. Subaru, as a representative of the weak, understood this better than anyone.

Even so, Subaru wanted to believe this, even if he knew it was selfish.

"I know I'm the worst. So, I want to believe that everyone else has something good about them, somewhere. I know it's a kid's selfish wish, but please. —Don't make me think this wasn't worth the trouble."

Subaru strongly wanted to help Emilia, Ram, and Beatrice at the mansion. Just as much, Subaru wanted to help the villagers he had spent his days with. Even though their time together was short, Subaru had begun to grow fond of the villagers who had treated him warmly. That's why he didn't want them to betray his impression of them.

With this selfish wish, Subaru bowed his head.

"Whether it's Roswaal or anything else, that doesn't matter right now. And anything about Emilia… the half-elf girl at the mansion, we can deal with that later. It's dangerous in this village right now. So, I want you to evacuate. I've prepared for that."

From the previous young man's attitude, he could sense a deeply rooted prejudice against half-elves.

Subaru had only known of it superficially, but now, seeing familiar people direct it toward someone close to them, he realized his knowledge had truly been superficial.

Had Emilia always endured such contempt?

As Subaru bowed his head, someone suddenly stood beside him.

It was Julius, resplendent in his flamboyant Royal Knight uniform. He stood proudly beside Subaru, bending his tall, slender frame in a deep bow.

"Please, I beg you to listen. I swear by the pride of dragons and knights that your safety is assured. For now, please, listen to his words."

"…"

Thoughts of "meddlesome" or "still so dramatic" ran through Subaru's mind, but what truly filled his heart was pure gratitude for Julius.

Feeling a little awkward at having such thoughts about the handsome knight's profile, Subaru kept his head bowed and averted his gaze from Julius beside him.

"I'm not going to thank you."

“Hmph. —That’s what I wanted to hear.”

Indeed, he truly thought this man was insufferable.

2

“It feels like ages since I’ve walked through the mansion with Barusu like this. Even though it’s only been about a week.”

“I completely agree. Though I imagine the content of our sentiments differs considerably.”

“Oh, really?”

“Absolutely.”

As they walked side by side down the corridor of their nostalgic home—Roswaal’s mansion—Subaru and Ram exchanged such casual remarks.

Thinking back, he had only managed to reach Roswaal’s mansion and explore its interior twice during his repeated days. The first time was in a mansion completely devoid of any signs of life.

“—Ram.”

“Did you call?”

“Nah, just remembering Ram. You, Ram, right now, are perfectly fine as you are.”

“Barusu, your nonsensical way of speaking is even more irritating after so long.”

Ram coolly brushed off Subaru’s teasing remarks with a serene expression.

She walked a little ahead, in her maid’s uniform—in the first world, Subaru had found her lifeless body on the bed. He remembered that the only comfort at that time was that her death hadn’t been gruesome.

In the second iteration, the mansion collapsed due to Puck's rapid growth, and in the third iteration—just recalling it sent shivers down his spine.

"Barusu, you're walking past."

"Oh, sorry, sorry… wait, this is—"

Unaware that Ram had stopped, lost in thought, Subaru walked past her, then turned back to look at the door. Ram had led him to a guest room, which was—

"Isn't this Emilia-tan's room?"

"Right now, it's just Ram, Lady Emilia, and Lady Beatrice in the mansion, so we're gathered in the central wing. Especially after how tired she was last night."

Recalling what Ram had told him, Subaru lowered his gaze slightly, thinking of Emilia's emotional strain.

He had just been roughly told by Ram what Emilia had been doing since returning to the mansion. After returning from the capital with Roswaal, and after he left to visit various influential figures, she had apparently been studying tirelessly, even foregoing sleep.

"She was engrossed as if possessed. As if something unpleasant had happened in the capital and she was trying to forget it."

"Ugh…!"

"As if something unpleasant had happened with a man in the capital and she was trying to forget that man."

"Don't insert weird words in between! I can't… completely deny it, but…"

Ram sighed at Subaru's trailing off. Then, she shook her head in exasperation, pointing to the room door.

"She must have gotten even more exhausted after Ram noticed the anomaly in the forest with her Clairvoyance and reported it. You can tell from the villagers' attitude just now, can't you?"

"I can vaguely imagine, but I don't really want to put it into words. —Rejection, huh?"

"Rejection? Barusu has quite a gentle imagination."

Ram scoffed at Subaru's words, then immediately erased her expression. After a beat of silence from Subaru, she spoke in a tired tone.

"—Denial, you mean. If it were rejection, there would still be a hand to reach out. To have an outstretched hand slapped away means it was touched. But what about denial?"

"…………"

"If they even shun being touched, how can you ever bridge the distance?"

Subaru gasped, unable to answer Ram's probing words.

Ram didn't seem to expect an answer from him either. Without showing disappointment, she sighed, signaling time was up, and then continued, "I was being mean."

"Noticing the ominous presence in the forest, Lady Emilia went down to the village to try and evacuate the villagers to the mansion. And she was denied. You know Barusu, she's not so understanding that she'd back down immediately after being denied."

"But I also know she's not the kind of girl who wouldn't be hurt by being treated so cruelly, as if there's no way to reach her."

Unable to suppress his irritation, Subaru bit his tongue and glared at the corridor window, narrowing his eyes at the distant view of the village beyond.

It wasn't that they were particularly narrow-minded or heartless.

This was a common reaction, the ordinary treatment Emilia had continuously received. Was it truly so arrogant to wish that this, at least, could change?

“Then, is this feeling of mine, this utter indignation at the unreasonableness of the world, also ‘pride’?”

Having said his piece, Subaru closed his eyes once, then turned toward the door as if shaking off negative emotions.

He had wiped away the negative emotions from his face, trying to forget them, at least for this moment. As if respecting Subaru’s intentions, Ram didn’t comment on it.

“Lady Emilia, are you awake?”

Two small, firm knocks echoed in the cold morning air of the corridor.

A few seconds passed after Ram’s call and knocks.

“—Ram? Yes, I’m awake.”

A beautiful, silver-bell-like sound, captivating to hear, lightly touched Subaru’s earlobe.

The calm, noble, and resolute purity of her voice made Subaru temporarily forget the anxiety that had been in his chest.

All the various worries—what to say when he met her, what words to string together—all flew away in that instant.

He had returned to hear that voice, to meet her.

“Excuse me, Lady Emilia. —Barusu has returned.”

Pushing open the door, Ram bowed respectfully and reported the subordinate’s return to the temporary mistress.

Following her small figure as she led the way inside, Subaru, forgetting to breathe, stumbled in halfway, his steps unsure.

“Eh, Subaru—?”

“Lo—”

He hadn't planned it, but he had hoped to greet her with a smile when they reunited. So, Subaru put on as gentle a smile as possible, lightly raised a hand, focused on Emilia who had turned back to him—

—And Emilia's back, her fair skin dazzling from being mid-change, was burned into his eyes.

"—Oh, how rude of me."

Smoothly, Ram stuck out her tongue and playfully hit her head with her fist in front of the two rigid figures.

However, neither of the two, excluding Ram, had the presence of mind to retort to her mischievous gesture.

They gazed at each other silently, Subaru's gaze sweeping from Emilia's face, to her exposed back, down her slender, gracefully long legs, and even to her bare toes as if tracing them.

The moment his prepared smile turned into a lecherous grin—

"What are you doing to a maiden before her marriage—"

Suddenly, a small gray cat landed before his eyes, unleashing magic power at Subaru's frozen, leering face—powerless, Subaru's body was sent flying into the corridor. Ram, rushing after him, leapt into the corridor, just before Subaru was about to crash into the window.

"If the window breaks, it'll be a big problem."

"Feh?!"

Just in the nick of time, the window opened right before impact, and Subaru's body was flung outside by the momentum. Fortunately, it was the first floor, so he avoided a fatal fall, but he slid face-first across the dew-covered grass, rolled, and finally stopped by crashing into a flowerbed.

The taste of dirt was in his mouth, and a wall of heavily fertilized mud was before his eyes. His only good outfit was already bloodstained and now covered in dust, and his mean look was just how he was born.

“Puck, you overdid it… Geez, Subaru, are you okay?!”

From far, far beyond the mansion window, he heard the frantic voice of the girl he loved, and for some reason, Subaru let out a small chuckle.

Nothing was settled yet, nothing was over, but the fragments of the days he had longed to experience again seemed to sparkle brightly.

Subaru continued to chuckle, quietly, until Ram, who had come to greet him, reached out her hand as if seeing something uncanny.

Chapter 70: The Meaning of Having Came Back

1

"—Why did you come back?"

Emilia stared at him, her expression intensely serious, and asked.

Subaru saw his own face reflected in her quiet, gleaming, indigo eyes. The serene light, like a perfectly still lake surface, seemed to pierce right through him, seeing into his very soul.

Naturally, a shudder of emotion ran through Subaru's entire body.

He wasn't sure if it was a positive or negative feeling stemming from her clear, penetrating gaze.

However there was only one answer Subaru had to her question.

"—Why did you come back?"

The question was repeated.

Even though Subaru didn't answer, the question wasn't meant to rush him. Subaru held his breath at the softly pressing question, lightly moistening his lips with his tongue.

Then, after briefly closing his eyes—

"Hey."

"…"

Silence answered him. However it wasn't a withheld reply; it was an invitation for him to continue. Knowing that, Subaru didn't falter and formed his next words.

They were facing each other, both holding complex emotions, yet they had been given this chance to speak—

"After all that chaotic commotion just now, isn't it pretty hard to maintain this atmosphere?"

"…Coming from you, Subaru, that really doesn't sit right with me."

At Subaru's wry remark, Emilia let out a deep sigh and, looking utterly powerless and resigned, allowed a faint smile to touch her lips.

2

Ram's guidance in Subaru's "lucky pervert" moment met a spectacular demise thanks to Puck's fatherly, educational intervention.

After that, with Ram's continued "assistance," Subaru was thrown into the garden. He kept grinning unsettlingly until Ram helped him up, earning her a strange look. Eventually, his disgraceful appearance made its way to Emilia—

"Did you hit your head hard? You were upside down, but did you strain your neck? Oh, there's dirt in your ear… Why are your clothes covered in blood and mud? Are you okay? Are you hurt? Here, if you're hurt, hurry and take them off…"

"Whoa, wait… No, no, not now, there are people watching and it's still daytime, so don't just strip me—!"

"You really must have hit your head hard…"

"I'm always like this! Thanks for worrying, but that look in your eyes is killing me!"

Pushing away Emilia, who kept reaching out to him with concern, Subaru shook his head, rotated his neck to dislodge the dirt from his ear, brushed off his clothes, and then, to show he was perfectly fine, did some high knees on the spot before re-entering the drawing-room.

Inside, separated by a small round table, Puck and Ram, the masterminds of the recent commotion, were facing each other, calmly enjoying tea.

"Your tea is excellent."

"Oh no, it's not nearly good enough to earn such praise from the Great Spirit."

"What are you two so calmly having tea for?"

Subaru interrupted their typical polite exchange, slamming his hands on the table and glaring at them. However, the two ignored Subaru's scowl and continued to sip their tea with perfect composure. Puck's tiny cup made for a strangely surreal sight.

They both swallowed their tea. Then, after a breath, they looked up at Subaru in unison.

"Thanks to Ram's little 'oopsie', you got quite a show, didn't you? Let's just call it even."

"Why are you acting so high and mighty? Are you the king?"

"You should be grateful for my boundless mercy that your head is still attached. When I think of the unspeakable shame Lia felt, I deeply lament my own lack of power."

"And you tried to blow my head off! I swear, there aren't many people who've died from a 'lucky pervert' incident!"

The world is a vast place, so perhaps there are people who've died that way if you look hard enough. Still, even Subaru, with his impressive record of consecutive deaths, would pass on that particular demise.

Anyway, after all that—

"It's fine if you're not hurt. There are a lot of things we need to talk about, but…"

Subaru frowned at their unrepentant responses. Walking past him, Emilia murmured in a quiet voice.

Her silver hair flowed with her movements, and as she turned, a shimmer arced. Subaru, captivated, watched as she sat on the bed and stared at him.

"—Why did you come back?"

And so, she returned to her initial question.

Finishing that recollection, it was clear that maintaining seriousness was indeed difficult.

Subaru scratched his head at the situation, which had inadvertently turned comical, though he hadn't intended to make light of it. Oblivious to Subaru, Emilia pouted, her lips turned down as if sulking.

"Ugh, it's all, all Ram and Puck's fault. It wasn't supposed to be like this… it shouldn't be like this. Honestly."

"My deepest apologies, Lady Emilia. If your anger has not yet subsided, I am prepared to accept any rebuke or punishment. —Barusu is."

"Don't you have any awareness that you're the one who caused this?!"

"Ram always believes Ram is superior and Barusu is inferior."

"You… you bully! You're a bully! I've never seen a maid who's so far from obedient, with such a brazen 'might makes right' attitude!"

Given her perfectly refined demeanor and appearance, Ram's audaciousness was shocking to witness again. As he continued this conversation, which showed no progress from the days he'd left behind, Ram suddenly narrowed her eyes and observed Subaru carefully.

"Wh-What is it…?"

"Your face looks a little less anxious. About a hair's breadth better than before."

"—!"

Subaru involuntarily held his breath at her mercilessly considerate words.

In truth, just moments ago, Subaru's limbs had felt as heavy as lead, and his heart had been gripped by anxiety rather than excitement at the prospect of reuniting with Emilia.

However now, that sense of impatience and unease had somewhat eased, and his tongue, which should have been parched, felt no pain.

He realized it was Ram's consideration, an attempt to lighten his mood, and a deeply complex feeling of gratitude washed over Subaru. Therefore,

"You know, you're so hard to understand, sometimes I wonder about you."

"Women always toy with men using unanswerable riddles. If we were easily understood and grew boring, men would simply wander off, wouldn't they?"

"You're just trying to smooth things over with some plausible-sounding nonsense, aren't you? I'm not impressed. —Though I am grateful."

"Lady Emilia. Barusu just thanked Ram for letting him peek at your changing. He is the lowest kind of pervert, this man."

"I wouldn't make such an elaborate perverted comment! You were just being yourself before, weren't you?!"

His gratitude nowhere to be found, Subaru shouted his retort while Ram covered her ears, feigning deafness. Her utterly brazen "business as usual" attitude finally left Subaru speechless.

However, upon seeing their exchange—

"—Hehe."

"Oh."

Subaru watched as Emilia put a hand to her mouth, letting out an irrepressible burst of laughter. She tried her best to hold it in, but when Subaru noticed her efforts and raised an eyebrow, she seemed to give up.

"It's just, you two are just messing around like that… it makes me feel silly for trying to hold back."

"It's fine! It's better to talk and laugh than to be angry and sulking, right? A lot has happened, but it's always better to talk and laugh about it. For that, I'll play the fool as much as it takes. Right, Ram?"

"—Hmph."

"Huh, she's not playing along?!"

Subaru, delighted by Emilia's response, inadvertently got carried away, his words tumbling out, while Ram looked at him with disdain. The more Subaru reacted, the more Emilia's lips curved into a smile, creating a loop.

"You two really haven't changed. It feels like… I haven't genuinely laughed in such a long time."

"Indeed. Ram has not seen Lady Emilia laugh like that in quite some time either."

Emilia used a finger to wipe away the tears at the corners of her eyes as Ram, bowing slightly, quietly stated.

Emilia's expression stiffened slightly upon hearing that, and Ram, seeing it, acted as if she had accomplished her task.

"Barusu. I'll leave the rest to you, so handle it well."

"Wait, what about you? What about this weird atmosphere?"

"I've created an easy atmosphere for you to talk in, haven't I? The rest is Barusu's job. Ram has many preparations to make, and is busy. Because of the reason Barusu brought."

Subaru had no choice but to fall silent under her serene gaze, which looked up at him pointedly.

Confirming Subaru had no objections, Ram bowed deeply to Emilia.

“Lady Emilia, Ram has preparations, so I will excuse myself for a moment. As for the situation, Barusu will explain… Ram will follow Lady Emilia’s judgment and instructions.”

“Ram… but, I…”

“Ram will follow any of Lady Emilia’s judgments. That is Lord Roswaal’s instruction.”

Cutting off the hesitant Emilia, Ram stated only that plainly and then left the room. Her gaze, directed at Subaru just before the door closed, was incredibly sharp, instilling in him the feeling that he needed to straighten his back. Right until the very end, he had caused her trouble.

Looking at the table, Puck was nowhere to be seen.

Perhaps he had stealthily slipped into Emilia’s hair, or maybe he had dissipated into mana and left the scene. At any rate, officially, the room was now empty save for the two of them.

Subaru and Emilia, alone.

“It feels like it’s been a really long time since you and I talked like this, Subaru.”

Subaru, who had been enduring the awkward silence, unable to find a way to start the conversation, was broken out of it by Emilia’s words.

As Subaru looked up, Emilia’s eyes, still seated on the bed, were calm, and he could see no lingering embers of that past intensity.

First, he felt he had managed to overcome the initial awkwardness in the face of that fact. Though, rather than overcoming it, he couldn’t shake the feeling that he had been allowed to overcome it.

“Yeah, being away from Emilia-tan felt like a thousand years in a day. My Emilia-ase levels were dropping daily, and I thought I'd suffocate from the deficiency."

"Emilia-ase" was Subaru's colloquial term for the "Emilia component" that filled him through actions like conversing with Emilia, gazing at her, or smelling her lingering scent.

When the deficiency reached its final stages, it would manifest in harmful side effects like despair and cynicism, making prompt replenishment an urgent and troublesome symptom.

"Is that why you came back?"

"—Nah, that's part of it, but it's not the only reason."

Emilia's response to his lighthearted remark was flat.

Subaru took it as a cue and, with a remarkably calm heart, began to think.

He had to reconcile what had happened when they had gone their separate ways, back then, in that place.

"Wanting to see Emilia-tan is the biggest reason, but of course, there are many other reasons. The next most important is—I wanted to be your strength."

"—!"

Subaru saw Emilia gasp, her hand gripping the bedsheets tightly. Her expression stiffened, and deep agitation spread in her amethyst eyes.

However, she quickly hid the shock that ran through her under a feigned calmness, plastering on a superficial smile that even Subaru could see through.

"What… what are you talking about? Strength? There's nothing really. There's nothing for Subaru to worry about, nothing at all…"

"You're terrible at keeping secrets, Emilia-tan. I came all the way up here through the village, you know? I pretty much know what happened."

"…I see. So that's it."

At Subaru's observation, Emilia's smile faded, losing its strength.

Even so, she was admirable, somehow managing to lift her face, which had begun to droop, and not avert her gaze from Subaru. A person overwhelmed by powerlessness quickly gives in to their own will and looks down. But she would not allow herself to do that.

"You see, Subaru. I… well, I'm a half-elf."

"Yeah, I know. I was at the Royal Selection, and I had chances to hear about it from various people. I probably know more about it than you think, Emilia-tan."

Approaching, Subaru moved to Emilia's side, who was seated on the bed. He then knelt to meet her eye level, reflecting himself directly in her indigo eyes.

"I don't resent being a half-elf. I think there's no point in comparing myself to others and pointing out differences, and I don't want to demean myself by thinking that being different is a bad thing. That's how I feel about my own blood."

"Yeah. I think that's incredibly admirable."

"But, it seems people around me don't see it that way so easily. Just being a half-elf makes a lot of people feel anxious and scared."

Emilia spoke calmly, trying to suppress her emotions as much as possible, narrating it plainly. Subaru, listening, was desperate not to let the overwhelming, tightening affection in his chest show on his face.

In that way, the sight of her, diligently battling her surroundings and the lamentations of her own weak heart that arose from them, was beautiful, noble, and fragile enough to seem as if she might vanish.

"Ram told me. There's a strange atmosphere in the forest. Even the Lesser Spirits are terrified every morning because they sense something dreadful. Surely, something terrible is going to happen. Something so awful you'd want to turn your eyes away."

"…"

"That's the situation right now. It's dangerous for you to come back here, Subaru. So, if possible, you should leave the mansion immediately… Your treatment must still be ongoing, right? So…"

"If I just left, what would you do, Emilia-tan? You're in danger, and so are the villagers, right? Do you think I'd be the kind of guy who'd just leave without hearing about that?"

Despite her plea, Subaru shook his head directly. In response, Emilia bit her lip faintly, then, with a slight "Um," hesitation laced her tongue.

"Of course, I'll leave the mansion as soon as I'm ready too. I have a lot of things to think about once I meet up with Roswaal. The villagers will come with me. I even talked to them in the village about it…"

"They didn't listen to you, did they? Wasn't that what your earlier preamble was about? You're stumbling over your words, that's not like you, Emilia-tan."

"Ah…"

Realizing the incoherence of her own words, Emilia closed her mouth awkwardly.

Her demeanor was incredibly fresh to Subaru, but it wasn't the kind of feeling that brought him any joy. So, Subaru tilted his head toward the door leading to the village.

"—I've made preparations to evacuate the villagers and you, Emilia-tan."

"…Huh?"

"I bowed my head to all sorts of people in the capital and gathered multiple merchant dragon carriages in the village. It's enough to evacuate everyone. There's even a spot for you and Ram. I couldn't arrange first-class, though, since comfort wasn't the priority."

Emilia's eyes went wide as Subaru's words tumbled out one after another, unable to keep up. Still, Subaru, emphasizing the urgency of the situation and trying to demonstrate his reliability in somehow managing everything, continued:

"Most of those suspicious black guys lurking in the forest? We dealt with them thanks to the strong allies I brought from the capital. The rest of them, we'll deal with them properly after everyone's evacuated. I'll get everything done."

"Wait, just… Subaru, why did you…?"

"Maybe it's because various people advised me, warned me, made me reflect, taught me, let me rely on them, supported me, believed in me, made me believe in myself, made me want to believe, or made me try to believe… I guess that's how they helped me."

Emilia was speechless at Subaru's non-answer.

However it was all Subaru's honest feelings. The things he had been given in the days since he separated from Emilia and remained in the capital were indescribable. He had lost things too, but he came here to reclaim them. The things he had gained in those days were far greater for the current Subaru.

"I… I said terrible things to Subaru."

"It's fine. If I said I didn't care, that would be a huge lie, and honestly, there were times I cared so much it felt like a nightmare, and I thought I'd become depressed from nothing but negative thoughts."

"I'm so sorry, I really am…"

"If you just accept that without brushing it off, I'd have nowhere to stand. Oh, but, well, we're like this now, so don't worry about it. I'll keep worrying about it though, so I don't forget how stupid I can be."

Emilia's eyes widened at Subaru's words. Subaru nodded in return, his mind vividly recalling that scene, those few hours in the royal castle.

He could never forget it. He must not forget it. That humiliation, that deserved rejection.

His own foolishness, so stubbornly self-centered that he made Emilia say things she didn't want to. So,

"Now, I want to help you. I've prepared for it. It's far from perfect, but it's the best I can do with my limitations. So, I want you to take my hand."

"But, I… I can't be that weak…"

"It's okay to be weak, Emilia-tan."

Subaru smiled irresponsibly at her, who hesitated to take his outstretched hand.

Her position, her role, her future demanded her to be strong. That was probably correct. Subaru, having seen Crusch's nobility, Anastasia's tenacity, and Priscilla's arrogant self in the capital, thought those were indeed kingly qualities.

But he also thought this:

"I'm super weak and hopeless too, but I've managed to get by with various people reaching out to me. I plan to keep getting by, relying on others, of course, I don't intend to just keep borrowing. I want to pay back what I've borrowed, and use the hand that was pulled to pull others."

"Ah…"

"So, isn't it fine if you're just being pulled along at first? Even if you're weak now, let's get strong someday. For that, just sitting back-to-back is just right for now."

There's no need to be perfect from the start.

The idea that a king should be strong, noble, and more righteous than anyone else is a childish one. Yet, he knew that everyone harbored that childish illusion for such a figure.

That's why she, who aimed to be queen, was never allowed to be weak by anyone.

—However, Subaru wondered, was being weak such a bad thing?

Even if you're weak, you can still aim to become stronger, to walk forward with your head held high.

If so, then wouldn't it be fine to walk alongside someone who thinks and believes that way?

"Many people led my hand, which is why I'm here. If I can, I want to be the one to lead your hand too."

"Subaru…"

"So, take my hand, Emilia-tan. If you can allow someone to stand beside you, not in front or behind, on the path to becoming queen."

Seeing her hand slowly reach out, Subaru allowed a small smile to play on his lips.

Then, impatient to wait, as soon as their fingertips touched, he firmly grasped her hand, and pulling her arm as she let out a small gasp, Subaru also stood up.

Still holding hands, the two stood and gazed at each other from a close distance.

His heart pounded. Emotions threatened to burst. Hiding such strong feelings, Subaru twisted his lips into a mischievous grin.

"Was it a little easier to stand up?"

"…Subaru, you idiot."

In response to his question, Emilia lowered her eyes and murmured in a small voice.

Subaru's smile vanished at her reaction, and he panicked, wondering if he'd said something wrong.

"Subaru, you idiot. Seriously, you really are an idiot. Idiot, idiot, idiot."

"That's too much! No, I know I'm an idiot, yes, I'm sorry."

"I was thinking so much, you know. That I was going to be queen, and that there were so many things I had to learn and be able to do for that. I shouldn't be spoiled, and it's not good to rely on others, I was thinking so, so much!"

Placing her free hand on her hip, Emilia's voice grew lively towards the shrinking Subaru.

Listening, Subaru cradled his head in his free hand, having no choice but to endure the sudden, Emilia-induced downpour.

"The villagers wouldn't listen to me, and Ram, she listens to what I say but doesn't offer opinions. And Puck… it's useless to even ask him, and Roswaal just disappeared… I was just thinking all by myself, for so long."

At such a crucial time, neither Subaru nor Rem were with her.

If Subaru had been there, he surely could have eased the psychological burden she endured.

"I even started thinking about pretending to be a wicked witch and raining ice on the village, forcing everyone to evacuate."

"Th-That's probably a good thing you didn't do that. Let's keep it cool, okay?"

"You came back before I started! My head was already in a mess just from that, and now you're saying all sorts of things… Honestly, it's just so troublesome."

She let out a small, airy sigh, and a brief silence fell over the room.

Subaru felt awkward, at a loss, unable to understand Emilia's feelings. He'd made so many overly confident remarks, he wanted to punch his past self now, but it was too late.

If he could, he'd want to go back and pretend it never happened, and try again with more perfect words of persuasion, but that wasn't possible. Natsuki Subaru, the man who couldn't even make the most of a revenge opportunity. He truly was foolish, to his dying day.

"Subaru, you're making a hundred faces."

"Nobody says 'hundred faces' these days… It's been a while since we had this kind of exchange."

Putting his hand to his face to calm his facial muscles, Subaru looked at Emilia.

Just then, she looked up at him too. Their eyes met, and time stopped.

To the motionless Subaru, Emilia's expression was calm. She then parted her lips slightly.

"I… I think I said terrible things, but I don't think I said anything wrong."

"—Yeah, I think that's fine. I don't think my feelings at that time were wrong either. I just think the method, the expression, the process, and the result were all wrong."

"Doesn't that mean everything was wrong?"

"I'm deeply regretting it! But I still believe my feelings weren't wrong."

He would not lie about that alone.

Seeing Subaru's stubbornness, Emilia smiled faintly. Then,

"You're still holding my hand. Your hand is really warm, Subaru."

"I think my face and ears are just as hot right now, but… you're not going to say let go, are you?"

"You held my hand so firmly and pulled me up."

Lifting their clasped hands, Emilia swung them by her face.

Her smile joined his hand, and a profoundly warm sensation permeated Subaru's chest.

"Will you help me again, Subaru?"

"If you'll still allow me to."

At Subaru's answer, Emilia closed her eyes.

As if letting the received answer sink into her body, searching for her own reply within.

Then she opened her eyes, looking firmly at Subaru with her amethyst gaze.

"Tell me. About all the people and things you've prepared, Subaru."

"Alright, listen. And if you think it's amazing, you can praise me."

"Don't get carried away."

She lightly poked his head with her free hand.

It didn't hurt, but he was so happy that she had touched him that way, that tears, which shouldn't have been there, welled up in the corners of his eyes. Subaru turned his face away to hide them.

"Then, let's talk with Ram present. Seriously, I have so much I want to talk about, an inexhaustible amount, but that'll have to wait until we get past this current hurdle."

"Okay, I understand. I'm really curious, but let's do that for now."

Taking Emilia's hand, feeling pleased that she didn't resist, Subaru began to walk towards the door.

He needed to join Ram, who had left earlier, and help prepare the things to take out of the mansion. Julius and Wilhelm would probably be handling the evacuation of the villagers well.

The resolution of Subaru's internal struggle and his approach to Emilia, while the complete answer was postponed, had at least temporarily been reached.

In a sensation like a burden lifted from his shoulders, he was suddenly pulled back by his hand.

"Subaru, there's just one thing I have to say now."

"Hm?"

Pulled by Emilia, who had stopped, Subaru also stopped and turned around.

Then, to Subaru's questioning face, Emilia held her breath for a moment, and then, with a smile that bloomed like a flower, she said,

"Welcome back."

—He strongly felt that he had come back for that smile.

Chapter 71:
The Little Girl of the Forbidden Library

1

“Hey, Subaru. What was ‘Tararattararara’?”

“Don’t worry about that. It’s just an old greeting from my hometown. It means, ‘Your smile is so lovely, I could just lick it up.’”

“Then don’t ever say it again, okay?”

“That’s surprisingly harsh!”

A brief exchange after Emilia smiled at him, saying “Welcome home”.

Emilia’s refreshing smile was like a blooming flower, washing away all the negative emotions—the anxiety and impatience—that had clouded Subaru’s heart.

In response, overwhelmed by an uncontrollable pounding heart, he tried to force the gentlest smile possible and say “I’m home,” but then,

“Tararattararara.”

“Huh?”

He completely flubbed it. That was the long and short of it.

It was so pathetic and embarrassing, he couldn’t even bring himself to tell the truth.

Subaru tried to brush it off with a casual joke, and though he felt a bit dejected when it was rather sharply cut short, he and Emilia began to search the mansion for Ram. As it turned out, they found the maid they were looking for within just a few minutes of starting their search.

"Oh, you were faster than I expected."

Ram said, looking up at them from where she was ungracefully sitting on the stairs in the entrance hall.

Subaru let out a small sigh at her easygoing nature, so far from obedient, almost as if she were the mistress of the mansion.

"Even I'm surprised by how much you do things your own way. I thought I was pretty selfish, but you beat me outright without even needing a judgment."

"Winning anything feels good, so prostrate yourself, Barusu. —So, has your discussion concluded?"

The first part of her question was for Subaru, the latter part for Emilia, who was walking behind Subaru.

Emilia nodded slightly to Ram's question.

"Subaru mostly explained it. —It seems Lady Crusch's subordinates and Lady Anastasia's hired people are coming to the village. Subaru also hired some merchants… It's for our escape, right?"

"Yeah. The merchant's dragon carriage should be able to fit all the villagers, and there's a lot of goods on board that could serve as food during the evacuation. It was a pretty good idea, right?"

"Even for Barusu, that's commendable, Ram will frankly praise you. Rejoice."

"I can't rejoice when you say it like that!"

Ram's response, which always kept herself in a superior position, aside, thanks to their earlier discussion in the room, Emilia was smoothly receptive to Subaru's proposal.

Originally, she probably wanted to resolve the situation with her own hands, but,

"If I only focus on that and overlook what's important, that would be counterproductive. I'm okay, so you don't have to look so worried.”

“I’m not worried. I can feel your trust in me through your hand…”

“Oh, I’m sorry, I’ve been holding it this whole time. Was it bothering you?”

Because of his unnecessary comment reminding her, the hands that had been clasped together without any issue until now parted. A feminine “Ah” escaped him, but it was too late.

Leaving Subaru, who was holding his now-separated hand up to his face and regretting his slip of the tongue, behind,

“So, Ram. I want to evacuate the villagers, but… where do you think we should go? I know I should really be the one to decide, but…”

“Lady Emilia has no local knowledge, so I won’t ask the impossible. If Ram may offer an opinion… going to the Sanctuary where Lord Roswaal headed would be best.”

“The Sanctuary… will it be safe there?”

“I cannot say for certain, but Lord Roswaal is there, and though they have their reasons, there are defensive forces. It would be much more certain than holing up here.”

Emilia thoughtfully placed a finger on her lips at Ram’s suggestion. Subaru leaned out from beside her and addressed Ram, starting with, “But first of all,”

“I keep hearing bits and pieces, but where is this Sanctuary Ros-chi went to? It often comes up with other names I’ve heard a few times, but… if I don’t know that, I can’t really make a judgment, can I?”

“The judgment is to be made by Lady Emilia. There’s no need for Barusu to worry… although that’s cruel to say. Ram doesn’t have the authority to tell Barusu that either. Lord Roswaal hasn’t given permission, so you’ll just have to keep worrying.”

“Ros-chi’s permission, huh…”

Ram remained unresponsive to Subaru's narrowed eyes. Judging that he wouldn't get anything more from her attitude, Subaru recalled the information he had heard about the Sanctuary so far.

That said, there wasn't much information on it. It was where Roswaal had gone, a place where a prominent figure in the territory resided, and as he just heard, a place where defensive forces other than Roswaal existed.

"Can I at least ask about the distance and whether they're friendly towards us? Those are essential criteria for judgment, at least."

"—Approximately, it's about eight hours by dragon carriage. Since they're in cooperation with Lord Roswaal, it's a given that they won't be hostile. However,"

Ram had been answering Subaru's questions fluently, but she paused briefly, and unusually for her, bit her lip slightly, showing hesitation. Subaru frowned in suspicion at her reaction, but Emilia understood the meaning of her reaction more clearly.

"Are you worried that half-elves might not be welcome?"

"I don't wish to burden Lady Emilia, but that is correct. The Sanctuary gathers only those with 'reasons,' so it's hard to say how much being a half-elf would stand out there… I cannot say for certain."

Again, the issue of prejudice against half-elves surfaced.

Subaru's irritation was nearing its limit with this problem that confronted them wherever they turned. But disregarding Subaru's inner turmoil, Emilia lightly drew back her chin.

"It's something I'm aware of, so it can't be helped. If my presence isn't an issue, then it seems we can evacuate the villagers to the Sanctuary, right?"

"Lord Roswaal, as the lord, would never wish to treat his subjects roughly. In that regard, Garfiel, the representative of the Sanctuary, can indeed be trusted."

With that reply, which conveyed clear trust, Emilia closed her eyes in apparent understanding. Then, she subtly glanced at Subaru, who was silently seething with suppressed anger.

“Subaru, do you have any other good ideas?”

“Well, if the Sanctuary is eight hours away and safe… then I don’t think we need to propose another route.”

In the worst case, if they struggled to find a refuge, returning to the royal capital had been one idea. Currently, with the White Whale subjugated, the Lifaus Highway was passable.

A dragon carriage could reach the royal capital in half a day at full speed. Since there were many women, children, and elderly, they would likely lose a bit of time being considerate of them, but it still wouldn’t take a full day.

They could also reunite with Crusch, who should have returned, and Rem, who was accompanying her. Measures against the Witch’s Cult would also be easier to formulate, as they were all working towards the same goal. He also thought that Crusch and Emilia, as allies, should have a proper face-to-face discussion.

“But well, there are quite a few risks involved in that too.”

First, the distance was farther than to the place called the Sanctuary.

Given that there were still unknown factors regarding their and the enemy’s strength, it was best to avoid long-distance travel as much as possible. Between half a day and a quarter day, the latter was the better choice.

Second, if the distance increased, it would take longer to return to the Mathers territory. As long as the threat of the Witch’s Cult remained, the subjugation team would have to accompany Emilia and the others until they were safely evacuated. Even if they returned after dropping them off to hunt down the remaining members of the Witch’s Cult, the possibility of them escaping due to the passage of time was undeniable.

And third, whether the safety of the Lifaus Highly was truly secured.

Subaru had once, in a previous loop, encountered the White Whale and, though barely, survived and returned without dying. At that time, the accompanying merchant Otto had thrown Subaru off the dragon carriage and successfully escaped through the fog—or so it seemed.

But in reality, it appeared he had later been attacked by the Witch's Cult and lost the life he had just saved. That incident occurred just before entering the Mathers territory after passing through the Lifaus Highway.

Subaru suspected that members of the Witch's Cult were waiting at the exit of the fog.

They hadn't encountered them this time, but that was probably because their forces outnumbered the enemy at that point, so they were overlooked.

However, if they returned with a large number of non-combatants, what would be the possibility of still being overlooked? Especially with Emilia, their target, in tow.

"When you think about it that way, there's nothing to think about, really."

"So, Subaru, you also think we should go to the Sanctuary?"

"That's the best option right now. If I can talk to Ros-chi, I can probably say something more constructive, and I don't want to burden the villagers with the move."

At the very least, it would be difficult to proceed with anything until the full picture of the territory's situation became clear. Roswaal's stance on the Royal Selection was also still somewhat ambiguous.

Subaru believed that Roswaal's vague way of speaking, lacking in specific details, largely influenced the parts Emilia was earnestly agonizing over by herself.

"In short, it means I'm going to give that gentle-looking guy a good talking-to."

"I thought we were talking about where to flee… how did it end up like this?"

"I had to go through and figure out a lot of the small details myself, and it just ended up that way. I mean, honestly, if that guy had just used clearer words when he talked, there wouldn't have been so many problems, right? This is why smart people are like this…"

Because his own mind worked quickly, he expected the same processing power from others. It was a common trait among geniuses. Ordinary people running a lap behind could barely keep up.

Anyway,

"The destination is decided, and Ram knows the location. We should leave as soon as preparations are complete. Will it take long?"

"I don't have anything in particular to take. Ram…"

"While there are many teas and valuable items I wish to take, the fate of those whose desires are too strong is often bleak, so I shall give up. I have packed some necessary documents and clothes, so I am ready at any time."

Ram gestured with her hand towards a bag placed next to the stairs, visible to Subaru. It seemed her packing was already complete, leaving Subaru utterly amazed by her foresight.

"I always thought girls took forever to get ready, but that's amazing! So, no forgotten passbooks or seals, right? If not, let's head straight to the village!"

"Tsūchō?"

"Inkan?"

Subaru found it amusing as Emilia and Ram both tilted their heads with question marks floating above them. Then, he looked up at the upper floor of the mansion.

The two, following his gaze, must have realized what Subaru was looking at. They opened their lips awkwardly.

"I'm sorry, Subaru. We don't know Beatrice's whereabouts. I haven't seen her once since returning from the royal capital."

"More precisely, I haven't seen her face once since Lord Roswaal and the others departed for the royal capital. She won't come out when called for meals, nor when the Great Spirit calls her."

"Beatrice ignoring even Puck, that's unusual."

Hearing their words, Subaru touched his chin, wondering what to do. But recalling events from the previous world, he quickly abandoned the thought, finding it foolish to worry.

He slapped his cheeks with both hands, the dry sound clearing his mind.

"I'll bring Beatrice, so the two of you go to the village first. Ferris and Wilhelm from Crusch's group… and a wandering mercenary named Yuri are there, so if you meet up with them, things should move forward. Leave the drill loli to me."

"Are you confident you can find her?"

"It's not that I'm confident, but… I have a feeling she won't run from me. She probably really likes me."

"To say such a thing in front of that difficult person, you've got guts."

Emilia chuckled softly at Subaru's reply, and Ram snorted, "Hmph," as usual. Subaru shrugged at the two of them, then spun around on the spot, "Well then," he said, and started heading upstairs.

"You're about to witness firsthand the methods of a former shut-in, on what's effective for pulling a shut-in outside!"

2

“What in the world, isn’t this weird?!”

Subaru had made a grand exit, but his confident search for Beatrice was smoothly hitting a snag.

Normally, when Subaru went to call Beatrice for meals, opening just one door would typically lead him to the forbidden library where she was. Sometimes, he’d even open the dining room door intending to call her from there, only for it to connect directly to the library.

Beatrice’s magic, which she called “Door Crossing,” was too advanced for Subaru to understand, but it seemed to be a spatial transfer magic using Yin magic.

Despite being a young girl, Beatrice was an excellent user of Yin magic, and she used Door Crossing to randomly move her “castle,” the forbidden library, within the mansion. She essentially always set up a tricky transfer, providing only one correct door.

Subaru had arbitrarily named his own ability “Door Breaking,” a peculiar trait unique to someone who inexplicably picked the right door on the first try, despite having no sense of the atmosphere.

“For that to stop working now is beyond disappointing. I just bragged so much to Emilia-tan and the others, and saying, ‘Oops, couldn’t find her!’ isn’t going to cut it. Come on, please!”

Subaru muttered, pushing open door after door in the servant’s wing. He had already opened every room in the central wing, wasting a considerable amount of time. This was the first time he’d struggled so much to find Beatrice, and despite his lighthearted words, he couldn’t help but feel an unpleasant sweat break out on his forehead.

Nevertheless, Subaru wasn’t searching for Beatrice without any basis. He was certain she was still somewhere in the mansion.

In a previous iteration, when Subaru arrived at the mansion one day late, Beatrice was indeed there. At that time, Subaru was also overwhelmed by the situation, so they hadn't really had much of a conversation, but,

"This time, with a bit more time, everyone has a little more leeway. Beatrice will probably listen to me a little…"

It wasn't all optimism, but if he didn't tell himself that, he couldn't silently continue this solitary task. After all, constantly opening and closing doors in an empty mansion only to be disappointed would make him look utterly pathetic to an outsider.

"Damn it, can't find her! This is bad! No time! Is this it, should I just give up, throw in the towel, and run away?! My conscience aches thinking of Emilia-tan's trusting gaze, but it can't be helped! I'll tell everyone Beatrice had a tummy ache and wouldn't come out of the bathroom, so I gave up and came back—"

"—Can't you think of a better excuse, I suppose?!"

His muttering, accompanied by him tearing at his hair, was suddenly interrupted by a retort from beyond the opened door.

Before his eyes, the room, which should have been a restroom, transformed into a library packed with piles of paper not meant for wiping—in other words, books.

The familiar forbidden library, encountered after a long time, and its guardian, a girl in an extravagant dress, stood as always in front of him.

Stepping into the room, he saw a wooden stepladder placed directly across from the door. On its rung, a girl sat, engrossed in a thick book.

"Beako, safely found in the bathroom—my intuition isn't so bad after all."

"It's just pitiful that you missed so many times and still didn't give up, I suppose. For Betty's honor, I thought it would be troublesome if you spread strange rumors, in fact."

"Don't worry about it! Everyone poops, and sometimes you just have a tummy ache and don't want to answer! I'm sorry for saying insensitive things while you were straining, my bad!"

"Was what you just said the most insensitive thing in the world, I suppose?!"

Beatrice stood up from the stepladder, fuming with indignation. As the girl's twin drills trembled, Subaru waved a hand lightly, saying, "My bad, my bad."

"Anyway, it's been a while. I was about to search the whole mansion because you wouldn't open up to me."

"…This is how Door Crossing usually works when I'm not letting my guard down, in fact. You weren't really supposed to be able to enter here, I suppose."

"That loses all credibility now that you let me in! Such a tsundere!"

"I only let you in because you might have spread scandalous rumors, in fact!"

After yelling, Beatrice immediately made an embarrassed face, as if ashamed of her outburst. Subaru's lips softened at her ever-changing expressions, and he walked towards her.

"Anyway, I'm glad to see you. Sorry to ask right away, but could you get ready to leave? There's a bit of a problem if we stay in the mansion…"

"Betty isn't going, in fact."

"Huh?"

Subaru's steps halted at Beatrice's words, which immediately cut off his suggestion.

He looked up to see her gazing up at his dumbfounded face, sighing.

"Betty said she isn't going, in fact. She has no intention of leaving this forbidden library, let alone the mansion, I suppose. Just remember that and leave, in fact."

"Wait a minute, you're just not seeing the situation. You can't stay here, it's dangerous, so come with us. I'll explain everything from scratch!"

"Betty understands mostly without an explanation, I suppose. Also, stop treating me like a child, in fact."

Beatrice glared at Subaru, then reached for a bookshelf and pulled out a book that looked like an encyclopedia, too big for her hands. She held it as usual and returned to the stepladder. Sitting down and opening it on her lap, she seemed completely normal, as if she had no intention of evacuating.

"Hey, hold on, we're not done talking. Don't act like it's over."

"Betty has nothing more to say, I suppose. You're just trying to continue, but Betty's conclusion won't change even if you do. You don't have time to waste either, I suppose?"

"Ugh… If you understand that much, then cooperate! I'm taking you. You're being taken by me. Okay?"

"Betty refuses, in fact. It's the same no matter who comes. —Yes, no matter who comes, Betty will not let them set foot in this forbidden library, I suppose."

Beatrice stated firmly, her eyes still on the book, in a quiet tone.

Subaru scratched his head at her stubborn attitude and sighed.

"Listen, okay? It's not just me making noise, or Ram bringing food, who's coming here. I don't want to say it, but the Witch's Cult is coming. Their indiscriminateness is outrageous. Someone like you, staying in the mansion…"

"Betty showed you the power of Door Crossing, in fact. If there are those who still try to intrude… Betty won't show any mercy, I suppose."

"—!"

For a moment, a dangerous aura surged from Beatrice, sending a cold shiver down Subaru's spine.

He gasped, realizing it was the aftershock of the magical power erupting from her entire body.

The immense torrent of mana, even for Subaru who had only briefly touched upon magic users, felt extraordinarily powerful.

"—! Even so, I'm taking you with me."

"Still saying such things…"

"It's not about whether you're strong or not strong! You're a girl, and you're small, and that's reason enough! I don't need any other reason not to leave you in a dangerous place!"

Despite being overwhelmed by her intensity, Subaru stomped his foot on the library floor and shouted.

Beatrice's eyes widened in surprise at his forward, insistent figure, then she closed them as if enduring pain.

Subaru frowned at her reaction and was about to approach to take her out, when,

"Betty isn't going with you. Please stop confusing me anymore, in fact."

"I'm not wrong. You are wrong. —That's my final answer."

"You are quite stubborn, I suppose. —That's what I dislike about you, in fact."

Beatrice mumbled something small, almost inaudible. Subaru was about to ask her to repeat it, but before he could, Beatrice stood up from the stepladder.

"Understood, I suppose, Betty gives up, in fact. As you say, Betty will do it, I suppose."

"Oh? Oh, good then. If you understand, that's fine. For a second there, I braced myself, thinking you'd stand up and blast me away with magic."

"It would be easy for Betty to erase you from this world, leaving only your shadow… but Betty isn't cruel enough to do that, in fact."

Beatrice casually made a chilling remark as she returned the extracted book to the shelf. As he watched her move, Subaru suddenly noticed something and raised an eyebrow. Perhaps he had let his guard down when Beatrice said she would accompany him. It was just a thought.

"Speaking of which, there are a lot of books here, but are you perhaps proficient in scripts other than Iroha?"

"What are you suddenly talking about…? Iroha, you referring to 'I' characters. I suppose? That's a way of calling it that would anger a specialist."

"Right, right, my bad, apologies. So, back to the main topic…"

Subaru forced a smile at Beatrice, who was glaring at him with a deadpan expression, then rummaged in his pocket and pulled out a book. It had a black binding, and its contents were—

"It's this one. The writing inside is somehow unfamiliar to me. I thought you might know something about it…"

"—Why… are you holding that now, I suppose?"

Suddenly, a firm voice cut him off.

He looked to see Beatrice's already large eyes widen even further, staring intently at the 'Gospel' in Subaru's hand.

Subaru, who had brought up the topic lightheartedly, was surprised by her sudden change in demeanor.

"Why are you holding that now, I suppose? Answer me, in fact."

"Why…? I took it, from that idiot in the Witch's Cult. He was clutching it so carefully, I thought there might be some kind of hint written in it."

"Took it? From the Witch's Cult? Of all people, you…"

Beatrice placed a hand on her forehead, her complexion changing slightly as her shoulders trembled. Her already pale face lost even more color, and Subaru watched the girl's wandering gaze in confusion.

He instinctively reached out, feeling as if she might collapse at any moment.

"H-Hey, are you okay? If you're not feeling well, don't push yourself…"

"Betty is… This is no good, in fact. To let him hold this… Could Roswaal have been…?"

"Heeey? I'm sorry you're looking so serious, but caaan you heeeear meee?"

"Betty is thinking now. Please wait a moment."

Beatrice silenced Subaru, who was circling her anxiously, with a single glare. Silenced, Subaru closed his mouth and observed Beatrice, who was meditating with her eyes closed, her expression changing.

Since there seemed to be no reaction for a while, he idly opened the Gospel in his hand, flipping through the incomprehensible pages as usual.

And then, he suddenly noticed something.

"The latter half of this book is blank… But was there a page like this earlier?"

The fact that the contents were written in an unreadable script and that the latter half of the book was completely missing, as if pages had fallen out, remained the same. However, he couldn't shake the feeling that new text had appeared on the last printed page, text that wasn't there before.

It was a book with unreadable content. If he were to say it was just his imagination, that would be the end of it.

“—What do you want to do with that book, I suppose?”

Then, Beatrice, who had been deep in thought, suddenly asked.

With a hand to her mouth, Beatrice, seemingly having reached a conclusion, posed the question to Subaru. In response, Subaru said, “What do I want to do, you ask…” and continued,

“Decipher the contents… though I’m not interested in the Witch’s Cult’s doctrines, I just want to know if there’s any genuinely useful information. If not, I don’t want to keep a book from such a creepy owner.”

“…At least, Betty cannot read its contents, in fact. However, if you don’t wish to keep it, Betty can hold onto it for you, I suppose.”

“Hold onto it?”

“It’s an unknown book, a book that an unknown owner cherished, I suppose. If you’re hesitant to hold onto it, Betty will take it from you, in fact.”

Beatrice hesitantly extended her hand towards him.

From her gesture, it was clear that she didn’t desire the book for herself. It wasn’t a suggestion of reselling it for profit.

It was a genuine offer of goodwill. And, from her earlier remarks, it seemed she understood that this book was at least a Gospel. Therefore,

“Sorry, but I’m rejecting that offer.”

Subaru lightly pressed down on her outstretched hand and firmly stated.

Beatrice blinked for a moment at Subaru’s words, then immediately changed her adorable expression to a stern one.

"Wh-Why, I suppose? You must intuitively know that it's not a good thing, in fact. At least, you must know it doesn't attract good things, I suppose. In that case, instead of keeping it yourself, give it to Betty…"

"My contrarian nature makes me not want to give something away if it's desired, even if I don't need it… but that's just a pretense. To be honest, it's because of that."

This book, this tome called the Gospel, seemed to hold great significance for followers of the Witch's Cult. Furthermore, this Gospel belonged to Petelgeuse, one of the cult's executives.

Subaru vividly remembered how obsessed that man was with this book. Even with him secured and deprived of means of resistance, his vigilance remained unchanged.

"It's a book a scary old man might come drooling to get back, you know? Just because it's creepy to hold, handing it to a little girl isn't something a man does, is it?"

"—!"

"If it's dangerous, I'll hold onto it. I came here to get you to safety, didn't I? Intentionally putting you in danger would be completely counterproductive. Please, don't make me out to be a heartless guy."

Subaru chuckled lightly and tucked the Gospel into his pocket, hiding it from Beatrice's sight. What did Beatrice think as she watched this sequence of actions?

She blinked once, then parted her lips as if to say something—

"—Ugh."

Ultimately, she closed her mouth without saying a word and turned her face away.

Subaru felt something unnatural about her behavior, but her averted face, as if refusing further inquiry, prevented him from pressing the issue. So, he cracked his neck as if changing the subject.

“Ah, well, never mind. Anyway, if we’ve decided to move, please hurry. I’d be troubled if you had too much luggage, but a couple of important books are fine. Also, I think it’d be good to have two or three changes for that unnecessarily extravagant dress.”

“…The library will follow Betty automatically if she moves, in fact. More importantly, were you able to persuade the other two in the mansion, I suppose?”

“That’s a really convenient thing to hear. Yes, persuading the other two is all set. You’re the last one here. Let’s all evacuate to the Sanctuary where Roswaal is.”

“Roswaal, I suppose… What about the maid’s sister you went with, I suppose?”

Suddenly, Beatrice brought up Rem.

Subaru was surprised that Rem was mentioned by her, raising his eyebrows slightly. Then, thinking it was a good sign, he softened his expression.

“Rem’s waiting at the capital right now. We had a bit of a big fishing trip on the way back. It was so big that she’s probably preparing it lavishly for us. Once everything’s settled, let’s all go and get some.”

“You speak quite happily, in fact. —Did something happen, I suppose?”

“Ugh.”

Subaru couldn’t deny that he’d spoken a bit too fast, overreacting to Rem’s name. Beatrice’s sharp remark hit a nerve, making him choke up. He whistled and turned his face away.

“N-Nothing at all!”

“It would be strange if you didn’t grow fond of her after being treated so intimately, I suppose. Betty won’t spread rumors, I suppose. Do as you please, in fact."

"I-It's not like I'm trying to hide it, okay? It's just, it takes courage to suddenly report it to Emilia-tan or her actual sister, you know… or rather, it's a strategic retreat."

Subaru mumbled weakly, rubbing his fingers together, and turned his back to Beatrice, looking down in shame.

The current situation largely influenced things, and it was true he didn't have the courage to suddenly report it. Emilia would also be taken by surprise if he suddenly declared, "I'm going to get both you and Rem!" Even though he'd already decided that.

"Having high goals is a good thing. It gives you something to strive for when you make an effort. I generally don't dislike effort. It's just that I haven't had a goal until now—!"

His mouth, which had been building up excuses to buoy his spirits, suddenly stopped at an unexpected sensation.

From behind, he felt a warm sensation on his back, being embraced with arms wrapped around his waist from behind. Small, slender arms were wrapped around his stomach, making it clear who the other person was.

It was Beatrice.

"What, Beatrice? You startled me. Don't do that suddenly, please."

"That reaction is quite genuinely irritating, I suppose. —But, it's enough, in fact."

"Huh?"

Immediately after tilting his head at her unexpected words, a vivid light suddenly burned his eyelids.

Before he could realize it was the result of the entrance door opening by itself,

"Farewell—"

"Ugh, oh?!"

The arms that had been wrapped around him in an embrace let go, and he felt a strong pressure from behind, pushing him forcefully. Unable to resist, his body lurched forward, stumbling.

He then plunged into the door as if being sucked in—

"Beatrice—!"

"Betty… cannot go with you, in fact."

He turned his body, casting his gaze into the room just before passing through the door.

The girl, barely visible in his sight, had large tears welling up in her eyes.

"—!"

Without being able to say a word, his vision blurred. His body was caught in the distortion of space, walking an impossible path on its own, and the connection to the forbidden library was severed.

Subaru's body was then expelled from the space of the forbidden library and vanished somewhere far away.

"—'am."

Having witnessed that, Beatrice slowly closed the door, which had been left open.

The sound of the air being cut off, and a deep, profound silence once again settled upon the forbidden library.

"—Mother."

In a small, tearful voice, Beatrice called that name.

The large tears had already vanished from her eyes, but her expression remained unchanged.

"how much longer… does Betty…?"

Beatrice, on the verge of collapsing in tears, walked to the stepladder and leaned her weight against it as if falling. Then she reached out and pulled out the book she had placed on the opposite rung of the stepladder—the one facing the rung she usually sat on—and clutched it.

“Mother… Mother… Mother…!”

Like a lost child, clinging, with the book clasped to her chest, Beatrice’s voice continued to echo through the quiet forbidden library like a sob.

The black-bound book in her arms did not answer her.

Chapter 72: Understanding and Lack of Understanding

1

—Thinking back, it was my first time experiencing a transfer without losing consciousness.

That strange sensation of my foot landing somewhere other than where it should. The peculiar feeling of the air, which I should have been able to sense, now touching my skin as something entirely different. The unnatural sensation of my internal organs clashing, defying gravity and inertia.

All those unpleasant feelings mixed and lumped together.

That's what Subaru felt the moment he was thrown out of the forbidden library by Beatrice and snapped back from unconsciousness.

"—I knew you were prone to doing unexpected things, but to have my common sense so easily shattered… it's rather difficult to maintain my composure."

"Next time, I'll show you at the New Year's hidden talent show. It'll be a combined attack with me and… the drill loli. We're in the village, right?"

"That should be correct. By the way, if my guess is right, I believe you emerged from the door of what might have been a livestock shed."

Julius pointed at the ground, his expression twisting into something a little sympathetic. Following his finger, Subaru noticed he was standing in a pile of bird droppings.

"From a toilet, to a chicken coop covered in shit… She really went out of her way to mess with me in that split second."

Muttering complaints, Subaru slowly walked out of the livestock shed, shaking his lifted foot. The chicken-like birds remaining inside, seeing Subaru, the sudden intruder, leave, began pecking at their feed with what seemed like relief.

Subaru glanced at them, then craned his neck to survey his surroundings. It was, without a doubt, the village landscape he had just passed through.

"Was that, by any chance, teleportation magic just now? If so, you've had a remarkably rare experience. Magic that connects separate spaces is almost a lost art, even among Yin affinity magic. There should be less than five people who can wield it."

"'How lucky' is not the right way to put this. That idiotic girl, what am I going to do with her…!"

Subaru's eyes, bloodshot with anger, turned back towards the mansion as he lightly responded to Julius's admiration. Flashing through his mind was the girl with cream-colored hair in vertical drills, the one who had abruptly cut him off and acted on her own.

The look of sorrow she had given him when they parted was burned into his eyelids, refusing to fade.

"With a face like that, what was she thinking? This is ridiculous. At this rate, I'll just have to drag her out by force…"

"I don't think that's a good idea."

A leisurely voice suddenly reached Subaru, stopping him just as he was rolling up his sleeves and flexing his shoulders, brimming with motivation. Subaru made a guttural sound, and his movements froze at the familiar voice.

Slowly, Subaru turned his head with an unnatural, almost neck-cracking movement—and saw a grey-furred cat floating in mid-air, approaching him.

At the same time, Julius also noticed its presence. He straightened his back, then bowed respectfully.

"It's been a long time, Great Spirit."

"There's no need to be so formal. My rank as a spirit is just for show, and I don't intend to bestow blessings on anyone but Lia. Yes, I am truly the deadbeat of the spirit world…"

"There's no need for a reason to revere a being of great power. Furthermore, if I may add, I am but a humble spirit arts user myself. Including the lesser spirits under my contract, there is no reason for me not to revere you."

"How elegant. Very good, very good."

Puck listened to Julius's overly polite address while stroking his own whiskers. Subaru, meanwhile, watched him, a cold sweat breaking out on his back.

His heart pounded, and his limbs felt numb. Emilia was nowhere to be seen around Puck. He was acting alone. That fact deeply unsettled Subaru.

"It's troubling to be stared at with such intensity, Subaru. I know I'm impossibly cute after not seeing me for so long, but still."

"…As a humble fluff-lover, it's terrifying how I can't completely deny that."

Unconcerned by Subaru's inner turmoil, Puck, looking down at him, said something playful. Shrugging his shoulders, playing along with the lighthearted remark, Subaru resisted the paralysis caused by the mental pressure. However, his pulse was still racing.

If he had to name this feeling, Subaru thought, it would definitely be fear.

Subaru was now experiencing undeniable terror towards the small cat in front of him, who was idly swaying its long tail and speaking foolishly.

If that being unleashed its true power, Subaru would be scattered as easily as dust blown away. Subaru had experienced this three times already.

Telling him not to be nervous, not to be afraid, was a cruel request.

“So, what did you mean by that just now?”

“Just now?”

“Don’t immediately forget what you said… You stopped me from going to get Beako, didn’t you?”

Subaru, annoyed at Puck who seemed to have genuinely forgotten his own words, asked again while trying to hide his complicated feelings. Puck then lightly clapped his hands and said, “Ah.”

“It’s exactly what I said. If you try to take Betty out, it’s better if you don’t. You met her and talked, and she pushed you away, didn’t she? Well, that’s her answer.”

“It’s dangerous to stay in the mansion. The Witch Cult is highly likely to rampage. This isn’t the time for leisurely talk about not being found…”

“I don’t think Betty’s door transfer can be broken, and even if it could, that would just be how it is. That’s her answer.”

Subaru involuntarily widened his eyes and held his breath at the words thrown at him.

He wanted to ask if it was a joke, but the small cat in front of him maintained its expression and demeanor. Its attitude, which could only be described as serious, made Subaru say,

“That’s too cold, no matter how you look at it, isn’t it? She adores you that much, and yet you…”

“I think of her like a sister too, you know. But that familial love and her choice of destiny are completely different stories. It’s troublesome to lump them together.”

“You…!”

Enraged by the cruelly detached answer, Subaru inadvertently stepped forward. Unable to believe Puck would take such an attitude, he reached out his arm, intending to grab him and make him retract his words. But,

“Subaru, stop there.”

“Guh, you’re stopping me too… saying I’m wrong…!”

“I don’t fully grasp the situation, but it’s not that. It’s a futile effort to try and change the Great Spirit’s mind. Our values are different from theirs. They cannot be reconciled.”

Julius held Subaru back with his arm and shook his head. As if to prove his words, Puck, looking down at the enraged Subaru, remained calm and elusive. It was as if he felt nothing from their current exchange.

“What’s wrong?”

Blinking his dark eyes, Puck tilted his adorable face slightly and asked.

However, the fact that his voice, expression, attitude, and gestures were no different from normal seemed incredibly abnormal to Subaru at that moment.

Subaru’s relationship with Puck, counting from his summoning to this other world, was relatively long. He had exchanged many words with Puck, whom he encountered around the same time as Emilia, and had developed a certain fondness for his inhuman nature, believing they had gotten along well so far.

However, Subaru now completely failed to understand the inner workings of someone he thought he knew so well.

Despite his appearance, Puck was quite human-like; he could laugh, his voice could tremble with anger, and he should even be able to grieve for someone’s unfulfilled wishes.

“Emilia would surely be angry if she heard this.”

“—That’s none of your business, Subaru.”

For the first time, it was a clear rejection from Puck's mouth.

In front of the looking-up Subaru, Puck turned his back while still floating in mid-air. Then,

"In any case, Betty won't be showing her face again. I don't think the Witch Cult will be keen enough to notice the forbidden library either. In her case, it's probably safer if she doesn't come out. If you're family, you have to trust her."

"…If we're family, shouldn't we fix it when we think someone's wrong?"

"Wanting to help and protect everyone. Subaru, that's a line a fully capable adult should be saying, someone who can take care of themselves properly."

Puck responded harshly to Subaru's strained words, drifting further away.

Subaru could only watch Puck's too-small back with bitter regret. Julius, standing beside him, patted his shoulder as if to comfort him.

"I'm not doing this for sympathy. Stop it, it just makes me feel pathetic."

"Your aspirations are admirable, and that is a knight's quality. But for now, as his existence suggests, you lack too much. —So, what will you do?"

"What do you mean… what about?"

"Everything. The villagers have been persuaded, and they're already at the stage of boarding the dragon carriages. Lady Emilia and her female attendant are also in a different dragon carriage from the villagers. All that's left is for us to be ready to depart… And the person you were just talking about?"

While Subaru was talking with Emilia and Beatrice in the mansion, Julius and the other members of the subjugation force seemed to have managed things well.

Preparations for evacuation were complete, with only the lingering concern of those who remained in the mansion on their own.

“If we take too long and are late for the evacuation, it’ll be meaningless… Damn it, I’ll resent you, Beako. If only you had just come along.”

“Regret it later. The more time we take, the more we will fuel the anxiety of the residents we’ve finally managed to calm. I believe now is the turning point.”

Subaru bit his lip at Julius’s remark, shaking his head in deep thought, stomping his foot, and then groaned, “Aargh!” before saying,

“We’re evacuating to a place called the Sanctuary, guided by Ram, the mansion maid, where Roswaal is currently. They say there’s enough fighting power and at least safety is guaranteed.”

“…Are you sure?”

“No, I’m not. I’m not, but… I have no choice.”

Grinding his teeth in frustration, Subaru looked back at the mansion.

Was she still there, the girl, sitting on a stepladder in a dark room, behind a door that no one would open, quietly engrossed in a book?

“Always making me worry, you bad girl. Please, please don’t get found… I’ll deliver Emilia-tan and be right back for you.”

Clasping his hands together, Subaru offered a prayer to a god he didn’t even believe in.

And so, with that perfunctory prayer, he forcibly settled his heart, and though still dragging his effeminate feelings, he began to walk.

“After guiding them to the Sanctuary, I’ll come right back and use the mansion as a base to hunt down the remaining Witch Cultists. How’s Petelgeuse… the Sin Archbishop?”

“Sir Wilhelm and Ferris are constantly with him. If there are any signs of him waking, Wilhelm-sama will strike. Ferris can detect mana, so feigning sleep won’t work on him at all. He’s the optimal lookout.”

“I see, that’s reassuring… Alright, let’s go. Patrasche!”

Heading towards the village exit on the main road, Subaru raised his hand and called the earth dragon’s name. And the black earth dragon, whose nickname had become firmly established, approached Subaru, turning around majestically as if anticipating its master’s ride, offering its back.

“The only thing supporting me right now is the trust I’ve built with you, honestly.”

“…”

Lightly stroking its sturdy, scaly flank, Subaru then, not exactly gracefully but with reasonable movement, leaped onto its back and used the reins to make Patrasche start walking.

The herd of earth dragons —the merchants’ dragon carriages— were already awaiting the signal to depart, and veteran warriors, weapons in hand, surrounded them, watching.

“Subaru, they’re waiting for your command.”

“Mine?”

Suddenly, Julius, who had mounted his own earth dragon and ridden alongside him, spoke to Subaru.

As if to confirm his words, the numerous gazes directed at him sent knowing glances of agreement. Naturally, his chest warmed.

Unsure if the emotion was embarrassment or a type of inspiration, Subaru raised his fist high and shouted,

“—To the Sanctuary, we depart!!”

“—Ohh!!”

The overlapping voices of the knights rose high into the sky, and the great migration began.

2

“I met someone called ‘Juli, the Wandering Mercenary,’ and I was super surprised!”

Emilia pouted, resting her chin on her raised knees, and glared at Subaru with narrowed eyes. Her childish gesture was unbelievably cute, and Subaru found himself captivated. Emilia continued, looking even more sulky, “I was just… really, really surprised.”

“I’m also really surprised by Emilia-tan’s cuteness right now, but what happened?”

“It’s the Wandering Mercenary! I thought Juli was someone I didn’t know at all, but it turned out to be Julius. You two fought so much, when did you make up?”

Her voice rose slightly, then she pointed gently towards the stopped dragon carriage. Julius could be seen talking with the Beastman Mercenary group. Subaru grimaced, looking utterly disgusted as he saw him.

“We didn’t make up. That’s Juli, the Wandering Mercenary. Our relationship is just a flimsy one, connected by money, as employer and mercenary. Of course, we’re cooperating.”

“You’re being so stubborn… Boys just don’t understand that kind of thing. You should make up with Julius, just like you did with me.”

“I wanted to make up with Emilia-tan so much my heart was practically breaking, but I really don’t want to make up with him. I hate him, forever.”

Subaru declared with a sullen expression, enunciating his words brokenly and rhythmically swinging his arm. Emilia sighed in exasperation at his stubbornness, shaking her head weakly in resignation.

Approximately four hours had passed since they departed from Roswaal's mansion and the evacuation began.

They had covered about half the distance to their destination, the Sanctuary, and were now at the entrance of a forest path, where they had stopped their march to take a break.

It was a large-scale movement, with a good number of children, elderly, and women, so pushing them too hard would cause problems. This was Julius's judgment as he led the vanguard.

Though he felt a twinge of impatience at stopping, once the break began, Subaru was astonished to realize the fatigue he hadn't noticed earlier suddenly weighed down his entire body.

It was no wonder; since his negotiations with Crusch at Crusch's mansion two days prior, he hadn't had a single moment of peaceful rest.

"Travel time for the whale subjugation, and the actual battle. Right after that, we formed the Witch Cult countermeasure team and ran all night, then cut down Petelgeuse, and now we're here… Huh. No wonder I'm tired."

He reflected on the unexpectedly heavy workload he'd accumulated, and, exhausted, tipped back some water. It was water given to him by one of the merchants, in a bamboo-like container. Thanks to some kind of magic, the icy-cold water slipped down his throat, filling him with energy.

"Ahhh! I live for this one drink!"

"Barusu, you sound like an old man."

As Subaru groaned involuntarily from the refreshing drink, Ram, holding a similar container and serving, cut him off with a single word and walked past.

As he glared hatefully at her retreating back, Emilia, sitting beside him, chuckled softly.

"Subaru, your face seems to have changed a lot."

"Really? Well, I guess so. Honestly, I'm unbelievably tired, so I feel like the dark circles under my eyes are something else. Ugh, lack of sleep is the enemy of good skin."

"It's not that… You just look more like a man, I think."

Subaru choked on his breath, surprised by her smiling comment. To prevent her from seeing his momentary stagnation, he scratched his head and turned his face away, trying to hide his blush.

"So you thought I was neutered until now?"

"Neutered…?"

"Gah, I just dropped an unexpected bomb to hide my embarrassment… My pure eyes are burning!"

Emilia tilted her head, unable to grasp the vulgar word, looking adorable and causing Subaru pain.

As Subaru writhed, clutching his chest, a white fingertip stroked his silver hair, pushing it back.

"Did Beatrice listen to you?"

"…………"

"You met her, but it didn't go well… Is that what your silence means?"

"Was it that obvious?"

"Then it's a hit. Hehe, maybe I'm starting to understand your feelings, Subaru."

Emilia's smile didn't waver, even as Subaru lowered his eyebrows miserably. Feeling unworthy of such a smile at the moment, Subaru consciously averted his gaze from her, though he wished he could keep looking. Emilia reached out to Subaru's profile, and her slender fingers touched his cheek. Surprised, he looked back at her.

"Don't make that face. I know how much you tried for Beatrice, Subaru. Even after parting like that, you still came back to me. There's no way you'd abandon Beatrice."

"She's selfish and opinionated, that girl. She just went off on her own and locked herself away. Once I deliver Emilia-tan and everyone, I'm going straight back, dragging her out, and giving her a good spanking."

"Won't Beatrice get really mad if you do that?"

"Compared to our Tom and Jerry antics, that'd be nothing. Emilia-tan, if you have anything you want to tell her, I'll make sure to tell her off for you."

As he bantered in the playful tone Emilia had helped him regain, her expression suddenly hardened. Subaru's eyes widened when he noticed, and Emilia lowered her gaze slightly.

"I haven't really talked much with Beatrice. So, I don't know what to say."

"Not really…?"

He started to speak, but then Subaru realized.

In all their days at the mansion, he couldn't recall a single instance of her and Beatrice conversing.

Beatrice would only approach Emilia to speak with Puck, who was always by Emilia's side. Once that was done, the girl would pass by Emilia without a word, or even a glance. Emilia, too, seemed to accept it.

"It seems Beatrice avoids me," Emilia replied, sensing the reason for Subaru's silence.

Emilia's amethyst eyes wavered as Subaru remained speechless, and she searched her memories.

"When I first met her at Roswaal's mansion, Puck and Beatrice instantly hit it off. Though, they were alone together then, so I don't know what they talked about."

"Those two have a weird relationship, acting like siblings."

In the first place, the combination of a kitten brother and a young girl sister made no sense. What common ground did these two have that would allow for a sibling dynamic?

Emilia shook her head again at Subaru's puzzled look.

"I'm sorry, I don't know that either. But Puck told me not to press on the subject of his relationship with Beatrice as part of our contract."

"A contract… you mean like with spirits? Huh? Can you really include such private details in a contract?"

"It's the spirit's own criteria for deciding whether to connect with the user. The terms of a contract vary completely depending on the spirit, they say. For a high-ranking spirit like Puck, you're supposed to pay a really high price, but…"

Emilia trailed off, closing her mouth awkwardly. Subaru, confused by the sudden silence, prompted her with "But?", and she closed her eyes.

"Puck is… well, he's incredibly lenient with me, so the conditions are all very simple. There are just a few more of them."

"Besides 'don't question your relationship with Betty,' there are other things?"

"A few. Like my hairstyle in the morning has to be what Puck chooses, or doing simple exercises when I wake up and before bed, and not being picky about food. Talking to the tiny spirits morning and evening, and grooming Puck's fur too…"

"That's just spoiling you rotten! He's just making sure you live a healthy, wholesome life! Spoiling you rotten!"

Subaru couldn't help but repeat his retort twice, astounded by Puck's doting nature. Emilia blushed and looked down at Subaru's reaction.

“That’s why I didn’t want to say it! I didn’t think it was strange at all until I left the forest, but… after living at Roswaal’s mansion, I started to think it might be a little weird…”

“What is that cat teaching my innocent Emilia-tan…? It’s annoying that Emilia-tan is constantly being guided towards my preferences! What is he? Is he my Cupid despite how he looks?!”

If Puck was like a foster parent, then Emilia’s current innocent goddess-like demeanor was a result of Puck’s upbringing. It was a shame that Subaru, despite having just had a rather prickly exchange with Puck, found himself almost forgiving him out of self-interest.

Anyway,

“That’s why I can’t ask Puck about it… but for some reason, Beatrice avoids talking to me. And I don’t know why.”

Emilia closed her eyes, returning sadly to the original topic of conversation. Her long eyelashes trembled slightly, and he could see the rigid expression on her face struggling to contain sadness.

Moved by her expression, Subaru scratched his cheek with a finger.

“Alright, I get it. Then, this time, you and I will pay a visit to Betty’s Forbidden Library.”

“Huh?”

“The Forbidden Library. That moldy, unhealthy room where Betty, the bookworm, just coops herself up. If she lives like that, just reading books in a place like that, she’ll ruin her eyes and end up a sickly child with glasses as thick as milk bottle bottoms. Before that happens, we’ll make her learn from Emilia-tan, who works hard day and night to maintain her beauty and health!”

Subaru clapped his hands, thinking it a brilliant idea, in front of Emilia’s wide, blinking eyes.

Puck and Beatrice were close, and Puck and Emilia were also close. So, if they threw Beatrice into a situation where Emilia was carrying out Puck's suggestions, wouldn't there be some hope for improving their relationship? Even if not, getting a result that confirmed the method didn't work was still progress. Progress that said it didn't progress.

"You have to try everything first, Emilia-tan. If she runs away when you try to talk to her, then this time, let's try to grab her. She might still run away, but before she does, she'll probably complain loudly. And if you complain back loudly enough… eventually, you'll be able to laugh and talk."

"…"

Subaru's rough and optimistic communication lesson.

Even Emilia couldn't hide her surprise at the extreme and nonsensical content. And after a few seconds of frozen silence, she suddenly,

"Hehe."

She laughed, covering her mouth with her hand.

"Oh, I got an Emilia-tan smile."

"Haha, what are you saying? Subaru… no, amazing. Subaru is amazing, truly amazing. Yeah. Mhm… amazing."

Subaru, secretly wishing he could record the latter half of her praise, felt surprisingly ticklish from being complimented so much.

Unaware of Subaru's reaction, Emilia let out a deep sigh.

"Next time, maybe I'll try that. Maybe I'll try talking to her that way this time."

"Yeah, let's do it. For that, we'll focus on the evacuation now. After that, I'll go back full-force, secure Betty full-force. Then I'll hand her over to Emilia-tan full-force."

"You're always full-force, aren't you?"

"I've recently learned that nothing good comes from half-assing things."

Subaru stuck out his tongue in response, and Emilia mimicked him, sticking out her tongue slightly. Though a mimicry, the cuteness difference was tenfold, shocking Subaru. Leaving Subaru rigid, Emilia said, "It's almost time," and brushed off the hem of her clothes, which had gotten dirty from sitting.

"The hour we planned for our break is almost up, so we need to get ready. Did you get some rest, Subaru? Are you not pushing yourself too hard?"

"Thanks to Emilia-tan, the relaxation effect is insane. E.M.H. (Emilia-tan. Magical. Healer)."

"There you go again… It's been a while since I've heard those strange words."

Subaru, happy to be having this exchange again, also brushed off his backside and stood up.

Then he twisted his waist and looked around, subtly, so Emilia wouldn't notice.

They had thirty dragon carriages stopped, creating a sizable resting area.

Each group of merchants and villagers gathered together, exchanging anxieties and information. And during that time, aside from Ram, who was wandering around serving, not a single person approached Emilia and Subaru.

If it were out of consideration for the good atmosphere between the two, it would be heartwarming, but that wasn't the case.

—No one wanted to associate with Emilia, a half-elf.

Even the sturdy knights of the subjugation force, who had overcome hardships with them, were not exempt from this prejudice. While they tried not to show it in their expressions or actions in front of Subaru, given such an opportunity, the part of them that rejected her presence naturally emerged.

Aside from Subaru and Ram, the only ones who interacted with her naturally were Julius, Ferris, Wilhelm, and Mimi, who seemed oblivious to everything.

During the evacuation, in what was essentially a shared fate, this was the situation. Subaru's expression clouded with anxiety about the future, and he wiped his face with his palm to prevent Emilia from seeing his troubled look.

He roughly wiped, swung his arm, thrust a finger skyward, and made a grand turn.

"Alright, time to get going again! I know you want to stay with me, Emilia-tan, but you'll have to brave it and get back in the dragon carriage."

"By the way, Subaru, it feels like the ground dragon you're riding has been glaring at me a lot… You're quite well-liked, aren't you?"

His casual remark was smoothly ignored, and when he looked where she pointed, he saw Patrasche glaring at Emilia. Her gaze seemed to hold even the pride of a mount not wanting its master taken.

"Hey, partner, are you jealous of Emilia-tan? Stop it, you and I are inseparable. I won't give that up. Though, my soul is entrusted to Emilia-tan—cough!"

As he tried to appease her in a smooth tone, he was blown away by Patrasche's swinging tail midway through. Watching Subaru tumble vigorously on the ground, Emilia shrugged her shoulders in exasperation.

"If you keep saying sweet things to every girl you meet like that, you'll end up in trouble. You should save them for the person who truly matters, shouldn't you?"

"M-My brightest star… is always… you…"

"Yes, yes. Alright, let's go."

Emilia gave a perfunctory reply to Subaru, who was rolling on the ground clutching his bruised side, and got into the dragon carriage. He saw that everyone else around them was also finishing their break and beginning to move to resume their journey.

“Barusu. No matter how tired you are, sleeping on the ground shows a complete lack of self-awareness as Lord Roswaal’s servant.”

Ram, following Emilia into the dragon carriage, looked down at Subaru, who lay abandoned on the ground, with disdain.

3

The break ended, and the journey to the Sanctuary resumed.

Unlike the Lifaus Highway leading to the capital, this route, winding through hilly terrain, was a significant burden not just for the ground dragons but also for their riders. It wasn’t just the continuous inclines; they had to navigate rough forest paths and rocky stretches, sometimes even squeezing through narrow passages barely wide enough for a single dragon carriage.

Naturally, the fatigue accumulated for the villagers unaccustomed to such marches, and for Subaru, a complete novice, it was overwhelming. Time and again, he consciously pushed through, bracing himself as his nerves threatened to snap.

“Excluding breaks, we’ve been traveling for about six and a half hours… I’d say it’s about time we got a clear idea of where this ‘Sanctuary’ is…”

Subaru leaned his entire weight against Patrasche, who, his clever partner, adjusted her movements to ease his burden. He tilted his head, surveying the slanted world around him.

However, ahead lay a path flanked on both sides by low hills, obscuring anything beyond, leaving their destination still unknown.

“Subaru, I believe we should be getting a sense of our destination soon…”

“Why didn’t you bring that up ten seconds earlier? Then I wouldn’t have had to be disappointed twice."

Perhaps it was the advantage of his training. Julius, still moving with elegant grace despite the journey, chuckled at Subaru's weary, slumped words.

He used a finger to smooth his wind-swept bangs, then narrowed his eyes at the same path below the hill that Subaru had just seen.

"Indeed, this path looks like it will slow our march again. —We cannot afford to let our guard down."

"…I know. If I were the enemy, I'd make my move about now."

When Subaru replied to Julius's sharp tone, the knight looked at him askance, a hint of surprise in his eyes.

"I'm surprised to find myself in agreement with you. Do you truly believe an attack is imminent?"

"It's better to assume there will be one. It's too unsettling that there hasn't been any movement until now, and we still have a Sin Archbishop left in our hands. I'm not expecting camaraderie or anything like that, but… they're not the kind of people to just give up."

"You seem quite certain. I share your sentiment."

Nodding in satisfaction at Subaru's answer, Julius tapped the hilt of his sheathed knight's sword and looked towards the middle of the marching line of dragon carriages—the one carrying Wilhelm and Ferris, who were monitoring Petelgeuse.

"If he dies, he possesses another body, huh? If that's true, it's an extremely troublesome Authority. Ultimately, the best course of action would be to borrow the power of the Great Spirit and seal him away."

"So that's it, huh? I thought that was the best option too. It's frustrating, though."

Petelgeuse was the one person Subaru truly wanted to kill, if he were honest.

Part of it was his own hatred urging him on, but even more so, it was a sense of righteous indignation. He didn't know the full extent of that man's deeds. He didn't know, but he did know one thing.

—This man deserved to die here.

"That's an incredible thought. If I were back in my original world, I'd never be able to seriously consider something like that."

He could have glibly said "die" or "kill," but since coming to this world, he had been constantly made to realize the value and weight of life. He doubted he could ever utter those words lightly again.

To be taught that lesson, and still feel this way, meant that man was beyond saving.

No, it meant there were some people who simply shouldn't be saved.

—That's when it happened.

"—Subaru!"

"—?!"

Suddenly, Julius let out a sharp cry, and Patrasche halted according to his raised hand. The swift command spread throughout the ranks, and the march came to an immediate stop.

The halt was ordered by the elderly knight leading the vanguard. He drew his sword, raised it to the sky, and shouted with all his might for everyone to hear.

"—Ahead, multiple figures in the path flanked by hills! Dressed in black… it's the Witch Cult!!"

The report was delivered loudly. Subaru and Julius exchanged glances, nodded, and then started running towards the front of the confused column.

As they ran, Julius, then Subaru, not to be outdone, shouted,

“Act calmly! Knights of the Kingdom, protect the citizens! ‘Iron Fang,’ follow me!”

“Don’t panic, it’ll be fine, I’ll deal with them somehow! We’ve got lots of strong, cool knights here, and there’s even a tough, wild mercenary group! Alright, Mild, don’t show your face, protect your mom! Petra, you just expect my victory!”

At Julius’s command, the knights and mercenaries moved, and at Subaru’s cry, the anxious villagers pulled their heads back into the dragon carriages.

Seeing this, the separation of combatants and evacuees was successful. Subaru and Julius, who had surged to the front, brought the advancing Witch Cultists into view.

Witch Cultists emerged one after another from beyond the hill—their number, approximately thirty.

Two unlocated hideouts meant their numbers were slightly higher than expected for the remnants.

“Even if I were Petelgeuse, I would have prepared a separate unit, not for direct assault. It’s not surprising… How about it, Julius? Can we do this?”

“They are more numerous than anticipated, but we still outnumber them. Furthermore, this is a head-on clash. There’s no reason for the Witch Cult, who hide in shadows and act vilely, to be a match for us knights.”

Julius drew his knight’s sword, answering Subaru’s question with a dignified demeanor.

Following his lead, the knights one after another drew their weapons, and the mercenary group, astride their Ligers, began licking their lips as if anticipating the smell of blood.

Feeling the surge of fighting spirit, Subaru looked behind him.

At the front of the lowered dragon carriages was Emilia's carriage. He could see her silver hair fluttering through the open small window, and her amethyst eyes looking at him with worry.

He raised a finger to reassure her, then shifted his gaze further back.

There, Petelgeuse remained captured and silent, while Wilhelm, having dismounted, held his sacred sword, vigilantly guarding against threats both internal and external.

"We'll crush the Witch Cultists in front of us, and then freeze Petelgeuse. —Looking back, it's been a long journey, hasn't it?"

However, the end of that journey was finally in sight.

There was no basis for it. But his soul vaguely understood. His heart knew that every single being here was the complete fighting force for each other.

Therefore, there was no hesitation in giving their all.

"Annihilate the Witch Cult. All units—"

Taking a breath, Julius let out a loud command.

Their fighting spirit surged explosively. Just before everyone was about to charge forward with the next shout—

"—!!"

A thunderous explosion, powerful enough to rupture eardrums, reverberated.

A tremendous tremor ran through the ground, and their bodies swayed, caught in the shockwave and blast. A metallic ringing echoed in his skull, and his vision flickered.

"What…?"

Unable to even hear his own words, yet certain of the explosion's source, Subaru turned his head back.

—There, only the traces of ‘the dragon carriage that should have been carrying Petelgeuse’ remained, having vanished without a trace.

“Damn—!!”

The moment the possibility dawned on him, Subaru understood his own shortsightedness.

At the same time, the surrounding knights and mercenaries saw the same thing as Subaru and were speechless. As their fighting spirit was doused, the Witch Cultists approached from the path beyond the hill—the woman leading them smiled grotesquely.

“Now, the beginning of —the end!!”

Black witch hands stretched upwards, with a force and pressure that seemed to envelop the sky.

Stretching upwards.

Stretching—upwards.

Chapter 73:
Unscrupulous Sloth

1

—Black ruin, covering the sky with a force and mass that could easily be mistaken for a nightmare.

At the feet of the woman with the distorted smile, there seemed to be no limit to the “Unseen Hands” gushing forth from the swelling shadows.

The number of hands reaching into the sky, palms turned toward us —easily approaching a hundred, too many to count.

“—Petelgeuse Romanee-Conti!!”

“Oh? To be called by name before I even introduce myself is quite curious?! I should be moving different fingers than the ones you know!”

As Subaru bellowed, his voice filled with rage amidst the swirling dust, Petelgeuse stomped his foot, his expression growing even more amused, though his words conveyed confusion.

“It seems most of the fingers I had hidden in the forest have been annihilated, destroyed, utterly wiped out, but that cannot be helped! The precious, irreplaceable lives of my devout followers, which must never be treated in vain! They existed for this very moment, this instant, now! Ah! Ahhh! My love, my favoritism! My beloved Witch!”

In a frenzy of excitement, Petelgeuse bit off one finger after another from his right hand, which he’d thrust into his mouth. He adorned the battlefield with his blood-soaked, crazed laughter, swinging his dripping arm.

“Now, begin the end, and declare the end of the end! And and and and andddd! Before my love, before my diligent service! Offer your body, your life, your soul—this is it!!”

Simultaneously with his declaration, the arms covering the sky rained down on them—and the Witch Cultists surrounding the raging Petelgeuse also charged forward, holding cross-shaped daggers.

In contrast, their own preparations were a step behind, caught off guard by the enemy’s initial assault.

Around them, the subjugation force was still deeply affected by the chaos of the explosion from behind, and thick smoke billowed from the blast crater—the safety of the two main combatants who had been there was a concern. But,

“No time to be spacing out! It’s either kill or be killed—isn’t that right!”

Ricardo roared, brandishing his large鉈 and flashing his sharp fangs. Just that was enough to quell the confusion among the Beast-kin Mercenary Group, and with their leader at the forefront, all of them spurred their ligers forward.

At the same time, Julius, holding his knight’s sword high, drew the gaze of the knights.

“Do not let the despicable acts of these villains disturb your hearts! The situation behind us, with citizens to protect, remains unchanged. —All units, charge!!”

The sword swung, and Julius’s ground dragon was the first to dash forward. Following suit, the knights also raised their weapons high, lining up their steeds on the path of the finest knight.

And so, the combined force of mercenaries and knights charged—leading the charge was Natsuki Subaru, clinging awkwardly to a graceful black ground dragon, Patrasche.

Before the two leaders could calm their confused comrades, Subaru had ordered Patrasche to leap headfirst into the oncoming threat of the Witch Cult.

He had no chance of winning.

In fact, Subaru, whose combat capabilities hadn't changed, was so powerless he could be killed just fighting one Witch Cultist with a dagger.

But even so, Subaru had to lead the charge. Because—

"Hey, Pete! Aim for me! —I can see all your many hands really well!!"

"—?!"

Suppressing his fear, Subaru wore a deeply taunting smile and flipped him off, freezing the crazed expression on Petelgeuse's face.

As if to prove his words, Subaru maneuvered Patrasche to evade the writhing Unseen Hands that attacked him.

He tilted right to avoid extending arms, and lowered his stance against palms thrust straight forward. He evaded the mass of arms blocking his front with a sharp turn, and left behind the demonic hands closing in from all directions with a burst of speed.

It wasn't Subaru's skill that was high; the main reason for the successful evasion was Patrasche's immediate understanding of Subaru's intentions through the reins.

To Subaru, who had proven his words by the narrowest of margins, Petelgeuse distorted his seemingly innocent female face with rage and humiliation.

"What nonsense… that cannot be! Why, why, why, why, why, why, why… my, the favoritism given to me, only to me! You, with those eyes, eyes, eyes, eyes, eyes, eyes, eyes, eyes?!"

"Is the Witch just a cheater? Oh, oh, oh, oh, were you played? How pathetic!"

"What an insult! What humiliation! What disgrace! Not only to me, but to my beloved's guidance, such words… This cannot be allowed! It must not be allowed! It must never be allowed!!"

With bloodshot eyes wide open, Petelgeuse frothed at the mouth as he pursued Subaru. The clustered black demonic hands became a powerful palm, pressing to crush him, but Patrasche sharply evaded to the left, breaking through—the earth ripped open by the aftershock, carving a deep fissure in the grassland as if gouged by a giant's palm.

"That was close! Seriously, it's going to be one close call after another from now on… But with this!"

Petelgeuse, his eyes burning with hatred, had completely lost himself and fixed his aim solely on Subaru.

Subaru, while feeling a shiver of dread at having the madman's wrath directed at him, clenched his fist, seeing the situation unfold just as he had intended.

From the previous loop's circumstances, he had predicted that the number of Unseen Hands Petelgeuse would have after his possession-resurrection would increase.

If countless of those fatal demonic hands, invisible to ordinary people, were deployed, even the numerically superior subjugation force would be driven to annihilation.

Therefore, Subaru chose to thoroughly provoke Petelgeuse's fanatical obsession with the Witch, making himself the sole target.

Meanwhile, behind them, the clash between the Witch Cultists and the subjugation force had begun.

The initial blow struck by the numerically superior subjugation force sent several Witch Cultists flying into the air in a spray of blood. However, it was also clear that the unfamiliar knights were struggling against the eerie, gliding movements of the Witch Cultists.

It would be too optimistic to expect immediate reinforcements after drawing them away.

Subaru regretted that if only Wilhelm, with his unparalleled skill in human-to-human combat, were still alive.

"My thinking was too shallow, that was my mistake… If he has the ability to possess after dying, I should have anticipated he had a way to commit suicide!"

The explosion of the dragon carriage carrying the old Petelgeuse was precisely for that reason.

Petelgeuse had likely planted bomb-like devices on his cultists' bodies beforehand, instructing them to activate them as needed.

As a result, the old Petelgeuse's body successfully transferred to a new one, taking the dragon carriage and their main forces in the vicinity with him.

Smoke still billowed from the blast crater, and there was no sign of Wilhelm or Ferris. —He didn't think they were simply blown to bits, but.

"I can't be optimistic enough to think they got away unharmed. —Just as planned, I'm counting on you!"

"This cannotcannotcannotcannotcannotcannotcannnoooottt—!!"

Petelgeuse raged, shaking his head, and Unseen Hands spread out to block his path. But Subaru immediately countered and closed the distance, striking Petelgeuse's surprised face with a,

"S-Smash!!"

"Bafah?!"

Patrasche's pivot leg gouged the ground as she drifted, and flying clumps of earth struck Petelgeuse's face directly. Subaru flipped him off while his face was covered in dirt, then circled provocatively.

"Hey, hey, having a bunch of hands doesn't mean anything if your head's useless. You should learn from me and Patrasche's perfect synchronization, connecting eye-to-eye, hand-to-hand, and heart-to-heart. Are you, by any chance, slothful?!"

"—!!!"

Petelgeuse was so enraged he lost even his words, silently sending forth palms of death.

However, excited by Subaru, who possessed extraordinary talent in “provocation,” Petelgeuse’s attacks were lacking precision due to the noise in his thoughts.

In other words, despite having the advantage of countless palms,

“Your brain can’t keep up. It’s a joke when the hardware’s decrepit compared to the software’s required specs. Did you make your brain tremble too much?!”

In this situation where a single misstep meant instant death, Subaru couldn’t completely suppress his laughter at his own ability to still crack jokes. A faint chuckle escaped him, further provoking Petelgeuse.

What should have been a hair’s-breadth struggle was turning into an evasion exercise that felt almost routine.

Just hours ago, he and Patrasche could barely synchronize their breathing, but now their very heartbeats aligned, their intentions undeniably transmitted through the reins.

Julius had said, ‘Entrust your trust, and let the wind guide you.’

—The meaning of those words now, he understood not with words, but with his heart!

“—Ru!!”

Breaking through the rising dust, Subaru’s eardrums, hot with elation rather than nausea from the centrifugal force of the sharp turn that churned his insides, suddenly caught a sound.

From far away, what reached him was a voice calling his name, and the owner of that unmistakable voice was,

“Subaru—!!”

Emilia was visible in the distance, leaning out of the window of the dragon carriage attempting to rapidly accelerate and escape the combat zone, her long silver hair whipping wildly in the wind.

Evacuation from the combat zone—it wasn't just her dragon carriage. The merchant's dragon carriages carrying the villagers were also beginning to flee in the same way, and their evacuation, escorted by several knights, was all according to prior arrangements.

—The Witch Cult's last desperate struggle; that was an anticipated development.

If they had many non-combatants during a battle, they wouldn't be able to cope with the unscrupulous fighting style of the enemy. Therefore, the merchants had been instructed beforehand to evacuate if a battle began. To prevent chaos among the villagers, only those who could listen calmly were informed, and they were dispersed among the carriages in preparation for the situation.

And naturally, Ram, who had to navigate to the Sanctuary by another route, had also been informed—but,

"Why…?!"

Subaru hadn't told Emilia.

From the receding dragon carriage, he could see Emilia's face distorted in anguish.

He could tell that an unbearable shock of betrayal was etched there, and it struck a deep, tearing pain in Subaru's chest.

However, Subaru concealed his inner turmoil, and despite the vibrations and fierce wind, he let go of the unfamiliar reins with one hand and gave a thumbs-up.

"Leave it to me, piece of cake! It's Natsuki Subaru! You go on ahead, Emilia-tan! —I'll catch up soon and have a touching embrace with you!"

"—!!"

He didn't know if she could see his teeth glinting from that far away, but only an inarticulate sound reached him from the dragon carriage as it sped into the distant forest path.

After confirming that their group had safely exited the combat zone, Subaru exhaled deeply and turned back to Petelgeuse.

"I'm surprised you waited so patiently. Are you the type who understands emotions?"

"Silence! Silence! Silence! Silence! I was not idle, you merely continued to evade! Insolence! Disrespect! The Witch's love! Her embrace! How foolish of you to reject it! Why, why do you…!"

"Oh, were you attacking? Your palms are so slow when I can see them, I thought you'd stopped, like a fly would land on them. My bad. You can keep going slowly, it's fine by me… Oh."

Subaru, continuing to provoke him with his full talent for lighthearted jabs, suddenly raised an eyebrow at a change in the battlefield's atmosphere. Behind Petelgeuse and Subaru, who were facing each other in a one-on-one battle, a significant change occurred in the clash between the Witch Cult and the subjugation force.

—Several Witch Cultists were simultaneously blown into the air in a bloody mist.

"Nuh-huh-huh-huh!!"

A gleaming treasure sword danced with blood and sunlight as it struck, its blade raging with incredible speed. Arms, legs, necks, and torsos in the path of the slashes were cleanly severed, and the flying enemies were relentlessly pursued and finished off by the knights.

Covered in an abundance of blood, the sword demon charging across the battlefield—Wilhelm had joined the fray.

"—Wilhelm-san!"

Subaru cheered at his continued presence, and Petelgeuse bit through the corner of his mouth in annoyance.

As if responding to Subaru's cheer, Wilhelm, moving low to the ground, severed the legs of two more enemies at the knees. He dodged incoming fireballs with practiced movements, accelerating with explosions at his back, and continued to reap death.

With Wilhelm's participation, the momentum suddenly shifted in their favor.

Ricardo and Julius also began a fierce assault as if to follow the sword demon, the sound of flesh tearing with every swing of the great nata, and sparks of mana flashing with every gleam of the knight's sword.

Further beyond, at the site of the exploded dragon carriage. A figure emerged from the clearing smoke, covering his nakedness with a charred canvas draped over his shoulder.

It was Ferris. He, too, seemed to have taken the full impact of the explosion at close range, yet he was still alive. Furthermore, there was no sign of damage to his beauty, which could be mistaken for a woman's, nor to his meticulously styled hair. Only his clothes seemed to have suffered the damage.

"Oh, no—I died again, didn't I, Old Man Wilhelm! I won't forgive those guys anymore, tear them to shreds!"

A small fist thrust into the air, the half-naked boy-girl cheered on the sword demon with a high-pitched voice.

Subaru felt something unsettling about his condition and his shout, but he turned a triumphant smile towards Petelgeuse.

"Your desperate self-destruction caused no casualties… The tide has turned! Just give up already!"

"Give up? Do you think such a thing, such foolishness, such idiocy is permissible?! Do you think I, I who am 'Sloth', would sink into such a 'slothful' choice, abandoning thought and will?! This is the ultimate insult! Humiliation! If only to repay my love with the utmost diligence…! If that alone is the reason to wash away this defilement—!!"

Spreading his hands, the Unseen Hands that had been emanating from Petelgeuse's entire body suddenly vanished.

Subaru felt a bad premonition from Petelgeuse's stance. However, the distance he had created for evasion proved to be his undoing, preventing him from closing in quickly enough.

As a result,

"Oh Witch! My beloved's guidance! I offer, I offer myself! Now, you foolish apostates who turned your backs on favoritism! You dry vulgarians who know no love!"

"Wait, Petelgeuse—you bastard!!"

"Now—be 'Sloth'!!"

The next instant, a black wave spread out, covering the battlefield—and the battle lines collapsed.

2

Sin Archbishop of the Witch Cult, representing 'Sloth'—Petelgeuse Romanee-Conti.

For Subaru, this was his fourth confrontation with this man. Yet, he could confidently say that since being summoned to this world, no other adversary had tormented Subaru as much as Petelgeuse.

Each repeated encounter had cost Subaru his life eleven times in this world. And each of those deaths, never occurring in the same way twice, was etched into his soul with an unforgettable vividness.

Time and again, Natsuki Subaru had fumbled away his life in this other world. Sometimes due to an insurmountable power gap, other times because of an unavoidable irrationality, occasionally a momentary lapse in vigilance, and often as a result of misaligned intentions.

There had been horrific enemies. Encounters that threatened to shatter his spirit. Overwhelmingly powerful beings. Against them, the powerless Natsuki Subaru had been broken countless times.

Yet, Subaru had always managed to rise again. But this man's sheer depravity was uniquely different, standing head and shoulders above all the rest.

There was 'Unseen Hand', stretching invisible arms to tear everything apart.

There was 'Possession', allowing him to abandon his deceased body and transfer his soul into a subordinate's, thus preserving his life.

Then there was 'Sloth', a authority that could unequivocally be called the worst in a multi-person battle.

The forgotten terror of its rampage enveloped the battlefield, shattering the morale of the subjugation force, which had been pressing forward with furious momentum. No, it wasn't their morale that was broken, but their sanity.

"—!!"

"—Agh?!"

Screams and shrieks echoed across the battlefield, and many dropped their weapons. Most significantly, the Witch Cultists were completely unaffected by Petelgeuse's 'Sloth'.

"Stop…!"

Subaru yelled, trying to halt their movements, but at that moment, words held no meaning.

Faster than Subaru's voice could reach them, the cross-shaped daggers swung and drew blood. Gushing blood triggered anguished cries, and the front line was instantly broken.

Subaru was unaffected by 'Sloth', so he didn't know what symptoms the mental corruption it caused inflicted upon its victims. However, everyone under its influence foamed at the mouth, rolled their eyes back, and were driven to the brink of madness by non-existent hallucinations, auditory hallucinations, and phantom pains.

Only about fifteen of the original fifty-strong subjugation force managed to resist the mental corruption. The rest collapsed on the spot or were cut down, bleeding, by the Witch Cultists' blades. The silver lining was that most of the main fighting force remained.

"How bizarre—! This is like the White Whale's fog…!"

Wilhelm deflected the blades of three attackers in front of him with a single swing, dragging a fallen comrade back as he retreated. Similarly, Ricardo had the cat siblings on either side, and Julius conjured a sandstorm with wind magic, providing a blinding diversion.

"Oh, it seems more of you remained than expected! This is marvelous, truly delightful! With so many talented individuals still standing, the Cult can be said to be secure!"

"Talented…? What the hell are you talking about! No, more importantly, this situation…"

This was bad.

With just one move, the situation had been completely turned on its head.

In terms of fighting strength, factoring in those they'd taken down before the mental corruption spread, the numbers were roughly even. But with more injured than dead on their side, active fighters would be diverted to help them.

The Witch Cultists, on the other hand, showed no regard for their injured comrades. They trampled over the bodies of comrades who could still be saved if tended to, charging forward recklessly, even if mortally wounded, prepared to take an enemy with them.

Most importantly—

"You, it seems you were merely a diversion intended to draw my attention?"

"—!"

Petelgeuse had seen through Subaru's plan, and the shock was clearly visible on Subaru's face.

Noticing this, Petelgeuse clapped his hands, twisting his cheeks into a truly delighted grin.

"I seeeee! What a truly, truly, truly, truly, truly, diligent idea! I don't know how you learned about my Unseen Hands and my fingertips, but knowing that, your current and past movements make sense! And… now that I understand, there's no reason for me to concern myself with you."

Having said his piece, Petelgeuse turned on his heel. His gaze was fixed on the battlefield where knights and Witch Cultists clashed, and if his shadowy fingertips reached out there, it was inevitable that their side would be further disadvantaged.

Subaru gasped at the malicious act, ordering Patrasche to charge at the madman's back. At the very least, if he could inflict non-lethal damage with a body blow—

"—You, are you slothful?"

"—Ugh?!"

However, Subaru's desperate, momentum-driven charge was nothing but a pawn in Petelgeuse's hand.

Extending a shadow, an Unseen Hand approached from behind—outside Subaru's line of sight—grabbed Patrasche's tail, which was speeding through the wind, and effortlessly tossed the massive ground dragon into the air.

After the tremendous force and the sensation of being punched by the wind, Subaru plummeted, buffeted by the air so much that he couldn't tell front from back—and then slammed onto the grassy ground on his back.

"Cough—h-ha."

His whole body groaned, sparks flew before his eyes, and his vision went black.

The impact on his back sent shockwaves through his internal organs, his convulsing lungs rejected oxygen, and the vomit rising in his throat burned.

A beat later, ringing in his head and a lightning-strike pain in his limbs shot through him, and a pained groan escaped Subaru's writhing throat.

—Painful, bad, terrible, painful, painful, bad, bad!

With his numbing limbs and convulsing insides dominating his consciousness, Subaru's mind, unable to think clearly, cursedly rattled off these dangerous signals.

He had to do something with instant judgment, but it wouldn't form into a definite meaning or a correct course of action within him.

Pushing aside his disregarded rationality, only instinct screamed.

Move or die, I don't want to die, I have to do something to live.

However his body, despite his instinct's command, wouldn't move, and Subaru could only gasp for breath, barely clinging to life. Then —

"—Oh?"

"How diligent this is…"

Subaru let out a groan of incomprehension at the sudden sensation, and Petelgeuse, seeing the result, expressed awe with a look of reverence.

What had just happened? Subaru wondered, as a floating sensation churned his whole body, and he managed to turn his neck to realize —

Patrasche had him by the waist in her mouth, attempting to pull him away from Petelgeuse's grasp.

The jet-black ground dragon, not even bothering to have him mount, was concerned for her master, who couldn't move. Saved by her unwavering loyalty, Subaru successfully escaped his confrontation with Petelgeuse.

Petelgeuse, too, seemed somewhat impressed by Patrasche's decision to protect her rider without instruction, and tears streamed from his eyes as he covered his face with his hand.

“Ground dragon… Oh, ground dragon! This is wonderful! Love, love, love, love, love, love, love, love, love, love, love, love, love, love, love, love, love, love, ahhhhhhh-aaaaah-iiiiiiiiiiiiiiiiiiiiii!!!”

Petelgeuse, shedding torrential tears, stomped his feet and spun around maniacally. He extended his palm towards the retreating ground dragon, not in attack, but with fingertips pointing upward, as if reaching out to a fading loved one.

“Love! Supreme love! Unconditional love! Pure love! How wonderful this is! How beautiful this is! How awakening is the spirit, the will, the very being, the way of loving, that drives it to run solely out of concern for its master! Oh, oh, ohh! Diligent! You are truly, a diligent devotee of love! Ee-ee, excellentttttt!”

The ecstatic madman was engrossed in his solo performance, showing no interest in their escape.

Subaru was carried further, across the plains, bypassing the battlefield and heading to the rear. There, Ferris was attending to the wounded.

“Subaru-kyun?! Were you attacked?! Are you dead?”

“Barely… alive. My whole body aches like hell, but thanks to Patrasche… oof!”

Subaru responded with a wry smile to the harsh greeting. The moment he reached Ferris's side, he was roughly tossed onto the grass.

He landed face-first, and the mix of leaves and dirt in his mouth stunned Subaru. He then turned to Patrasche, intending to complain —

"You, if you carried me all this way, couldn't you have been a little more careful with—"

However the sight of the ground dragon's mangled form froze his throat.

When Patrasche was thrown by the Unseen Hand, her tail had been gripped. The part where her tail met her body was torn from the root, and a massive amount of blood gushed out, staining the grassland red even now. Besides that, two gouges were carved into her flank, and perhaps from being thrown and slammed into the ground, her left foreleg was completely crushed from the tip.

Without a doubt, she was literally covered in wounds.

Perhaps having expended all her remaining strength to bring Subaru to the rear, Patrasche's massive body collapsed onto the grassland with a thud. She lay there, breathing shallowly and faintly, as if dead.

Involuntarily, Subaru clung to her body.

"Hey! No way… Patrasche! You, you… I, my… my judgment error, caused this… Hey!"

He called out and touched her, but Patrasche showed no response. In fact, her breaths became shallower, and her life force steadily weakened.

"Fe-Ferris! Patrasche is… please, help her…"

"This child nobly fulfilled her role in protecting you. Just be proud of that."

Ferris replied sharply to Subaru, who turned back, pleading with a trembling voice.

For a moment, Subaru didn't understand the meaning of that response. It wasn't the answer he wanted. It was as if he was being told to give up on Patrasche.

"That ground dragon lived out her life. You and I, we can't save everything. You understand, don't you?"

Ferris said, cutting him off so cruelly that Subaru felt it at the time. He almost retorted against Ferris's attitude, but Subaru didn't know what to say.

Only a sense of loss, as if Patrasche's presence, which he was still touching, was drifting away and blurring, remained in his palm—

"And because you left… the Archbishop is making his move!"

"—!"

Turning his face at the sound of the voice, Subaru saw the Unseen Hand extending towards the battlefield.

In the path of its palm were two knights, an old knight and a young knight, both uncorrupted and fighting valiantly.

"You two, watch ou—!"

Faster than his voice could reach them, the palm tore the heads from the necks of the two knights.

Blood spurted, the heads gripped by the black palm floated in the air, their stunned expressions crushed like fruit the next moment. A beat later, their bodies convulsed and collapsed, followed by a roar of laughter.

"Now! Now! Now, now, now, now, now, now, now!! The beginning of the end! It ends! Let's end the end, and dedicate everything! I am now deeply moved, moved to tears, and filled with emotion! Therefore, with my own hands, with love, I wish to grant you all a peaceful end!"

Petelgeuse's laughter and selfish pronouncements were unending.

Subaru saw countless Unseen Hands extending from the shadows, selecting their prey as if licking their lips.

Wilhelm and the others braced themselves, wary of the invisible threat, but there was no way to defend against the unseen witch's hand, which meant instant death upon contact.

“What do I… do?”

Desperately, Subaru racked his brain.

In this situation, only Subaru understood the full extent of it. If there was a plan to overturn things, only Subaru could conceive it.

Yet, even as his brain felt like it was boiling, no answer came. Moreover, his consciousness was still half- 끌려 away towards Patrasche, who was currently fading away.

—What do I do, what do I do, what do I do, what do I do, what do I do, what do I do, what do I do, do, do, do, do, do, do, do.

His brain churned so hard it felt like it would burn out, but only ragged breaths escaped his lips.

In a situation that threatened to make him despair, Petelgeuse, without waiting for his decision, raised both hands as if to declare time was up—

“—Mph?!”

With an instant decision, a small figure leaped away, and a moment later, mana converged on the spot where Petelgeuse had been—an ice stake erupted from directly beneath him, barely missing the madman.

“Who in the world is that?!”

Petelgeuse raised his voice and turned, looking up at the hill.

Everyone else present followed his gaze and noticed her presence.

The wind blew, her silver hair fluttering in the breeze, and a beautiful girl stood with the sunlight at her back.

She was breathless, sweat on her forehead, yet her indigo eyes had not lost their power.

“—That’s enough, you villain.”

A bell-like voice, sharp and dignified, carried on the wind across the grassland.

At her sight, Petelgeuse’s eyes widened in delight, and Subaru’s in shock.

Subaru’s throat filled with despair at his own regret for letting the madman meet the girl who should never have met him.

—The end is near. The end is approaching, without any light in sight.

Chapter 74:
Fulfillment of the Contract

Natsuki Subaru was plagued by an obsession: this situation simply couldn't happen.

He didn't know why. There was no rational basis for it, just a vague unease. Yet, the certainty that it must not happen was firmly rooted in his chest.

On the hill, Emilia's silver hair streamed in the wind as she held out her hand towards him, while Petelgeuse, arms wide open, seemed to welcome her with a joyous expression—a fateful encounter. Subaru had unconsciously tried to avoid these two meeting at all costs. Yet now, in a desperate, cornered, and utterly helpless situation, Emilia was here, and Subaru had no plan, no countermeasure.

"Why…?!"

Anger flared within him, eclipsing surprise and regret. It was anger at himself for knowing this situation had to be avoided and yet failing to prevent it. And more than anything,

"You should've known, Puck!!"

His furious shout tore across the grasslands, reaching the spirit floating beside the silver-haired girl. The spirit, however, didn't turn its attention to Subaru, its gaze fixed solely on Emilia's profile. It flapped its paws, circling Emilia, its face etched with an unfamiliar anxiety.

"Lia! No! Get out of here right now! He's a Sin Archbishop of the Witch Cult! You shouldn't have met him! You shouldn't be here!"

"It's too late to go back, and I'm not going to. I wasn't raised to just sit back comfortably while everyone else fights like this."

Emilia replied, her cheeks taut with a certain tension, to Puck's desperate plea. Puck put a paw to his face, shaking his head and muttering, “No, no,” at her stubborn stance.

“It’s not about who’s doing what! It’s the Witch Cult! It’s the Witch Cult… Ah, I just remembered now! The ordeal! It’s an ordeal, Lia. The Archbishop imposes trials! And I can’t interfere with those trials due to our contract! This is as far as I can go! So…!”

Puck cut himself off, his expression stiffening as if forbidden from saying more. Even Emilia widened her eyes slightly in surprise at the little cat, who usually maintained such a composed demeanor and never deviated from his own pace.

“Puck… do you know something?”

“I don’t know anything! But I know something! I can tell. That’s why it’s no good, Lia. Go back immediately. If you stay here, if you meet them, something more terrifying than death will surely happen!”

Puck’s answer was no answer at all. But despite his agitation, he didn’t physically stop Emilia, nor did he forcefully control the situation with his immense power. This frustrating helplessness ignited an unbearable rage in Subaru. Unsure why his chest burned so fiercely, he cried out,

“If Emilia comes out here… what was I fighting for?! —And you!”

“You dare say that?! Lia ignored my words and came all this way for whose sake…!”

Puck, too, strained his voice in response to Subaru’s angry, distorted face. Subaru realized the undeniable truth in Puck’s words, and he was overwhelmed by self-reproach.

It was an obvious, undeniable conclusion. There was only one reason she would have gotten off the fleeing dragon carriage and returned to the battlefield.

Subaru and the others had stayed behind, risking danger without saying anything, without telling her anything. She always chose to make sacrifices for others, steadfastly following her heart even if it meant being disliked. —Such a person wouldn't simply accept being protected.

It was a misjudgment. Subaru had made another one. And that misunderstanding, compounded, was now exposed at the worst possible moment.

—There was no more time to lose.

"Puck is…"

Still on the hill, Puck was clinging to Emilia, pleading with her to reconsider. However there was no way he could bend her strong will. Emilia, half-resigned to Puck's lack of cooperation, closed her eyes and began to chant, relying solely on her own magical power.

The unsettling madman, Petelgeuse, who had remained silent, began to speak,

"Oh… ah, what a glorious day it is. Truly a reflection, a vessel for which there could surely be no more suitable body…"

Tears streamed down his face. The madman, his voice trembling with uncontrollable fervor, took a step toward the hill. His steps wavered, but his advance was nothing less than a countdown to ruin.

"…"

Puck was useless. Subaru, driven by a sense of mission, stood up. As soon as his hand released its grip, Patrasche's breathing quietly stopped. A single tear traced Subaru's cheek. He roughly wiped it away with the back of his hand and began to run.

"Subaru-kyun?!"

Leaving Ferris's startled cry behind him, Subaru sprinted, forgetting the creaking pain in his entire body. He didn't even glance at the battlefield where Witch Cultists clashed with the subjugation force, his eyes fixed solely on the girl on the hill.

Only he could prevent her encounter with the madman now. He didn't know how much help his insignificant self could be. He didn't know, but he still had to do it. Otherwise, why…?

"Please, do not interfere!"

Sensing Subaru's approach, Petelgeuse tilted his head and looked back, his shadow expanding. A jet-black demonic hand shot out, rapidly closing in to ensnare Subaru. The pressure of the palm felt as if it would tear his limbs off, yet Subaru twisted his body, slipping through the gap without slowing down, evading it. At this crucial moment, despite the heavy fatigue and injuries he should have been feeling, his concentration sharpened, triggering a change in his body.

It was the unleashing of desperate strength. Subaru's body moved beyond its limits, narrowly avoiding the encroaching palms. Petelgeuse clicked his tongue at Subaru's extraordinary movements.

"It is vexing, but you can see the Unseen Hand…"

"Don't open your filthy mouth any further! You won't do anything else!"

The distance between them closed to under twenty meters, and the number of demonic hands overflowing to tear Subaru apart now covered his entire field of vision. But there was no fear of being torn to shreds. What propelled Subaru forward was the burning flame of impatience, overriding his fear of death and scorching his entire being.

He stepped forward, dodging a palm that grazed his cheek. His left cheek and ear were brutally torn, and the pain of spurting blood seared his nerves. But pushing his consciousness to the limit against the agonizing pain, Subaru's body pressed forward, forward—and his outstretched arm reached out, threatening to grab Petelgeuse's slender shoulder,

"If the Unseen Hand proves disadvantageous, then it cannot be helped, right?"

"—Foul play!"

"—Ul dona."

Petelgeuse, with a bored expression, uttered a short incantation. The moment Subaru heard that word and widened his eyes in astonishment, the ground beneath him violently shook, and his stance crumbled as if his pivot foot had been swept away. And then,

"No way…?!"

"The Unseen Hand is a mark of favoritism bestowed only upon me… but have I ever said that I can only manipulate that?"

Petelgeuse tilted his head ninety degrees, uttering a malicious taunt as he moved away. No, the ground beneath Subaru's feet had surged upward with incredible speed, thrusting his body, which had been directly above it, into the sky.

The entire area beneath his feet had sprung up like a spring-loaded platform, effortlessly launching Subaru's body into the air. The height easily exceeded ten meters—

"—Ugh, ah?!"

Still off-balance, he was slammed back down onto the jumping ground, the impact on his chest knocking the wind out of him. His vision blurred with the shock, and in that state, thrown into the air, Subaru had no effective way to avoid the fall. Falling from a great height. And, as he'd previously learned from "True Murphy's Law," there was a high probability of falling headfirst. Now, once again, he was plummeting headfirst, about to break his neck and die—just before,

"Subaru—!!"

At the same moment a clear, urgent cry rang out, a translucent mass rose from directly below, catching the falling Subaru. While it was designed to soften the impact of the fall as much as possible, due to its very nature, damage was unavoidable. Subaru opened his eyes with a pained grimace at the hard sensation and cold touch against his skin, and what he saw was—

"An ice… mountain? No, a tower…?"

A mountain of ice, built up to the same height as the rising earth to rescue the flung Subaru—that was the true nature of the mass that had saved Subaru from falling to his death.

His bloodied skin clung to the ice mountain, and he grimaced at the skin-peeling pain as he pushed himself up. Subaru felt both the relief of having survived and the crushing weight of an irreparable mistake.

—There was no need to wonder whose hands had created this ice mountain.

"—Emilia!!"

Turning around, Subaru pushed himself up on the slippery ice mountain, his face turning frustratedly toward the hill. However the rising earth, now a sheer cliff, blocked his view, isolating Emilia, Puck, and Petelgeuse on the other side of the hill, preventing him from seeing their movements.

Only, Emilia's chanting had been interrupted. She couldn't see Petelgeuse's Unseen Hand!

"Worst… this is the worst. To get around the wall…"

He had to get off the ice mountain and over the wall of raised earth. The land that had risen to block the hill was like a sheer cliff, making it geographically difficult to go around to the other side. Subaru couldn't do it alone.

The skin on his palms stuck to the ice, and the peeling pain seared his brain. The sharp pain, repeatedly bringing tears to the corners of his eyes, he literally bled as he descended the ice mountain. Fortunately, there were multiple handholds, and coupled with his desperation, he descended the ice mountain surprisingly quickly, half-falling. But without a moment to catch his breath, he looked up at the wall, lost.

"This wall… Damn it, that bastard was playing me…!"

Subaru slammed his bloodied hand against the dirt wall, gritting his teeth and once again regretting his shallow thinking. He had thought that if he could just seal Petelgeuse's "Unseen Hand," he could neutralize him, and he had underestimated him. As a result, he had been completely outmaneuvered—

"—Subaru-dono!"

"…Wilhelm-san?"

From behind the distraught Subaru, the old swordsman rushed up. With fewer injuries and his precious sword at his hip, he nodded to Subaru, glaring at the wall.

"I caught a glimpse of Lady Emilia. —Is the Archbishop on the other side of this?"

"Yes… yes! I was defeated! Emilia… she mustn't meet him, Petelgeuse! Something terrible will happen… I can't explain it well, but it's bad. That alone…"

Subaru clung to Wilhelm, unable to articulate the reason for his urgency, frustration welling up. Wilhelm nodded at Subaru's incoherent words.

"Leave it to me. I shall cut open this wall with my own hands now."

"You say cut…?"

To Subaru's question of how he would cut this impossibly high wall, Wilhelm gave a remarkably concise answer through action. With a flashing white blade, he gouged into the wall, and then a continuous barrage of slashes began to tear through the dirt. The answer was simple: he would literally "cut it open."

"Whoa…"

Witnessing the true Sword Demon's slashes up close, Subaru couldn't help but be captivated by his overwhelming skill. Even in this critical moment, the beauty of the flashing blade, the pinnacle of his slashes, truly showed him what it meant to reach the "summit of the sword."

Behind them, while Subaru and Wilhelm were separated from the front lines by the wall, the battle between the Witch Cultists and the subjugation force was entering its climax. The subjugation force—the Beastman Mercenary Group—fought well, Ricardo's great axe sending Witch Cultists flying. And behind him was Julius, commanding six semi-spirits of different glows.

"Ia, Kua, Iku, Aro, In, Nes—all of you, lend me your strength."

The semi-spirits, called by name, intensified their respective glows in response. The next moment, six kinds of light illuminated the slender sword in Julius's hand, transforming into a rainbow blade that sent the "Finest Knight" into the fray.

"Finally ready, are ya! You sure kept me waitin'!"

"My apologies, Ricardo. I've burdened your valiant efforts greatly. —Now, I shall show you the results worthy of that hardship."

Julius responded gallantly to Ricardo's shout, lightly swinging his rainbow-glowing sword. In the air, a rainbow traced the path of his blade, and its radiance danced with light. It was fantastical. Yet, as for its practicality, that remained unclear. Julius, brandishing that blade, approached the Witch Cultists. A black-robed figure noticed him, raising a dagger from their waist, and lunged at the calmly advancing knight. To this,

"My sword now interferes with all creation. —To challenge me is futile."

A rainbow flashed, and the black-robed figure's dagger, along with their arm, vanished. A cut that drew no blood. With both arms lost up to the elbows, the black-robed figure couldn't even comprehend the meaning of the damage inflicted upon them before another slash consumed them.

"Now—only those who wish to be captivated by the rainbow's brilliance, stand before me!"

Declaring his intention, Witch Cultists rushed at Julius, who raised his sword. Alongside Ricardo, Julius met them—a truly dependable sight. And here too, "We'll break… through the wall!"

"—Hmph!"

Beyond the excavating slashes, a faint light shone through the wall. As Subaru cried out with hope for a breakthrough, the tip of the precious sword brilliantly pierced the wall. Wilhelm, covered in dirt, kicked the wall down with a front kick, securing a passage wide enough for a person. Following the Sword Demon, who slipped through, Subaru, too, peered through to the other side of the wall.

He had lost a considerable amount of time. During that time, he had been completely unable to interfere. If Emilia had been lost as a result—

"Emi—"

However, Subaru's worst nightmare had unfolded in a completely different way.

"—Ah, it hurts, it hurts, it hurrtts."

Petelgeuse groaned in pain, his voice trembling at the end of his sentences, and blood flowed. Already, a considerable number of icicles pierced his left lower abdomen, and as for his left foot, a stake protruding from the ground had broken through his instep, pinning him to the earth.

Behind Emilia, facing him, numerous ice blades still floated, waiting to be unleashed, the tide of battle clearly in Emilia's favor. And precisely because it was clear—it was the worst possible outcome.

"—Emilia!!"

Subaru screamed, trying to force out words to prevent it from becoming reality. But before Subaru could speak, Petelgeuse, on the verge of death, reached out a hand towards him—extending a jet-black demonic hand even faster.

The approaching hand, whether due to Petelgeuse's dwindling life force, was impossibly slow. Even after pulling Wilhelm out of the way, who couldn't see it, there was still enough time for a leisurely stroll. However, that demonic hand, which Subaru didn't perceive as a threat,

"Look out, Subaru—!!"

To Emilia, who knew nothing, it could only appear as a fatal blow to Subaru. Therefore,

"Ah, the abandonment of thought—you are 'Sloth', isn't that right?"

A face twisted in mad laughter was severed by a shower of ice blades and flew into the air. Blood spurted from the decapitated torso, and the lifeless body collapsed. The airborne head fell into the grasslands beyond, landing with a heavy thud, out of sight.

Emilia had stopped the madman Petelgeuse's breathing. It was a "worst case" of a different kind than Subaru had envisioned.

"Subaru-dono. It seems that one is…"

Confirming the death of the Archbishop, Wilhelm's expression softened slightly. Similarly, Emilia, though chewing on the regret of her actions, also bore a hint of relief on her shoulders. Before the two of them, Subaru raised his face. And then he opened his mouth,

"Both of you, get away from me right now—too late!!"

Just before he could reach out with both hands and push Wilhelm away, his mouth moved and spoke words not of his own intention. Immediately after, Subaru felt the illusion of the ground beneath him swelling. No, his shadow exploded, and countless arms emerged from it.

They rose silently like writhing snakes, targeting the nearby Wilhelm. But the old swordsman barely made it. Even though he couldn't visually perceive the threat of the Unseen Hand, he sensed Subaru's immediate warning and instantly twisted his body, leaping with the speed of wind to Emilia's side.

Subaru —Petelgeuse— glared at them with vexation.

"The worst feeling… right. Is having someone else in your head this disgusting…?!"

He dug his fingers into his wound, his consciousness flickering with pain, struggling to maintain his sanity. If he didn't stay vigilant, he felt he'd be taken over immediately. The sensation of another, a despised entity, so brazenly residing within his mind. Given the previous incident, he should have anticipated this. That's why this situation, of all things, had to be avoided

.

"What… Subaru, what's wrong?"

"No, Lady Emilia. Right now, that is Subaru-dono, and yet not solely Subaru-dono. —Subaru-dono! Are you conscious?!"

Wilhelm restrained Emilia with his arm, calling out to her as she looked at the strange Subaru with concern. Subaru grimaced in response, answering by backing away. The matter of "possession" was something they had all discussed and understood within the subjugation force. Wilhelm must have realized, from Subaru's demeanor, that he was struggling against the madman's consciousness.

Naturally, his expression hardened, and the tip of his precious sword was aimed at Subaru. He wouldn't immediately attack, but his guard was certainly up. And that was what Subaru had requested of him before the battle began.

"I'm… glad you kept your promise, Wilhelm-san."

"I ask that you not force me to cut you… Can you not somehow escape without being completely dominated?"

"How do you think…? Honestly, I'm not even sure if I can maintain my sanity right now. If I let my guard down, I feel like I'll immediately… gouge out my neck or something."

His arms spasmed, and if he lost focus, he could feel his raised fingertips crawling towards his throat. If he left them unchecked, they would gouge out his neck with power pushing the limits of the human body, ending his life in excruciating pain. He was always such a lowlife, trying to make him commit suicide.

“Besides… with others, he uses them himself… but with me, he tries to make me kill myself immediately? What’s his deal…?!”

His voice trembled, his fingertips trembled, and his gaze began to wander. His mind was being invaded by Petelgeuse, and control of his body was gradually being stolen. He already couldn’t feel his feet. Slowly, his existence as Natsuki Subaru was being painted over by the existence of Petelgeuse, creeping from one end to the other.

“Talking to a spirit… I guess I’m really at my end. Damn it.”

A phantom Petelgeuse appeared in his mind. The image was of the first Petelgeuse he’d seen—a vision that should have been blown to smithereens by now. However that ghostly figure circled around Subaru, looking him over as if licking him, while Subaru desperately resisted.

“Such good resistance, such good expression, such a good attempt! A trial! An ordeal, ordeal, ordeal, ordeal, ordeal! This is how an ordeal should be! For me, for the Witch, and for the half-devil who is merely a vessel, it is all the same! An ordeal! Oh, a trail of love!”

“Don’t make noise in my ear, damn it. What ordeal… If I just suppress you like this… there’s no way someone who can beat me in strength of will exists…”

He bluffed, put on a brave front, and tried to steel his heart. If he didn’t, he felt he would immediately give in to this self-destructive urge. Or perhaps he’d extend an arm from the shadow at his feet, on the verge of bursting, and utterly crush everything around him beyond recognition.

If this impulse was what Petelgeuse always harbored, then indeed, he could find a sort of understanding for the madman’s bizarre and grotesque behavior up until now.

If he craved destruction this much, he could easily bite off his own fingertips. If he wielded an authority so difficult to control, it would be no wonder if he lost his mental balance.

—Is this the world Petelgeuse sees?

"—I do not seek understanding."

For the first time, the supposed phantom Petelgeuse coldly spoke to Subaru. Until now, Petelgeuse had expressed anger, madness, and ecstasy as emotions. For the first time, the color of emotion drained from his face. It was, in a way, more chilling than any of his previous attitudes.

" I do not seek to be understood by anyone. Above all, sympathy is an insult to the love I receive! A humiliation! Nothing less than disgrace! To simply think, contemplate, be conscious of, and strive only to repay the favor! Only then can I be saved

!"

"You…!"

The phantom of Petelgeuse drew closer, extending his tongue to restrain Subaru. Disgust and a hint of pity flashed through Subaru's mind, but he immediately dismissed them as a momentary lapse. Still, the madman and the ordinary man struggled, vying for control —and then,

"—Subaru!"

"Subaru-kyun!"

"Bro!"

Behind him, having annihilated the last of the Witch Cultists, Julius, Ferris, and Ricardo rushed forward.

"Subaru!"

"Subaru-dono…!"

"…"

From the front, Emilia and Wilhelm descended the hill, their faces a mix of lingering caution and the worry that seeped from behind it, as they approached.

His heart pounded, louder and stronger. His mind reeled at the sight of the assembled faces, and most of all, Emilia stood right beside him. Subaru's heart, trembling at her proximity, suddenly brightened.

"…"

Suddenly, the trembling in Subaru's limbs stopped. The aftershocks of fighting what had been trying to burst from within him, which had caused his limbs to tremble, vanished, and he exhaled a long, slow breath.

"Subaru…?"

Emilia tilted her head at Subaru's composed demeanor. Hesitantly, her fingers reached out towards him, about to touch his cheek.

Just before her white fingertips touched his cheek, Subaru's raised hand took hers. "Ah," Emilia whispered, and her amethyst eyes, looking at him, intertwined with his black ones. And then, Subaru's cheek slowly curved into a smile,

"—Lia, no!"

"I finally caught —you."

Puck sprang forward, issuing a warning cry, but Petelgeuse's cheek-splitting grin was faster. Everyone immediately tried to move to protect Emilia, who was now being held by the arm, but they were all bound by the rising black demonic hands.

"Nya?!"

"What's this?! Just like Bro said!"

"This is the Archbishop's… 'Unseen Hand'!"

Ferris, Ricardo, and Wilhelm, bound and forced to the ground, groaned in pain. Arms rising from the ground grasped their limbs, forcing them onto all fours as if their hands and feet were weighed down with lead. But,

"—It seems there's someone with a bad compatibility, right?"

"It seems so… I demand you release everyone unharmed."

Julius, who had narrowly evaded the demonic hands by leaping backward, drew his sword. Petelgeuse, who had stolen control of Subaru's body, glared vexedly at Julius, who had somehow escaped the Unseen Hand's restraints.

"—A Spirits Arts User,

are you

?"

"And if so, what of it?"

Petelgeuse clicked his tongue, clearly annoyed. Julius, maintaining his calm demeanor, was likely trying to buy time to devise a strategy. However,

"Buying time is useless. The vessel is already in my hands—"

As he spoke, Petelgeuse lifted Emilia's white arm, which he still grasped. Emilia, unable to resist, was hoisted into the air by countless Unseen Hands, her mouth even sealed, preventing her from chanting. Emilia writhed desperately, struggling to escape. Beside her, the Great Spirit, who should have always watched over her, forbade himself from any intervention.

"Why… why am I here…? Lia, oh, Lia, I'm sorry. I'm sorry. Why… if I can't help here, why did Echidna…!"

His murmuring carried a note of regret, and resignation weighed heavily on his small body. Hearing this, Petelgeuse suddenly stopped moving. He tilted his head, slowly looking down at the small cat with a creaking motion.

“You bastard, don’t mess with me…!”

It was righteous indignation, an uncontrollable outburst of anger. That explosion temporarily reawakened Subaru’s consciousness, which should have been driven into the void.

Despite having had all will to resist broken, the sight of the pathetic Puck alone was enough to stir his consciousness back to life. In that case,

“Ordeals, contracts… ridiculous, damn it. Then why are you… here?! Why… did you come this far…?”

Anger flared in Puck’s eyes as he looked up at Subaru, and they glared at each other. However, after exchanging such undying hatred, Subaru’s consciousness once again threatened to be swallowed by Petelgeuse’s flickering shadow. His consciousness was fading, and this time, he knew it would surely be crushed. So,

“—Do it, Julius.”

“What are you saying?”

“If this continues, I’ll be taken over and everyone will be wiped out… If that’s going to happen, stop it.”

He entrusted his wish to Julius, who held his sword and was the only one capable of conveying his will to his body in this situation. At least to break this deadlock, he wanted Petelgeuse to be killed. And if a vessel was needed for that, he would play the part.

“No, Subaru. You must think. I am a knight and a spirit user. I have a contract to assist your objective. To go back on that would be…”

“My objective is to save Emilia… My life is a separate matter…”

Julius’s face twisted in agony at Subaru’s strained answer. Subaru couldn’t help but laugh at Julius’s first expression of distress, a man who had always maintained an elegant and composed demeanor.

His cheeks relaxed, and a small sigh escaped his lips.

The phantom Petelgeuse reappeared, circling Subaru as if cursing him for his decision. Laughter bubbled up at the comical sight, and finally, a faint chuckle escaped his throat.

“Subaru, I…”

“Don’t make the wrong judgment, Sir Knight—”

Subaru urged Julius with a trembling voice, as Julius tried to voice his hesitation. However Julius still couldn’t commit. Pushing him forward, interrupting the conversation that everyone was watching with bated breath, was—

“—Subaru-kyun is about to be taken over, and Julius can’t bring himself to execute him. So, there’s no other way, is there?”

Ferris, who had been bound by the demonic hands and forced onto the ground, raised his head and smiled faintly from his painful position. Sweat beaded on his forehead, and a single strand of hair fell, a beautiful sight. His attire, consisting only of cloth draped over his shoulders, was undeniably alluring, even knowing he was male.

The smile that split his red lips was truly worthy of being called “demonic.”

“Wait, Ferris. What are you—”

“I’ll make it so there’s no turning back.”

Ferris clicked his tongue softly before Julius, who tried to stop him. A small, kiss-like sound echoed, and Subaru = Petelgeuse blinked, waiting for a change. However, nothing seemed to happen.

—Immediately after, Subaru’s entire body was instantly seared by the sensation of his blood boiling.

"—Ah, ha?!"

Hot. Hot, hot, hot. Hot hot hot hot hot hot hot hot hot hot hot hot hot hot hot hot hot hot hot hot hot hot hot hot hot hot hot hot hot hot hot hot hot hot hot hot hot hot hot hot hot hot hot hot hot hot hot hot hot hot hot.

His throat was hot, his eyes were hot, his body was hot, his tongue was hot, his nose was hot, his hands were hot, his ears were hot, his feet were hot, his blood was hot, his soul was hot, his life was hot, hot hot hot.

His blood boiled, his internal organs simmered, and his brain emitted such a high fever that his vision blurred. Suddenly, this sudden and fatal change in his body made Subaru unable to utter a single word.

"AaaaaaAaaaaaaaaaaaaaaAaaaaaaaaaaaaaAaAAaaaa—?!"

Just before his eardrums burned out, Subaru saw Petelgeuse, tormented by the same pain. Since they shared a body, Subaru's suffering was his suffering. And that meant that he, too, was experiencing this hopeless end.

—A feeling of "serves you right" welled up, only to immediately dissipate before the pain.

Suffering, rolling, convulsing, unable to move. When he noticed, everyone who had been bound was now free. Of course. With the person who should be using the Unseen Hand in this state, who could bind whom?

"Ferris! You, why…!"

"It wasn't his wish. To protect what he wants to protect, it's his greatest desire… right?"

Subaru could no longer even move a single finger to express his suffering. He understood what had happened, that Ferris had caused it, and that Wilhelm had confronted Ferris. Emilia knelt, shaking the dying Subaru's shoulder.

“Wait… Subaru, no, this is wrong, it’s bad. Please. Wait… no, no, no. I…”

Her voice was tearful. For whom was she crying? She was crying for someone. She had always been so good-natured, always for someone else. He thought, perhaps, he would be happy if that someone was him.

“I can’t watch this.”

Ricardo shook his massive body and turned away. From beside him stepped forward the Royal Guard Knight with slightly disheveled purple hair—Julius, clutching his rainbow sword, a touch of desolation in his expression.

“…Ferris’s actions are a result of my own failing. I will eventually pay for this.”

He didn’t feel like telling him not to worry about trivial things. Instead, he wanted him to worry more, to never forget. For if he forgot how much Subaru had suffered, then Subaru truly couldn’t find peace.

—The tip of the rainbow sword was placed against Subaru’s neck, where he lay.

“No… no, Julius. Subaru is still…”

Emilia said something to Julius, but the knight shook his head, not listening. The sound of their conversation grew distant. Distant, distant, disappearing somewhere.

“This can’t be… my, I! Love, favor! I was supposed to have received the blessing of the Gospel…!”

—Shut up, come with me to hell.

Far, far away, falling into some unknown place, falling, falling. Ah, was he going to die again? Plummeting into the abyss, losing everything, carrying all his failures, to die a miserable death once more.

He looked back at the world. So that he would never forget what went wrong, what the cause was.

"—Subaru, I'm sorry."

He heard a tearful voice, the voice of the girl he most wanted to hear, and then his consciousness faded. And then, ah, he understood. This failure, and its reason.

"I—"

—Subaru shouldn't have reconciled with Emilia.

Librarian Beatrice's Log: Page Three

1

…In truth, the situation was more or less as she had expected.

The ominous foreboding was itself something that Beatrice had been unable to escape.

In the first place, the premonition had started the moment she had heard who had been selected to head to the capital this time around.

The first two were Emilia and Roswaal; that was fine.

She hadn't been told the details, but the two aforementioned had business at the capital's castle. Naturally the two of them would be going. There was no question that Puck would accompany Emilia, so although that was lonely, it couldn't be helped.

Further, it seemed that Natsuki Subaru, the boy who had been hanging around Emilia these last few weeks, would be going along as well. On top of that, he had been the one to drop in to the Forbidden Library to tell her about it.

Going on and on about something she hadn't asked about, Subaru showed entirely no consideration for Beatrice as she was trying to concentrate on reading. He was a truly infuriating fellow, so she was relieved that she wouldn't have to see his face for a while.

Finally, one of the maids would accompany them to handle seeing to their needs. Normally, the older of the maid sisters would take on that role, the one who was unwaveringly loyal to that good-for-nothing Roswaal.

However, just this once, it didn't turn out that way. The one who had asked to accompany them was the younger of the maid sisters. The older one had yielded that role to the younger, and as a result, the older sister and Beatrice would be the two to remain in the mansion.

That fact itself wasn't something that she minded. Beatrice hadn't particularly gotten close to anyone in the mansion—Puck was an exception—and she had no intention of being friendly to them.

No matter who it was that she would be spending several days alone with in the mansion, it wasn't something that she would give a second thought to.

…That was based on the assumption that her routine as a librarian was not disrupted.

"Good morning, Beatrice-sama. This is your breakfast of steamed yam."

"I see, I suppose. Leave it there, you know."

"It's noon, Beatrice-sama. I've prepared a steamed yam for your lunch."

"Hmm, I see, I suppose. I'll put the plate out later, you know."

"Here is your supper, Beatrice-sama. This evening, perhaps a steamed yam will do."

"…I, I see, I suppose. Steamed yams aren't bad, you know. Hmm, that's fine, I suppose."

"Good morning, Beatrice-sama. Breakfast has been especially steamed with extra effort."

"For pity's sake, I suppose! There are limits to what Betty can take, you know!!"

When, a bit more than a day after the party had left for the capital, a meal of steamed yams was offered for the fourth time, Beatrice reached her limit, came flying out of the Forbidden Library, and poked the older of the maid sisters with her finger.

The girl, Ram, with peach-colored hair and faint red eyes, and an altered maid outfit that exposed white skin, held a steaming plate in one hand and tilted her head; her expression showed no reaction to what Beatrice had pointed out.

“Beatrice-sama, if you need to visit the bathroom, there’s no need for you to go to the trouble of telling Ram about it.”

“Oh, come now! Who was speaking about that kind of limit to endurance?! You’ve been disrespectful nearly from the beginning, but lately it’s been happening a little too often, you know?!”

“You’ve gone and unmasked her, have you? Ram has been like this since she was born.”

“And now you’re showing too much of your true face, I suppose! There are limits to impudence as well, you know!”

Ram’s haughty irreverence wasn’t something that had begun recently, but before now, she would not have talked back directly to Beatrice’s face. In light of this change, no, this deterioration, Beatrice ended up stamping her foot.

“You can’t get away with overdoing that, just because Roswaal is away, I suppose. I demand that you shape up in your duties as a servant, you know. Firstly, put some effort into improving the food situation, I suppose.”

“You say that, but Ram has been laboring diligently each time on the flavor of the steamed yams. The salting, the duration of steaming, the selection of yams and mayonnaise… Isn’t it too early to be getting tired of them?”

“What matters! Is that it’s all the same meal, you know! Can you not make anything besides steamed yams, I suppose?!”

“Ram isn’t proud of that fact.”

“That’s exactly right, you know! It’s nothing to be proud of, I suppose!”

As Ram gave a faint impression of standing her ground proudly, Beatrice spoke roughly to her, wide-eyed.

She couldn't stand the warm scent of salt that drifted faintly in the hallway. Atop a plate were placed freshly steamed yams, and next to them white mayonnaise—the curious condiment that Subaru had devised—was arranged as well. There was no question it would be delicious. Beatrice loved mayonnaise.

However, if she were to show approval here because of that, she couldn't hope for the situation to improve.

"So, for now, Betty must harden her heart, and briefly forget about mayonnaise."

"Depriving yourself like that… munch munch could have ill effects on your health, Beatrice-sama."

"That's Betty's steamed yam, I suppose! Don't think you can just go ahead and eat it, you know!"

As they were speaking, Ram's hand had reached for the plate. Stealing her breakfast from that hand, and while snarling like a cat, Beatrice glared at Ram and asserted herself.

"You rely too much on your little sister… munch munch You're entirely forgetting… munch munch your duties as a… munch munch servant, I suppose… munch munch"

"Beatrice sama, some tea?"

"munch munch…I'll take some, you know."

From a teapot placed on the serving cart, the fragrant aroma of tea was spreading through the hallway. Accepting the tea poured into a cup, Beatrice's eyes narrowed in satisfaction at the warm flavor.

The steamed yam, delicious. The tea that Ram brewed, this was also delicious. Honestly, although one could hold nothing but doubt about Ram's ability as a servant, her yam steaming and tea brewing were perfect. Satisfaction.

"But this is no time to be satisfied, I suppose!"

"Beatrice-sama… Hasn't Barusu been rubbing off on you lately?"

"There's no call for that kind of insult, you know!! I can't believe you, I suppose…!"

Trembling furiously, Beatrice expressed her indignation at having something like that pointed out. It was unthinkable for her to be under the influence of the black-haired youth who had come to stay at the mansion. How long did they think she had spent here?

There was no way that she would be open to change now, after all this time.

"Setting that aside, it's quite strange, isn't it. Normally, Ram is the one to accompany Roswaal-sama, so it's exceptionally rare to have a chance to be alone in the mansion with Beatrice-sama."

"…At this moment, Betty, too, is painfully aware of that."

"Are you always making demands of Rem like this, when she stays together with you?"

"Demands! Did I say demand, I suppose?! I didn't say that! Your little sister can do anything, so there's no need for Betty to go to the trouble of saying anything, I suppose."

As Beatrice clutched the hem of her dress and ground her teeth, Ram nodded at her solemnly. Although Beatrice had just plainly stated that Rem exceeded Ram in ability, Ram showed no sign of concern.

Not only that, she smiled faintly at Beatrice.

"Ram is very proud of her little sister Rem, after all."

"If nothing else, I'm impressed by the strength of your heart…"

When placed in a situation of being compared to someone else, being found inferior is hard to take for anyone. Even for Beatrice, it was something she had personal experience with. It was something she felt more particularly when she was next to Puck.

There was no doubt that he was her beloved big brother. Despite that, she did feel an urge to envy him over the difference in the circumstances they had been placed in.

“Ram loves everything about Rem, after all, including her surroundings. It’s a different situation than yours, Beatrice-sama.”

“…Listen to you, talking as though you know anything about it, I suppose.”

“It’s just a bit of conversation. Besides, Ram has her hands full with her own concerns…Please be at ease.”

“At ease, you say? I wasn’t particularly worried, you know.”

While Ram spoke with a sparkle in her eye, Beatrice responded while licking at the salt and mayonnaise that had stuck to her hand. Then, after draining the cup of tea, the meal was finished. After wiping her fingertips with a cloth, Beatrice turned towards the hall’s doorway—the door that connected to the Forbidden Library. Behind her…

“Beatrice-sama.”

“What is it, I suppose? Let me remind you I’m expecting something more palatable for lunch, you know.”

“Setting aside that you nibbled at it first, what an outrageous bit of abuse, I suppose!!”

With her hand still on the door, Beatrice bellowed at Ram as she returned to the serving cart. Ram maintained her unruffled expression, and continued her speech with an “In addition, “.

“Ram has a full plate of jobs to attend to. Because of that, she has no time or effort to expend on meeting Beatrice-sama’s demands. Please extend your understanding to her.”

“That doesn’t sound like how someone hoping for understanding would put it, you know…?”

“Whether it’s stated politely or rudely, the steamed yam future will not change, after all.”

“Then at least say it politely, I suppose!”

As Beatrice seethed, Ram once more smiled faintly, and curtsied politely where she stood. If nothing else, the gesture was the perfect image of a maid, and Beatrice let loose a drawn-out sigh.

She watched Ram’s back as she pushed the serving cart, moving off into the distance.

“…This might be the most I’ve ever looked forward to the return of Roswaal and the others, you know.”

She whispered that with a tired-out face and voice.

2

With that sort of heartwarming exchange as a basis, Beatrice passed the dragged-out days of her time watching over the mansion.

The return of Roswaal and the others was on the fourth day after they’d left by dragon carriage—in other words, having no one but Ram for company went on for three days, and during that time, it should be noted that the meals were all steamed yams.

Regardless, thanks to their safe return from the capital, most of the problems that had been making Beatrice suffer stopped being problems. That was not, however, thanks to Rem, who, on her return to the mansion, took care of all of Ram’s accumulated chores at once, and offered meals other than steamed yams.

Unfortunately, Rem had not returned to the mansion. And it was not only Rem, but also Subaru who had gone along with her to the capital. The two of them remained at the capital, and the group that returned to the mansion consisted of the pair of Roswaal and Emilia, and Puck along with them.

As well, the various problems were not resolved; rather the matter was concluded with a decision that they would be set aside for later and shelved.

All of that came about thanks to Roswaal's first visit to the Forbidden Library in a long time…

"Beatrice. It's been so long, do you mind if I come i~n?"

"…Oh, it's you, I suppose."

When the man dressed as a clown opened the door and brazenly stuck his head inside, Beatrice sighed.

Beatrice was seated atop a wooden stepladder. When spending time in the Forbidden Library, that was her constant position. In truth, it wasn't that often that she met with Roswaal in this room.

Indeed, what was occurring here today was something that hadn't happened for several years. She didn't remember it that well, though.

"What brings you here, you know? Just so you know, Betty won't lend you any help with that crestfallen girl, I suppose. That's your jurisdiction, and not something Betty needs to involve herself with, you know."

"Tha~t's quite cold of you. Even when the Great Spirit whose so important to you is heartbroken over Emilia-sama? Even though you were kind enough to lend Subaru-kun a ha~nd?"

"…"

Although the provocative words seemed to be testing her, Beatrice held her silence and narrowed her eyes. Seeing her guarded attitude, Roswaal shrugged, and then walked over right to her side. He smiled, and though perhaps it was her imagination, he seemed to be enjoying himself; Beatrice found it suspicious.

"Somehow, you look like you're in a good mood, I suppose."

"Does it look that wa~y? Me, in good spirits?"

"…It does, you know. If you enjoy that girl being saddened in the capital that much, you'll forgive me if I question your tastes, I suppose. Maybe it was too late for that from the point you started wearing makeup, you know."

"O~h, don't be like that. It's the sort of thing that tends to put one in a good mood. For me~, the time for my dearest wish is coming steadily closer. With what's just happened, I'm sure of it, you se~e."

"When you say your dearest wish, you can't mean…"

"The dearest wish of the Mathers clan, indeed. If I put it that way, it's easier for you to understand, perha~ps? To you, who are both the guardian and librarian of the Forbidden Library, handed down from the time of the first Roswaal, yes?"

Roswaal closed one eye, and Beatrice, caught in the gaze of his yellow pupil, was at a loss for words.

The facts that Roswaal had spoken of were something that only Beatrice could grasp the true significance of. Seeing a slight glimpse of its meaning was something only Roswaal and Puck could do. And, by now…

"By now, Betty… is no longer concerned about what will happen, or what might happen, I suppose."

"That's a terribly sad thing. Howe~ver, there's something to look forward to. Hope, too, still remains. I know of your kindness and weakness. Isn't that right, Betty?"

"Why you…!"

Called by a familiar nickname, Beatrice lifted her head as though she were ready to lash out.

However, that exact reaction was what Roswaal had hoped for. He nodded at her, looking satisfied. Seeing that for herself, Beatrice immediately brought her rampant emotions under control.

Then, hugging her knees atop the stepladder, she turned her face away from Roswaal as though escaping from his gaze.

"Hope and expectations both have long ago dimmed, faded, and worn away. So Betty will always stay here… I wish for nothing more or less than that, I suppose.”

“I suppose you could say that. But… if possible, I would wish for you, too, to obtain happiness. You are worthy of that.”

“…There, indeed, you can say whatever you want when it’s only words, you know.”

As Beatrice’s cheeks bent into a cynical smile, Roswaal’s eyes lowered with just a hint of sadness. But, when he raised his head again, not a trace of that pity remained on his face.

He simply clapped his hands, and continued “That’s fine.” with his usual demeanor.

“No matter what sort of choice you decide on, I just wanted to let you know first. You’ve had as much time as you could want to worry over it, bu~t that time was necessary regardless. In order for you to be properly prepared.”

“…”

“I will head to ‘Sanctuary’. On the surface, it will be seen as going to explain about the Royal Selection to Garfiel and the others, but the truth of it is exactly as you are already aware. At the tomb, Teacher is waiting.”

“…We aren’t awaited, I suppose. At the very least, neither Betty nor yourself.”

“Ah, that’s true. I can’t disagree. …That’s why we must go to meet her. That’s what the time was for. That’s what this chance is for. That’s all there is t~o it.”

Loosening his lips, Roswaal showed a smile.

It was something different from the smiles that frequently showed up on his face, based on irony or mockery.

It was simply a genuine smile that looked forward to the future that awaited, anticipating wholeheartedly seeing it with his own eyes, the smile of a young man full of youthful innocence.

"…"

Finishing with that, Roswaal turned away from Beatrice, and withdrew from the Forbidden Library.

Exactly as he said in his last words to Beatrice, he would head to 'Sanctuary'. If that occurred, Beatrice had a fairly good idea of what would happen.

Left alone in the Forbidden Library, Beatrice reflected on Roswaal's words, and closed her eyes.

"After all this time…"

After all this time, she couldn't think that anything would change. Unlike Roswaal, she wasn't able to hold on to hope or expectations.

But on the other hand, just maybe, if something were to be set into motion…

"Mother… How much longer must Betty…?"

That sad whisper, that nevertheless carried a faint intensity, fell to the floor of the Forbidden Library, and vanished.

The Great Spirit Puck’s Nyan Nyan Tricks

1

An air of strained tension drifted on and on inside the dragon carriage.

In the Kingdom of Lugunica, in the royal capital Lugunica, was found the royal castle Lugunica. In front of it, many dragon carriages headed to the castle were currently waiting in an orderly line before the castle gate.

Normally, it would be rare to have this many people streaming into the castle, but today was a special day. Due to that, many people were making their way to the castle, security had been strengthened, and everyone was being checked carefully as they entered.

Inside the dragon carriage as it continued to inch its way forward, one could hear the sound of the frame swaying, rocked by the wind. A ground dragon’s Blessing of Wind Evasion protected against wind and sound that would interfere with travel, but when a ground dragon stopped moving it’s feet, the blessing’s effect was lost. This vast traffic jam was enough of a slowdown to cut off the blessing.

“It looks like we can’t get into the castle any time soon.”

Gazing at the state of things outside the window, a beautiful silver-haired girl murmured that to herself. Amethyst eyes drenched in sorrow, the girl who spoke with a silver bell voice was named Emilia.

“There shouldn’t be any need to worry about being late. But your cheeks are getting all stiff, Lia. If you don’t relax a little, your cute face will go to waste, won’t it?”

Picking up on what Emilia had whispered, a tiny shadow responded to her with a carefree, joking voice.

With a grey fur coat, a cat small enough to easily sit on the girl's narrow shoulder—he looked like nothing so much as a kitten, but was nevertheless a being that had the intelligence to comprehend human speech, a Great Spirit.

"It's fine. There isn't a girl anywhere that can beat Lia in cuteness. I can guarantee that for you."

"This isn't a day to be talking about who is cute and who isn't. I know you're doing your best to cheer me up, Puck, but that's rea~lly missing the point."

"Oh, is that so? The other candidates are all girls, too, so I was sure that was it."

"…Oh, you really are hopeless."

Emilia had to cover up a laugh as the spirit, Puck, played the fool for her on her shoulder. Seeing the tension on the side of her face disperse, if only a little, Puck nodded in satisfaction. Then…

"A~s expected of the Great Spirit, handling Lady Emilia is something you have a firm grasp of, i~sn't it."

Their exchange was complimented by an individual sitting across from them, dressed as a clown—Roswaal. He crossed his long legs elegantly, and continued while sending his gaze towards the scenery outside the window.

"Having said that, I can't entirely disagree with what the Great Spirit has surmised. This is a ceremony to select who will next sit on the throne, but currently, the only ones chosen by the dragon gem fitted to the emblem have been women… Indeed, the writings on the dragon tablet mention five priestesses, after all. It's only natural to think of that as the dragon's preference, the~n."

"In truth, if you think of it as continuing the bloodline, it's probably convenient for all the candidates to be girls, but… it's favoring one side a little too much. The candidates all have cute faces, too."

After responding to Roswaal's ironic smile, Puck turned back to Emilia with an 'Oh'.

"But there's no need to worry, no one can hold a candle to you, Lia, no matter who it is. Have confidence in yourself."

"I'm not really sure what kind of confidence you're talking about, but… Mhmm, alright. But…"

Cutting her words off there for a moment, Emilia tilted her head. Placing a finger on her lips, she continued.

"What do you mean when you say 'thinking about continuing the bloodline'? Why would girls be better?"

"…?"

Emilia's eyes were wide, and her expression said she didn't get it. Roswaal narrowed his eyes at that reaction, and then stared at Puck, sitting on her shoulder.

"Great Spirit, isn't that a little too overprotective, h~mm?"

"She can't be interested in what she doesn't know. This, indeed, is the very best of defensive measures for my daughter. That's my thinking, and that's what I've put into practice."

"Allow me to correct myself. That's not overprotective, but rather fairly controlling, wouldn't you sa~y?"

Puck looked somewhat hurt as he shrugged at what Roswaal pointed out. However, Emilia didn't quite grasp the meaning of what they were talking about. It did seem certain that they were talking about her, however.

However, they weren't given the time to go any deeper into the matter.

"Oho, it seems we've started moving. The front gate's come into view. Please prepare to enter the castle soon.”

“…Yes, I see. I’m all set.”

“Ready your heart as well, of course.”

Just as she nodded in response to Roswaal’s repeated words, the dragon carriage arrived at the castle gate.

When the doors of the various carriages were opened, Roswaal was the first to descend from the carriage. Following after his tall body, Emilia, too, moved to the outside. With her hair blowing in the warm breeze, she faced forward.

“…”

All at once, she could feel the tension in her surroundings on her skin, and Emilia drew her lips together sharply.

The clear recognition directed at her appearance, her silver hair and amethyst eyes. Even though she’d been preparing for it, it clawed at Emilia’s heart despite her preparation. However…

Burrowed into her hair, she had family treating her kindly, close enough that she could feel his breath.

As her heart was rescued by that presence, Emilia looked up at Castle Lugunica, towering before her eyes.

On this day, at Castle Lugunica, the talks regarding the ceremony to select who would next take the throne would be held.

2

After the identity check at the castle gate was finished, Emilia was shown into the VIP waiting room.

Inside the warmly colored, well-ordered room, expensive furnishings and paintings were beautifully arranged.

One of the paintings was of the three heroes spoken of in stories handed down in the kingdom—the Divine Dragon, the Sword Saint, and the Sage, and stone statuary using the Divine Dragon as a motif could be seen at various locations around the castle.

Not feeling like he could look on it favorably, Puck decided that it was in rather poor taste.

“If they’re going to be decorating with this sort of thing, they’d be better off just hanging pictures of fruit. Why, I might even draw one or two for them, myself.”

“O~h, this is unexpected. To think that the Great Spirit makes a hobby of dabbling in art.”

“Well, I’ve never painted, but maybe I can paint. See, I’m just a bundle of possibilities. The philosophy of not letting one’s whims be bound by rules, doesn’t that sound like an artist?”

“I feel like that sort of trait is closer to a cat than an a~rtist.”

Saying that entirely without malice, a smile of amusement appeared on Roswaal’s face.

In his attitude’s words and hidden meanings, he was making no effort to treat Puck with the respect due to a Great Spirit.

In truth, Puck himself didn’t care for thoughtless respect or worship. Even calling him a Great Spirit was just something the people around him had begun doing by themselves. He wasn’t proud of it; it meant nothing to him.

“Well then. You’ve gone to the trouble of calling me here and leaving Lia alone in the waiting room. Is it alright for me to think that you’ve called me to talk about something important?”

“Naturally, an important task is waiting for Lady Emilia. She needs time to unify the spirits… if I were to say that, you wouldn’t believe me, then? In truth, it’s something di~fferent.”

Shaking his head with a clownish gesture, Roswaal folded his short arms and looked up at Puck.

Just as was said, there was no sign of Emilia in the room the two were meeting in. After they'd been shown to the waiting room, Emilia was left there by herself, and Puck was called by Roswaal to another room.

Leaving Emilia behind when she was uneasy was a concern, but Roswaal didn't seem like the sort that would take meaningless action at a time like this. Reluctantly, he had responded to the summons.

"Of course, if you're playing some kind of prank, I'll leave right away. I enjoy a good prank, too, but right now, when Lia is shaking like a kitten, I'm worried for her like a father cat."

"You truly do care for Lady Emilia, Great Spirit. I assure you I understand your worries fo~r her. For Lady Emilia, this may become her great moment in the spotlight… or an embarrassing debut."

"…I'm still not very happy with the idea of having that girl standing up in front of people. Lia says she'll do it no matter what, so I'm just doing what I can to help out."

It was easy to imagine the harsh situation Emilia would be placed in, several hours from now. For that alone, Puck was emotionally opposed to not only the events of today, but participating in the Royal Selection from the start.

There really was no reason for her to be unjustly injured, or to go to the trouble of making herself a target.

He kept Emilia distant from everything that would hurt her. That was Puck's reason for existing.

"However, Lady Emilia has already chosen her path. Well then, our duty is to clear and pave the road that she will walk, as well as we are able, wouldn't you say?"

"…If you'd quit beating around the bush, we could get this over with."

"We~ll then, I'll be brief. A few hours from now, Lady Emilia will stand on the stage of the Royal Selection. At that time, it is certain that those who do not think kindly of her origin will shower her with heartless condemnation. Their distrust is deeply rooted, and it's plain to see that they are vulgar enough to jump at the chance to abuse someone while maintaining appearances."

Roswaal fluidly explained his rather cruel conjecture to Puck.

Puck listened in silence; by and large, he was thinking the same thing. It wasn't hard to imagine after the looks that were directed at Emilia when she arrived by the other who had business at the castle.

"When the Royal Selection begins, the candidates will be given a chance to express their own thoughts. Something you might call a public declaration of belie~fs."

"A public declaration of beliefs… something about it seems quite overblown."

"It's a big affair for the kingdom, after all, so it's only natural for it to be overblown and exaggerated. Also, I've informed Lady Emilia about the declaration. However,"

Cutting off his words there, Roswaal closed one eye and pierced Puck with an amber gaze. With a slight pause in his speech, Roswaal's head wobbled as he shook it.

"The time of public declarations is likely to be an excellent opportunity for those who loathe Lady Emilia's origin. I even have some idea of who may speak up fi~rst."

"Hmm, and what then? Are you going to reprimand the one you're thinking of before the Royal Selection starts?"

"Tha~t's an option, too, but they have a strong belief in never giving in to the threat of violence. We're somewhat well-acquainted with each other, so there's no doubt they'd brush me off."

"Well then, what do you want to do? I don't enjoy saying it, but I'm not that much use outside of situations that call for brute force. Unless they're an unparalleled cat lover."

At that point, Puck continued “Or perhaps,” as he washed his face.

“Is that person in fact an unparalleled cat lover? You intend to subvert them, not with feminine wiles, but with feline wiles?”

“I’m acquainted with them, but I couldn’t say with any confidence that they love cats that much. So~, let’s try something else. Won’t you join me in putting on a little play?”

“A play?”

The intriguing word ‘play’ suddenly jumped out at him. Roswaal had referred to what lay in Emilia’s immediate future as a stage. The word ‘play’ was certainly not unrelated.

“When you say ‘play’, what do you plan to make a play of, and how?”

“As I was saying earlier, the candidates’ declaration of beliefs—It’s easy to imagine things getting out of hand when they attempt it. The reason for that is not restricted to Lady Emilia; it’s a gathering of candidates with truly unique, original ways of thinking.”

“So they’re not just pretty faces, then. Well, I suppose that makes sense, too.”

“It’s just that, even in that setting, Lady Emilia’s origin makes her an easy target. Both the unchangeable circumstances of her birth, and the kingdom’s deeply-rooted rejection of half-devils are pasts that are difficult to change, after all.”

“…That’s true. I see your reasoning.”

“Hence, what we need to change isn’t the perception of half-devils. Rather, it’s the perception of Lady Emilia herself.”

Roswaal snapped his fingers, and set the end of one of them aglow.

The magical process of gathering mana from the surrounding air, and changing it into vividly-colored light, looked simple but required an extremely high level of concentration. This was proof that Roswaal was a rarity amongst magic users.

“The reason I’m allowed to act as I do is simple. Certainly, there’s the accomplishments of all the Mathers that came before me, but… the greatest factor is that I have the ability to overwhelm others.”

“You mean you want Lia to show she can, as well? No, that’s not it. You want me to become that for Lia, then.”

Having taken in what Roswaal was saying, Puck curled his long tail around himself and thought about it. The idea certainly did have some merit. But it was also a scheme that carried risks.

“But, don’t you think that this could invite even more opposition from the others? In the eyes of those that fear Lia because she’s a half-elf, wouldn’t it make them even more afraid if Lia is strong?”

“Certainly, that might happen. Ho~wever, we know Lady Emilia’s character. Even if Lady Emilia is exposed to baseless condemnation, she would never do something like using the Great Spirit’s power to unleash her anger. All that we need to do is convey that to those who will be in attendance today, by means of this gathering and our play.”

Saying that, Roswaal noted “In order for that to happen,” as he continued.

“Great Spirit, your power will be necessary. “The Beast of the End” of the Elior Forest. When Lady Emilia has you you by her side, you who laid low the “Mediator”, one of the four great ones, and yet she shows that she will not resort to using that power, then to them, she will surely change from being a “half-devil” to the candidate named “Emilia”.

“…You’re quite good with words. I understand a little of what Lia must have felt when she was taken out of the woods.”

His tone held neither desperation nor earnestness. Yet despite that, Roswaal’s words had a power to them.

His words had the power to make one feel that they held the best possible method of dealing with the situation that awaited them. They not only showed consideration for the desires of others, but bestowed what they craved without hesitation.

Precisely because of that, though, it was easy to think of them as the honeyed words of a swindler or something like that.

“Out in front of the castle, you went and called me controlling, but I think maybe you’re doing quite a bit of that, too.”

“I’m aware of it, yes. So~, what is your reply? Of course, if you turn me down, Great Spirit, I’ll simply move ahead with a different pla~n.”

“The right to choose is entirely in my hands. …It’s unfair of you to be trying to make me feel that.”

He thought deeply as he considered taking the devil’s, or rather Roswaal’s, proposal. In the back of his mind was the image of Emilia sitting nervously in the waiting room. Lately, it seemed that his mental image of his dear daughter was always nervous.

If it reduced the burden on her, even if only by a little, then he was of a mind to put on an act or do whatever else it took.

“…Fine. I’ll accept your proposal. I take it I can’t tell Lia about the arrangement?”

“The mere idea of having Lady Emilia try to put on an act is u~nthinkable.”

“You’re not saying that to be polite, you mean exactly what you said. Well, I don’t think Lia is good at keeping a straight face, either, so I agree with you.”

He felt proud of how he’d raised Emilia to be open, honest, and straightforward, but she was fatally unsuited to intrigue.

Despite that, if the scene was properly prepared, he was sure she would perform up to his expectations.

“So about the act, then, what are you going to do, and how? You’re not going to wreck the castle, are you?”

“The best outcome would be to give everyone a strong impression of the Great Spirit’s presence, in a way that doesn’t damage the castle. …Fortunately, he should create an opportunity for us to do tha~t.”

“He who?”

“Why, Subaru, of cou~rse.”

When an unexpected name was suddenly brought up, Puck widened his eyes at Roswaal.

It was the boy that, outside of the castle, Emilia had distanced herself from so he wouldn’t get dragged into today’s events. Emilia had made him promise to wait, and Subaru was supposed to have nodded in agreement to that, but…

“You gave him some sort of instruction that would make him break his promise to Lia? I can’t say I’m pleased to hear that.”

“Certainly not. I’m well aware how important promises and contracts are to spirit arts users. Even then, there’s no way to stop him. …That’s a~ll I meant to say.”

Immediately, Roswaal to Puck bowed with a dramatic flourish, and Puck sighed at him. At the same time, an image passed through the back of Puck’s mind of Emilia, and the boy who it seemed may be running to her side.

Would Subaru end up running to the castle then, just as Roswaal hoped? Or was he waiting quietly at the inn for Emilia, just as he’d promised her?

Either way, the thing that Puck prayed for would not change. The only thing.

…May there be nothing but joy in his dear daughter’s future.

Wishing that, Puck continued to lend an ear to Roswaal’s plotting.

Thinking of You on the Night Before the Decisive Battle

1

Rem watched the preparations proceeding solemnly, her heart swelling with quiet excitement.

“So many people have agreed to Subaru’s idea…”

Below, a large crowd had gathered in the gardens of the Karsten mansion in the noble district of the royal capital, raising morale for tomorrow’s operation.

Rem, too, was desperately trying not to reveal her true feelings. Right now, she couldn’t possibly show her face near Subaru.

If she saw Subaru’s face now, she likely wouldn’t be able to hold back her tears as they overflowed. She didn’t want to show him that side of herself.

—Currently, Rem was in the guest room of the Karsten mansion, and she was assigned the task of packing for Subaru and herself.

The group will leave the mansion tomorrow morning, heading to the Lifaus Highway, aiming for the Great Tree of Flugel. Their goal was to defeat the Witchbeast of the Mist, known as the ‘White Whale,’ and the person who played a key role in planning the operation was none other than Subaru.

After falling out with Emilia, Subaru had been extremely haggard for a while, until a certain daytime scene—the moment he asked Rem to run away together, everything changed.

But from the moment Subaru—during that scene in the daytime—suggested to Rem that they run away together, everything changed.

Even now, she still thought that way.

“If I had taken his hand and ran away with him… what then?”

What would have happened if she had run away with him, as she wished?

In that case, there might have been a path to happiness, just like the future Rem had envisioned.

But surely, Subaru then wouldn't have been smiling as he is now, and Rem wouldn't have been able to smile either.

That's why Rem doesn't regret her choice.

She just wants to be allowed to dream a little.

"Since he had desired me so passionately, I think Rem deserves at least that much."

With those words spilling out, Rem stuffed her belongings into her packing bag and slammed it shut with all her might.

2

"Really, Rem-san, you're such a good-hearted girl."

Rem had just finished packing and was heading to the dining room when she heard a gentle voice. When she turned towards the voice, she saw a girl with beautiful lavender hair smiling at her.

"Lady Anastasia."

"Running all over the capital for Natsuki-kun, and now helping out with preparations? You're such a hard worker, I'm impressed."

With her hand on her cheek, the girl—Anastasia—expressed her admiration with a gracious tone. Receiving this praise, Rem distributed the tea she had prepared to the people around her, providing them with a moment of respite.

"When you overwork yourself, your efficiency drops. Rem's sister often says that too."

"Oh, you have a sister? She must be just like you, a diligent worker."

"No, Rem can't even compare to her sister. Rem's sister is truly amazing."

"Is that so…? Well, well, I'd really like to meet her someday."

As Rem thought about her sister, Ram, a smile formed on her lips, and Anastasia made a meaningful remark. The emotion that flickered in her light blue eyes felt almost like an appraisal to Rem,

"I'm happy to be appreciated. But neither I nor my sister would ever change where our loyalty lies."

"Haha, thanks for the advice. But you know, persuading such a stubborn girl is where my skills really shine. It's more rewarding for me when someone starts off reluctant."

Rather than being offended by the disrespectful remark, Anastasia looked at Rem with an even more delighted gaze.

"I'm confident in my ability to read people. That's why I'm quite hurt when it comes to Natsuki-kun."

"Because of Subaru-kun?"

"He didn't seem like the type to set such a big thing in motion. It only took a few days for me to realize that my judgment was wrong. I lost a bit of confidence."

Touching the scarf around her neck, Anastasia let out an exaggerated sigh. Her ever-changing expressions and rich emotional display created a friendly atmosphere—enough to make one wonder if she really was a candidate in the Royal Selection.

It was precisely because Rem knew Emilia, Anastasia, and Crusch that she had such an impression.

But at the same time, she felt a sense of pride.

"Subaru-kun is not the kind of shallow guy that can be seen through so easily."

"…You're completely smitten, aren't you?"

“Yes, I’m completely smitten.”

Smiling, Rem responded to Anastasia without hesitation. Then, as she handed her a cup of tea, she added,

“Please continue to look forward to Subaru-kun’s developments. I’m sure Subaru-kun will continue to achieve many things that will amaze you, Lady Anastasia.”

“—Rem-san, do you remember what you said?”

As she watched the hot tea being poured, Anastasia slightly narrowed her eyes and asked this question.

Rem tilted her head in response, and Anastasia wet her lips with tea before continuing,

“You said your loyalty wouldn’t change… so who is your master, Rem-san?”

To that question, Rem gently placed a finger over her lips and replied,

“Of course, it’s Rem’s wonderful hero.”

3

“Is that you, Lady Crusch?”

“Hmm, Rem?”

Calming her inner excitement to some extent and deciding it was about time to return to Subaru, Rem spotted a figure standing on the mansion’s balcony—Crusch—and walked over to her.

The handsome woman, dressed in a masculine style, let her long green hair sway in the wind as she gazed down at the people working in the garden.

“Am I interrupting your rest?”

“No, I don’t mind. I just came up for a bit of cool air.”

In response to Rem's question, Crusch firmly shook her head.

Rem knew that since the negotiations with Subaru earlier in the evening, Crusch had been moving around tirelessly, giving instructions and calling out to others.

Over the past few days, Rem had come to understand Crusch's strong sense of responsibility, her dedication to her mission, her honest nature, and her unwavering conviction.

After all, during her stay at the Karsten mansion, Rem had joined Crusch every night at the negotiation table for the Royal Selection.

Those nightly meetings had been almost like a confirmation of the powerlessness of her words and position. However—

"Things really turned out just as you said."

"…Yes. However, I apologize once again for the repeated discourtesy."

As Crusch spoke with a slight smile on her lips, Rem picked up the hem of her skirt and offered a graceful curtsy.

It was a gesture reflecting the apology for the rudeness she had shown over the past few days, as well as a reflection on her past words and actions.

However, upon receiving the apology, Crusch began with "No," and continued,

"There is no need to apologize. Rather, it is I who should be ashamed of my short-sightedness. Thanks to my divine protection, I have more information to judge by than others. I was deceived by that, and now I've realized it."

"…"

Rem had no words to respond to the noblewoman's statement.

She had already spoken too many words for a mere servant. The fact that Crusch did not reproach her for it was due to her generosity.

Subaru would definitely stand up again, she simply continued to repeat those words. And Crusch had simply come to acknowledge it.

“That said, everything is still unresolved, so there is no time to catch a breather. Tomorrow, when the White Whale appears at the Great Tree of Flugel, we will finally take the stage. Until then, let’s hold off on drawing any conclusions.”

“Yes, you’re right.”

“…You don’t seem to be worried about anything, are you?”

Suddenly, Crusch narrowed her amber eyes and spoke to Rem. Though the question lacked a subject, it was clear what kind of worries she was asking about. So—

“—Rem received the most important thing just a few mornings ago. So, there’s nothing I’m afraid of.”

“…Natsuki Subaru is truly blessed.”

“No.”

As Rem spoke while smiling, Crusch also relaxed her lips. However, Rem shook her head, interrupting Crusch’s admiration.

Then, turning to Crusch, who held her breath, she spoke.

“The fortunate one is Rem.”

To get to be close to her amazing sister and the greatest hero.

She was truly blessed, Rem believed that from the bottom of her heart.

4

—Truly, truly, many people have come to recognize Subaru.

“Subaru-dono, thank you.”

The hero of the past, sung about by bards, expressed his thanks.

“Thanks to you, our long-cherished wish will be fulfilled. There is nothing that makes us happier.”

Those who fought against a tragic fate tapped Subaru on the shoulder.

“What’s up, bro—? That’s a determined-lookin’ face you got there.”

A battle-hardened mercenary looked at Subaru’s profile and laughed like that.

Those who would fight alongside him, those whose cooperation he sought, those who were earnest in their wishes—all of them listened to Subaru’s words.

Seeing this up close, Rem’s heart raced.

—There must be more, so much more to come.

“Rem, are you okay?”

Noticing Rem’s quickening heartbeat, Subaru, who was riding the earth dragon with her, wrapped an arm around her waist and spoke up.

“You’re not saying much, are you feeling worried? Or maybe you’re struggling with riding an unfamiliar earth dragon…”

“No, that’s not it at all. I’m perfectly fine.”

In response to Subaru’s concern, Rem shook her head.

The jet-black earth dragon that Rem was handling was one of the dragons loaned to them for this operation. Subaru had chosen it, and perhaps as a sign of his keen insight, it was extraordinarily capable.

A hero brings together worthy individuals. Rem also wanted to do her best as one of those supporting him.

“What about you, Subaru-kun, are you feeling worried?”

“I’m super anxious, and really hesitant, you know? But it’s like the die has been cast—or rather, I threw it myself.”

Subaru scratched his short black hair with a wry smile. At times like these, his ability to be honest and truthful was also one of his virtues.

For Rem, who struggled with showing her vulnerable side to others, she knew how much courage this must have taken.

To do it so easily, even though he felt how scared he was, Subaru was—

“—What I want to do and what I have to do are the same thing now. So, I feel like I have no choice but to do it.”

“Then, it’s the same for Rem.”

What she wanted to do and what she had to do were aligned. That’s why she could give it her all. That was something Rem wholeheartedly agreed with.

“After all, I believe in you, Subaru-kun.”

With all her heart, Rem confessed this to Subaru in front of the great tree.

There’s no need to link her trust with the things she can’t say. Rem had already entrusted everything to Subaru.

To put it in Subaru’s words, the die had long been cast. And Rem was deeply captivated by the outcome. That was enough.

“That is a lie. I love you.”

“I…I know that, geez.”

And so, she felt sorry for causing trouble like this, wanting to have

Subaru all to herself, even just a little.

“Rem is fine with being the second wife.”

If Subaru’s virtue was speaking his true feelings without pretense, then she hoped he would forgive her for this playful bout of sincerity.

—She was surprised at how much she actually expected from him.

She wanted him to be a hero. She wanted him to be just a boy. She wanted him to smile. She wanted him to never give up. She wanted him to stay healthy. She wanted him to think of her sometimes. —There were so many things she wanted.

“Because of you, Subaru-kun, Rem has become completely greedy.”

And knowing that he would forgive her for being like this, Rem was sure that she would continue to depend on him endlessly.

So at least, at least…

“…”

Before the giant tree, a large group of people lined up, awaiting the arrival of the Witchbeast in the dark of night. In the space where even their breathing was stifled, a strange sound reverberated—amidst the commotion, anxiety, and tension, Rem closed her eyes.

There was nothing to fear. —Ironically, the earth dragon’s will, transmitted through the reins she held, was the same as Rem’s.

A faint murmur spread as an ominous shape appeared overhead. At that moment, Crusch hesitated and took a breath.

“Everyone—”

Then, a boy from behind thrust his fist into the air.

“—Nail it!!”

“—Al Huma!!”

The gathered mana was converted into power, manifesting magic into the world. The attack shot out overhead, heading straight for the Witchbeast.

At the same time, the earth dragon charged forward at full speed. The sensation transmitted through the reins, the unspoken understanding—it was simple, just believe in Subaru. That alone was enough.

“All hands, follow that pair of fools!!”

Behind them, Crusch’s command rang out, and a great number of people started running. Chasing after Subaru who led the way, they pursued his back.

The hero Rem believed in, Subaru was rising to become a true hero. This was the prologue, the beginning of a story.

—Immodestly, Rem couldn’t suppress her smile, and the battle to defeat the White Whale, started by the two of them, commenced.

A Love Song for EMT

1

It all began one afternoon after Subaru had finished doing his chores around the mansion…

"—Hey, Subaru, is it alright if I ask you to do a little favor for me?"

"Hmmha?"

Suddenly hearing the voice of someone that sounded like a silver bell, Subaru turned around, a pastry still in his mouth. The one who had called out to him from the entrance of the dining room was a beautiful girl dressed in white.

A half-elf with long silver hair that seems to sparkle like the light of the moon, amethyst eyes that look like precious jewels, and possesses beauty that no human can match—Emilia is her name.

"Oh, are you perhaps still working?" she asked. "I'm not getting in your way, am I?"

"Nah, I'm just relaxing at the moment," Subaru replied. "I don't think any countries exist where eating snacks while on the job is considered proper etiquette."

After swallowing the half-eaten pastry whole, Subaru grinned at the concerned-looking girl. As Emilia breathed a sigh of relief upon hearing his reply, he raised his eyebrows in surprise due to the unusual object in her arms. That's one of the musical instruments of this world that feels rather familiar to me: a—

"It's a lyulyre. I thought that thing was gathering dust in the mansion's storeroom." Supplementing Subaru's response was a girl in a maid uniform also taking a break in that very room. It was a girl with short blue hair, adorned in a somewhat revealing custom-made maid's outfit—the super maid, Rem—Subaru's colleague, and the mansion's head maid.

Rem, a jack-of-all-trades when it came to housekeeping, handled all the work around the mansion. She was also the one who had made the pastries Subaru was eating, and they were currently enjoying some tea together during their break.

"I don't think Liliana forgot it, so, is that the lyulyre that was covered in dust in the storeroom?" Subaru asked.

"Even Liliana wouldn't forget her precious instrument… I think," Emilia replied.

"I can see how much trust you have in Liliana based on how discreet your reply was."

"Don't start fooling around—it's because of Liliana that Roswaal cleaned this on a whim. He said you should play a song for a change of pace since I've been focused on my studies."

"So he nominated me to do it, huh. That's pretty thoughtful for a guy like Rosy."

Subaru took the lyulyre being timidly presented to him and lightly plucked the strings. A light sound was produced in the room. I see. Seems like it's been maintained well.

A lyulyre is a stringed instrument made of wood and is kinda like a guitar from my world. It's a bit on the small side, but if you can grasp how to play it, the scales aren't all that different.

"Subaru, can you play a lyulyre?" asked Rem, her eyes wide at the sight of Subaru checking how the instrument sounded as if he was familiar with it.

"Yeah, I can do it since the basics aren't different from the AG I had at home," he replied. "Liliana gave me a bit of training, so I can play most of the folk songs from where I'm from."

"AG…?"

"It's an acronym for acoustic guitar. Well, you can think of it as a folk instrument from my country."

He recalled the dark-skinned girl who had vigorously trained him while looking at Rem, who was tilting her head. Liliana—she is a songstress who was, until recently, treated as a guest here. As she made a living out of singing, her voice and performance skills were amazing.

Not to mention that the women in the mansion had become her fans, even Subaru had secretly become a fan of hers. However, in contrast to her prodigious talent, her personality was questionable, and she was severely lacking in the humanity department. Anyway, the situation surrounding Liliana was settled, and the mansion had returned to normalcy. A few days had passed since then, but it seemed like the longing and curiosity for music was still going strong inside Emilia. She must have been crazy about it since she had gone to ask Subaru to play a song for her during his break.

"So, Subaru," Emilia began. "Can you play the songs that Miss Liliana sang?"

"I would like to avoid that since I'll be compared to her if I play the same songs," he replied. "I can play them, but I would be hard-pressed to play them and tell the tales at the same time. Mainly because of my singing voice."

"But you are amazing, Subaru," Rem commented. "Rem can't even imagine what other amazing skills you have that are of no use in the mansion!"

“Nah, it isn’t that much of a big deal… Wait? Something about your words didn’t really click with me. I wasn’t being praised, right?”

“—?” Rem, who was holding her hands in a praising pose, looked confused by her unintentional scathing criticism. She looked cute, but that made it seem like she was speaking her mind, which stabbed Subaru in the chest.

But these two girls have placed their hope in me. I want to look cool in front of them. “Alright then, the Sword Demon’s Love Song…is a bit hard, so I’ll go with a folk medley from the 70’s.”

“Eeeeh.”

“Don’t be disappointed. It’s also a masterpiece,” he assured them.

He smiled wryly at the dissatisfied voice and tapped on the lyulyre to create a rhythm. Emilia and Rem sat on the sofa together and began to clap lightly along with the music.

“It sounds more upbeat than an AG, so please use your imagination to make up for it.” As Subaru said his introductory remarks, he flipped the music sheet in his memory and plucked the strings of the lyulyre.

After he had started skipping school, Natsuki Subaru hated doing nothing, so he spent his time learning various skills—practicing the guitar was one of them. You never really know what life has in store for you since wasting all that time back then ended up making two beautiful girls happy.

Folk songs from the 70’s were often rather sad songs, reflecting the conditions and trends of the time. Even if it lacked vocals, the sad theme of the song was expressed in the instrumental. Subaru could see shades of loneliness and melancholy appear in the eyes and expressions of the girls listening to the song. Their reaction frustrated him as he played the tune. It made his heart ache looking at their faces, so— “Secret Technique: “Teeth Guitar! …Ow-Ow-ow!”

“Subaru! Oh no! What a stupid thing to do!” Emilia exclaimed.

“Subaru?! Aah, why did you do something so stupid?!” Rem scolded.

“You guys don’t have to say it together…ouch, ouch, ouch, ouch!”

He damaged his lips and gums during his performance due to the strength of the recently tightened strings in an attempt to lighten up the sorrowful melody.

Teeth Guitar was a magical skill that used your teeth to play the guitar and was a super-technique that only the best guitarists have mastered. Obviously, it wasn’t something a third-rate guitarist like Subaru could do. He bled and created a big mess.

“Alright, calm down, Subaru. Pain, pain go away,” Rem chanted.

“Ouch, ouch, it hurts…not anymore! It’s healed! Aah, that was painful, thank you.”

Rem cast a healing spell with a pale light by holding her hand over the writhing Subaru’s face. As the pain faded away, the wounds caused by his mouth getting torn up by the strings closed, which he was grateful for.

Emilia looked at it with an angry face, her hands on her hips. “I was wondering what you were going to do, and you surprised me sooo much. Jeez, don’t make me worry by doing something weird like that.”

“Sorry, sorry. I thought the song choice wasn’t good even though I was the one who chose it. It isn’t that 70’s folk songs are bad, it’s that I made a mistake by choosing a song that didn’t fit the mood.”

If I’m going to play something, then a song that can entertain the audience and make them feel comfortable is best. Folk songs should be used when I intend to shorten the distance between me and the girl I have feelings for.

“So, I’ll save the song I just played for another time,” Subaru said. “Wait for me, Emilia-tan.”

"—? I don't understand what I should be waiting for," Emilia replied, "but alright… And is your performance over now? Is that all you can play?"

Subaru felt relieved since Emilia wanted him to play more, even though she didn't state it clearly.

It seemed like Subaru's performance had met Emilia's expectations, regardless of the song choice. Rem also seemed to agree with Emilia since she didn't interrupt the conversation. As for him, he got excited when people expected something of him. He even got excited when people didn't expect anything of him. However, he really wanted to meet the expectations of those two as much as possible.

"But I've only practiced folk songs from the 70's, damn it! Why didn't I practice more hip-hop music back then…"

"Are you troubled, Subaru? If that's the case, then I think you should try playing one of Miss Liliana's songs," Rem suggested with a raised hand as Subaru was cursing his past actions.

It was really amusing since Rem's cute scheme could be seen behind her offer. Surprisingly, she was the one who was the most interested in Liliana's songs. Rem, who had a deep knowledge of poetry and traditional songs, probably wanted to make Subaru sing while making it seem like a proposal.

I was enchanted by all of Liliana's songs, but… "I'm not good enough to copy other people's songs just by listening, nor do I have good enough skills compared to Liliana. Other than folk songs… I guess I can play 'I Stepped on a Cat' (The Flea Waltz)?"

"Subaru, you need to apologize properly for that…" Emilia chided.

"Don't look sad, it'll make me sulk! It was by mistake! It wasn't on purpose, and it is a masterpiece with a title like that! I'll lecture the person who stepped on the cat later!"

This traditional piano song was often disparaged due to its title. Emilia gave him an accusing look, then heaved a sigh of grief as he kept apologizing.

After that, she clapped her hands and mischievously relaxed her lips. “Well, if you play Liliana’s song, then I’ll let it go. I won’t laugh at you even if it’s bad. So please don’t be nervous, alright?”

“It’s as Lady Emilia said. No matter how bad it is, no matter how awful it is, no matter how many times you fail, Rem won’t laugh at you, Subaru. Please fail without any worry. It’s fine. Rem will comfort you while you cry out loud.”

“You guys don’t have to worry that much. I won’t cry, alright?!”

They started worrying about Subaru crying in case he made a mistake, and now there was no going back.

I guess I can’t get out of playing the songs that I have memorized by listening. I’ve learned some of the songs Liliana played from her, too, so there’s no reason why I can’t play them.

But even so, Subaru’s performance skills were poor, and he was self-taught. He started learning it by staring at his father’s guitar and some sheet music, then he continued practicing so he wouldn’t lose to his father’s annoying stares, who would stand on the other side of the sliding door with a grin on his face.

“Even if it’s really bad, don’t laugh at me. I won’t cry, either,” he said in his defense as he picked the lyulyre up again. After that, he lightly tilted his head and winked at Emilia with a slightly swanky gesture. “By the way, do you have any requests…any songs you want me to play, milady?”

“Oh, if that’s the case, then I would like that song! That—”

Emilia merrily clasped her hands together as Subaru got ready to play something for them. She then closed her eyes and slightly cleared her throat, as if she was recalling something. “La, la, la la la—”

With the voice that sounded like a silver bell, what sprang forth from Emilia’s lips was a song, carried by her short breaths. Subaru and Rem gasped unconsciously at the enchanting sound her beautiful voice created. Her enchanting voice had the ability to capture the hearts and shake the souls of those who heard it. It was for personal reasons that Subaru's heart throbbed every time she spoke to him, but the magic of her beautiful voice could surely be felt by people other than him. It travelled through his eardrums and into his bloodstream, and his soul was moved by the unbearable emotions that welled up from within. He didn't even feel worthy enough to listen to her singing voice at such a close proximity to her.

"…"

She had started singing in order to convey the song, but Emilia got so excited that she couldn't stop. Neither Subaru nor Rem had any means to stop her. They simply continued to listen to the magic, the song being sung by her beautiful voice in silence until the end. Eventually, the song came to an end and Emilia exhaled deeply, "—Aaa," and then for the first time realized that she had been absorbed in her singing, losing control of herself.

Her white cheeks turned beet-red in embarrassment, and she hastily looked at Subaru and Rem in a panic. "So…Sorry. I just felt reaaally good while singing…"

"…I could see that, so no worries," Subaru assured her. "So you like to sing?"

"I don't know. Singing isn't something I'm familiar with… But yeah. I suppose I like it." Emilia put her hand on her mouth and nodded somewhat sheepishly.

'I suppose I like it.' Subaru would normally have to cook up a scheme to get her to say the words she'd spoken under her breath, but now that he'd heard them, he didn't think he'd do that this time. And it was not unrelated to Rem, who was gently pulling on his sleeve next to him.

"Subaru…" she said.

"I know," he replied.

Rem directed her light blue eyes at him as if wanting to say something. Subaru saw through the emotions in her eyes and nodded. Her calling his name, and him nodding—that's all they had to do to communicate.

—No, it was only natural for people who had heard Emilia's elegant voice to experience such emotions.

Things need to be acted upon. That was the greatest lesson Subaru had learned in this mansion. After stumbling through multiple loops, he understood it intuitively. Making a choice and acting upon it was the only way to make this unreasonable world change—so he challenged fate once more.

Subaru closed his eyes once after looking at Emilia, whose cheeks were still red. "Hey Emilia-tan… I don't really know what to say, but."

"?—Yes?"

Emilia tilted her head while putting her hand against her silver hair, looking at Subaru as he chose his words. The trust in the amethyst eyes looking at him was different from the trust Rem had for him. That emotion made his chest tighten, but he suppressed his sentiments and made up his mind. "Emilia-tan, you are…"

"—What was that sound? It sounded like a bird's dying screech. What kind of a silly game are you playing during your break, Barusu?" said someone in an arrogant tone after opening the door in the middle of Subaru's sentence, shattering his resolve.

It was a girl with pink colored hair and rose-pink eyes who had stepped into the room—Ram—who looked identical to Rem apart from the color of her eyes and hair, and her bust size. She gave a somewhat grumpy look around the room and looked at the three of them one-by-one as they stood there. After that, she started thoughtfully reflecting and spoke exactly five seconds later—"Can we just pretend Ram never said that? It feels rather strange to ask that of you, but that's what she thinks."

"It's amazing how you grasped the situation so quickly, but you ruined everything, Sister!”

Subaru’s scream exploded at Ram, who had suddenly jumped into the frame and brilliantly conveyed the point he was going to convey.

2

—Emilia, who has the voice of an angel, is unbelievably tone deaf.

That’s all it was if you put it into words, but Subaru was struck by a shock that went beyond that. Has there been a tragedy of this magnitude in recent years?

A pretty voice and tone-deafness; it wasn’t only Subaru that had been shocked by that reality. Rem also couldn’t hide her disappointment and grief at the reality she was facing. Emilia’s devastating singing ability was shocking for her, too. Who could have guessed that Emilia’s beautiful bell-like voice could turn into a cacophony of such caliber?

“God, what has this child done to be treated this way?” Subaru lamented. “How cruel can you be…?!”

“Please, don’t say it like that!” Emilia exclaimed in embarrassment. “I don’t want this anymore! It’s embarrassing; I’m sooo embarrassed!”

Emilia, her ears that were slightly longer than a human’s red to the tip, hid her face in the sofa. Ram had taken her time to come complain about Emilia’s haphazard singing. Emilia was confused about what she had said at first, but now she clearly understood what she meant after hearing Subaru’s poor excuses and explanation that had been meant to make her feel better. As a result of her understanding the situation, she sunk into the sofa with a sullen face.

“I-I think in the first place, you guys are exaggerating things. It’s true that I have never had the chance to sing before and that I haven’t learned how to sing, but…it is weird that it’s that bad. You all are trying to tease me and make a laughingstock out of me, aren't you? I won't be fooled that easily," said Emilia, talking quickly as she hugged her knees. She was like a child trying to turn their face away from a reality they didn't want to accept, trying to deny what was.

Subaru looked her in the eye and started speaking to her sincerely, as if he was trying to make her accept things. "I understand your feelings, that it is hard to believe and that you want to doubt things. But it isn't like that. Have I ever lied to you… Well, to be honest, I have lied to you a couple of times. I have done mean things a lot, just to see you turn red due to being teased."

"Is that so?!" Emilia exclaimed. "I didn't know that! Since when have I been teased? Hey, when?"

"It isn't the time to talk about such things!" he retorted. "Don't look away from the issue!"

"Alright… It doesn't feel like something isn't adding up…"

Subaru had accidentally had a slip of the tongue, but he somehow managed to divert Emilia's attention with the momentum. And Emilia, who got fooled by it, looked disgruntled. But he waved his hands, as if he was pushing her dissatisfaction away.

"It's true this time. I swear there's not a single lie in it."

"Subaru…"

With a sincere voice and serious tone, and with honest words, Subaru conveyed what needed to be conveyed: "—You are a victim of God's mischief."

"Why are you being so mean?!"

"It's because I can't believe such a horrible thing! Why are you tone-deaf, Emilia-tan?! You are extremely cute and have a beautiful voice, but nobody will be happy if you sing like that! If someone is to blame, then it's God that needs to be blamed! Or your parents are to blame for neglecting you until you ended up this way!"

"Whaaa…"

Emilia looked worn out after hearing Subaru put emphasis on how tone-deaf she was. To her, it seemed somewhat like someone else's issue despite him being passionate about it. It was probably because she wasn't aware of her own tone-deafness.

Tone-deaf people who aren't self-aware—and sensory deafness is a type of tone-deafness that's the hardest to fix. Unlike motor deafness, which is a throat problem, it is extremely difficult to fix since the patient isn't self-aware. In other words, in order to defeat this difficult enemy, the cooperation of the family is essential.

"Puck, come here!" Subaru snapped his fingers and summoned the person responsible for this problem by calling out his name.

He didn't have the authority to summon Puck, who was a spirit, but Emilia, who was his contractor, lost to Subaru's spirit and called out to the green crystal that shone on her chest. And then… "I got summoned and came out meow, meow, meowww."

Particles of pale light flew out from the gemstone, which then took on the form of a small cat spirit.

The spirit appeared with an air of innocence about him, firing off a line of dialogue—Puck landed on Emilia's shoulder, took his long tail into his hands, and then groomed himself.

"What's up?" Puck asked. "Is there something you wanted me to do? I had plans to take a day off today."

"What's up with talking like a busy businessman?" Subaru wondered. "And weren't you listening to the conversation outside from inside the stone?"

"I told you right, that I was taking a day off today. So I was having a nice sleep."

"You really are spending your day off like a working dad…"

It's true that working hours are from 9am to 5pm, so I can't help but think the cute cat is an office worker.

Leaving aside how the kitten spent his day off, Subaru explained the situation till now with a mix of light gestures. Eventually, after Puck finished listening to his story, he nodded and looked at Emilia. “I see. —Subaru is putting it like that, but are you really tone-deaf, Lia?”

“I don’t…feel like I am… I think that Subaru is exaggerating things a little. I’m singing properly. I’m not messing around.”

“It would have been…better…way better…if you were messing around!” Subaru shouted.

Subaru knelt down after looking at Emilia’s sulky face and repeatedly hit the floor. Puck looked at both their faces and then rubbed his pink nose. “I’ll have to listen to it first to be sure. Lia, if you would.”

“…Alright, but I won’t like it if you laugh at me.”

“I would never do such a thing,” Puck assured her. “Even if the entire world laughs at you, I won’t.”

“You sound unnecessarily super cool,” Subaru commented.

Puck’s overly passionate reply made Emilia close her eyes with a sigh. She then hummed to get into a rhythm and tried to find a good place to start, but the thing is, her humming was already out of rhythm. Regardless, the song began. After getting over how bad her singing was earlier, her voice had more range this time around, so she was in good condition, and it seemed like she was aware of that, so her face radiated happiness after she finished singing.

“How was it?” Emilia asked Puck confidently, looking like she’d had fun.

Puck rubbed his face after he listened to her. “Yeah, let’s see. I really did feel confident in the way I raised you till now. I truly believed from the bottom of my heart that you grew up to be the cutest and smartest and the best child in the entire world.”

“Oh…is that so? That’s…embarrassing…”

Having gotten praised a lot out of the blue, Emilia laughed sheepishly in a ticklish way, but after he had finished praising her, Puck added, “But I’ve never regretted not raising you properly more than I did today…”

“—What?”

“I’m sorry, Lia. —I couldn’t be the best father in the entire world for the cutest girl out there. That’s the only thing I regret.”

The moment he said that, Puck rolled off Emilia’s shoulder as if he’d run out of energy. As the spirit started falling off her thin shoulder, Subaru caught him by quickly extending his hand.

Puck looked up at Subaru with a weak movement of his neck while resting on his palm. “I’m sorry, Subaru… All of this is due to my lack of ability…”

“It’s enough! It’s alright, Puck. It isn’t like, it isn’t like it’s anyone’s fault. Since, since you are regretting it so much! Our feelings are the same, isn’t that right?”

“Ha-Ha… I feel saved with just those words alone… I kinda feel really sleepy now.”

The light faded from Puck’s round, black eyes, and his body lost strength. The outline of the spirit’s body became blurred, and then began to scatter, turning into particles. Subaru screamed desperately, wanting to stop him from disappearing. “No, no! Puck! Puck!”

“Thank…you…for everything…”

Subaru wailed as the spirit began to vanish in his palm—and after she witnessed the tragedy between the boy and the kitten, Emilia said, “I don’t want to deal with this anymore! You two are idiots! Idiots! Um, idiots!”

Emilia ran out of the dining room all upset after being teased.

““—We overdid it.”“

Regretting what they had just done, Puck and Subaru looked at each other, then rushed after Emilia, who had run off somewhere.

3

“There are three main causes of tone-deafness,” Subaru explained. “Not being able to catch the sound, not being able to produce the sound, and not being able to grasp the rhythm. If we can eliminate these problems one-by-one, then we can theoretically eradicate any sort of tone-deafness. In short, Emilia-tan’s tone-deafness is a flaw that can be fixed!” Subaru emphasized with a lifted fist as Puck pulled off a textbook marketing response to enhance his message.

“Meow-did you say—?!”

The theory that Subaru had just proposed was something he had seen on TV before.

I don’t know how reliable it is, but it should be better than doing the tone-deafness treatment without anything to go on.

If the main causes of tone-deafness are pitch, throat, and rhythm, then the solution could naturally be narrowed down.

“First, let’s find out what’s behind Emilia-tan’s issue in a simple way. Based on what I could deduce after listening to her singing, there are two reasons behind her tone-deafness: “pitch and rhythm. Leaving rhythm aside, she can produce sounds and has a cute face.”

“Subaru, Subaru, you are getting off track,” Rem informed him.

“Damn, that wasn’t it. No, I mean she does have a cute face, but the point it that she can produce sounds. So, there are two problems that need to be overcome: “pitch and rhythm. Now, repeat after me!”

“Pitch and rhythm!” Puck repeated after Subaru. Both were eager to solve the tone-deafness issue.

But, next to those two… “Hmph.” …was Emilia, who sat on the floor holding her knees, sulking. She wasn’t keen about what Subaru and Puck were talking about at all.

Everything had been going well until Emilia had run off and they had to catch her, but when she was brought back, she just sulked a lot. Even so, her ears were twitching, and she was listening to their conversation, which was really honest and cute of her.

“Since Emilia-tan enjoyed Liliana’s songs, it means she can tell whether the singing is good or bad. Her being ok when it comes to other people’s singing but not good when it comes to her singing is probably because her brain is unconsciously complementing hers. Let’s fix that.”

“It’s easier said than done. How are you going to fix it?” Puck asked.

“Usually, making her listen to a proper song hundreds of times or making her hum till she gets the tune are the ways to fix it, but… Making her aware of her tone-deafness is fairly easy. For starters…”

In response to Puck’s question, Subaru prepared to enter the first step of Emilia’s Tone-Deafness Correction Plan. However, the moment he was about to bring out his weapon… “—She has been listening to you quietly for a while, but how can you do as you please here?”

A terribly sullen voice interrupted him, and Subaru shook his head in dismay. He turned towards the person who had spoiled his enthusiasm and sighed at her smug face.

“Jeez… Everyone is being positive about it, so don’t do anything to spoil it. You need to learn how to read emotions and not just books. Read the atmosphere, would ya?”

“When it’s coming from none other than you, it only infuriates Betty. Leaving that aside, Betty doesn’t really understand why you are doing that in her Forbidden Library.”

The girl sitting at the back of the room on a step ladder clicked her tongue as she closed the book with a loud bang. The girl had luxurious-looking vertical rolls and was wearing a fluttery dress, looking as pretty as a doll. She was Beatrice, the librarian of this library, and also a resident of this mansion. As could be seen, Subaru and Beatrice were like cats and dogs—he wanted to be on good terms with her, but since she was a girl that was fun to tease, he couldn't help but provoke her, which was something that troubled him.

"Well it can't be helped, can it? This mansion doesn't have a soundproof music room, and what are we going to do if we do it in another room and Emilia's singing leaks out? If word gets out that Emilia-tan is tone-deaf, then the royal selection would be the least of our worries."

"Is my singing that bad?"

Even Emilia couldn't stay indifferent when she heard that it would be bad for her standing in the royal selection. Beatrice gave her a cold look when Subaru pointed that problem out.

"What the future holds for that girl is none of Betty's concern. And that is not a good enough answer as to why you are making such a ruckus in this private library, I suppose."

"Beako, you know what I'm talking about, right? Her voice would leak out from a normal room, but I don't have to worry about it in the Forbidden Library since this room is spatially cut off from the outside world. It won't bother anyone no matter how much she practices here!"

"Betty is saying that it is extremely bothersome!" Beatrice jumped down from the stepladder, grabbed at the hem of her dress, and shouted at him with a red face.

Her anger was justified, and she had a good point. But it was also true that the Forbidden Library was needed for Emilia's singing lesson. Therefore, Subaru used his trump card against her.

"Betty… Are we really that much of a nuisance? Do you want us to leave…?" Puck moistened his round eyes, held his tail, and called out to Beatrice while looking up. The cunning appeal of the kitten was perfectly coordinated with Subaru even though they hadn't planned it together.

Beatrice suddenly lost the momentum from before and looked daunted. “Bu-Bubby, there’s not a single thing wrong with you, I suppose! But the Forbidden Library is…”

“Yeah, I know this room is important to you, but it’s true that we need your help with this, Betty. So please, help me out.”

“Bubby…”

Beatrice looked up to Puck as an older brother, and his appeal tugged on her heart strings. She was also a girl who couldn’t refuse requests to begin with. Their victory had been assured from the beginning.

“I… It can’t be helped, I suppose. It’s alright. Betty can’t deny it if it’s Bubby’s request.”

Beatrice accepted the request without a hitch, not noticing Subaru’s muttering with an evil look on his face.

It makes me worry that she might get conned by a bad dude in the future.

However, the conditions had now been met. After Subaru and Puck nodded at each other, Puck flew into Subaru’s palm, giving him a dynamic high-five with the use of his entire body.

And thus, this was how Emilia’s lesson began in the Forbidden Library with the permission of its caretaker…

“It may be a hard and painful path, but let’s not falter and give it our best!” Subaru exclaimed.

“Not even once have I said that I want my tone-deafness to be fixed…” Emilia complained. “No no, I may be a bit bad at singing, but I have never asked for it to be fixed…”

Everyone had responded differently, but they were all getting excited for it, completely ignoring the victim of the entire affair.

4

“Alright then, I feel like starting the lesson officially… Emilia-tan, how long are you planning to sulk? It’s a really important topic, you know?”

“But you guys are overexaggerating it when I’m just a little amateurish at singing. Subaru, Puck, I don’t like either of you.”

“You don’t hear people say amateurish in this day and age. And how stubborn are you?”

“I don’t know.”

It was also due to her being teased during the conversation before that Emilia, who was the victim in this, lacked seriousness. It wasn’t only about the tone-deafness, such problems required the person facing them to have a will to fix them. So, first she needed to face herself seriously.

“You are usually straightforward, so why are you so stubborn about your singing?” Subaru asked.

“It’s because it’s embarrassing,” Emilia replied. “It’s embarrassing that I’m unaware of my tone-deafness while you and Liliana are good at singing… I don’t want to believe something like that.”

“Oh my, your resistance is adorable. But it would be troublesome if it’s like that…”

Emilia looked away, her cheeks red. Her will to resist was gradually weakening. But Subaru thought that it lacked a decisive blow, so he cracked his neck.

“—In order to help people who are tone-deaf, the best way is to make them listen to their own singing. It would be a piece of cake if I could record it, but sadly we don’t have such a convenient tool here.”

So I’ll give up on using the inventions of science and rely on more primitive means.

“Is that a…bucket?” said Emilia, widening her eyes as she looked at the object in Subaru’s hands. Her surprised eyes were looking at a metal bucket. There was no mistaking it.

“It’s our guest, Mr. Bucket. This guest lecturer will teach Emilia-tan about her tone-deafness. I have washed it properly, so there won’t be an issue, hygiene-wise. So, you can be rest assured.”

“How can Mr. Bucket be used? Can I go inside?” Puck wondered.

“Enough with the showing off that you are a cat by wanting to go into narrow spaces, for now. Its usage is easy—it simply needs to be put on Emilia-tan’s head, then she can sing.”

“—What?” Emilia asked in confusion.

“Ah-ha-ha, I suppose.”

Subaru’s declaration startled Emilia, and Beatrice couldn’t help but burst into laughter.

“Um… Sorry, I guess I didn’t hear that properly,” Emilia said. “What am I going to do with that bucket?”

“You need to wear it,” Subaru replied. “Wear it and sing. You are going to be a bucket-style heroine.”

“Subaru, you idiot! I was sooo close to taking you seriously!”

Emilia was about to dash out of there after seeing Subaru offering her the bucket with a smile, but he quickly caught her arm. “Wait, wait a minute! You got me wrong, I’m not kidding! If you sing while wearing this, then the sound will reflect back at you! I’m not lying!”

“It’s what you get for lying all the time, I suppose. You’re like the falo-herder boy in Hoshin of the Wilderness, in fact.”

“I can hear you saying something similar to The Boy Who Cried Wolf, you annoying loli! Stay shut for a bit!”

After silencing Beatrice, who had interrupted him, Subaru began explaining himself to Emilia, who was looking at him with suspicion.

It might be the first time she's given me such a stern look since the first day I got summoned to this world when I called Emilia the Witch's name that she was using as an alias.

A single bucket had brought such a catastrophe. In any case, Subaru desperately tried to convey his sincerity. "If you listen to your own voice, then you'll understand the level of your singing! I'm not lying. Just pretend you've been tricked and sing, and then you'll understand!"

"Pretend that I have been tricked?! So you are planning on tricking me! I won't be tricked anymore!"

"You have become so paranoid. I wonder whose fault it is…"

"You made me eat the failed mayonnaise yesterday after telling me to pretend I had been tricked! I remember how angry I was back then, which makes me even angrier now!"

"Shit, it was my fault! Yesterday's me, you idiot! But I'm a different man today! I'm doing this for you!"

It looked as if Subaru was trying to drag her down a dangerous road, but he still vigorously tried to lead her down it. And the good-natured Emilia gave in.

Emilia looked at the bucket had been given to her and timidly held it above her head—and asked, "You won't laugh, right?"

"I won't, I won't laugh, I won't laugh at all."

"Really, really?"

"I won't laugh at you no matter who laughs at you."

"Is that a line fit for situations like this?" Puck asked from above his shoulder, but Subaru ignored him. To make Emilia put the bucket on, he wouldn't hesitate to use any sort of cool line.

Possibly having been encouraged by his powerful words, Emilia put the bucket on with a determined expression. It fit snugly, and the simple bucket hid her face.

—It's the sudden emergence of a bucket-style heroine.

"What is this feeling?" Subaru wondered. "I knew it beforehand, but it hurts me to see Emilia-tan like this."

"Don't worry, Lia," Puck said. "You are still the prettiest girl in the world even with that bucket on your head."

Subaru and Puck were overcome with feelings of guilt, but Puck loved Emilia no matter what she looked like. Subaru felt like he'd lost to him when it came to his affection for her, but even with a bucket covering her head, he just knew she wasn't happy with all the praise.

"Ah-ha-ha, I suppose." Beatrice laughed with her face hidden behind the book she lifted, but her laughter was clearly audible.

While being exposed to such a crowd, Emilia courageously turned her bucket-covered face towards Subaru. "So, do I need to sing like this? It's reaaally tight. Woah, it's loud."

"Not many people get to hear their own voice. Sing a song like that. Just sing a song to enjoy your singing voice. If you want me to, I can play something to go along with it."

Subaru volunteered to back her up with his lyulyre, but Emilia shook her head with the bucket on.

It's a surreal sight, but Emilia probably has a gallant face under the bucket.

"It's alright, I'll do it alone first."

"Is that so? You can tell me if you get anxious. I'll do my best to help you out."

I wonder how much of a help a third-rate guitarist could be when it comes to Emilia's tone-deafness.

Emilia pulled her chin in after hearing Subaru's words. And then…

"La, la, la la la—"

Emilia started singing after creating a rhythm with a hum without Subaru's support. It was coming from behind the bucket, so it was muffled, but the song had no significant changes. In short, she was still tone-deaf, but if it was going according to the plan, then she could hear her singing, too.

"It's horrible," said Puck.

"Yeah, it's horrible," Subaru agreed.

"It's really horrible," Beatrice also agreed.

Puck sighed in grief, Subaru tearfully agreed, and on top of that, Beatrice, who had demonstrated her generosity for Liliana's music, frowned in displeasure. Musicality was something that was out of Emilia's reach, and it wasn't right to blame her for it, but…

"—Ah."

"Oh?"

The singing stopped suddenly in front of Subaru and the others, who were listening to her pitiful song.

After ending her song on a rough note, she took the bucket off in front of the three of them, who were befuddled by her actions. What first emerged was the silver hair that had been contained within the bucket, which was then followed by Emilia herself.

And then… "Please leave me alone for a bit," Emilia said, and then the girl who had finally realized that she was tone-deaf left the Forbidden Library all on her lonesome.

"—No, you can't just walk away! You've been running away all day!"

Subaru chased after Emilia in a great rush as soon as he came back to his senses.

5

“We’ll do the lesson so that Emilia-tan can look at her bad side and learn to be a better girl! First, you need to overcome the inability to hit the right notes! Ok?!”

“O…Ok.”

Emilia had once run away, but after she was brought back with a teary face, she became obedient to Subaru’s instructions. It seemed like her realizing that she was tone-deaf had left quite an impact on her. She didn’t look so good, but it looked like she was determined to practice.

“The method to overcome pitch tone-deafness is to listen to one song over and over again and memorize the right tune. It’s best to fix it while wearing the bucket from before. It’s also good if you keep humming all the time.”

“But how would I know what the right tune is? Liliana isn’t here anymore…”

“Well, it isn’t like Liliana is the only one who can sing with the right pitch. Well, even Beako can do it. Hey, sing a bit.”

“Huh? Why does Betty need to do such a thing?” Beatrice protested, not happy about being asked to sing on such short notice.

“Hey, hey.” Subaru shrugged his shoulders. “The venue for the lesson is here, anyway, so it’ll end faster if you help out. If it doesn’t end fast, then we’ll have to visit here again and again.”

“Argh… But even so, Betty doesn’t want to be bossed around by you.”

“Alright, alright, so it’s that, right? You’re the kinda lady who likes to critique others, but can’t do anything on her own, right? Ok, sure. You can head to the corner there and continue with your reading, then.”

"Who's all talk?! Stop talking nonsense! Alright, Betty will do it, I suppose!"

Beatrice fell for Subaru's provocation, hook, line, and sinker. He became worried by how easy she was to control, but for now, her gullible nature was a strong ally.

The gullible girl started taking rigorous steps and firmly pointed her finger at Emilia. "I'll teach you since you can't do it," she said. "—I'll teach you the quintessence of music!"

"That's going a bit too far," Subaru commented.

"Ye-Yes, Teacher. I got it. Please teach me well…and I'll do my best."

"Excellent!"

Beatrice's declaration, along with a high evaluation of herself, won Emilia over since she was feeling threatened by her tone-deafness.

I want to work as a team at this pace to fix Emilia's tone-deafness.

"In order to develop a good sense of rhythm, I recommend that you make your own rhythm by moving your body while singing. It's fine if you just clap and step, so let's do it along with a melody." Subaru explained while clapping.

"Alright, Lia. Let's clap together. Come on, meown-two, meown-two."

"Meo-Meown-two, meown-two…" Subaru mimicked him to encourage Emilia.

Upon seeing Puck clapping soundlessly with his little paws, she hurriedly followed his lead. "Meown-two…waaa!"

"There now, Betty will start singing, I suppose. She'll discipline you until you become capable of doing it," said Beatrice cruelly, putting the bucket on Emilia's head while clapping.

Now there was a girl with the bucket on her head, a little girl who was giving the girl a sharp look, and a kitten merrily flying around them—an unusual sight to be sure, for someone who wasn't aware of what was going on.

"This is unreal. It's as if I am having a nightmare… If this were an actual dream, I'd check myself into a hospital pronto once I woke up."

Anyway, this lesson should improve Emilia's tone-deafness, at least theoretically. The two girls and kitten seem to be focusing on it, so I'll go solve the other problem.

"Sorry, I have to go hunt a pheasant."

"What do you mean by hunting a pheasant?" Beatrice asked. "I can't understand you at all, I suppose."

"I have to go to the restroom. Don't make me say it, it's embarrassing."

Subaru left the room, leaving Emilia and the others behind, after making Beatrice feel dejected. He thought that Emilia's expression turned anxious as he was leaving the room, but he didn't see it since she was wearing a bucket.

Her Door Crossing activated when he exited the Forbidden Library. It was a form of teleportation that could be connected to any door in the mansion, and the exit this time was set right next to Roswaal's office.

"Nice work, ya damn loli."

She knew Subaru wanted to go to the "bathroom" as an excuse to do something else and thus was being considerate.

After making a snarky comment, Subaru knocked on the door of the office.

"Rosy, it's me. Can I bother you?"

"—Sure. It was about the time I wanted to hear your storryyy," Subaru entered the office room boldly with the permission of the owner of the room. Sitting on an ebony desk in the large office was the freak in a clown's attire, the owner of the mansion—Roswaal L. Mathers.

Roswaal, who was also Subaru's employer, looked at him with his heterochromatic eyes.

"Wellll, it seems you've started something raaather amusing by dragging Lady Emilia into something."

"It isn't like I dragged her into anything, it's like she dragged herself into it, but you know what, I have a lot of things to say, so please just spare me this once."

"You want me to let go of you dragging her into trivial matters when the royal selection is nearing?"

Roswaal had hit him where it hurts yet held expressions of amusement all the while. He seemed to be waiting with open arms to see what kind of counterargument Subaru would make.

He is a master with bad taste, Subaru sighed.

"It may seem like a waste of time, but it's always important to take a break, right? I'm sure we've all sensed that she's been working too hard lately and bottling up her stress."

On the first day Subaru got summoned, there was the insignia theft incident in the royal capital, and that was followed by all the hubbub in the mansion about the witchbeast problem, which was then followed by the incident with Liliana the other day. Emilia was there during all those incidents, but she wasn't able to confront the root of the problems and solve them herself.

It was due to her position not allowing her to approach dangers on her own, but even so, she might have felt powerless. I think the reaction to that is linked to her recent overcrowded schedule.

Emilia doesn't hesitate to push herself for the sake of others. The fact that such a person has relied on me during her short break might be a sign of trust, and if that's the case, then it makes me happy.

“You miiight want to try a bit harder if you want to convince me.”

“She’ll learn abdominal breathing while learning how to sing. It will make her voice clearer, and that will give her an edge when making speeches! If her tone-deafness gets cured, then her confidence will increase, and her expressions will get brighter! And as the beauty of her singing becomes known to the world, Emilia-tan will become both a queen and a diva, putting her in a double bind—!”

“Aah, alright, alright. I understand, I undeeerstand. I’ll allow a bit of a break.”

Roswaal raised a while flag at Subaru’s continuous barrage of convincing sales pitches. It wasn’t because he was struck by his persuasion, but rather due to his own consideration for Emilia’s recent attitude.

“I don’t know how much of it was under your control, but weren’t you the one who gave her the lyulyre in the first place? Hasn’t everything been going according to your plan, then?”

“My status complicates a lot of things. And there’s also Lady Emilia’s personality. It wouuuld be good if she rests if I tell her to rest without any twists. Do you think she would listen to me?”

“I don’t think so. She’ll nod and work even more in places you can’t see.”

It’s probably because of such a dazzling appearance that it makes me want to support her. Regardless of Roswaal’s intentions, he too is in a position to support Emilia. Even if we differ in our feelings for her, I’m sure he can understand my intentions.

“Anywaaay, is Lady Emilia’s singing…that horrible?”

“It’s horrible. She has a beautiful voice, so it is a miracle in a bad way.”

“You must be joking. Aren’t you exaaaggerating things?”

"It's as if someone took a luxurious ingredient that everyone envies and cooked it on a griddle until it turned pitch black."

"That's such a waste."

"Yeah, a waste."

That's the only cruel truth that couldn't be hidden by compassion.

"Alright then" Subaru raised his hand after they nodded to each other in understanding. "I'll return to the Forbidden Library now. I left telling them that I was going to the toilet, so if I take too long, they might suspect that I was going for the big one."

"Well, about that. I think it's alreaaady too late for that since a significant amount of time has passed. Anyway, do help Lady Emilia out."

"Sure. I'll Emilia-tanize Emilia a bit more."

"Oh myyy… Ha-Ha-ha, you are goood with words."

Roswaal laughed out loud at Subaru's way of wording things. Their mutual understanding now renewed, Subaru left the room all proud after getting the permission he'd negotiated for.

"Alright then, I have to return, but…has Beako changed the position of the room?"

For starters, he opened up the door of the room next to the office that had been connected to the Forbidden Library before. Under normal circumstances, the location of the Forbidden Library would have been changed, and what lied beyond that door would be the reference room full of stacks of paper, but… "Oh, lucky I was able to enter just like that."

Luckily, the Door Crossing hadn't been changed, and Subaru was able to enter the Forbidden Library without a hitch.

"I'm back. Sorry, the restroom was packed and had a long queue…"

Subaru entered the Forbidden Library while making a sloppy excuse and looked at Emilia, Beatrice, and Puck, who were standing in the back. They were right where he'd left them…

"Nooo! Not that! Please, not thaaat!" Emilia screamed.

"I can't take this anymore, I suppose! You are taking music lightly! I'm going to make you sing outside with that bucket on your head, I suppose! What you're lacking is the sense of danger!"

"Betty, listen to me," Puck began. "I'll feel sorry for her if you do things she doesn't like. Stop it. She's cute even if she's tone-deaf."

"You spoil her too much, I suppose! That's the reason why this girl is so arrogant!"

Beatrice, who had rolled up her sleeves and gotten fired up, pulled on Emilia's waist with all her might while she still had the bucket on. As the bucket-faced girl clung to the bookshelf, Puck clapped while twirling around them.

"…"

I wonder how much carnage they've caused in the nearly ten minutes I've been gone. I can guess what might have happened, and if it's as I have predicted, then all I can do is sigh.

Anyway… "It's a fun activity that we started to relieve Emilia-tan of her stress, but is it really working? I wonder if I got my priorities wrong when it comes to this."

Subaru, somewhat worried that the promise he had made with Roswaal might go to waste, immediately joined up with the three of them in the middle of their noisy lesson.

6

"Well, Emilia-tan, do you think the training had any effect?" Subaru asked. "Do you think you can do it a bit?"

"Leave it to me," Emilia replied. "Puck and Beatrice trained me rigorously. I am a new person now… Well, it might be a bit much to say I'm a new person, but I have gotten better."

"Woah, the confidence grew and then shrunk!"

Emilia, whose face made it look as if she had broken out of her shell after overcoming the hard training, puffed her chest at Subaru's query. At her feet was the bucket that had been her comrade-in-arms. Its shiny surface looked as if it was watching over its student, who was going to show the results of their training.

"But can practicing like that really cure tone-deafness?"

"If that kind of training was all it took to cure her nightmarish tone-deafness, then it would be easy peasy."

"Hey, you two outsiders! Don't make her lose motivation by saying unnecessary things! We'll see some results soon!" said Subaru, silencing the two of them, who were whispering behind Emilia's back as she did her vocal exercises.

But Emilia, who was concentrating in the middle of the Forbidden Library, didn't notice and signaled Subaru with her eyes. "…Mm, mm, mm! Good! Alright, Subaru, please do it."

"You can leave it to me, Emilia-tan. And don't cry, no matter what happens."

"You there, you're the one who trusts her the least, in fact," Beatrice spat.

On Emilia's signal, Subaru got the lyulyre in position, holding it gently in his hands. He plucked the strings, creating a light rhythm. What ended up being played softly was an excerpt from a piece called the Sword Demon's Love Song.

In all honesty, it's frightening to play it when I compare my skills with Liliana's, but… "It would be disgraceful if I stayed in my comfort zone while Emilia-tan is giving it her all."

If Emilia disgraced herself, then Subaru could share in her disgrace by playing poorly. All he was thinking about was how to cover her is she messed up. Her tone-deafness was that extreme.

And that's why my expectations for her during the moment when she's showing the results of her training is…

"—La, la, la la la."

"…"

Emilia began singing, and from her lips spun a voice that sounded like a bell. —At that moment, Subaru, who had been prepared for a catastrophe, gasped, and Puck and Beatrice widened their eyes in awe.

This was because she'd perfectly grasped how the beginning of the song was supposed to go, and the pitch and flow were also perfect.

"…"

Emilia closed her eyes and moved her shoulders as her heart pleased, surrendering herself to the song. She followed the rhythm just like she'd practiced, perfectly grasping the notes she'd learned, and sang the song just like she'd been taught.

—It was the enchanting singing of an angel that captivated all, sung with a voice that sounded like a silver bell.

Emilia had said that she had never been taught how to sing. In fact, it wouldn't be an exaggeration to say that the singing of the girl who didn't even know the basics had been painful to hear.

However, Emilia, who was honest and pure of heart, practiced earnestly in order to overcome her tone-deafness. She was able to absorb things like a sponge—

"…"

Subaru, who was about to lose himself in the song, hastily concentrated on his own performance. Her singing was magical, and his performance did not match well with it. Even so, in order to not be left behind, he desperately plucked the strings to stay in sync with her.

"—. Thank you very much," Emilia said with a bow.

Subaru eventually got back to his senses after putting his full concentration into his performance. Her song now over, Emilia looked up, waiting anxiously for everyone's evaluation of it. Emilia, who wasn't even aware of her own tone-deafness, probably had no idea what it had sounded like.

"Wa…was it still bad? I think so, since if it could be fixed that easily, none of you would look so troubled…" She took them being unable to move due to sheer shock in a bad way.

Subaru shook his head, banished his surprise, and ran towards Emilia. "No, no, no! Emilia-tan, it was amazing! What in the world happened to that dying bird screech from before?!"

"What do you mean by dying screech?!" said Emilia in surprise, tilting her head as Subaru made various expressions, not expecting such an evaluation "Was it cured at least a little…by any chance?"

"It isn't just a little. It was perfect, perfecto! That's exactly what I wanted to hear!" Subaru casually sung Emilia's praises.

"Yeah, yeah, it was really good, Lia," Puck chimed in, following Subaru's example. "I'd expect nothing less from my most pretty Lia."

Emilia widened her eyes at the words of the kitten that had landed on her shoulder as well as Subaru's. Her face looked like she still couldn't believe it.

"It's as Bubby said, I suppose. It wasn't that bad."

"Beatrice…"

"But don't get too full of yourself. You still need practice. It's still not as good as that songstress, who is only capable of singing."

Beatrice praised Emilia's singing while at the same time praising and dissing Liliana. Upon hearing her words, Emilia put her hand on her mouth, her face making it seem like she'd begun to accept what was happening.

"I'm happy. I'm not tone-deaf anymore. I have overcome tone-deafness.”

“Yeah! It feels like we accomplished something huge!” Subaru exclaimed. “Even if all we did was cure some tone-deafness!”

“Hey now, I’m not tone-deaf anymore. I am ex tone-deaf. You need to say things honestly.” Emilia teared up, creating an emotional mood, and Subaru and Puck nodded at her.

Emilia then let out an intense sigh, prompting Beatrice to sigh at them deeply, as if she’d had enough. “Anyway, Betty thinks we are done here. She’s going to have to ask you to leave the Forbidden Library, I suppose.”

“Ooh, sorry about that,” Subaru said. “But we couldn’t have done it without you, you know. Thanks for the help.”

“Betty did it for Bubby, albeit unwillingly, I suppose. Besides, Betty thinks that some parts of the song still need refinement. The fun-fun-fun-fuuun-fun part at the beginning, specifically.”

Beatrice, who was eager to chase them out of the Forbidden Library, seemed to leave them a parting give in the form of pointing out an issue with Emilia’s song. It was at the moment she started humming that the Forbidden Library’s air froze.

Subaru, Emilia, and Puck turned towards her with stiffened expressions.

“…Wh-What is this about? Why are you making those faces?”

“Beako? What was that? Is it the beginning of the Sword Demon’s Love Song by any chance?”

“What else does it sound like? That’s exactly what it is,” said Beatrice unapologetically, without a shred of doubt.

Subaru understood it after looking at her attitude while she puffed her thin chest. Then he looked behind him at Emilia and said, “Emilia-tan.”

“Yes, you don’t need to say a thing, Subaru. I know what you mean," Emilia replied, nodding at Subaru's call.

Their hearts had become one at that moment. Emilia gently lifted something up from the floor in silence, then walked towards Beatrice.

"What is that supposed to be?" she asked Emilia, who was approaching her.

However, it wasn't Emilia, but Subaru, who answered. "Isn't it obvious—you are going to be the second bucket-style heroine as of this moment," Subaru said emphatically, pointing to the bucket in Emilia's hand.

—The little girl, who had arrogantly said something about the quintessence of music, was just as tone-deaf as the angel.

"So, you are also unconsciously tone-deaf! What the hell is up with this mansion! And why do you guys have such pretty voices for tone-deaf people? It totally ruins everything! What kind of evil deeds did you do in your past lives?!"

"How on earth could Betty be tone-deaf? That's a ridiculous accusation! That's a tremendously absurd accusation, in fact! You're just trying to make Betty go through hell as payback because you're into that girl, I suppose!"

"Beatrice, it's alright. I was able to get better properly because of Mr. Bucket. You'll get better if you wear it and sing. Go ahead, put it on. Put…oh, it might be cute!"

"Shaaa, I suppose! Gaaaah, I suppose! Not in a million years, in fact!"

The three of them ran around in a flurry, having a little fight over whether she was going to wear the bucket or not. Puck washed his face with a dampened paw, laughing and floating above them.

"Hmmm, the quintessence of music…we won't be able to enjoy the sound of it anytime soon, will we?" Puck said snobbishly, summing up the day that had begun with a lyulyre.

Ram is Order

1

—They were deep within a forest.

They could not see well, and the pungent odor coming from the grass beneath their feet made it difficult to breathe.

The darkness that made it impossible to see more than a few meters ahead of them was caused by the branches above their heads blocking the sunlight. Subaru stepped on the ground and carefully fumbled his way through the foliage.

Even the passing of time seemed vague once you got lost in the darkness. Although he had gotten prepared at dawn and entered the forest early in the morning, it seemed as if the sun had already set, as he was covered in a veil of darkness.

“Well, you don’t need to worry about that now that I’m here.”

An increase in anxiety led to an increase in fatigue. But every time Subaru felt weak, a carefree voice scolded it away. He smiled wryly at the carefree voice’s words, then looked up at the person above him. “Dad, you always think about getting off from work on time. Don’t forget to shoot a flare for me before you get exhausted and head straight home.”

“Hey now, do I seem like a klutz who would abandon such an important duty? Lia told me to take good care of you. So I’ll do my besttt.”

The one who responded to Subaru with a chuckle was a cat spirit—Puck.

While touching his beard in a stately manner, he said, “But like,” he paused. “This place is pretty out there.”

“Yeah, you’re right. But we don’t need to start worrying just yet.”

“Hahaaa, you’re acting tough. You are a boy, after all.”

Subaru stuck out his tongue awkwardly when Puck saw through his tough guy act. Even if Puck was with him, he couldn’t forget how uneasy walking through the dark forest made him.

The reason why he was in such a situation was because—

“Curse you Ram… I’ll haunt you if I die because of this.”

Subaru clicked his tongue and said the name of the companion that had gotten separated from them—the last member of the peculiar trio that had entered the forest.

It was an urgent task for Subaru now to meet up with the arrogant and pompous pink-haired girl—Ram.

“It’s a superstition that dead souls turn into hollows, but hollows typically stay in the places they died in.”

“Is that something like location-bound ghosts?”

“It’d be funny if you turn into a hollow after getting lost in the forest and wander around it for eternity.”

“That would really suck!”

Thanks to the exchange of joking remarks and banter, he felt a little less uneasy. Subaru, feeling grateful for the consideration of the spirit floating next to him, wiped the sweat off his forehead and looked ahead.

He felt like he was saved by the fact that he wasn’t alone in the dark forest brimming with nothing but silence.

That was why he thought he needed to find the girl who was all alone in the forest as soon as possible.

2

It all started a day or so ago, going back to the afternoon before Subaru and gang entered the forest.

“Haa, it sure is peaceful…”

Subaru felt at home leaning his upper body sloppily against the dining table. He was dressed in a black servant’s uniform that hardly suited him. Though his initial feeling that he was dressing up as something he was not had somewhat faded away since he felt like he was a bit of a better fit now.

At least, that was what he thought when he assessed himself in the mirror every morning.

“You seem like you are in a reaaally good mood, Subaru. Did something good happen?”

Emilia, who had braided her hair, tilted her head next to Subaru. Her beautiful silver hair was made into a new hairstyle every day, which entertained him with a different kind of loveliness each day.

“If we were to talk about something nice, it would be that you are lovely as always, Emilia-tan. You are like a welcome rain that always fills me with newfound joy.”

“Am I, really that gloomy?”

“How on earth did you come to the conclusion that it was something like a rainy season from this conversation?!”

Pickup lines didn’t have any effect on Emilia, who was an airhead. Although, it was because she was like that that he could flirt with her like that.

“I think I’m getting addicted to not being taken seriously… No, I do want to be taken seriously, it’s just that a man’s heart is complicated and hard to understand…!”

“There you go again, worrying about things alone. Boys are difficult to understand… Oh, this tea tastes nice.” Ignoring Subaru, who was in agony over his unresolved feelings, Emilia gently brought the cup to her mouth and smiled after taking a sip.

The afternoon tea party at Roswaal Manor—it had become a routine to gather in the dining room in the afternoon and rest their bodies and souls. It was at the time of day when the servants would take a break from their work and Emilia would take a break from her studies. Those who had some time off would naturally head towards the dining room and take a little break together. It was a routine that had taken root sometime after Subaru had come to the mansion.

Of course, people would only do it when they had time for it, so it was rare for everyone in the mansion to gather at the same time. The regulars were Subaru, who would finish his work early in order to meet Emilia, and Emilia, who routinely took a break around this time.

It was difficult for everyone to attend the tea party, and today was no exception.

“Rem and Rosy are busy, so it can’t be helped, but Beako needs to socialize more.”

Subaru frowned at the thought of the young girl who never showed up even though she didn’t have anything to do.

Emilia put her hand on her mouth and laughed a little at his sullen face. “You two get along really well, and you always have her in your thoughts.”

“I think ‘get along well’ is a bit of a misnomer. It’s true that she is someone that I think about, but it needs to be worded differently… it’s like that feeling you get when dried shredded squid gets stuck in your teeth. Know what I mean?”

Emilia became further amused at Subaru’s evaluation that would have caused an argument if Beatrice had heard it, making him give a languid wry smile.

It happened when the two of them were enjoying the tea party together…

“—Seems like you are having a lot of fun.”

The voice that suddenly interrupted them in the dining room sounded somewhat cold and stiff. It had come from the girl standing at the entrance to the dining room after having opened both doors. She glanced at Subaru's overly relaxed face with indifference, then said:

"While Ram was busy making tea cakes, you indulged in your lewd activity… Barusu, it seems like you've become someone important."

"I was just having a little chat with Emilia-tan and that makes me lewd? Sis, you were the one who said you would be responsible for making the tea cakes, so doesn't that make me not guilty?"

"Ram didn't like the fact that you were taking things easy while she was working."

"You're just a tyrant…!"

Subaru goggled at the unreasonableness, and the girl—Ram—sneered, her eyes lacking even the slightest hint of charm. "Ram is just adding her personal bias to your job performance evaluation, even though she normally looks at things impartially."

"If that's true, then don't add any unnecessary perspectives to it. Evaluate me as the person I am."

"If Ram removes her personal bias from the current evaluation, then you'd have to start eating your tea cakes from the floor, Barusu."

"Why is it that my rating goes down when you remove your bias?!"

Ram's eyes seemed serious, and, unable to hide his dread, Subaru became outraged by it. Ignoring his complaints, she placed the plate with pastries on it on the table. As she did so, Subaru poured tea into the empty cups and prepared her portion in front of the chair opposite to his. Emilia burst into laughter at the two who had finished setting everything up for the tea party.

"What happened, Emilia-tan? You're making such a cute face."

"It's because you two are in sync even though you're being spiteful. It was a little amusing looking at you guys."

"Disgusting."

“It hurts, so at least sugarcoat it!” Subaru shouted at the girl, who seemed like she didn’t like it from the bottom of her heart, holding his chest. “But Emilia-tan made a good point too. Since the person who works with me the most is you, Sis. We split the chores up between us and do them every day, so it’s only natural that we’d be in sync a little, right?”

“You pervert.”

“Can you please reply after understanding the sentence properly?!”

She’s unapproachable as usual. I wanna praise myself for not getting disheartened.

Anyway, Subaru’s position at Roswaal Manor was something like this:

Ignored by Emilia, snapped at by Beatrice, treated with scorn by Ram, and Rem was the only one who was extremely attached to him.

I think I’m in a really blessed situation.

“But it’s pretty cool to see pastries you made, Ram. I’ve seen Rem’s a lot, but I had no idea you were capable of making anything other than steamed potatoes, Sis.”

“You can talk gibberish when you are asleep, Barusu. Ram has told you before—Ram’s specialty is steamed potatoes. She doesn’t even know how to make pastries.”

“What were you making your younger sister who’s so busy she can’t even join the tea party do?” Subaru blurted out after he was indirectly told that she had gotten her sister to do it.

He recalled when Rem came to inform him of her not being able to join the tea party with a disappointed face. The taste of the pastry in his mouth was both pitiful and sweet.

“But seriously, this mansion would be fucked without Rem’s cooking. I’m not going to be haughty like you, Sis, since I know I’m in no position to criticize someone else’s cooking skills.”

Since I was without a doubt a parasite in my previous world. I was a supernova of the parasite society who skipped school, didn't help with chores, and was unusually good at sewing and bedmaking.

Due to having such a background, Subaru wanted to change the topic and looked at Emilia.

Then Emilia, who was chewing on a pastry, covered her mouth and said, "Me? Ah-ha, Subaru, you might think that I'm someone who can't cook, but I'm actually pretty good at it. I used to live alone… Well, Puck was with me too, but I lived alone for a pretty long time. A lot of things are a doddle for me."

"You don't hear people say 'things are a doddle' in this day and age… And how should I put this… What you're saying makes sense, but it just doesn't seem plausible knowing you, Emilia-tan."

That was all due to Emilia actually being a klutz even though she tried to give off the image of a capable woman. After spending weeks with her in the mansion, his original impression of her changed drastically. His viewing of her as being a genius that was strong in the beginning soon faded away due to occasionally seeing her goofy and childish side in their daily life. But even so, her honest, kind, and straightforward personality hadn't changed, and he could definitely say it was one of her good qualities.

Leaving that aside, it's also true that she has the aura of a 'Beauty that was somewhat of a klutz'. Like the recent revelation of her being tone deaf, I feel like there are many more hidden secrets lying around.

Emilia puffed her cheeks in disapproval at Subaru's worried gaze. "Mmmm, you look like you don't trust me. Hmph, alright. If you are doubting me so much, then I'll make you eat my cooking next time. You'll be reaaally surprised, so be prepared."

"Huh? I wasn't aiming for it, but got a home-cooked meal event? Am I going to die?"

One of Subaru's bad habits was to start expecting the worst if something good happened to him. In fact, ever since he got summoned this world, it couldn't be denied that good events would often get cancelled out by bad events. Most of the time, the bad event preceded the good event, so he became anxious whenever a good one happened first.

"Subaru, are you okay? You look troubled. Does your tummy hurt?"

"I-I'm fine. And even if my stomach burns, I'll finish the food you cook no matter what. Trust me."

"Can you at least try to have a little faith in me?!"

Subaru made Emilia sulk with his good-for-nothing imagination. Ram would usually go on the offensive here—but there was no sign of that no matter how much he waited.

"Hm? Miss Ram? Did something happen?"

"…"

He looked back, feeling let down, and saw Ram staring down at the tea. She took a sip, wetting her lips with it as if to confirm something, and then looked at Subaru.

That look sent chills down his spine. The sharpness of her ever-sharp gaze was stronger this time.

"Hey, Miss Ram, did something unpleasant happen…?"

"Barusu, which tea shelf did you pull this tea from?"

"Tea? Oh, you mean the tea leaves! Oh, you know, the ones hidden deep inside the tea shelf. It seemed like a really expensive one, so I snuck it out…hot hot hot hot hot?!"

"Eek! Subaru?!"

After Subaru reported the results of his treasure hunt, his treasure got poured all over him. As he rolled around the floor due to having hot tea poured all over his head, Emilia hurriedly emptied the contents of a water jug on him. It was a disastrous scene where Subaru was lying on the floor, soaking wet with tea and water.

Emilia glared at Ram for her sudden outburst of violence. “What a horrible thing to do, Ram! Subaru’s clothes and the floor are all dirty now!”

“Don’t just worry about things getting dirty, worry about my burns too!”

But Ram didn’t react to Emilia’s scolding that had missed the point nor Subaru’s screams. Emilia and Subaru looked at each other at that.

“Hey, Miss Ram, are you going mad? What are you…?”

“How dare…”

“Ram?”

“How dare you, Barusu.” Ram couldn’t stifle the anger and agitation in her trembling voice.

So, Subaru couldn’t say, “You’re the one at fault here.” back at her. He couldn’t do anything but look at the equally confused Emilia.

3

Apparently, the situation didn’t seem to just end with being punished for using the hidden tea without permission. The tea was treasured—he was right about perceiving it as such—but the reason it was treasured wasn’t due to its taste, quality, or price, it was due to its efficacy.

“That tea has the ability to boost mana circulation in the body. It’s effective on Ram’s old scar.”

“By old scar you mean…”

“The horn.”

“Oh, aah…I see. It’s that scar…”

Subaru was the one who got shaken by Ram’s bold answer. Ram and Rem were born as Oni’s, which was a demi-human race. Their outward appearance was the same as a human's apart from one thing, which was that a white horn grew from their forehead when they got excited. But Ram was someone who had lost her horn and called herself hornless. Subaru hadn't heard how she had lost her horn, but he knew it was a rather sensitive topic. That was why he felt nothing but guilt after hearing that the tea he had used without permission had medicinal properties that helped with her old scar.

"Where did you get that tea from? It's completely my fault this time. I'll pay you whenever I get the money, so…"

"Unfortunately, the tea that has an effect on Ram's scar isn't easily available. That's a special product that Ram has made by blending medicinal ingredients together and adjusting the taste to her liking."

"Ugh, seriously? By the way…how bad would you feel without it?"

"Not bad at all, Ram would just have to endure sleepless nights for the foreseeable future."

"I'm really sorryyy?!"

It was more important than Subaru had thought, so he couldn't help but prostrate himself and apologize. He'd made a grave mistake without thinking about it—it was as if he had done something that was a microcosm of human history. That blunder would be extremely hard to fix.

"So, where can the ingredients for that special blend be found?" asked Subaru, sitting upright on the floor, since he couldn't not take responsibility.

Ram gave a faint smile while crossing her arms and looking down at Subaru. That smile gave him chills for some reason. "I see, so you do intend on helping Ram with collecting the ingredients, right?"

"Yeah, since it's my fault… But Sis, why do you have a scary look in your eyes?"

"Rest assured, it'll be easy. All of them can be hunted in the vicinity of the mansion."

Subaru wanted it to be just his imagination that he had heard ‘hunted’ instead of ‘collected’ being used for the ingredients.

In the end, it was decided that they would leave the next day to gather the ingredients for the special tea.

It was a hasty decision, but the burden on Ram’s body was accumulating with each passing day. That’s why it was better to be hasty. Fortunately, the ingredients for the tea could be found in the mountain forest near the mansion, so it was a daylong hike for Subaru.

“It would have been the best if Rem could go with you, but…”

“Oh well. You aren’t like Ram, you know. The mansion wouldn’t be able to function if you left for a day. It’s what they call being the right man for the job. I’m the right man, but I’m not sure if going to the mountain is the right job for me.”

It was so early in the morning that dawn had yet to arrive, and four figures had gathered at the entrance hall of the mansion. Subaru and Ram, who were about to depart to the mountain, and Emilia and Rem, who were seeing them off.

As mentioned earlier, Emilia and Rem were unable to accompany them due to the circumstances in the mansion. For that reason, Rem couldn’t stop worrying since last night, and even now, she was giving instructions to Ram.

“Sister, Sister. Please take care of Subaru in the mountains. And Subaru, don’t carelessly touch any suspicious-looking leaves there, you will get rashes. Be careful not to step on the moss on the rocks, it’s going to make you slip. And a spell to stop you from crying if you fall…”

“I’ll endure it! I won’t cry even if I fall! I’m not that much of a troublemaker!”

“Alright, alright, I get it, Rem. Ram needs to spit on Barusu’s knee if he cries, right?”

"Don't make it sound so dirty!"

Rem was filled with worry and had become overprotective, and even Ram's reply to her was perfunctory in the later half.

Emilia was next to them listening to their conversation and hiding her yawn with her hand. "I think it'll be fine since Ram is with you, but don't push yourself too hard. You probably won't encounter witchbeasts since there is a barrier, but watch out for the weather and the insects. It might swell up if you get stung."

"I'll let you gently stroke the bump, so it's alright. And though he'll be a great help, is it really ok to lend Puck to us?" asked Subaru, the pendant that Emilia usually wore around his neck.

The crystal stone giving off a green glow was where her contracted spirit—Puck—resided. It was a form of insurance for the two who were going to go into the mountains that Emilia had given to Subaru out of worry.

"I made a request last night, so it's fine. And even if Puck stays here, he'll just interrupt my studies as usual. So it's far more reassuring if he stays by your side."

"Well, well if that's the case, then I'll take you up on that and borrow your pet cat."

Subaru smiled wryly and flicked the pendant with his finger.

The spirit sleeping in there is supposed to come out whenever he wakes up. I'll rely on his powers on the mountain.

"I don't think anything bad will happen, but if something does happen, Puck will let me know. I'll immediately know where you are when he does, and Rem will definitely go help you, so don't worry."

"You know, it makes people feel guilty when they have to call for rescue after getting lost in the mountains, so I'll be careful."

Subaru thanked Emilia's thoughtfulness and tapped on the ground with the toe of his well-worn sneakers. He was dressed in a jersey, taking into account that he would be hiking in the mountains. If he threw in a bag to put the ingredients he collected into, the Backpacker Subaru would be complete.

“Barusu, are you ready? We’ll leave soon.”

“Yeah, yeah. As you wish, Sis.” Subaru responded to Ram, who spoke to him in her usual tone, then turned to the still-sleepy Emilia. “Alright. I’ll be going then. Rem, I hate troubling you like this, but please take care of everything today.”

“It’s alright. Your lunch is in the bag, so please eat it with my sister on the way there.”

“As a matter of fact, the lunch I made is in there too” Emilia added. “I bet you can guess which one it is.”

Subaru and Ram set off for the mountains in the morning mist, seen off by Emilia, who was in a slightly panicked mood, and Rem, who had a worried look on her face until the very end.

4

“And about the ingredients for the tea…what exactly do you need?” Subaru asked, looking at Ram’s small back after they entered the mountain road instead of the city road. They had left the mansion and veered away from the path leading to Earlham Village that they were used to taking.

“There are four ingredients that we’ll need. First, the Mileajia Flower. It’s a rare flower, but it’s in the flower garden where you flirted with Lady Emilia, Barusu.”

“Wh-Wh-Wha-why do you know about that?!”

“We can get it later since we know where it is. The second one is inside the forest and called the Baloe Mushroom, which only grows on the roots of a specific tree. You dry it and grind it into powder. It’s poisonous by the way.”

“It’s poisonous?! Is it safe to consume?!”

“It’s okay, they’ll make you immune instead. And the third one is hard to get: “the seed of a red fruit that only grows only at the top of a Bork Sun Tree.”

“Ooh, finally an ingredient that really seems hard to get.”

“A Bork Sun Tree is a really tall tree. Its fruit, apart from the seeds, is extremely poisonous, so much so that your fingers will melt if you touch them with your bare hands. Be mindful of that.”

“It’s poison again! Are you the type that dies if you don’t ingest poisonous substances?!”

“There’s only a fine line between poison and medicine, and too much of a medicinal effect can turn into poison. Ram forgot to tell you, but meleajia’s aren’t poisonous, although they are insectivorous.”

“My beautiful memories of my time with Emilia-tan are being defiled by insectivorous flowers!”

Speaking of which, it sends shivers down my spine when I think of the fact that the tea I thought tasted good was made up of 75% that. It might have a nice effect on her horn scar, but I wonder if it has any adverse effects on a normal body.

“Am I gonna be okay after drinking this?”

“That’s what you will be using your entire day to prove, Barusu.”

“Gaah! I was being used as a test subject without realizing it!”

“Ram is joking. The effect appears right after you drink it. You would have died during the night if it was something harmful.”

“That isn’t a joke! Is it really safe?!”

He opened his mouth and attempted to cough up the tea he drank yesterday, but it had already been absorbed into his system. Subaru prayed that nothing bad would happen and then shifted his attention to the topic of ingredients. “So, what’s the last one? I’m getting a bad feeling about it already.”

"The last one is…well. Ram will keep it a secret until it is found. Consider it your punishment."

"Can there be a greater punishment than drinking poison?"

"You drank it willingly, and you technically poisoned Lady Emilia as well."

His sarcasm having been replied to with sarcasm, Subaru became quiet and didn't say a word. Ram, who had been listing the names of poisonous things till now, was keeping the fourth ingredient under wraps.

The last ingredient could either be something totally normal or a horrifying substance so disgusting no one even wants to say its name. If these are the only two options, I don't even wanna know which of the two it is, I just hope with all my heart that it is the first one.

"But you know, going into the woods reminds me of the time we went looking for Rem."

"The time when you got bitten by dogs and were beautifully saved by Master Roswaal, right?"

"You aren't wrong about it being a miserable and beautiful memory, but we won't encounter witchbeasts this time, right? All I have in the gear department is my item bag and Meteor Knife."

"Meteor Knife" was the name that Subaru gave to the knife he used. Many vegetables had fallen prey to Meteor Knife, but it had never been useful as a weapon. It would be better to shamelessly flee rather than fight a witchbeast with it.

"Don't worry, nobody is counting on you to fight, Barusu. Ram doesn't want to be scolded by Rem later…Why should Ram get scolded?"

"No, it's that, I'm sorry. Oh, that's it! Roswaal annihilated all the Wolgarms in the forest, right? So why do we need to worry about witchbeasts?"

“Wolgarms aren’t the only witchbeasts in the forest. Rather, now that there’s a vacancy, shouldn’t other witchbeasts be fighting over it now? There shouldn’t be any witchbeasts more dangerous than a Wolgarm, but if you do encounter one, all that’ll be left of you are your bones, Barusu.”

“I know that without being told. I don’t want to have anything to do with witchbeasts ever again. Ah well, I don’t think I’ll ever encounter them again as long as I do my best to lead a quiet and decent life.”

“Ram wonders why, but she feels like your wish won’t come true, Barusu.”

“Why though?”

I wonder why the sound of ‘woman’s intuition’ is so compelling even though it’s just a hunch.

Subaru, feeling that things weren’t adding up, tilted his head at the doubt that came into his mind. “I was wondering, but what’s the difference between witchbeasts and normal animals?”

“—They are nothing alike.”

It wasn’t Ram who answered his question. The familiar voice had come from the glowing pendant on Subaru’s chest—from the glintstone from which light particles were overflowing, which then took on the form of a cat, materializing a spirit into the world.

The palm-sized kitten floated in front of Subaru’s eyes and spoke while giving his body a good stretch. “The difference between animals and witchbeasts when it comes to appearance is whether they have a horn or not. But there are animals with horns, so that’s not the only indicator, but witchbeasts always have a horn, you see. It’s better to keep that in mind.”

“Thank you for the explanation. And it seems like you woke up earlier than usual.”

“Lia told me to take good care of you. I can stay with you longer if I stay in my low energy mode. Leave the livening up so it doesn’t get scary to me.”

“That definitely isn’t the job Emilia-tan entrusted you with.”

Puck made a random statement with his chest puffed. The cat then sat on Subaru’s shoulder and poked his cheeks with his paw while swinging his tail.

“Great Spirit, Ram is sorry you had to accompany us all this way.”

“Hmm, it’s okayy. Lia probably wants to relax while her parent isn’t keeping an eye on her.”

“What are you, a caring gentleman? And it’s pretty unusual that even Ram uses formal language with Puck.”

“I don’t dislike such honesty and straightforwardness.”

A straightforward Ram, a forgiving Puck, and Subaru smiling wryly at that.

If I calm down and think about it, this is a really rare trio. A combination that has never occurred in the mansion.

“I hope we don’t turn into the foolish trio. Emilia-tan told you about today’s objective, right? I’m counting on you.”

“Yeah, rest assured. If it starts raining, don’t hesitate to use me as an umbrella.”

“That’s a really limited usage, and I’m going to get soaked considering your size.” Subaru sighed after imagining putting a wet cat on his head. “Hey Ram, I’m really starting to see a lot of animal tracks on this path, do you have an idea where the ingredients we are looking for are?”

“It’s a stupid question. How many times do you think Ram has entered the mountain to collect the ingredients?”

“I was worried that Rem did this considering the daily chores. By the way, do you have the location on the map so that even I can understand…”

“Let’s start by drawing a map of your own in your mind.”

“So, you mean I need to experience things first. Alright Boss.”

One of the ingredients was a secret, and on top of that, he was dependent on Ram’s memory for finding them all. He was obviously useless when it came to fighting, but he was also useless when it came to knowledge.

—Why was I even brought here? he wondered. “For carrying things and as comic relief…?”

“Oh, I won’t lose when it comes to livening things up. Ha-Ha, let’s see who’s better,” said Puck in a carefree tone as Subaru thought about his role, leaving aside who was responsible for the current situation.

That voice sounded too carefree, so he crushed Puck by tilting his head.

“Meoww.”

“Oh, it feels good. Take this, and that.”

“Meow, meow, meow.”

Although he wasn’t used to hiking, Subaru liked the sensation of the fur against his cheek, so he continued to hike up the mountain he wasn’t used to hiking while hearing Puck’s squeals.

“—Haaa.” Ram sighed in dismay at the sight of the two of them who lacked seriousness.

5

After that, the adventure of the trio was repeatedly beset by various problems. Subaru inadvertently touched a plant that caused rashes when touched, slipped on mossy rocks, carelessly cut his hand with

Meteor Knife while collecting the mushroom they were looking for, and lost his grip climbing the Bork Sun Tree and fell down. He was almost in tears after overcoming all of the problems that hounded him from all sides. If it weren't for Rem's spell, he might have broken down in tears by now due to the pain and feeling pathetic.

"How amazing of Rem to have given me advice about things that might happen…"

"Ram can't stop being disappointed that you made all of Rem's worries come true. How can you so precisely ignore the things she told you to watch out for?"

"Stop, don't make shit up like that! It's not like I just ignored her advice, I did my best, but it just wasn't good enough! Don't just judge the result, judge the effort too!"

"Results are everything."

"Yeah, I'm sorry."

Subaru, who was completely drenched, was getting first aid done on his wounds by Puck. He had no idea Puck could use healing magic, so it was surprising to him.

"I was the one who taught Lia spirit magic, you know? Well, I don't have much of an aptitude for healing magic, so I can't treat grave wounds like Betty, but I can do enough to lessen someone's pain."

"My bad. You have a time limit, yet I made you use your MP."

"It's fine. You're the one who's going to be in trouble if I disappear anyway."

"I have a feeling that you don't intend on pushing yourself in order to stay."

The scrapes on his knees and elbows now healed, Subaru gave a grateful high-five to the furball dancing in the air. Ram glanced at them while sitting next to a small stream that was too slow to be called a torrent. They couldn't drink from it without treating it first, but it was a perfect place to kick back and relax.

It was now a little after noon, and Ram suggested that they should have lunch there because of the location and the fact that she was hungry. Subaru had followed after her and had just so happened to get treated for his wounds.

“We’ve had a tough time until now, but at least we were able to grab some of the ingredients. We somehow got the mushroom and the seeds, and we know where the flowers are. It’s easier than I thought.”

“Ram told you it wouldn’t be dangerous. And Barusu, you are the one who’s been making things difficult today.”

“Argh, I can’t deny that…!”

Due to his continuous blunders so far, he had no room to refute Ram’s criticisms. He soaked and washed his wounded right hand in the flowing water and dusted his tracksuit off, barely returning it to its initial state. He washed Meteor Knife, which he had used for collecting mushrooms, in the river as well, and after resting for a bit —

“Since we are here, we need to note down this river properly.”

While looking at the flow of the river, Subaru took out a piece of thick paper and a crayon-like tool from his bag. The crayon was only available in one color, but it could produce exquisite drawings. He didn’t forget to add annotations here and there in Japanese.

“You have been doing that since we entered the mountain. What kind of game is it?’

Subaru argued with Ram as she peeked at what was in his hand while rummaging through the lunchbox. He shoved the picture he had just drawn at Ram’s face. “Look, I’m mapping. People make maps when they go through unexplored lands. You won’t have to deal with any problems later if you know where things are, right?”

“That’s quite skilled of you. But would that map ever be used? Even if the ingredients for the tea run out, Ram would come here to collect them. Rem could do it too if Ram tells her where they are."

Ram started questioning the purpose of the map, and Subaru rolled the map up with a wry smile. She's right. It might be unnecessary for her since she's used to collecting the ingredients, but…

"It's just a hypothesis I came up with, but…"

"Hypothesis?"

"The tea runs out and it becomes so hard on you that you become bedridden. And Rem is away from the mansion taking care of some work when you need her. Roswaal is somewhere else too. You don't have anyone that you can rely on! If something like that happens, then even I can collect the ingredients if I have this."

It's something that can only be used in the case of an extreme emergency, but…

"It would really put me at ease if we have this map around just in case something like that happens."

It's all good if it never gets used, but in the case it does come in handy, it'll all be thanks to my decision to make this map. People make rescue tools with the thought that it would be better if they never have to get used. Such a contradiction exists for all of them.

"…" Ram quieted down for a moment at Subaru's reply, a serious look on her face. It seemed like she was slightly surprised, and he scratched his head at her rare reaction.

The thing he had just said might be something embarrassing depending on how it was received.

"We-Well, anyway, if we have this then I feel like I would be able to make it back alive in case I get lost! Nothing is more important than staying alive, so it'll be worth it to take precautions."

Subaru started talking fast in order to hide his embarrassment and put the rolled-up map into his hip pocket.

It needs to be written down properly, including the things I've written in Japanese, once I return to the mansion. It’s my first time mapping, but I think I did a good job if I do say so myself.

The fact that he was simply quite skilled at things was a strength that Natsuki Subaru never knew he had.

“Now, let’s eat. If we don’t hurry up, my stomach is gonna shrivel up,” Subaru said with a clap of his hands, resetting the mood.

“—You’re right. Yes, let’s do that,” Ram replied, agreeing with Subaru’s suggestion. She unwrapped the lunch and paused for a moment in thoughtful silence. “Since your consideration reached Ram’s heart for a change, let her reward you for that.”

“Huh, what do you mean by that? It’s making me feel restless, and frankly, it’s only giving me a bad feeling, so I’m gonna have to decline.”

“Oh, it seems like Ram’s old horn scar is starting to ache. Ram feels like she might have a fever.”

“Don’t take my conscience hostage! Alright! Come at me! I’ll take whatever you dish out!”

“It isn’t something to make such a fuss about. Ram just thought of giving you the biggest one.”

Ram showed the reserved Subaru the rice ball in her left hand. It was around the size of a child’s fist, making him feel relieved once he saw it.

“Man, you surprised me there. I was scared of what it was going to be. That’s an acceptable size, or rather, a normal size.”

“Ram supposes so. Well then, take it.”

And then, as Subaru was feeling relieved, Ram presented the real one she had been hiding in her right hand. Its size, which seemed to be around the size of a child’s head, put him at a loss for words.

“By the way, the shape isn’t that great, so it was definitely made by Lady Emilia.”

“I kind of knew that! Damn it, what’s with that ‘As a matter of fact, the lunch I made is in there too’ when you don’t even intend on hiding it! You had zero intention of hiding it!”

I figured she made this next to Rem, but I wonder if that was actually the case. If this was the result of her making it while standing next to her, then the thought of her showing off her cooking skills to me someday scares the living daylights out of me.

Subaru looked at Puck like he was his last ray of hope, but the spirit shook his head at his gaze. “Lia is cute. I think everything can be forgiven because of that.”

“Damn it, I understand that feeling!”

Subaru decided to confront it head-on after seeing Puck look at him with a distant, resigned look in his eyes. The taste of a simple rice ball will be the same regardless of who makes it.

Just to be sure, he tasted Rem’s rice ball first, taking in all of her considerate feelings, and then challenged Emilia’s.

The mass on his lap was overwhelming. So much so that Subaru’s perception of what a rice ball was supposed to look like was turned on its head.

He gulped and put his hand on the wrapping in order to take a look at it—

“There’s another wrapper beneath this one?”

He unwrapped the paper after making up his mind, but what he found was another sheet of wrapping paper beneath it. It was probably because she made it too big and couldn’t keep it all together with only one sheet. So as a countermeasure, she wrapped several sheets around it and succeeded in holding it all together.

It’s like sealing an extremely powerful demon behind layer upon layer of barriers.

“No, what kind of thing is this?”

Subaru was dumbfounded by his own thoughts, then unwrapped it and checked what was inside. Feeling impatient because the actual rice ball wasn’t showing up, he unwrapped the sheets one after another—

“““—Ah.””“ Three voices overlapped, including Ram and Puck’s, who were watching with bated breath.

The moment Subaru tried to peel off the stuck wrapper, the rice ball started losing its balance on his lap, then fell off and started rolling away. That round-yet-not-round object bounced on the ground and rolled off just like that.

“Wait, wait, wait!”

Subaru hastily got to his feet and chased after the rolling rice ball. The situation was just like the famous old tale, The Rolling Rice Ball. It was almost a perfect reenactment. Before the rice ball could enter the slope and accelerate, Subaru caught the wrapper with a fingertip. He was relieved by that, but in the next moment—

“Oh?”

His feet suddenly fell out beneath him, and he was flung into the air. He looked down and saw that the slope went down at a sharp angle. The two words “slip” and “fall” came to mind.

Subaru was impressed and growled at the accurate reenactment of the folk tale. Of course, in a bad way.

“Barusu—!”

“Dababababababababa—!”

While hearing Ram’s panicked voice, Subaru rolled headfirst down the steep slope while holding the rice ball to his chest. While thinking that the only lucky thing was that the ground was soft thanks to the grass growing on it—

6

—And finally, the story has returned to the beginning where Subaru and Puck were travelling together.

“I thought I was going to die when I fell and started rolling…”

“I thought the same. But I’m glad you didn’t die. And that we were able to contact the pink-haired girl.”

“It helped out a lot since you can fly…it’s alright if you lift me up and fly, you know?”

“I think it would just make your hair fall out.”

“Why would you fly while holding my hair?! There are other ways to do it!”

While having such a conversation, Puck and Subaru were aiming to meet up with Ram. Puck had immediately flown down after Subaru tumbled down the slope to check whether he was dead or alive. Subaru had caught him there and had him use lesser spirits to communicate back and forth with Ram about the rendezvous point. Ram insisted that she could just make her way down the slope, but Subaru, who had done enough rolling that day, dismissed the idea by saying it was too dangerous.

“We’ll be able to meet up if we walk along the slope. I can’t deliberately make her do something dangerous.”

“I told her something like that through gestures. Do you want to hear the reply?”

“Hah!” Subaru exclaimed, imitating Ram’s sneering.

“Woah, you’re good,” Puck remarked, as if impressed. “By the way.” The kitten tilted his head at Subaru, who was cringing. “Were you able to eat the rice ball that Lia made?”

“Yeah, the thing inside the wrapping was safe. Apart from the impact of how it looked, it tasted just fine. The salty taste felt special too when I thought about how it was squeezed by Emilia-tan’s hands…”

“Maybe I should join in next time when they make them again. Are you confident that you’ll get mine right?”

“The punchline would be that the rice ball with a lot of fur in it would be yours, huh?”

Their pointless conversation continued, but that was just something Puck did so that Subaru wouldn't get worried. They had been walking along the slope for two hours, separated from Ram—after they had told her where to go—but they kept going deeper into the forest where it enveloped them in an even deeper darkness.

I might have made the wrong decision. Such a bad thought gave rise to a cycle of negative thoughts.

"—Subaru, stop." Just as Subaru let out a long sigh of exhaustion, Puck pulled on his ear from his shoulder.

Subaru held his breath at that sensation and became tense. Immediately, an unpleasant sound grated against his eardrums. It was a sound that intimidated other creatures, a sound that was physiologically unpleasant. The source of that sound slowly appeared in front of them from the bushes. It had slimy, wet scales growing on its green body, and its mouth, which had a row of sharp teeth, was making an intimidating sound, as if it was sucking blood. However, the most notable features were the two pairs of red eyes that were glowing in the dark.

A two-headed snake—a snake with two heads on its body—was glaring at Subaru. Short, white horns were growing from its heads.

"Is…it the kind of snake that disguises itself as a witchbeast?"

"That's an interesting interpretation, but that's a witchbeast. It's a Two-Headed Snake. It's quite ferocious and is poisonous."

The witchbeast in front of his eyes didn't have two heads splitting from its torso as an extension of it. It was far more simple. There was another head on its tail. It was indeed a two-headed snake, true to its name, but…

"It's not a two-headed snake but more like a buttheaded snake? Where does it poop from?"

"Witchbeasts turn the things they eat into mana, so they don't poop basically."

"So they're like idols. And it seems like they're also picking a fight with the ecosystem.”

Although Subaru appeared to be relaxed, his instincts were screaming at him to be wary of the two-headed snake in front of him. The witchbeast was around two meters long and was around ten meters away. It could cover that much of a distance in a single breath.

“I didn’t ask, but is today’s Puck the type that can fight?”

“A-ha, a witchbeast like that is a piece of cake for me. But I don’t have Lia’s assistance, so I won’t be able to talk to you after I take it down.”

“It’s better than dying, so please do that, teacher.”

“I guess it can’t be helped. I won’t let you down then…oh.”

While they were talking, the color of the two-headed snake’s body and eyes changed. The witchbeast changed into an aggressive color and then immediately twisted its huge body and tried to leap at Subaru—

“Furaaa!”

In the next moment, a blade of wind sliced through the two-headed snake, turning it into rings of flesh. It died in front of the surprised Subaru without even so much as a death throe. He witnessed the death of the witchbeast as it spewed out blue-green blood, and then looked at Puck. The cat shook his head.

And then… “Ram knew that her woman’s intuition was right.”

The one who had come out from the bush that the witchbeast had come out from and made a sarcastic remark the moment they did was Ram.

After meeting up again after several hours, Ram ended up saving Subaru, who was in dire straits, with a wand in hand.

“Haa, thanks Ram.”

“Did your map come in handy during your hike?”

“Sis, the joy of our reunion was short-lived, but it’s wonderful how you never miss the opportunity to add the spice known as sarcasm.”

Ram sneered at Subaru, who had sat down in relief, and then went near the carcass of the two-headed snake after putting away her wand. As she carefully observed the carcass of the witchbeast, Subaru said, “He-Hey, what are you doing?”

“Isn’t it obvious? Ram is doing what she came here to do. Although it went according to Ram’s plan, you did a good job, Barusu.”

While saying that, Ram cut open the body of the two-headed snake that had been sliced into rings with a blade—right in the center—and tore off some kind of white crystal from it.

“This is a pure mana crystal that forms inside the body of witchbeasts. It’s bigger than expected.”

“So that’s the fourth ingredient? It was inside a venomous snake. Man, that’s worse than I imagined.”

As Ram satisfyingly retrieved the ingredient, Subaru felt disappointed that the worse of his two predictions ended up being right. It was obvious why Ram was keeping quiet. If he had known witchbeasts were involved, he would have been more cautious, and—

“Hah! Now I understand why I was brought here! You were planning on using my ability to attract witchbeasts to gather the snakes, weren’t you?”

“You are unusually sharp today. Thanks to you, the search for witchbeasts that would normally take a few days or so was completed in less than half a day. Ram commends you for being useful.”

“You…”

Even Subaru felt angry at Ram for being unapologetic.

Subaru and Ram were the two who went into the witchbeast forest together to rescue Rem. She obviously knew of his ability and how dangerous it could be. And if she still made the witchbeast cross the barrier despite knowing that and used him as witchbeast bait, it was like getting stabbed in the back—

“No, wait? When did it cross the barrier?”

Subaru realized the prerequisite for it was strange and then looked at Puck. Even if he has a carefree personality, he is a spirit at the end of the day. Could it be that this cat isn’t aware of the barrier?

“Hmmm, did you not notice it? Subaru, it’s—”

“Great Spirit.”

Puck was about to address Subaru’s suspicion, but Ram interrupted it by calling out to him. Subaru felt like something was off from their exchange, but Ram ignored it and started walking. But she suddenly lost her footing, and…

“Hey, Ram!”

Subaru quickly grabbed the groggy Ram’s arm and supported her falling body and was shocked by how insanely hot it was. Her forehead and the nape of her neck were drenched in sweat when he took a look at her.

“It’s just like the time when we were fighting the Wolgarms’ and you used too much mana! Hey, Ram!”

She was being more stubborn than stout. Not letting her get in even so much as a grumble, Subaru picked her up just like last time. Her body was light as usual. And it kept getting hotter.

“Lecherous.’

“Shut up and just be a piece of luggage! Hey, Puck! Throw that ingredient into the bag too! And after that, lead me to the Bork Sun Tree. The map will come handy…you know the way, right?!”

"Seems like my evil plan got exposed. Alright, alright, I'll do that."

Subaru started running after Puck as he flew ahead of him while carrying the reluctant-looking Ram. Running without regard for his surroundings, his feet and shoulders got scratched by twigs, bruising him.

Subaru ran with several scratches on his skin. It would happen to anyone who ran without regard for their surroundings. So, it was only natural that Ram's white skin had many red marks as well.

7

"In other words, she didn't intend on using you as bait to begin with. She just needed you to walk near the barrier and lure out an appropriate witchbeast. But since you chased after the rice ball and left the barrier, you complicated things."

Subaru and the rest had returned to the mansion at around dinnertime, just like they had declared that morning.

Needless to say, the three returned covered in wounds, so they did not get to enjoy a peaceful dinner after that.

"I think she was trying really hard to find you using Clairvoyance up until you met up. So I think that was the reason why she was so worn out. She'll never admit it though."

"And why were you helping Ram out?"

"It's because I was asked to do so. It's not like I was actually cooperating with her since I just had to protect you when you got into trouble. It was just an extension of Lia's request, you see. Well, you got into trouble because of her rice ball, so I'd like to apologize to you about that on her behalf."

The spirit who had helped him navigate even past his working hours disappeared after telling him the truth.

Night had long since fallen outside the window, and the spirit who had worked overtime would definitely sleep in tomorrow. Subaru also really wanted to hit the hay, but the nearest bed was unfortunately occupied by someone who was already sound asleep, so his wish was unlikely to come true.

“I won’t be able to relax until I at least complain lil’,” said Subaru next to Ram, who was sleeping on the bed, as he scratched his head.

The mansion had gone into an uproar when Subaru returned with an unconscious Ram. Especially Rem, who was in such a great panic due to the unusual situation that Emilia became more dependable.

She healed Ram’s abrasions, wiped her body, dressed her, and carried her to the bed. Subaru got interrogated—leaving out the part about Emilia’s rice ball—and explained what happened and gave the ingredients they had collected to Rem. The tea was being made by now.

Though Subaru had been told to rest, he had come here instead of returning to his room. I at least need to vent my pent-up frustrations at her when she wakes up.

And then—

“Lecherous.” That was the first thing Ram said after opening her eyes slightly and seeing Subaru standing by her bedside.

“…Just saying, but Rem gave me permission to be here.”

Subaru gave a wry smile at Ram being like she usually was, then pounded his chest. “As you can see, we got back to the mansion in one piece. I gave the ingredients we collected to Rem. By the way, my map was a huge help in getting back here. You can never be too prepared, right?”

In fact, the simple map Subaru made had an extraordinary effect on things. He made Puck lead him to the Bork Sun Tree that stood out like a sore thumb, then went straight to the mansion by following the map. If it weren’t for the map, we might be spending the night in the forest right now.

“Well, if that had happened, Rem would have rushed there after Puck informed her about that… If you’ve learned your lesson, you need to admit that maps are useful. And trust your companions. Don't use them as bait without permission."

"…But that was the most efficient way, wasn't it? If you want to complain then complain."

"Not complaining is my way of complaining. Since that seems to work better on you two sisters."

Ram was looking sideways at Subaru while resting her head on a pillow, her cheeks slightly stiffened. Subaru grinned at her reaction and felt satisfied at the situation.

"Puck told me everything. It pissed me off, but I'll leave it alone."

"It's a commonly held belief that spirits are righteous and tightlipped, but after getting to know that Great Spirit, Ram has had second thoughts about that. Ram will never count on him again."

"Don't talk bad about him, since his touristness saved our lives… And I'll go get Rem now. I need to tell her that you've woken up."

Subaru shrugged his shoulders at Ram, who was complaining about Puck.

"Wait, Barusu. Ram has a request…no, an order."

"Don't correct it in a way that saps the motivation right out of me. So what do you want from me?"

"There should be a white packet in the back of the desk drawer there. Brew tea with that for Ram. For the two of us."

Following Ram's instructions, he opened the drawer and found a packet tucked in the back. And the thing inside was—

"Hey, isn't this your special tea…"

"It's only natural to save some just in case. Now go."

Subaru then went to the dining room at Ram's order, an order that held enough pressure behind it to demand his obedience. He felt weak and wondered what all the hard work today was for. Once there, he boiled the water and prepared the tea.

Come to think of it, most of the work in the mansion falls in Rem's domain, but brewing tea is the only thing I learned from Ram. She is very picky about tea.

"There, I'm back, miss. It's the snake liver tea you ordered."

"It wasn't made with a snake's liver. It was made with a dog's intestine."

'That doesn't make much of a difference."

Contrary to the warm aroma, the ingredient had been obtained through cruel means. Subaru poured the tea into two cups and handed one to Ram, who had sat up. Subaru also grabbed a cup and sat down in a chair.

It smells really good. The smell makes it hard to believe that it's made from powdered mushrooms, seeds of a poisonous fruit, an insectivorous flower, and a crystal from inside the body of a witchbeast—

"I know I'm the one who brewed it, but it's hard to get in the mood to drink it when you know what it's made of… Anyway, how come you call it tea when there aren't any tea leaves in it?"

"Ram processed all of the ingredients together and mixed them with the tea she likes to improve the flavor. It's classified as tea, so don't worry," she said, before tilting the cup without hesitation.

Having no choice, Subaru did the same. The heat and the aroma passed over his tongue and overflowed out of his nose. The rich flavor of the tea made it easy to drink, so much so that he had a hard time believing that a dog's intestine and various poisons had been added to it.

"I wonder if it's like this more due to my tea brewing skills than the quality of the tea itself?"

"Don't be silly. A lot of flavor has definitely been lost because you brewed it so poorly. You didn't use the correct water temperature, and neither did you pour it properly."

The harsh feedback put a damper on Subaru's excitement, and he kept drinking it with a bitter face. Even though it was easy to drink, he couldn't bring himself to like tea. His tongue was childish as usual.

"Aah, I want to drink soda. I wonder if I can make fizzy drinks somehow…"

"Ram has never heard of that drink before. If you know how to make it, then you can ask Rem."

"It's the same as mayonnaise in that the ingredients are a bit vague. No, it's even more than that."

The taste that made him feel like he was back in his distant homeland—they went through a lot of trouble to recreate it. Fresh eggs, good quality oil, vinegar, and salt and pepper to adjust the taste. And lastly, patience. The mayonnaise that was successfully recreated through much trial and error with Rem and Ram was now stored in Roswaal Manor's kitchen. It wouldn't be an exaggeration to say that bringing mayonnaise to this world had been Subaru's greatest achievement since he was a mayonnaise addict.

"But I'm just a mere mayonnaise addict. So being unparalleled in another world using otherworldly knowledge is a pie in the sky."

"Ram thinks you are babbling nonsense again, but she understood that Barusu is useless when it comes to Barusu's wishes."

"It's quite a figure of speech that I'm useless to myself, though you aren't wrong."

Subaru gave a wry smile at what Ram had pointed out.

She's right about that, and I should say that it's frustrating.

Ram squinted at Subaru for having such an attitude. And then she tilted the cup and moistened her tongue and lips with tea. "Ram doesn't know what people in your homeland like drinking, but not knowing the taste of tea is such a great loss in life.”

“You may as well be dead if you can’t enjoy drinking tea.”

“Is tea the only thing that matters in life?!”

Ram sighed at his surprised reply and turned her head sideways to look at him with her pink eyes. “That’s right.” She paused. “You’re so pitiful like that, so…pay close attention to how Ram brews tea from now on.”

“…”

She declared that she’d brew the tea herself next time and quietly brought the cup to her mouth. Subaru felt like his cheeks were strangely relaxed after hearing her words.

I don’t know why, and she hasn’t even apologized about today.

But he felt like it was fine for now. It was comfortable yet weird, with no arguments over differences, no apologies in order to make up, and no promises being exchanged.

If our relationship is like this, I can look forward to joining her for tea again, even though I don’t even like tea.

—The scent of tea was drifting in the air, and it was a day where Subaru thought like that.

Operation Kokkuri

1

The hall is covered in tension.

They watched over the situation, nobody being able to take a breath. There were three people around the table in the center exchanging looks at each other. These three people were Subaru, who was sweating from the forehead, Beatrice, who had a wrinkled brow from her frowning, and then Puck, who quivered his ears, listening attentively.

Emilia and Rem had serious looks on their face as they watched over the situation with eyes, indicating that they were anxious and confused. However, Subaru had no composure to take care of their anxiety right now.

Subaru: “Sup with that pale face, Beatrice? If you strain yourself so much, you’d even make Hollows want to run away.”

Beatrice: “You really just said that, I suppose. I’m not straining myself. There’s no reason at all for me to get serious. Look at yourself. Your nostrils are flaring.”

Puck: “Now now, let’s calm down you two. It’s only a game, you shouldn’t get so serious.”

Beatrice responded to Subaru’s provocation with a rageful smile that didn’t suit her childish face. Puck was the only one that stayed composed upon seeing the two rivaling each other with spirit while touching his whiskers, brushing the situation off as the usual.

Beatrice: “You’re not wrong, Bubby. …However, this is more of a match, rather than just a game. I musn’t lose to the likes of humans.”

Puck: “Betty sure is an obstinate person. How about it, Subaru. If you can be the adult here this one time and give…”

Subaru: “Puck.”

Puck tried to calm those two down as an outsider. Subaru cut him off and continued to speak with a serious face as Puck tilted his face slightly to the side in doubt.

Subaru: “—If you’re gonna talk about giving in and not giving in, you should untense your tail first.”

“…”

Subaru: “If you can’t do that, then you’re no different than me and Beako. Don’t you think so?”

Puck: “Jeez, Subaru sure is a troubling one too…”

Puck folded his little arms and let out a sigh in response to Subaru’s low toned questioning. After that, the spirit that had an appearance of a cat looked straight through Subaru with his round eyes.

Puck: “—It seems like I also have to play against you guys with all I’ve got.”

An overwhelmingly intimidating wind blows against him. It seemed as if Subaru was going to bend backwards from the feeling of oppression. However, he frantically puts up with that wind, lets out a fearless laugh, and then looked at his two opponents.

Emilia: “Why has it comes to this…”

Inside of the devastating wind of that decision, Emilia whispers these words, seemingly with chagrin, as she watches over those 3 individuals.

Emilia puts her hand on her chest. Her blueish purple eyes were filled with gloom. To her side, Rem gently placed her hand onto Emilia’s slender shoulder. Rem shakes her head at Emilia, who looked over her shoulder.

Rem: “They cannot be stopped. We can no longer do anything but watch.”

Emilia: “Why is it like this. They were having that much fun up until a little while ago, and yet…”

Rem: “Because they have something they cannot give up—”

In response to Emilia sinking into sorrow, Rem grumbled weakly, seemingly doing so with a sigh. When Emilia opened her eyes wide in astonishment from hearing that sound, Rem let out a nod while gazing at the three individuals.

Rem: “Subaru-kun and the others surely have something they cannot give up. Thus, occasionally they have to be like that and collide with each other …perhaps.”

Emilia: “That’s why they collide with each other like that?”

Rem: “I think so.”

With that, Rem did not look away from the three people with serious expressions at the table. Seeing Rem do that, Emilia also put her hands together to pray and closed her eyes.

She prays, “I pray that these three come to a conclusion without hurting anyone”.

As for who she was praying to, in this situation it would be—

Emilia: “—Please, Kokkuri-sama.”

Emilia calls out a name of an unfamiliar spirit and quietly offered her prayer.

They surround the table. The three individuals facing each other—those three spread the surrounded table with white paper. On it were several characters and digits, along with a single coin placed on it.

Those three individuals put hands and a tail on the coin and continued to glare at each other endlessly.

They included their prayers with faces that looked so serious that they would even disturb a descended god and—

Subaru: “Just something that came to my mind, but how do people treat ghosts here?”

Suddenly, Subaru asks this question at the place where they sat together after breakfast.

All the members of the mansion gathered together. Time for exchanging words was valuable at this one place. As of the other day, topics would generally be talked about at this time—topics being things like the matter of Rem being given a whole day off.

Today was no exception. Everyone looked at Subaru, who let out a meager question.

Ram: “Rem, Rem. Subaru said something again.”

Rem: “Nee-sama, Nee-sama. That’s something that makes him Subaru-kun.”

Beatrice: “I don’t see that, I suppose. Clearly it’s just him being a burden with a troubling matter.”

Beatrice’s followed up with the interaction of the sisters, which was an interaction he was already completely familiar with, as she let out a sigh.

Roswaal: “You’ve come up with something interesting again, huh.”

This person sitting in the seat of highest honor opposes the group of girls’ reactions and clapped his hands cheerfully.

He had clown make-up and wore a striking outfit, along with a personality of tending to say eccentric remarks. He was an oddball who had a type of perception for everything, differing from the ordinary person. This was Roswaal L Mathers.

Roswaal: “Subaru-kun brings in a fresh topic everyday, so it doesn’t get boring. Wearisome days prevent people from growing up. I’ve also been taught that stagnation is the most abominable offense out there.”

Subaru: “It’s not that big of a deal, but from now on give me some hope for my growth.”

Subaru said words that couldn’t be labeled as cynicism or his true thoughts and roughly looked over the people in the dining room.

Subaru: “So going back to my initial question, I’d like to talk about ghosts. Well, to be honest, I’m a type of viewer that doesn’t really believe in them, so I’ve been set on ignoring the summer spirit TV shows.”

Subaru was not the type to be afraid of psychic phenomenon, though he did put aside his previous declaration.

With this, Subaru, who was unexpectedly a realist, was negative towards occult phenomenons. He could not believe in things without having real experiences of them. That was his theory. It was a pretty typical idea for young men of the present.

Puck: “They were brought into a different world, so I believe in them. Also, I’ve seen Kappa when I was little, so Il believe in them because of that too. To the side of a dirty river, a middle aged man with dark green skin was washing dishes. That was Kappa.”

Emilia: “Umm, Puck? I don’t really get what Kappa is, but…well, what’s this ghost thing Subaru is talking about in the first place?”

Puck’s observation, something that nobody believed because it happened when he was young, was a misfire even in this different world.

Subaru had his shoulders dropped, but the person who made a displeased face at him was Emilia, the person who sat in the seat next to him. She put one of her fingers on her face and tilts her head in a lovely manner.

Emilia: “I’ve never heard about ghosts, but…are they some type of sweet candy or something?”

Subaru: “Your anticipations for dessert came out bluntly, huh. However, you don’t know about ghosts? Seriously? I think of them as spiritual type of things—well I wonder if that gives you an image.”

Emilia: “Ghosts, Kappa, Renkon…are these words that only Subaru knows of again?”

Subaru: “Putting the first two things aside, the last one is definitely something I saw in a bento.”

The unfamiliar words caused Emilia to have a troubled face. Subaru judged that it seemed that she truly had clue about what those words meant and turned around to Rem.

Subaru: “Rem do you know what ghosts are? They are beings that have translucent bodies, wear white clothes, and fly into the sky while having a triangular decoration attached to their heads.”

Rem: “Nope, unfortunately I also don’t know about them. …If I come across a person like that, I’d be scared.”

Ram: “I agree with Rem. Freaks who fly in the air? Haa, I’d get knocked out if I was half asleep and saw one, Barusu.”

Subaru: “Lately I’ve been catching sight of that Roswaal-san flying into the air. What do you think of that?”

Ram: “He does something that an ordinary person can’t do at a moment’s notice, so I think it’s precious. Barusu, you show some respect too”

In response to Ram shamelessly honoring the Head, Subaru becomes weary and looked at Roswaal, the person in question. He lets out a shrug in response to his glance and Roswaal: “That expectant look troubles me. Alright, guess I can hold you next time and we can fly into the sky together. Would that satisfy you?”

Subaru: “Didn’t understand a single thing you say. That’s what I’ve assessed. “

Roswaal: “I wasn’t serious. Moreover, ghosts and spirits…those things aren’t talked about much in Lugunica. As far as I know, those words may have been used among Kararagi city-state people, perhaps. I'm also not very informed on the specifics of ghosts, but I feel like I've heard about them several times."

Emilia: "Huh, so they say it at Kararagi. Now that I think about it, Subaru is abnormally informed on weird things. If that's the case, then it wouldn't be weird for you to be abnormally informed on Kararagi too."

Emilia nods many times with an enlightened expression at Roswaal, who shed some of his knowledge on the topic.

On one hand Subaru was happy about Emilia's trust, but on the other he was bothered by how she treated his understanding as abnormal. However, Subaru put that aside for now and cocked his head in puzzlement at the lack of responses around him.

In his original world, the concept of ghosts was something that was universally common knowledge, not considering about whether people believed in them or not. The idea of ancestral spirits was something that was established long ago to an extent.

The deceased and the living, bonds and spirits—that concept of life and death—these felt like things that could not be separated.

Subaru: "Ah, could it be because spirits are here? Now that I think about it, the light of the spirit you can see at night at the garden is ghost-like. It's damn ghost-like."

Emilia: "—? You mean spirits are ghosts? I thought spirits were spirits."

Roswaal: "No no, Emilia-sama. The ghosts and spirits Subaru-kun is talking about are the same as these things called "Hollow"."

"…"

With the sound of a click, Subaru felt the atmosphere freeze.

Emilia stiffens with a smile at Roswaal's words. However, she was not the only one. Rem and Ram of course became firm, along with Beatrice who had an indifferent face, indicating that it was no concern of hers.

Subaru widens his eyes at the girls' reactions and asks a question to Roswaal like that.

Subaru: "Ummm, what are Hollows?"

Roswaal: "They are said to be passed away life's thoughts and regrets left behind in the world for the living, unable to return to Od Laguna, continuing to drift about in the realm of the dead… that's where these existences are, perhaps."

Subaru: "Ah, that's definitely a ghost. I see. So they're called Hollows, huh."

However, contrary to the two men who understood this existence, the group of girls were greatly disturbed. Emilia's expression was especially pale. She touched Subaru's arm gently with her trembling fingers.

Emilia: "Th-The ghosts Subaru was talking about are Hollows…?"

Subaru: "Seems like they were. But I've come to understand it thanks to that, though it's not like it's a big deal or anything."

Emilia: "You said it's not a big deal, so why did you talk about Hollows? That's weird. Surely it's because…I got it. Subaru saw a Hollow. You saw one in the mansion. That's why you suddenly became interested in Hollows. I don't like this. Why did you talk about it like that? If I didn't become aware of it, then I could've gone on without knowing about them. That's cruel. Subaru-kun, you idiot. So cruel. Subaru is planning on dragging us into this because he's scared himself—!"

Subaru: "Emilia-tan has quite the persecution complex."

Emilia started to talk rapidly, violently shaking Subaru's shoulder, being unable to hold back her emotions.

Subaru manages to let out a kind smile at Emilia while being surprised by the force from her shaking his shoulder.

Subaru: “It’ll be okay, calm down! Even if I were to get someone involved with damage from occult stuff, Emilia-tan would be the last one I’d involve. Beako would be the first sacrifice.”

Beatrice: “Why’d you bring me up there? I don’t understand, I suppose!”

Emilia: “Really? Are you being seriously serious? You’ll make Beatrice your first sacrifice?”

Beatrice: “You too. What are you saying with your confusion?! I want to beat up the both of you, I suppose.”

Rem: “That’s right. I don’t get this. The person that Subaru-kun should depend on first for this is me. Beatrice-sama should not be used for this!”

Beatrice: “Why must I be insulted like this?! This is shameless, I suppose!”

There was Emilia, becoming confused and speaking of choices that she’d normally be unable to speak of, and there was Beatrice, who wouldn’t be quiet. When the self-recommending Rem participated in this war, the discussion turned into complete chaos.

Under these circumstances of not knowing if that chaos would settle down, Emilia looks at Subaru with wet eyes.

Emilia: “Is Subaru going to inform us on Hollows? You’re gonna tell us about how you know tons of things about them. Like how you are with stars.”

Subaru: “That’s not true. At best, all I know of is stuff like Okiku-san’s Banchousarayashiki, where she breaks plates and had remaining regrets, Oiwa-san, who flipped out in a grudge against her husband who betrayed her, or Miminashihouichi, who had her ears torn off because she forgot to write on them.”

Emilia: “Awwa-awawawa”

Roswaal: “Subaru-kuuun. Emilia-sama is going to faint, so let’s stop here.”

The frightened Emilia's cuteness caused Subaru to unconsciously get carried away with his entertainment. He gets rebuked by Roswaal and gently tapped Emilia's shoulder while having a wry smile.

Subaru: "Just kidding, just kidding. I've never seen Hollows in this mansion. The only mysterious experience I had was with Kokkuri, a once in a lifetime…scratch that, because Hollows are unrelated to it."

Emilia: "Bu-But Subaru…weren't things like Kappa and Renkon talked about earlier?"

Subaru: "Kappa is a middle aged man who lives at a river with a face indicative of unhealthiness, and Renkon is a vegetable. "

He bows his head at his childhood memories. Emilia was more precious than ever right now.

It was worth it for Emilia to try her best to calm down, as her chaos was now slowly settling down. Then the Emilia who somehow managed to calm down blushens and Emilia: "Hey, I think Subaru has the wrong idea. I don't get frightened by Hollows at all. It's just that I'm a little bad at dealing with them."

Subaru: "By a little you mean very?"

Emilia: "A little means a little! God, Subaru you idiot! You bully!"

Emilia was angry, but she was certainly not persuasive with her words. Still continuing to calm down the angry Emilia, Subaru turns around to face Rem and the others.

Subaru: "Come to think of it, your guys' facial expressions have been tough. Could it be…?"

Ram: "What do you mean by "Could it be"? If you don't include the subject in that, then I can't understand you. Barusu, a person poor at asking questions, has missed his chance through his own foolishness. This conversation is over."

Subaru: "If you make such a blunt response like that, then you already know the subject!"

Ram clicked her tongue at Subaru's reference, although she was three times more bitter than usual. Rem, who quietly went in front of her sister to protect her, shaked her head at Subaru.

Rem: "You're wrong, Subaru-kun. Nee-sama doesn't get frightened by Hollows. However, just having these circumstances being different than not having an attack land on someone after striking… Rem also feels the same way."

Subaru: "You're saying I have bad chemistry in battle?! You don't have to talk with an assumption that I'd get knocked out!"

Rem: "It is Nee-sama's and my duty to fight in order to protect people. Don't worry, even if a Hollow were to appear, I would put my life on the line and protect Subaru-kun."

Subaru: "It was just hypothetical talk, and yet the topic has come to this."

It started out as a casual conversation, and yet it turned into a talk about readiness when faced with awfully serious moments. Unlike Emilia, who got scared from theoretical ideas, Rem and the others didn't look cute with their awareness of how they were bad at dealing with ghosts.

Subaru: "Then Beako making a sullen face means that you're scared too I guess. Are you able to go to the bathroom by yourself a night?"

Beatrice: "Cut it o-stop treating me like a young girl like that. There's no reason for me to be afraid of something suspicious like Holo in the first place, I suppose."

Subaru: "Then why are you pissed off? Something get caught in your teeth?"

Beatrice: "Don't you anger me with something stupid! …The reason why I show displeasure towards Hollows is so that I can encloud that really precious existence this way, I suppose."

Subaru: “Really precious…ah! So that’s why…”

Subaru understood the source for Beatrice’s anger and nodded his head affirmatively.

Subaru: “Spirits and ghosts give a similar feeling after all, huh. I’ve come to understand your irritation too.”

Beatrice: “It’s irritating for the real and suspicious Hollows to look down upon all the spirits.”

Beatrice folds her arms in displeasure with a face indicating that she damaged her self-respect.

Subaru also thought of this earlier, but mistaking spirits for Hollows was a case in point that made his hypothesis probable. Or rather, perhaps Subaru was the only one who reasoned that ghosts existed because spirits did.

Emilia: “—! Then Puck is a Hollow?! Noo! Even when I believed in you!”

Puck: “You call me, then here I am. Nya nya nya nya nyaaan! … What the. Lia, what’s wrong? You look like you’re about to cry. Who is the cause for this?! I’ll show them a piece of my mind!”

Emilia: “It’s your fault.”

Puck: “Damnittt. I’m an idiot! Satisfied now?”

Emilia was panicking once again, but the skit of the materialized Puck had unfolded. Emilia’s adeptness at using spirits was irrelevant. The differences between spirits and Hollows generally could not be understood, though Emilia was prone to getting extremely scared.

Subaru: “But it’s surprising how everyone is bad with Hollow, though it seems like the meaning of bad is different in this case.”

Roswaal: “The grasp of these ghosts you’re talking about and the grasp of the Hollows that we know of may be different. At the very least, we are aware of how Hollows are existences that aren’t friendly with the living. Corpses moving on the battlefield, wicked thoughts that curse the living…there are many examples like that to show their unfriendliness.”

Subaru: “Moving corpses huh. Sorry for not taking the fact that this world has magic seriously at all.”

Subaru actually had real experiences with magic. He shivers at Roswaal’s examples and looks over the girl camp again with their anxious looking faces.

He saw no signs of the calm atmosphere during breakfast that had lasted about ten minutes. The reason for this was because of Subaru rashly bringing in the topic of Hollows, essentially breaking that calm atmosphere into mere fragments.

The atmosphere dissolves this way and the aftertaste was really bad. Thus—

Subaru: “—Alright, I have a proposal!”

Subaru kicks his chair, stands up, and thrusts his finger at the ceiling. This makes everyone open their eyes wide while Subaru spins around his held out arm.

Subaru: “Seems like there’s some misunderstandings, however I did not bring up Hollows to scare you all. Understand that first.”

Emilia: “Then what was the talk about Kiku-san from Banchousarayashiki, Iwasan, and Renkon-san for?”

Subaru: “Hurry up and forgot about those things and the vegetable already. You got it all wrong. It’s fiction!”

Emilia makes a relieved expression upon hearing that it was fiction. It was possible to still doubt if it would be okay, but for now she had a stance of intending to hear him out, so he took this opportunity.

Beatrice: “It’s too late for that assessment, I suppose. The damage done by the Hollow talk is something that can no longer be resolved.”

Subaru: “I will replace that perception of yours that’s smeared with prejudice, Beako. —through necromancy that is!”

Emilia: “Necromancy?”

Subaru raised a thumb at the scornful Beatrice, and then Emilia tilted her head at Subaru, who made his declaration with a loud voice. Emilia expresses a question mark at the unfamiliar word, making Subaru smile with distorted cheeks.

Subaru: “Yes, necromancy! At my home town it’s a written technique used to take down spirits, and by spirits I mean ghost spirits! In other words, necromancy is a ritual to summon Hollows!”

Upon hearing Subaru’s astounding idea, everyone’s expression changed simultaneously.

Emilia: “Summoning Hollows? You can do that?”

Subaru: “There are loopholes and underhanded tricks for everything. Emilia-tan, how about you think of this one thing as challenging it after you felt deceived?”

Emilia: “If I think of it that way, then that would mean I was deceived until the end!”

Rem: “Is it really okay to do that? Nothing bad will happen?”

Rem takes place of the disturbed Emilia as she rapidly took a step forward and drew closer to Subaru.

Rem: “It is typical for people to think of Hollows as evil existences. I do not want to doubt Subaru-kun, but if by any chance something…”

Subaru: “Ho-Hold up. The thing that people are scared of when it comes to Hollows and ghosts is their unfamiliarity with their nature, right? If they get dragged out by necromancy, you’ll come to understand them and their scariness will be reduced by half.”

Rem: “Even if it’s reduced by half, scary things are scary!”

It wasn’t shown in Rem’s face, but in truth, she may have gotten relatively frightened.

She gets close to the trembling Emilia and was propped up by her shoulder, but it seemed that Emilia was pretending to comfort her, being covered in her own helplessness.

Beatrice: “Fufumm, you say some useful things sometimes too, I suppose.”

Subaru: “Now that’s some unexpected reinforcement. Are you in agreement with me, Beako?”

When Subaru becomes surprised from the very unexpected approval ballot, Beatrice snorted her nose with her arms crossed.

Beatrice: “I also have a lot of things I want to say to the Hollows now. If we summon those guys through necromancy, I’ll hit them, I suppose.”

Beatrice was burning with ambition at the idea of necromancy with an expression full of hostility. Anyhow, it seemed like she wasn’t seriously against them either, so he gave a final look at Roswaal.

The decision was in Roswaal’s hands. He collectedly extended both of his hands in response to Subaru’s look and Roswaal: “Sounds good. Try and do it how you want to. To be honest, I’m also interested in the necromancy used to summon Hollows. I want to see this without fail, after all.”

Subaru: “Now you’re talking! As expected of Ros-chi. You are reasonable!”

Subaru received the approval of the well understanding Head, as he became filled with delight seeing how Roswaal was understanding of his thoughts.

Subaru: “And with that, let’s set up the preparations for necromancy! What’s wrong? It’s not that hard to makes preparations for it. We just need a big, white paper, a feather pen, and a coin.”

Ram: “Those are very cheap. It’s counterfeiting.”

Subaru: “The cheap simpleness is the gimmick of instant necromancy. Back at my home town, it exploded with popularity before and it was all the rage.”

Emilia: “So Hollow played at Subaru’s hometown, huh. You are reeeally brave…”

Subaru gives a vague smile at Emilia, who was giving him strange admiration, and left out the details on the matter. If he were to talk about the details of the necromancy that became popular, Emilia would be frightened again.

Anyhow, only minor effects of this necromancy appeared. Then there was also a rumor which said that the practice had become prohibited, as marks were left on a good amount of boys and girls’ hearts.

That ritual’s name was called thus at his hometown:

Subaru: “From here, the Roswaal residence’s first “Kokkuri-san” shall now commence!”

3

—Kokkuri-san is something that exploded with popularity in Japan for a period of time. It is a kind of necromancy.

The influence of it was fierce. Even now, it is so popular that in one area it is even prohibited.

There is a theory that says Kokkuri parodizes the names of “foxes(kitsune)”, “dogs(inu)” and “tanuki”. People generally think that they are summoning low class animal spirits via ritual.

In Subaru’s world it is an outdated game, but it is still generally common knowledge, and it is at least well known for people to know about the flow of the ritual’s sequences, along with the tools one needs to prepare for it.

Subaru: “Simply speaking will not summon Kokkuri-san. This is because I need to make the preparations necessary to talk with Kokkuri-san.”

Rem: “So that’s why you have paper and a pen? Are you going to communicate with Kokkuri-san through writing…?”

Subaru was spreading white paper over the table when Rem, who had her morningstar in her hand, nervously asked this question.

Holding a weapon like this was something you wouldn’t normally see on an average day at the mansion. In other words, it seemed that today was preparation for extraordinary battle to Rem. She had all the preparations set to turn Kokkuri-san into small fragments.

Ram: “That’s an ugly “E” character. Feels like your daily studying hasn’t been taking its effect.”

Subaru: “Shut up, Nee-sama. If you can read it, then that’s all that matters.”

Subaru responds to the Ram out of wariness, whose abusive language was harsher than usual, and continued to write characters on the white paper while feeling discouraged. That was all of the E characters, in sequential order, to correspond with the hiragana in this world.

Subaru: “The last columns to prepare are the number column, the man column, and the woman column. And something that cannot be forgotten, the gate used to let Kokkuri-san go in and out.”

He methodically writes the e characters, the numbers 0 through 9, man and woman, and lastly the choices “yes” and “no” for preparation. Writing “Torii” during that time would mean that everything would be ready.

Subaru: “Emilia-tan, lend me some money.”

Emilia: “Okay. Don’t waste it.”

Puck: “Kinda feels like something a man financially dependent on a woman would do.”

Subaru ignores the utterance from the scandalous Puck and put the gold coin Emilia gave to him on top of the Torii illustration. Then he nods at Rem and Emilia. The three people take their seats.

Subaru: “Before we begin, here are some important points to note. First off, the three of us will put our index fingers on the gold coin, but make sure you don’t take it off until it’s over. It wouldn’t be pretty if you did.”

Emilia: “O-Ok. Got it. Don’t take off your finger huh. …can I freeze it?”

Subaru: “It’s not about physically sticking to it. Let’s try doing it deliberately. Also, about the Hollow that will answer the questions we have for Kokkuri-san…they can be customarily loud. You will get scolded if you do not follow the sequence properly. Please follow my instructions in the way that they have been told.”

Rem: “Scolded…so that means that moment would be a good opportunity, huh. I feel like I understand what Subaru-kun is expecting of me.”

Subaru: “Feels like you don’t get it, so I’m gonna tell you that there is a standard prohibition on attacks.”

Emilia was serious with a pale face. Rem had fighting spirit dwelling in her light blue eyes. These things made Subaru feel anxious.

However, around them there was Beatrice, who was full of hostility, and Ram, whose aggressive attitude was getting worse. Roswaal and Puck were the same as always, but it would probably wouldn’t help keep his anxiety in check.

There was no reason for them to have this much willpower for carrying out the operation for Kokkuri-san in the first place, but—

Subaru: “A man’s adventurous spirit is beyond help, precisely because of how he gets fired up in stupid times like these…”

Beatrice: “Stop saying that stuff. Hurry up and get this started. Quickly I say, I suppose.”

Subaru looks like a fool with his cynical attitude. He pulls himself together and reaches out to the coin with his finger. Emilia and Rem follow. Their fingers pile on top of each other on the coin.

They start to feel a slight tension. The ritual begins while they all hold their breath—.

Subaru: “—Kokkuri-san, Kokkuri-san. Please come forth. If you are there, please move towards “yes”.”

It was a magical chant. Subaru says the custom words for it with that type of enthusiasm.

Emilia and Rem felt power with their fingers caused by those words. However, there was no change with the coin. Subaru glares at the coin that didn’t give even a slight movement, wets his dry lips, and tries once again.

Subaru: “—Kokkuri-san, Kokkuri-san. Please come forth. If you are there, please move towards “yes”.”

He says those words once again, but there was still no change.

This naturally relaxes the atmosphere in the hall. The participants Emilia and Rem give out a sigh of relief, and they heard a sigh from the back that sounded unamused. Beatrice was surely in a bad mood from this result, just because of her high expectations. — That’s what he thought immediately afterwards.

Emilia: “—Ah!”

Emilia raises her voice in surprise. Rem widens her eyes and is at a loss for words. Subaru also held his breath.

They reacted like this because the coin they had their fingers on slowly moved towards yes.

Subaru: “P-Please move back towards Torii.”

Subaru receives looks from those two as if they were appealing to him and clumsily remembered the next instruction. In response to the instruction, the coin moved from “yes” to the Torii position, making Subaru feel confident that the necromancy was a success.

The ghosts were doing deeds and there were influences on the participants’ subconscious, but for now they had accomplished the first step.

Subaru: “A-Alright, so it moved down. Kokkuri-san should answer most of our questions with it like this. Anything you guys would like to ask?”

Emilia Su-Subaru, you show us how it’s done first.”

Rem: “…Yes, I think we should go with that. I still can’t see the Hollow.”

Emilia didn’t hide her fright, while Rem had a misunderstanding about the ritual, as she thought it was to crush the ghosts.

Seeing as how they shut down their right to ask a question, after Subaru thought about it for a bit, he

Subaru: “—Kokkuri-san, Emilia-tan is afraid of Hollows, right?”

Emilia: “Subaru?!”

Emilia raised a criticising voice, but the coin had already moved. The gold coin slides onto the “yes” spot, and Emilia’s sentiments were made clear—though they were already obvious.

Subaru: “Thanks. Kokkuri-san, move back towards Torii.”

Subaru is satisfied with the result. When he requests for the Kokkuri to move back to its origin, he moves smoothly towards above the Torii illustration. This was the flow of sequences for Kokkuri-san.

Subaru: “So these are the basics of Kokkuri-san. Next we would do the question and answer session again so that we aren’t rude to Kokkuri-san…Emilia-tan, what’s up with that look?”

Emilia: “I-I’m telling you I’m not scared. I think the answer to that question was a mistake. Subaru must have moved his finger. I won’t be fooled.”

Kokkuri: “Nope.”

Emilia: “Hyan?!”

Kokkuri-san crushed Emilia’s cute willpower without mercy. Emilia, who let out a shriek, learned her place from his pointing out and let out a “Sorry…” with a faint voice.

Rem: “—Kokkuri-sama. Should we have meat or fish for today’s dinner?”

Kokkuri: “Meat.”

Immediately after that, Rem, who was watching the flow of the game up until now, threw a question at Kokkuri-san with astounding courage. The border of the E character slips away. Rem gives her thanks to Kokkuri-san, who gave an answer for today’s dinner, and then shifted her attention towards Subaru and the others.

Rem: “I believe Kokkuri-san has credibility with his answer. We have no fish for ingredients at the kitchen, so the dinner being a meat dish…I am the only one who should know about that.”

Emilia: “Eh…Then isn’t this amazing?”

Emilia comprehends the intent behind Rem’s question and uses her free hand to touch her mouth, exposing her astonishment. She blinks her eyes and stared firmly at the coin. Then

Emilia: “Kokkuri-san is amazing. I was surprised.”

Kokkuri: “Not particularly.”

Emilia: “Sorry for doubting you. Moreover, you’ve even been talking to us reeaally politely.”

Kokkuri: “A common thing.”

Emilia: “Is that so? A common thing…but misunderstanding you is a very sorrowful thing to do, so I apologize. I’ll be careful.”

Kokkuri: “No prob.”

Subaru: “Was Kokkuri-san really able to have such relaxed conversations?!”

Kokkuri-san’s behavior broke into a mess of pieces in response to Emilia, who reflected on her behavior.

When these things went down, the coin was sliding on the paper. The contrast between the pleasantness of the conversation and the impression given by the image gave quite the strange feeling.

Anyhow, it looked like Emilia had complete trust in Kokkuri-san, so her expression was different in comparison to how she was frightened by Hollow earlier. In some respects, Rem came face to face with the exchange of heart-warming foreign culture, so it seemed that her fighting spirit also settled down.

Rem: “Emilia-sama, can I talk to Kokkuri-san too?”

Emilia: “Ah, sorry. Kokkuri-san, can Rem talk to you too?”

Kokkuri: “Sure.”

Subaru: “He’s suppose to answer with “Yes” there, not “Sure”!”

In regards to the ritual, Kokkuri-san was now a participant as a fourth viewpoint, rather than a guest of honor.

It differed quite a lot from what the image they had heard about from rumors, but perhaps the Kokkuri-san of this world was just like this. He was really different from Japan’s Kokkuri-san, who is hard to deal with, according to rumors.

Rem: “Is Subaru-kun satisfied everyday with my cooking?”

Rem: “Does Subaru-kun enjoy his work at the mansion? Is it tough for him?”

Kokkuri: “A pleasantly tired feeling.”

Rem: “Is Subaru-kun getting along well with Nee-sama?”

Kokkuri: “Indifferent towards the antagonizing hate.”

Rem: “Is Subaru-kun…”

Subaru: “Uh, Rem-san? Even if you don’t ask Kokkuri-san, I can at least answer that kind of stuff if you ask me directly, you know?”

Rem: “No, asking you directly is embarrassing, so…”

Subaru: “This method is indirect, but your questions sure aren’t!”

He didn’t understand Rem’s point about her embarrassment, but it seemed that she had befitting merit to associate with Kokkuri-san. Nevertheless, perhaps you could say that the first stage had been completed with the apparent satisfaction of Rem’s curiosity.

Subaru: “Alright then, it’s regretful, but let’s pray for his departure. —Kokkuri-san, thank you. By all means, please go back home.”

Emilia: “Thank you. Let’s speak again sometime.”

Rem: “I pray that nothing bad happens along the way home and that you return safely.”

Subaru was particular about his formality, while Emilia and Rem entered a stance for an extreme farewell. They all bid their goodbyes, and the coin swiftly headed towards the Torii. And then, the feeling of oppression that vaguely drifted about in the hall vanishes, which made everyone understand that Kokkuri-san had gone home.

Subaru: “And that’s how it is. How was it? Kokkuri-san wasn’t a scary Hollow, right?”

Rem: “Yeah, that surprised me. I couldn’t see him, and yet he really was there. Could it be that spirits are…but it didn’t seem like it…”

Roswaal: “There was no mana interference from what I saw. It feels like I saw the amazingness of necromancy, though it was mysterious.”

Roswaal, the person who had been silent up until now, makes sure of the ritual’s ending as he nods his head in admiration. The leading person for magic applies his metaphorical seal of approval. Subaru was also proud of Kokkuri-san, as if it was something personal.

Puck: “Looks like it wasn’t a deed of a spirit. If it was a spirit, Vollachia would notice it. How’d you feel about it, Betty?”

Beatrice: “…I won’t acknowledge it. The existence of Hollows, in and of itself, is something blasphemous to spirits, I suppose.”

Puck: “Betty?”

Beatrice responds to Puck’s questioning with a quite, indignant voice. That response causes Puck to widen his eyes, as Beatrice compromises at the table with her arm waving “bye-bye!”.

Beatrice: “I will take your spot, young sister. I will expose the bogus trickery that happened just now, I suppose.”

Ram: “Wait Beatrice, what are you saying? There was no bogus trickery anywhere.”

Subaru: “You don’t really hear bogus nowadays, huh…putting that aside, do you doubt the Kokkuri-san that you saw? If so, then how do you explain what just happened earlier?”

Beatrice: “Listen up, you be quiet now. Or are you scared of me exposing the truth of the matter? If you are, then I guess that can’t be helped either, I suppose.”

Subaru: “…The rice cake is ready. You’ll pay for this, Drill Loli.”

Rem gives her seat up to Beatrice. Subaru also once again sinks into his chair. Beatrice sees this and then glares at Emilia.

Beatrice: “You too. Change places with Bubby, I suppose. There’s no way there are people that side with Kokkuri. The two of us, me and Bubby, will make these lies clear, I suppose.”

Subaru: “What suspicions do you have for the people that side with Kokkuri? Also how will Puck participate in this?”

Puck: “How about with my tail?”

Subaru: “…Ah! I understand. That’s fine. Let’s do it with your tail.”

Puck, who came flying, floats above the table, and holds out his long tail as he puts it on the coin. Subaru and Beatrice also follow, and the arrangements to start were put in order, though they were awkward.

Emilia: “Subaru…”

Subaru: “It’ll be fine, Emilia-tan. Look. I will protect Kokkuri-san—”

Emilia: “Okay, I believe you.”

Emilia puts her hands on her chest and gives a nod to Subaru with a gesture that seemed to be a prayer. He makes sure of it and then when he takes a deep breath, he directs his consciousness towards the Torii drawn on the paper.

Subaru: “—Kokkuri-san, Kokkuri-san. I apologize for continuing this, but if you are there, please move towards the “Yes” spo—that was fast.”

Kokkuri: “You call me too much.”

Subaru: “True. Of course you’d get mad. Being summoned immediately after returning would of course make you mad. My apologies.”

Subaru prostrates himself in response to the faint displeasure hinted in Kokkuri’s sentence. However, the two people who were having their first experience with Kokkuri-san widen their eyes in response to the slight surprise.

Puck: “At the very least, I am not moving. How about you, Betty?”

Beatrice: “…I also have not done that shameless thing, I suppose. Even if I was and if I wanted to, I would just pulverize him”

Kokkuri: “Absurd.”

Puck: “He’s speaking, Beako.”

Beatrice: “This is shameless!”

In any case, you could say that this was a win for the Kokkuri side against the beginning hostilities.

Kokkuri-san moved with a “Bring it on” and waited for a question. It seemed that his anger from being summoned in succession had been assuaged. While this happened, the coin slipped swiftly across the paper. Kokkuri-san truly was uncalm.

Subaru: “There. Go ahead and ask a question, Beako. Go fight him.”

Beatrice: “I’ll show people how you disappear, I suppose.”

Subaru: “Just how rude can you be at the start?! Expecting him to pop out without even having called him in response to being prompted to ask a question is just like the PC dolphin!”

Kokkuri: “Wonder what I should do∼”

Subaru: “But wow Kokkuri-san, you are a major sadist towards Beako!”

Kokkuri-san enters a strong counter in response to Beako, who should have had challenged him first. Even Kokkuri-san saw through the reddened Beatrice’s natural groping.

Puck: “Alright, what does Lia think of me?”

Kokkuri: “A hard working younger brother.” [Kokkuri: “Sometimes a mother.”

Puck: “Fufufu, this is amusing. Alright, what do I think of Emilia?”

Kokkuri: “A cute, hard working daughter.” [Kokkuri: “Sometimes a mother.”

Subaru: “You two think of each other as a mother sometimes?”

Puck let out profound laughter, while Emilia frantically shook her head and denied it. This was also a parent-child relationship he didn’t understand, but it confirmed Kokkuri-san’s insight.

Beatrice: “Fufumm. If that’s the case, then tell me what Bubbyn thinks of me, I suppose.”

Kokkuri: “Honorific”

Beatrice: “—? Honorable? What is the meaning of this? He thinks I’m honorable…?”

Kokkuri: “Say honorific.”

Beatrice: “Why has this guy only been awfully strict towards me?”

Whether he had completely ruined her mood or pleased her, Kokkuri-san was skilled at hitting the right areas. Afterwards, he skillfully dodged Beatrice’s question too. This little girl was that furious, and yet she became completely dispirited.

Anyhow, it was unlikely for Beatrice to doubt Kokkuri-san’s existence now that she had argued with him until now. In some way, her goal had been accomplished. Thus, it was about the time to wish for Kokkuri-san to go back home and—

Rem: “Ah, Subaru-kun. Can I do one last thing?”

Subaru: “Hm? Oh, Rem wants to ask something too?”

Subaru ponders about her actions, as Rem holds her hand up, responding to Subaru with a “Yes”. Standardly, only the participants would be able to ask Kokkuri-san questions. Perhaps this would anger Kokkuri-san.

Kokkuri: “Come at me.”

Subaru: “Kokkuri-san is a handsome man who is anything but angry. It’s fine, Rem. Go ask a question.”

Rem: “Then I will take up that offer. —To tell you the truth, lately the amount of stored mayonnaise has been decreasing over night. What is the cause of that?”

That was the moment the unconcerned Rem threw in her question. The coin lodged with Kokkuri-san in it that had been sliding casually until now stops its movement. The coin that suspended on top of the Torii illustration shakes the situation of Subaru and the others having their fingers placed on it. It was more than a slight movement.

“…”

These three hold their breath and glare at each other as Emilia and the others become disturbed from the situation.

—Thus, the story was coming back to the beginning.

4

While putting all their strength into the coin they touched, the three cautiously peeped at each other's attitude.

The cold sensation felt at their fingertips was an indication that it would face towards "correct" and would start to move. However, it was impossible this time for it to recite "correct".

The Roswaal residence's preserved mayonnaise was being revived in this world by Subaru and the others, who were mayonnaise lovers. It was being done through Rem's everyday earnest inclusion of the produced flavor.

The quality was inferior compared to the type of quality back at Subaru's original world, but it was an absolute must for his eating habits.

There were people who snuck bites of that mayonnaise every night. —To be completely honest, that was Subaru's doing. Occasionally he wouldn't be able to hold himself back and would creep into the kitchen at midnight, snatching the mayonnaise. However, it was impossible for him to be found out.

Subaru: "Force is entering your shoulder, Beako. Puck you too; what's up with the swelling of power with your tail?"

Beatrice: "You too. Your cheeks are stiffening. Even under normal circumstances your excessive smile is atrocious, I suppose. Kokkuri-san also is ugly. No doubt about it."

Puck: "Come on you two. We can still talk this out as of right now. Let's stop this foolishness and have more constructivity, shall we? Look, we can even go out and have a picnic."

They were restraining each other, but would still not loosen their power put into the coin.

Subaru was putting in power to avoid having the truth exposed, but they were desperate to destroy his obstruction. At this rate, he will become a criminal—

Emilia: “Ah, the coin…!”

Emilia was there watching over them. While trembling, she tried to watch the coin that started to move. However, the coin’s speed was slow. The movement was so dull that it seemed it would tear apart the paper lying underneath it. The E characters the gold coin slowly traced were “be”, “a”, “ and “to”. —Of course, Subaru was moving it.

He put a false accusation on her before he was exposed, making the situation indefinite. He had no choice.

Subaru: “Ohhtoh, if we go by this flow, then the criminal appears to be…”

Beatrice: “Do-Don’t play games! Take a closer look, I suppose…!”

When she spoke out to the shameless Subaru, the resisting Beatrice’s fingers shone vividly. Immediately after, the wind spirals the girl’s name in the middle, and Subaru notices the increase of strength on the coin.

Subaru: “You, no way…!”

Beatrice: “See, take a good look. This movement clearly shows your…”

Just like Beatrice said, the coin changed its course, turning the “ri” into “su”, following with “ba”. There was no doubt that she was using some sort of magic just for this purpose.

Emilia: “Be a to su ba?”

Emilia reads the E characters just like how they appeared and was bewildered. But, it would be problematic like this. If the name finishes in a straight line next, Subaru’s crime would be as clear as day.

Subaru: “But with this you’ve already burnt Kokkuri-san’s grey brain cells!”

Beatrice: “Th-This? No way, I suppose…!”

Just before it narrowly reached “ru”, somehow it slid over and hit “pa” and “tsu”. If it reached the straight line at this rate, the conclusion would be decided.

Emilia: “Be a to su ba pa tsu?”

Subaru: “With this, next will I will show you Finishing Kokkuri!”

Puck: “I won’t allow it, Subaru! This is where I will show you, a person who showed negligence, Counter Kokkuri!”

Beatrice: “I will cooperate with Bubby, I suppose! With the two of us, it will be Intimate Kokkuri!”

They take a stab at Subaru’s opportunity, who rushed the match, as Puck once again slips the coin towards “su”. Beatrice also backs up that force, as Subaru is cornered into fighting defensively.

At this rate, he will be defeated. —This was the moment he thought that.

Kokkuri: “Cut it out.”

“…”

The coin that the three of them had put their strength into rotates at high speed, and then not only Subaru, but Beatrice and Puck too repel from the table. The coin that was released from their physical strength grows wild and traces characters to scold the three people who ridiculed him.

Kokkuri: “A child mourning at your unsightly quarrel is here.”

Subaru: “A-A mourning child…?”

Kokkuri: “Emilia”

Subaru is surprised by Kokkuri-san’s answer and turns around. He saw Emilia standing there, who was watching the three of them with sorrowful eyes. She had her arms on her chest. Perhaps she was praying.

Kokkuri-san noticed how the three people who shoved their crimes into each other's faces despaired.

Kokkuri: "Remember it." [Kokkuri: "The loving heart." [Kokkuri: "The kindness." [Kokkuri: "The love."

Emilia: "Ko-Kokkuri-san. You…"

Kokkuri: "I am no longer needed." [Kokkuri: "What's next is" [Kokkuri: "Your guys' story."

Subaru could not speak in response to Kokkuri-san's concern. Kokkuri-san leaves those last words and then heads toward Torii. There was no time to stop him. The atmosphere changes.

Rem: "…Looks like Kokkuri-san went home."

The feeling of his presence fades away. Rem puts the reality that everyone understood into words. When she touched the paper left behind on the table, she put her hand on the Torii and gold coin.

Rem: "I am sorry. I said something unnecessary and angered Kokkuri-san."

Subaru: "N-No. Rem, it's not your fault. It was my fault for bringing up Kokkuri rashly in the first place. It must've been a bother to Kokkuri-san too."

He was surprised from Kokkuri-san's excessive friendliness, but just from that, he had feelings of guilt.

Thus, there was only one way to show his regret.

Subaru: "Rem, about the mayonnaise…"

Rem: "Yes. In the end, we never found out who the criminal was, but…"

Subaru: "Um, that's wrong. The criminal is…"

Subaru looked straight into Rem’s eyes and bowed in shame. Then —

Subaru: “I am the criminal.” [Puck: “I did it.” [Beatrice: “I was just provoked by a demon, I suppose.”

Rem: “What?”

The three of their voice’s overlap. Rem, who had confessed with them, widens her eyes. However, the people that were the most surprised were none other than those three. They exchange glances at each other’s faces and opened their mouths in dumbfoundment.

Emilia saw that situation, but she lastly pinches the gold coin and

Emilia: “Kokkuri-san, Kokkuri-san. Could it be that you knew everything?”

Then, she asked this question to the silent coin with a small smile on her face.

5

Ram: “—What a farce that was huh, Roswaal-sama.”

They decided to check the hall where the mayonnaise incident criminals were writing their earnest apologies later. Ram speaks out to the person walking in front of her, Roswaal. He then shakes his shoulder, laughs, and Roswaal: “Wasn’t it quite the enjoyable show? Subaru-kun is really amusing. I don’t get tired of him. Splendid. Just splendid.”

Ram: “Don’t warm up to Barusu that much. Even now he is doing something outrageous.”

Roswaal: “That was just me having fun again”…if I said that, I wonder if you would get mad.”

In response to the jolly Head’s words, Ram let out a slight sigh without objection.

From the beginning, Ram would never oppose Roswaal's opinion. Pouring her whole soul into meeting the head's wishes certainly was her loyalty. Thus—

Ram: "How did you move that coin?"

Roswaal: "Through the use of wind and earth magic. I scattered mana through wind, deceiving them, and guided the coin through local impact. It seemed that Beatrice and the big spirit noticed it and then disregarded it."

The shy Roswaal's answer causes Ram to be reminded of the two people who seemed to be accomplices. These accomplices were the gleeful kitten, and the seemingly indifferent little girl who accompanied him.

Ram: "Putting that aside, I had an uncomfortable feeling just about the last interaction. The big spirit and Beatrice were both digging their own graves."

Roswaal: "It was an unexpected development after all. At any rate, the last thing was the only thing I didn't understand as well."

Ram: "Huh?"

Roswaal: "I didn't understand how not everything was our game. Also, there was no mana interference at that time. Well well, what did Subaru-kun call it. Hm."

Roswaal winks at Ram, who took in his statement in dumbfoundment. Whether it had been his way of joking, or if he was seriously enjoying himself with the mystery, even Ram herself could not read between the lines.

It would be fine if it was all Roswaal's trick. —However, if by any chance it wasn't…

Ram: "From now on, having that ritual at the mansion…let's prohibit people from playing Kokkuri-san. Yes."

She nods intensely and clearly make that decision in her heart.

Thus, the “Kokkuri-san” game that entered into this different world became taboo, just like in his previous world. Or at the very least, it would never be played again at the Roswaal residence.

Furthermore, the way it became summon “Emilia-sama” instead was a whole different story.

Librarian Beatrice’s Reluctant Promise

1

Holding her breath and opening the door, she checked both sides of the hallway.

Straining her ears, she looked for sounds. She couldn’t sense anyone approaching. Lightly pumping her fist while saying, “okay,” the young girl ran out as she stepped onto the red carpet.

While the soft carpet did mitigate some of the sound, it couldn’t also erase the young girl’s uncertainty. Currently, the young girl felt not only that her footsteps were an obstacle, but that her breathing itself was one.

The rows of doors, the long way until the end of the hallway, she was wary of every little thing in this long passage. As she looked for a place to hide—

“—Boo!”

“—hk!”

Right after her gaze wandered while looking for a place to hide, a boy jumped out from the shadow of a vase in front of her. This child spread his hands to the sides of his face and opened his mouth wide while snot dripped from his nose.

Immediately she ground her molars, and suppressed the strength of the mana she was about to throw out. She nearly blew away the young boy right in front of her eyes. The girl was relieved by her own self-control and the boy’s dumb luck.

And then—

“Hmphya, I suppose!”

“Gyan!”

Her palm, having given up on releasing mana, instead was used to slap the side of the boy's face as he made a silly expression. Watching the boy roll after giving a short scream, the girl pulled on her drills with a finger.

"Hmph! That's what you get for surprising me, in fact. This isn't a joke, I suppose!"

"Ah! Found her!"

"You're right! She's there! Lucas got done in!"

"But, even if Lucas got done in, we have Lucas the second and the third!"

"Urgh urgh, in fact."

The moment she celebrated her victory, a boisterous detached force came running from the other side of the hallway. Clicking her tongue at those voices, the girl touched the nearest door, and tried to Cross the world by habit when—

"—From just this, I cannot not admit defeat, I suppose."

Withdrawing her hand, the girl shook her head, then ran to the other side of the hallway. She stepped on the belly of the boy she slapped on the way, making him raise a shameful voice. "Ahii."

"Go now, catch heeer!" "Go now, get heeer!" "Go now, Strip heeer!"

As she heard the voices of the companions of the boy she stepped on coming from the rear, the girl lined out a map of the mansion in her brain. Then, she frowned towards the children chasing her,

"I absolutely, will not bend to your whims, in fact "

Her determination bleeding into her voice, the girl—Beatrice—held onto her skirt as she ran with all her might.

2

"Hey Beako, isn't your body going to break if you spend all your time locked up in here?”

Eyeing the great number of books crammed into the bookshelves, Subaru voiced such a question while sitting on the floor.

This was a room shrouded by an aged and grandiose atmosphere.

This spacious room had no windows, and the only source of light were magic lamps littered around the inside of the room. The white stones inside the glass cases fulfilled their role of illuminating dazzlingly and brightly.

However, even those lights couldn’t fully illuminate this cramped room lined with bookshelves.

“If you keep reading books in a poorly lit room, your eyes will go bad. This room doesn’t even have windows, so there’s no ventilation either. Being in a room with bad air also isn’t good for your lungs “

“You’re a man concerned with every petty little detail, I suppose. What Betty is doing and where Betty is are up to her… First thing, the air inside the Forbidden Archive is purified with Mana, so it is purer than pure, in fact”

“For real? Damn, Mana is crazy. That’s why this room is so relaxing to be in? Man, I thought it strange. I was wondering why a room filled with Beako’s carbon monoxide was so nice to be in”

“I did not quite understand, but I do know that what you said was something disgusting, I suppose!”

Unable to bear this worthless conversation, the one who raised her voice was Beatrice, sitting on a stepladder.

Her face flushed red, and she stuck her finger out at Subaru, who was sitting boldly in the room.

“Every single day, why do you come out and poke your nose into Betty’s business, in fact! This is not a place you can just come in to sit and kill time in, I suppose. This is the sacrosanct unassailable Forbidden Archive, in fact.”

“Even if it’s called the forbidden archive, the name’s not got much weight to it if I can just waltz in, does it?”

“Betty doesn’t want you coming in, and yet you just manage to somehow waltz in on your own, I suppose!”

Beatrice, the same as always, exploded at Subaru, who tracked dirt into the room. Jumping from the step ladder as she did this, she haughtily raised her chin at Subaru, who was sitting cross-legged on the floor.

On the sides of her head, her luxurious ringlets bouncing like springs were captivating.

“No matter how much I use Door Crossing, you find it right away like it was obvious… You’re the first fellow, who has ever tracked this much dirt into the forbidden archive, in fact”

“Boing boing, boing boing.”

“Now which part of Betty are you looking at, and what are you playing at, I suppose! Listen to what I’m saying, in fact!”

“Whoops!”

He quickly grabbed the partly-read book Beatrice threw due to how angry she was. Beatrice, her face flushing red once again, glared at Subaru with her big wide pupils. Seeing this as a small puppy yapping, Subaru gave a small chuckle.

“What are you laughing at… You’re a thoroughly irritating man, I suppose.”

“My bad, my bad. But, c’mon, don’t go throwing books after you’ve read them, put them back in their proper shelf. If you don’t bother cleaning, the floor will be buried before long.”

“You’re a hundred years too early to be trying to lecture Betty the Librarian of the Forbidden Archive on how to handle books, in fact.”

“Well I just witnessed this little librarian yeeting a book…”

Despite how much pride and awareness she had of herself as a librarian, her treatment towards books did not seem to be the kindest.

Taking the book Subaru presented her, Beatrice quickly put it into the bookshelf next to her. The books arranged there had bindings and titles all over the place; it was a completely arbitrarily done job.

“Hey, what happened to your pride as a librarian? If you arbitrarily put them back like that, you’ll end up skipping a sequel and regret it. A long time ago, I had a pair of twins end up just a lone person that way.”

“That advice seems to have an awfully personal feeling to it, but it is an unnecessary concern, I suppose. The Forbidden Archive is a revolutionary place that does not need to conform to your common sense, in fact.”

“What do you mean?”

“If you return the books to the shelf, a mechanism will later return the book to its designated spot, I suppose.”

“The Forbidden Archive is awesome, or more like spooky!”

It was too bad for the prideful Beatrice, but Subaru’s thoughts leaned more towards it being uncanny than awesome. Subaru was currently observing the shelf that Beatrice inserted the book into.

“Eh, Seriously? The book just goes back on it’s own? That’s amazingly convenient, but seeing it happen feels nightmarish. Or more like, you don’t need a librarian at that point. Why are you here?”

“It seems like you can’t hold a conversation with Betty unless you put her down for every little thing, in fact…”

This time they were doubts without any ill intent, but Beatrice still took them as his usual jesting. The girl then moved from Subaru’s side and took out a book from the nearby bookshelf. There were many thick and lengthy books in the forbidden archive, so there was a bit of danger in the manner in which she was doing it.

That said, for no reason in particular, he attempted to reach a hand out—

“Unnecessary concern, I suppose.”

As such, she gave her uncute response, making him laugh wryly.

“Welp…Then, I guess I might as well leave for today.”

Resting her hips atop the stepladder, Beatrice entered reading mode on the open book on her lap.

Once she was in this condition, her reactions would worsen during it. Subaru could also discern how to behave to not disturb her reading. This was the perfect timing to evacuate.

As Subaru headed towards the exit of the Forbidden Archive, Beatrice didn’t direct a single word at him. Subaru, remembering something, turned around towards the girl who consistently treated him cruelly.

“By the way, did you hear, Beako? I heard that tomorrow for two days, Roswaal and Ram will be leaving the mansion for a while.”

“…I heard, in fact. But, that has nothing to do with Betty, I suppose.”

Even for something meant to be small talk, Beatrice was awfully curt. As if he couldn’t take that attitude after all, Subaru cranked his head like he was pondering,

“You can’t really mean they have nothing to do with you. It’s the lord of the house and… Well, I can’t really find how to put it into words properly, but couldn’t you at least see him off? Roschi might even jump from joy y’know?”

“I cannot even imagine Roswaal jumping for joy, in fact. I will say this as many times, but Betty has nothing to do with that, I suppose.

—Something like saying farewell."

With her eyes cast down upon the book, Beatrice cut her words off there.

Silence immediately fell upon the Forbidden Archive, and Subaru let his window for leaving the room go. The sound of page-turning stopped, and an uncomfortable atmosphere spread within the area.

What now, thought Subaru, back to his own statement.

It wasn't like he thought that far with that statement. Simply, he was aware of the fact that he had said something nosy about Beatrice and Roswaal's relationship. But even then—

"Subaru. Take care. Farewell."

"…"

Suddenly, Subaru's heart was caught by a voice he recalled from the back of his mind.

Trying not to think about it, trying not to remember it, that voice which he had been strongly made aware of reverberated in his skull.

The parting which he had not been aware was a parting, the kind voice that had come from behind him. Subaru did not have a clue what to answer to that usual voice.

"—Actually, you should show your face too when we see them off tomorrow."

"…Huuh"

Subaru's whisper, which had broken the silence, made Beatrice, who had her eyes down towards the book, sigh.

Without lifting her face, simply raising her eyes towards Subaru, she shot a stiff glare at him.

"This is the third time, in fact. That has nothing to do with Betty, I suppose.”

“You’ve got nothing to lose or anything. It’s not like you have anything keeping you busy either, if you’re just going to be shutting yourself in your room anyways. Then, why not poke your head out a little and…”

“How insistent, in fact.”

As Subaru was hounding her, Beatrice flatly cut him off.

“First of all, whenever Betty is free she is here, I suppose. Something like ‘anyways’ isn’t going to make me give in, in fact. If you really must insist, then why not drag me out by force, I suppose?”

“…”

“What’s more, within this room there exists no manner in which you could win against Betty, in fact.”

There was a quiet but unflappable stubbornness within Beatrice’s words.

It was something that normally didn’t show in her indignant retorts to Subaru: “a deep-seated sleeping rage. Which threatened to become a great flame if awoken. Understanding that, Subaru raised a white flag.

“I get it… Sorry for speaking out of turn. G’night.”

As he meekly withdrew, the pressure Beatrice was releasing faded. When he exited the room as well, the girl said nothing.

“Tch, she’s so damn obstinate.”

The moment the door shut, he could somehow feel the space warp around it. When he attempted to open it again, the door, which had been connected to the Forbidden Archive just a moment ago, now returned to its place as a connector to an empty guest room.

Beatrice’s Door Crossing was a spatial magic which could connect the Forbidden Archive to whichever door she liked within the mansion. Since the right to decide on the door was down to Beatrice, it made it extremely complicated to get in contact with her. Though for some reason, that particular idiosyncrasy did not apply to Subaru's guesswork.

"But really, what was up with Beako's attitude just now…"

"—What's this? Subaru, what are you doing around here?"

Feeling uneasy from that last exchange, Subaru, who was frowning, heard a voice call out to him from the side. Turning around, the one he saw coming down from the landing of the stairs was Emilia, who had her silver hair bunned up.

She approached Subaru, who was standing stock still in the hallway, and quizzically tilted her head with a slight smile.

"This way is to my room, you know? If you wanted to greet me before bed, you just did it a while ago."

"Aah, I was just passing by. Emilia-tan, fresh out of the bath? So cute."

"Yeah yeah."

Emilia took on Subaru's spontaneous praise with a completely habitual attitude.

In actuality, the wryly laughing Emilia's cheeks and neckline were flushed and dyed in red, her long silver hair damp. Being under the same roof as the girl within his heart and seeing that side of her was the utmost blessing for a boy.

"Subaru, you're staring and breathing very hard, is something wrong? Do I, look weird?"

"No, the weird one here would be me, actually. Emilia-tan's loveliness is always making me lose my mind so… Wait, we're digressing again. That's not it, you look just fine."

"—?"

Putting the jokes and nonsense to the side, Subaru moved his face closer to Emilia's puzzled face. She smelled nice. But, that's not the problem here.

"It's tempting to just continue to stand here and talk with Emilia-tan too but, I kinda need to ask something from you. It's a little late right now, but could you lend me Puck?"

"Puck?"

Pressing a finger against her cheek, Emilia's eyes opened wide at the sudden request.

"It's already his bedtime, but I think he'll come out if I call for him. But, what do you need from Puck… Ah, I get it. Sleeping alone is lonely after all."

"If that's what made you convinced then it's like I'm incredibly pathetic isn't it? That's not it, I have something I want to discuss with Beako actually. If Emilia-tan could also join in it'd be a real help."

"With Beatrice?"

Emilia's eyes opened wider and wider, but all Subaru gave her was a devilish laugh.

That face was practically like the smile a naughty brat would make as he announced his prank.

"I'm thinking of teaching a little thing or two to that shut-in."

3

The next day, Subaru showed his face in the Forbidden Archive once it was past noon.

Just as always, Beatrice, who was sitting on the stepladder, didn't welcome Subaru. On top of that whole thing last night, her hiding her face with the book today had a much more stubborn atmosphere to her than usual as well.

“Yo, Beako. Rozchi and Ram set out already. You didn’t go see them off at all, so he cried so much his clown makeup fell off.”

“In that case, it was worth it for Betty to not go see him off, in fact. —If all you wanted was to come and talk about such meaningless things, then hurry out, I suppose.”

Shooing away, like she was trying to wave off a bug with her hands, Beatrice waved her arm. Left with no angle of approach, he scratched his head. Subaru then nodded with an “Alright”,

“Beako, let’s continue our conversation from yesterday for a bit. Ok? Alright, thank you.”

“You just keep going like the self-centered guy you are, in fact! Don’t just do whatever you want, I suppose!”

“Then that self-centeredness, I’ll just go ahead and exploit it to it’s limit. Let’s resume our talk about seeing them off. If saying farewell is too much then how about saying welcome back?”

“How about nothing, you have no room for argument, in fact. I dislike what I dislike, thus I refuse, I suppose. I don’t understand why you are so obsessed with that, in fact.”

“Why well, you see, because it’s something very important.”

At Beatrice’s questioning, Subaru crossed his arms and nodded repeatedly.

Ever since they started this back and forth yesterday, Subaru had gone over these questions by himself. The conclusion he came to from that was a little hard to put into words.

“It might be an exaggeration, but you must say the things you have to say when you have to say them. Otherwise you might end up regretting it. You also must have had moments where you thought ‘Oh no, I messed up!”

“…That has, never happened to Betty, I suppose.”

Beatrice averted her gaze, half-heartedly denying Subaru’s words.

From her attitude Subaru had earned a response, and now was the time to press on.

“The fact you’ve never had that happen must be because you’re a shut-in! Can’t help you there!”

“That term, it is unusually irritating so stop it, in fact. It just feels like it’s unreasonably putting down Betty’s existence, I suppose.”

“Anger that strikes the bullseye is the proof of an awakening from the bottom of your heart.”

“I keep telling you every time that I have no idea what your words mean!”

Subaru, who was pointing with his finger, had Beatrice making a fed-up face at him. She stuck a finger into her own hair rolls, and bounced them up and down like a spring.

“Why don’t you hurry up, and tell me what it is you want to say, I suppose. Just quickly say what you want to say, and get lost from the Forbidden Archive, in fact”

“Beako, won’t you make a bet with me?”

“A bet…?”

“Yes, a bet. Let’s have a little contest.”

At the abrupt strange proposal, Beatrice, her face looking like she had no idea what she just got told, knitted her brows. She stared fixedly at Subaru, in a manner full of suspicion.

“A bet…? What are you talking about all of a sudden, I suppose. I have no reason to take that, in fact.”

“If you judge things on whether they’re necessary or unnecessary, you’ll become a boring adult. I don’t think becoming an adult with no chill like Roswaal is the best of ideas, either.”

“I will concede that point to you, I suppose.”

Their opinion aligned when it came to the currently absent lord of the mansion. Leaving beside Roswaal, whom he just used as a simple steppingstone to gain common understanding, Subaru raised a finger as he said, "So that's why."

"To avoid becoming boring adults, let's play and make a little bet between us. It's our special right as kids, you and me, to be able to get away with playing with fire and have it be just a funny story later."

"…No idea what that bet could be, but what does Betty gain from winning it, in fact?"

"Shrewd one, aren't ya. Can I take it that you're feeling like participating if you've got interest in the prize?"

Beatrice, who was narrowing her eyes, didn't say anything. Simply, the fact that she didn't say any words of refusal was a gain. Towards her, Subaru stretched out his right hand. Beatrice's face was suspicious, however—

"You're called, jump out."

"NyaNyaNyaNyaaan."

In accordance with Subaru's call, a cheerful voice accompanied an overflowing light on his hand. The light soon shaped into the silhouette of a cat. Not a portable cat, mind you, but the cat spirit, Puck manifested right in front of Beatrice.

While the kitty cleaned its face, those round black pupils looked at her mischievously,

"It's a request from Lia, and I also have an opinion about this, so I'll cooperate… Subaru, you've got quite the rough handle on cats."

"Having to ask a cat for help, and it turns out the cat's actually really helpful, many such cases."

In terms of both actual strength and amicability, he ended up turning to Puck relatively a lot. This time as well, the foundation of this plan was based on Puck, and the effect was as could be observed—

“Haaw…Bubby is so cute and fluffy today as well. You’re just so dreamy to Betty, I suppose.”

As expected, Puck appearing on top of his hand was a K.O. for Beatrice. Her cheeks flushing, Subaru laughed bitterly at the sight of the girl gazing at the kitty with the eyes of a maiden.

“Your patterns are so predictable it’s way too plain, or so I’d like to complain but, if you do win this bet, you will earn “The Right to fluff Puck for a day”. I’ve obtained the consent of both the actual person and their guardian.”

“To correct you, I’m actually Lia’s guardian. Don’t get that part wrong.”

His tail standing straight up, Puck reminded them of one important aspect. With that said, Beatrice nodded her head continuously at Subaru’s proposal.

“N-Not too shabby of a recompense, in fact. It seems you have just a bit of the right idea, I suppose.”

“I’m incredibly concerned about whether you might get deceived by some bad men in the future.”

“Did I hear some unnecessary concern just now, in fact?”

“Just your imagination, gaslighting isn’t real. So, in the case that I win… It’ll be obligatory for you to give farewells and greetings. And not just to Roswaal, but everyone in the mansion, too.”

At the conditions Subaru outlined, Beatrice’s expression suddenly changed.

Of course, from how the conversation had been going she must have imagined this. The color of surprise in the girl’s eyes was deep.

“I don’t mean for this to apply to something like going shopping at the village. But, similarly to the other day, at the very least show your face to say farewells and greetings with everybody else.

There's no need to go out of your way to have an unpleasant attitude, right?"

"…I really do not understand why you're obsessing so much with that, I suppose."

Though she stared at Puck as if in thought, Beatrice seemed to resign herself right away. The girl gracefully went down to the ground from the stepladder, and walked forward towards Subaru.

"Let me hear the details of the bet, in fact."

"Then, that means you'll take the loss conditions?"

"That is if I lose, I suppose. Go on, tell me, in fact."

As if peeved by the fact she was going along with Subaru's suggestion, Beatrice pursed her lips as if displeased. Before she changed her mind, Subaru turned only his head towards the door behind him.

"The rules are simple, it's Tag. —No, Double Tag I guess?"

"Oni chase…? A game you split the roles of a person and an oni, and have the oni chase the person, I suppose."

"That's right, that's exactly it. However, the rules are a little bit different this time. You'll also be playing the role of the chased this time, while inside the mansion."

Subaru continued explaining with a "Basically", as Beatrice had a question mark floating atop her head.

"Right now, Emilia-tan is running around the mansion. The one you are tasked to chase down and catch, is the runner Emilia-tan. However, if you were simply chasing after Emilia-tan it wouldn't be that fun. Wait no, if I had to do that, that'd actually be a blast."

"Subaru, Subaru, you're digressing."

"My bad. So then, You chase after the runner Emilia, and you'll also be running from someone trying to catch you. If you manage to catch Emilia-tan you will win. On the other hand, however, if you get caught before catching Emilia-tan you will lose. —That, is Double Tag."

With a slight adjustment from Puck, Subaru finished explaining the description of the contest. Beatrice, having heard that, scrunched up her brow and fiddled with her own ringlets.

"The conditions are limited to just inside the mansion? What about the garden or outside the gate, in fact?"

"The garden is fair game, but outside the gates is not. Also, Door Crossing and magic are both forbidden. Since teleporting in Tag would be way too overpowered, and you can't go injuring people with Magic."

"Hmph, that's too big a handicap for Betty, I suppose. Without magic, how will I catch her, in fact."

"Why don'tcha use your head for that one? Try hiding in the shadows, or circling around her. Those same conditions apply to Emilia-tan, so the only thing that will decide victory is underhandedness!"

"If that explanation was meant to give me spirit, then something must be wrong with you, I suppose."

Though weary, Beatrice was also seriously thinking about this contest.

With Door crossing sealed, and without magic either, Beatrice was no more than a simple little girl. Even with the same condition, Emilia had too much physical ability.

However, in a contest of underhandedness, Emilia was certainly the weakest one in the mansion. The reason was her being too honest, but even then, with these rules for Tag, Beatrice had enough chances.

"Fine, in fact. I am in, I suppose. —However, the younger of the twins is forbidden from participating, in fact."

“You noticed?”

“It was obvious, I suppose. Even Betty can see that the physical strength of the Oni race is unbeatable without magic. I must have you allow me to properly draw that one line of precaution, I suppose.”

Exposing Subaru’s craftiness, Beatrice felt proud in crushing that countermeasure of his.

If he denied this condition, Beatrice would reject the contest itself. In the first place, Beatrice’s argument was solid. Subaru had no choice but to stop Rem from participating.

“I will count to one hundred after you leave, then begin chasing you. Puck will remain in the forbidden archive, so if you try to cheat using Door Crossing, we will know immediately.”

“Don’t look down on me, in fact. Something so shameless, is not something I would do, I suppose.”

Confirming their conditions, Beatrice handed Puck to Subaru, who had the kitty he received transmit the fact that the bet was a success to Emilia.

“—Hm, alright. Lia is also raring to go it seems. She started running around the mansion.”

Puck informed them that the conditions had been prepared with a face that made him look like he was about to yawn. In accordance with that, Subaru beckoned Beatrice, and the girl gallantly headed for the door with her skirt fluttering.

“I will end this quickly, so that I may enjoy my tryst with Bubby, in fact.”

Whichever plan could she have made? Beatrice exited the forbidden archive with a wave of her hand. Seeing her off, Subaru began to count numbers out loud.

“Oooone, Twoooo, Threeee, Foooour, Fiiiive…”

Their literal Oni Card called Rem now out of the picture, it seemed Beatrice felt like she had won.

However—If she thought she’d beaten Subaru in underhandedness, unfortunately for her, she was also honest to the point that it’d be easier to count her from the weaker side.

4

The moment she exited Door Crossing, Beatrice confirmed she was standing in front of the dining hall.

Beatrice had the right to choose where it transfers to. The one who chose this exit point was herself. She had confidence as well, that for the sake of her plan, starting here was optimal.

“Well then, let’s go on start searching, and finish this up swiftly, I suppose.”

Her indisposed attitude from before starting was nowhere to be seen. When it came down to the game itself, Beatrice was serious.

Immediately, she began her exploration of the mansion in search of her target: “Emilia. However, right before that, she raised her head at the presence of a person. At the end of the hallway was a blue-haired girl.

A maid who originally was meant to be her strongest rival, the younger of the twins, Rem.

“Beatrice-sama, it seems you accepted the challenge.”

“As you can see, in fact. But, I didn’t acknowledge your participation, I suppose. That man’s trickery doesn’t work on Betty, in fact. He should be heartbroken about his plans being foiled right about now, I suppose.”

“Yes, as expected of Beatrice-sama, you have quite the discerning eye. It would seem you saw through everything Rem was instructed by Subaru to do.”

Rem’s usual expression was mixed with a bit of despondency as she lowered her head. Previously, she wasn’t a girl who would show these kinds of expressions. Whose influence this was from, went without saying.

That was unpleasant, and as such, Beatrice snickered.

“If you’ve learned your lesson, you should stop taking that man’s help, in fact. It is pointless, I suppose.”

“I see then. If Beatrice-sama wins this bet, then I will take it into consideration. But, I really do think Subaru-kun is amazing.”

“—?”

A smile surfacing to her face, Rem praised the foolish Subaru who had gotten his plans foiled. Remembering the sense of unease in her smiling posture, Beatrice raised her eyebrows. It was right after that.

“Tadaaa!” “Tadadaaa!” “Tadadadadaaa!”

Voices suddenly resounded across the mansion along with the sound of doors bursting open one after the other.

That surprise attack made Beatrice’s shoulders jump. She turned around, and the ones who came tumbling out of those open doors were several children she didn’t have any recollection of.

“Wh-Who are they…?”

“They’re children who live in the nearby Earlham Village. They’re very close with Subaru-kun, and readily agreed to cooperate with today as well. Subaru-kun is virtuous as always”

“It’s not the time to be saying that, in fact! Why would you just let human children into the mansion…”

“We received proper permission from Roswaal-sama before he left. The rooms which would pose an issue if entered have been closed off. As such, Beatrice-sama, please also be careful so as to not enter the third floor of the main wing, as well as the personal rooms, changing room, and treasury.”

Rem smoothly appending warnings and precautions left Beatrice speechless. The children, finding the frozen Beatrice, immediately pointed their fingers at her.

“That’s the girl Subaru talked about!” “The shut-in!” “Her dress is cute!”

Thus, confirming their prey, they advanced as a group towards Beatrice. Overwhelmed by their intensity, Beatrice ran to the opposite side of the hallway in a panic.

“By the way, those children are also an It for Beatrice-sama. Do your best running, so as to not get caught.”

Being whispered that by Rem, who was running parallel to her, Beatrice’s face became beet red.

“He…! Was far more devious than Betty had imagined, I suppose!”

Without alluding to the number of Its that would be chasing Beatrice, he let her see him get frustrated at Rem being seen through, pretending that his cards had been taken away, then deployed the children.

With just how much drive had he engaged his guiles for such a trivial bet.

“Go there!” “Catch her!” “Strip her bare!”

While running from the children who were loudly chasing after her, Beatrice continued to single mindedly lay insults on Subaru, who was looking at her with wide nostrils, within her head.

“That bastard will not get away with this, in fact!”

5

And after much of that, Beatrice’s Double Tag reached a fever pitch.

“Ah. It’s Beatrice. I gotta run!”

“I found you, I suppose! You’re not getting away, in fact!”

Finding Emilia in the west wing and chasing her, the difference in nimbleness and stride left her in the dust in the blink of an eye. However, her running was too honest, so if she just circled around her—

“There she is!” “Found her!” “My wife!”

“Those kiddoes are here, I suppose! Just give it up already, in fact!”

However, obstructed by the children who came jumping from her flanks, Beatrice had to roll over and escape. If she overextended and got caught it’d all be for nothing. In addition, the stamina of those children knew no bounds. They were no geniuses, but in the purest of senses their energeticness was a menace, they were a formidable enemy.

“And the brats aren’t the only issue, I suppose…!”

The running Emilia, and the hindering children. Although they were unpredictable in nature, in Tag, they had a weakness called honesty. Rather the problem was…

“—That bastard has still not shown up even once, in fact.”

The one who offered the bet, Subaru, had yet to come out from the Forbidden Archive to tag Beatrice. Beatrice hadn’t caught sight of that wicked form of his even once.

After all, even Beatrice didn’t think she could handle Subaru as easily as the children. Besides losing to him in speed, his eccentric imaginings wouldn’t lose to the children, either.

With just the fact that he crossed her when explaining the rules, Beatrice’s wariness towards Subaru had reached unprecedented levels.

On one hand, she wanted him to come at her, but on the other hand, she didn’t want him to come at her.

The moment she thought like that, her mind had already finely lost, and Beatrice, who was concentrating to her utmost, did not realize that.

“—Hah!”

Going down the stairs in one jump, her skirt fluttered as she made contact with the ground. She firmly stepped onto the rug and broke into a sprint, crossing the passage from the west wing to return to the main wing. And,

“No, I mustn’t!”

Emilia, who just happened to poke her head out of the room ahead, was noticed by Beatrice and began running away. Catching that dancing silver hair, Beatrice sped up, determined to not let her escape.

“You won’t escape anymore, I suppose! Peacefully surrender yourself, in fact!”

“No! I’m having so much fun! I wanna play more! I’ll put in effort!”

“I’m telling you to not put any effort in, I suppose!”

Both of them ran while having their disparaging exchange. As they did so, the sound of their voices was picked up by the children, who appeared from further behind Beatrice.

“There!” “Finally!” “Spotted!” “Victory!”

“Couldn’t be more obnoxious, in fact!”

Oblivious of what Beatrice meant, the children fiercely pursued her.

With Emilia at the head, Beatrice in the middle, and the children chasing her tail, it could be anyone’s game.

In this crystallization of Double Tag, Emilia didn’t run upstairs, but down instead. She jumped all the way down the stairs from the second to first floor, heading not to the east wing, but to the very center of the mansion.

“That’s it, I suppose!”

If she turned just her head around, she’d see that the children at her rear were a fair distance away. The hunter Beatrice was just letting out a victory yell over her catching the rabbit before her eyes, before they caught up to her.

“Ummm, errrr…”

Her eyes darting side to side as she looked around, Emilia thought about where she should run. As if to capitalize on that expression, Beatrice took a chance.

To lead Emilia towards that place, to where she had placed a trap in the center of the main wing—

“Wait, in fact! I won’t let you escape to the dining hall, I suppose!”

"—The dining hall!"

So honest—.

If there was any reason for Emilia's defeat, that reason would indeed have to be that personality of hers.

At Beatrice's yelling, Emilia reflexively thought the dining hall was her means of escape. That honesty of hers made Beatrice, who took advantage of it, feel anxious.

That said, a game was a game. And so long as they were caught in a trap, a rabbit's fate was decided.

"Huh? This is—"

Throwing the dining hall door open, Emilia, who had jumped into the room, could be heard making a dismayed voice. The dining hall she jumped into was the room that was initially connected to the forbidden archive with Door Crossing.

In other words, since she hadn't refreshed Door Crossing, the door to the dining hall was still connected to the forbidden archive. Aside from being cornered in the forbidden archive, Emilia had truly stopped her feet at the unexpected sight.

Bringing down an unmoving prey in your own familiar territory, for a hunter, was a cinch—.

"It would seem, Beatrice was a step… ten steps ahead, in fact!!"

Confirming her victory, Beatrice made a sharp turn and jumped straight into the dining hall—into the forbidden archive. Then her hand reached for the back of Emilia, who had stopped in surprise, and,

"—Welcome!"

"Wha-?!"

The arms that came from the side quickly nabbed Beatrice's body.

Held by both arms from behind, Beatrice's legs hung in the air. Turning around as if wondering what had happened, she locked eyes with the devilishly smiling Subaru.

"Match over~. Sorry but, as you can see, this is Subaru's win, Betty."

Looking at Beatrice, who was being held up, Puck coldly announced that, sitting upon the stepladder.

Off to the side, Emilia had a slightly bitter smile, and the children who caught up began high-fiving each other right outside the room, leaving Beatrice dumbfounded.

"I told you, didn't I? Beatrice"

Adjusting his hold on the wordless Beatrice, Subaru looked at the girl face-to-face.

"—That this was a contest of underhandedness. Did you think you could beat me?"

That smile irritating her, Beatrice drove her knee into Subaru's solar plexus.

6

"From the start, I could imagine you'd use the forbidden archive to entrap Emilia. After all, you have a bit of a habit of using Door Crossing to play with people."

"Grrrr, I suppose…"

Hearing the post-match brief, Beatrice growled in frustration. Finding satisfaction in that vexed face, Subaru rubbed his gouged solar plexus.

—Subaru's strategy regarding Double Tag, was simple.

First, the trap set for the role of the It who would chase Beatrice. The plan was to let her become aware of Rem's existence beforehand, then throw the reinforcements called children at Beatrice, who was in over her head.

With that measure in place, Beatrice's leeway would be taken away, and with the plan to bait her using Emilia, they'd deal the decisive blow.

"I told Emilia your starting point and I had her run into the forbidden archive at the so-called critical moment. All that was left was getting myself in position in the forbidden archive. The moment the hunter is about to hunt their prey, is when the real opening appears."

Beatrice had no words of objection against the proud Subaru's art of war. Since she'd completely danced on top of Subaru's palm, she'd seem like a sore loser no matter what she said.

Hugging her knees on top of the stepladder, she was putting her all into glaring at Subaru.

"But man, what a goof that was. What was that, what was it you said? That Beako was one step…ten steps ahead? Unfortunately for you, I was eleven steps ahead!"

"Cut it out, you're getting quite in over your head, I suppose!"

"babmph!"

Unable to take his boasting anymore, Beatrice's rage exploded, blowing him away with a shockwave. Beatrice snorted at Subaru, who'd hit the wall and bounced.

"I acknowledge your underhandedness, but I have no obligation to endure ridicule, in fact. In the first place, Betty didn't even want to join in on this bet, I suppose. That was…"

"You want to pretend this contest you took part in didn't happen, well isn't that too good for you? Even Puck would get angry and saddened. He'd say "I don't remember raising you like that.""

"You're a really annoying guy, in fact…"

Beatrice, who was trying to throw the entire match out, clicked her tongue at Subaru's impression. However, seeing that stubborn profile, Subaru sighed.

"Well, if you absolutely must refuse, then I guess I won't avoid reconsidering."

"…How lucky I am, I suppose."

"Since you're being childish and all. I also feel a little like I thoroughly destroyed you too hard by going in fully prepared. You just danced so beautifully on the palm of my hand that I accidentally…"

"You too, haven't been made to dance enough with Betty's magic power, in fact?"

Being honest with his own feelings and communicating them a bit too honestly, Subaru made Beatrice discontent.

However, there was some honesty to his feelings there. Of course though, he didn't think the bet itself was a mistake.

"A part of it is that I can't really force you, y'know? While I think I could also make you do it even if you're unwilling, it's kinda like forcing you to do it is a little different from my original intentions."

"You should have said that from the start, I suppose… What you wanted to do, in fact."

"Weeell, it's a mystery even to me. But, I feel like I saw what I wanted to see today with the challenge as a pretext. —Seeing you run around all energetically like that"

"Hmph…"

While sitting cross legged on the floor, Subaru laughed at Beatrice as she pouted.

"You might have been reluctant, but I had fun. I think Emilia-tan and the kiddoes from the village did too. That's not too bad as a compromise."

"Feels like Betty got all the short ends of every stick, I suppose."

"That is that and this is this. Just think of it as a lost cause and give up."

After saying that to the sulking Beatrice, Subaru stood up and headed towards the door of the forbidden archive.

They had thoroughly turned the mansion into a playground. As such, like he'd promised Roswaal, he had to return the mansion to how it was before, or else the scary scary scolding of Ram awaited him.

"Beako"

Just before exiting the room, Subaru turned to Beatrice.

She didn't reply. However, Beatrice gave Subaru a glare so harsh it hurt.

"Let's play again sometime."

Neither affirmation nor denial, none of those actions occurred before Subaru closed the doors.

Door Crossing activated, and Subaru was transferred to the entrance to the dining hall. Both Emilia and Rem were standing right there as Subaru raised both of his hands with a dejected face.

"Hey, good work there."

"Yes, Subaru-kun did good work as well."

"Sorry for troubling you so much, Rem. Like having to deal with the kiddos and stuff, sorry I pushed that on to you. They're annoying and won't listen to anyone, right?"

"That's not the case at all. All of them were very nice and obedient, I gave them some fried snacks as gifts before returning them to the village, but they said they wanted to come again."

"So they treat you way different from me?!"

They acted completely insolent to Subaru, but meek with Rem it seemed. Next time, he'd need to cross examine while doing their daily radio calisthenics.

He also had to give them his gratitude for their cooperation as well.

"So then, were you able to talk with Beatrice properly? She wasn't mad?"

Subaru, who was making a sour face at the attitudes of the children, had Emilia tilt her neck at him in a puzzled manner as if wanting to know more. Her gaze, fixed on the dining hall doors, focused on the forbidden archive beyond them.

"For the time being, it seems like she admitted to the results of the match…but seems like the result of the bet is in a delicate spot. I also considered that kind of secondary as well."

"Is that so? Then, what did you do the game of tag for?"

"Well, that was to play. I thought to show that unhealthy shut-in little girl about the fun of running around with your all together with kids your age. In that sense, I think it went well."

Subaru, winking playfully, made Emilia make a bit of a surprised face. But, soon enough, she sighed in a dumbfounded manner and smiled.

"Yes, that's right. Beatrice surely also had fun. After all, I had toooons of fun."

"That's what's most important… So then, all that's left is to do the clean-up after the festival."

Fascinated by Emilia's smile, Subaru scratched his cheek, as if to hide his embarrassment. Doing so, Rem pulled lightly on Subaru's sleeve.

"The clean-up is important, but first let's have a short rest. Roswaal-sama and Nee-sama's return is tomorrow night, after all. There is still plenty of time."

“Right, Rem prepared some fried snacks. Let’s have a bit of teatime and do the clean up after that. The truth is that I would also have liked to invite Beatrice though…”

“Aaah, she’d probably, decline…I guess?”

“In that case, I’ll have Puck bring her over. Then we’d be even.”

Her fouled humor might get a little better if Puck entertained her. But It’s hard to think that Emilia’s proposal had that kind of selfish motive.

“So then, Subaru-kun, let’s go.”

“Yeah yeah, let’s go.”

“I get it I get it. We also shouldn’t cut corners from being in a rush and end up scolded by Ram.”

The reason behind their somewhat high spirits was perhaps because this day was meaningful to them both. If that was the case, it was worth it for Subaru to have worked his guiles.

“It’d be nice, if you could also think the same.”

While thinking of the girl who wasn’t here, Subaru muttered that to himself. Then, the dining hall doors, which were letting out a sweet fragrance, gently opened.

7

By the time they finished the clean up after the game of tag, around a whole day had passed—when the master of the mansion’s return was close at hand.

“Those brats, they did go at it relentlessly, didn’t they?”

“It’s good they did not break anything. Since we did gather everything that could be broken by the children in one place beforehand”

“Ah, good work you two! I’m sorry I could only help you until halfway through.”

Subaru, who was rolling his shoulders, and the smiling Rem next to him, had both come to the entrance hall. While doing so, Emilia, who was coming down the stairs, reunited with the pair, joining them as they stood in the hall.

“But even then, having even Emilia-tan coming to welcome him, just how blessed can Roschi get?”

“Really? But, after hearing what Subaru said yesterday I thought that it’s something important to do. While I didn’t really think about it that hard before, I thought from now on I wanted to do it earnestly.”

“I-It’s not something you have to put that much effort and thought into, so do it in moderation ok?”

Gripping her fist, the awfully spirited Emilia gave a wry laugh. Her honest and serious side was too quickly affected by a little idealism.

It happened as they were having their usual exchange.

“…”

Suddenly, the sound of someone’s footsteps entered the ears of all three of them. They sounded small, and even somewhat hesitant, when the three of them realized their origin, their eyes went wide in surprise, and each of them laughed.

The person behind the footsteps approached the three of them without saying a word, then spilled out a defeated sigh.

Without touching on the reason at all, the three of them accepted the small silhouette as a fourth member.

“…”

No one said anything about the silhouette joining in. They all simply naturally understood that things were as they should be.

Time quietly passed. Eventually, the entrance doors opened up with talking voices—

"—Welcome back."

Thus, the three cheerful voices overlapped with a single more reserved voice, and greeted the lord of the manor.

Some Like it Cold

1

—It was a very slight omen for change.

Rem: “Good morning, Subaru-kun.”

Subaru: “Ahfu, good morning. …Hey, Rem. It’s a bit cold today, don’t you think?”

Rem: “I think so. It might be a bit chilly this morning. As expected of Subaru-kun, such keen insight.”

Subaru: “Well anyone would at least recognize cold weather…”

Subaru hurriedly made the topic into a talk about the temperature with Rem, who he met at the corridor early in the morning in the Roswaal residence. It was still morning, but the air was a lot colder than before. Yesterday it was hot enough to bring out sweat, but there was quite the difference in temperature throughout the night.

Subaru closes the front of his uniform to combat that coldness, buttoning his shirt all the way up to its collar.

Subaru: “I don’t feel so concerned about my matter with the cold when I see your appearance, Rem. Do you not have any seasonal maid outfits? That outfit would be rough in this weather.”

Rem: “If we get fully into ice season, there are maid outfits for the cold season. The material is thick and there’s cotton stuffed in it, so it’s very warm.”

Rem responds like that while wearing her usual maid outfit with a smile. It had a design where her shoulders and legs were boldly exposed. The excessive skin shown that would normally be a joy to see was cold now.

By the way, ice season is a way to denote a season with cold weather that is similar to winter. On the contrary, it seemed that hot seasons were denoted as “fire seasons”, and that there were changes with how people referred the four seasons in this world.

Subaru: “However, shouldn’t you wear ice season clothes with this type of cold instead? If you have trouble proposing that change, then I’ll make the direct appeal to Ros-chi.”

Rem: “I’m happy about you worrying about me, but my sister and I are already used to it, so it’s fine. This is not something you need to bother Roswaal for.”

Rem shook her head firmly in response to Subaru’s concern. He couldn’t understand her once again, but he held back on voicing his opinion.

Subaru: “Well, if you say so, Rem…by the way, where’s Nee-sama? Not with you this morning?”

Rem: “Nope. Nee-sama is sleeping in a bit, as it seems she doesn’t want to get out of bed with the morning being cold.”

Subaru: “Didn’t you just say you and Nee-sama were used to it?!”

Subaru imagines how Ram is being cozy in her bed by herself at this moment, and lets out a sigh as he feels an obligation to punish the older sister, who is spoiled with her younger sister’s mercy.

Subaru: “You don’t need this. It doesn’t matter if it’s cold or hot. I’m going to hammer the fact that there are no breaks for residential maids into Nee-sama’s head. Let’s go, Rem.”

Rem: “But Nee-sama is tired from her daily work, so sleeping in on the occasional cold day isn’t that…”

Subaru: “Let’s go, Rem!”

Rem: “Yes, if Subaru-kun says so!”

Rem’s has a change in heart within an instant, and she casually follows Subaru from behind, who starts walking with his arms waving. And in the end, he got stuck with doing work for this day while receiving resentful complaints from Ram, who was dragged out from her futon, being blown on by the cold breeze as well.

2

—And then came the day after he experienced the coldness of Ram's attitude and the cold wind.

Subaru: "Afu…Not only am I sleepy, but it's also the cold seas…oh, what the, Beako?"

Beatrice: "Yuck, I suppose."

When Subaru woke up and exited the corridor, he came across a rare sight of a young lady wearing a dress, walking in the empty corridor—he happened to meet Beatrice.

This was a girl with magnificent drills that greatly stood out, who didn't turn around even though she was the second person to walk around in the mansion sneakily—the first person obviously being the head of the mansion.

Subaru: "What are you doing up this early in the morning? There's no way you stayed up all night, right? If you do nothing but stay up late, you'll stop getting taller, plus your eyes will go bad if you read in the dark."

Beatrice: "That's an unusual and nosy warning. My height and eyesight have nothing to do with…I don't have time to mess around with you in the first place, I suppose. Now, go get lost."

Subaru: "Fine fine. Putting that aside, isn't today really cold? Yesterday was kinda cold too, but today is even colde…"

Beatrice: "You don't get anything, I suppose! I told you I'm not going to play around with you!"

Subaru tries to compromise with the shouting girl, Beatrice, while shrugging his shoulders at the coldness that was more intense than yesterday. She gave him a nasty look, but Subaru did not pay attention to it, as he sniffs up mucus with his nose.

The reason for the tension in the atmosphere was because of the freezing cold wind that came blowing in every now and then. It even looked as if the leaves swaying with the wind, seen in the dim and cloudy view out the window, were in pain.

Subaru: “It’s easy to catch a cold when the seasons change, so be careful.”

Beatrice: “Hmm. It’s pointless to worry that much about me. I’m not that weak enough to have you worry about me. Don’t get too full of yourself, I suppose.”

Subaru: “Worrying about you…or rather, taking care of you if you catch a cold sounds like a pain. I feel bad for Rem when I think about her not coming across your room easily and having the porridge she made become cold as a result. At least be admirable when you catch a cold. You sure aren’t a cute loli.”

Beatrice: “Why must you complain to me for the results of your hypothetical outcomes?!”

Beatrice was blamed with his imaginations, and she angrily resents him for it. She quickly puffs up her face, turns towards Subaru, and swipes her hand as if she was shooing away an insect.

Beatrice: “Anyways, I am very busy. You go ahead and burn yourself out with the things you need to do while you risk your life, not caring about whether it’s cold or not cold, I suppose.”

Subaru: “That’s bull. Saying you’re busy when you’re someone who just reads books in her room…oh, that’s right.”

Beatrice: “…I’m leaving now.”

Subaru: “You should help out with the work at the mansion sometimes too. You’ll shrug off the cold if you move your body, and there will be less worry about getting a cold from insufficient exercise. It’s killing two birds with one stone, yeah!”

Subaru makes this suggestion with a smile as he holds onto the shoulder of the girl who sought to turn his back on him, Beatrice. In response, Beatrice turns around with a displeased look and says

Beatrice: “…Let go of me, I suppose. How many times do I have to tell you that I am busy? Don’t make me repeat myself.”

Subaru: “Okay okay, I get it I get it. I’ll talk to Roswaal so that you get the proper money for your portion of work, so help out with stuff such as weeding the garden like a kid.”

Beatrice: “Wh-Wha?! I cannot believe you think that I am puffing up because of a reason like that! Also, listen to what I am saying, I suppose! Listen! Seriously, stop screwing around with me!”

Subaru picks up the girl with a reddening face, Beatrice, and took her away as he started to walk while she acts violently against him. She was resisting it, but today she surprisingly wasn’t using any magic to counterattack.

The insufficient part of her resistance was convenient for him, though that was a bit of a miracle.

Subaru: “Aaalright, time to run! Let’s knock out this coldness at full spirit!”

Beatrice: “Once I get down, the first thing I’ll knock out is you, I suppose!”

Subaru shouts at Beatrice, who erupts in anger, and cheerfully ran over to the mansion’s corridor.

The sound of Beatrice’s screechy, angry voice continued to be heard throughout the mansion throughout the rest of the day.

3

—And then came the day after he played with around with Beatrice.

Roswaal: “Ooooh, look what we have here. You’re up early, Subaru-kun.”

Subaru: “Oh…ohh…it’s Ros-chi. Goo…good mor…good morning…”

There was no day that resembled a day off for an employee’s work.

Subaru met the head of the mansion early in the morning at the corridor—the chief of the Roswaal Mathers' estate.

As always, his face was applied with clown makeup. This eccentric noble was doing his usual patrolling today as well.

His heterochromatic eyes—Subaru receives a look from his blue and yellow eyes. Once he exchanged morning greetings with him while shivering, his cracking head and cheeks stiffen, and he looked out the window.

Roswaal tilts his head curiously at Subaru's appearance.

Roswaal: "Doesn't look like you're in a very good mood this morning, huuuh. What happened?"

Subaru: "Nothing happened. It's just that it's cold!"

Subaru listens to him say something undeniable and breathed out foggy breath as he talked big.

It was cold, too cold. Subaru tramples on the bed in this cold that was extreme enough to to freeze his own mucus.

Subaru: "No matter how you look at it, this weather is too abnormal! I thought that it was just my imagination up until yesterday…but clearly that's not the case today! The windows are frozen, and my breath is pure white!"

Subaru pointed his fingers at the frozen window. He had countless blankets wrapped around his body. He had his steward clothes on top of his night jersey. It was a style that completely insulted the style of royalties. Even when he was wearing these clothes, the chills were eating away Subaru's life through the openings of them.

Subaru: "The hell is up with this?! Does the change in season really come at us with such sudden force? The temperature has been going down 10 degrees each day these past 2 days! Even a bear would freeze to death from not being in time for hibernation being attacked by the cold with this kind of force!"

Roswaal: "My oh my, you are weeaak. Can you not do "that"? "By keeping myself up with my mind and body, just how much would the temperature go down, my presence of mind speaks”□□□”

Subaru: “Don’t see myself being convinced with you wearing those fluffy clothes and fur, though.”

Roswaal talked about the force of will, but he appeared to be perfectly protected against the cold, so he wasn’t convincing. He wore layers of arctic clothes of thick fur, and they looked as if they would even allow him to bear the intense cold of snowy mountains.

Subaru: “At this rate the difference in protection against the cold is so great that it wouldn’t be unthinkable for it to be a reason for murder…sniffle”

Roswaal: “Seeing you sniffle with a sinister look like that certainly indicates that you’re just about at your limits, huuuh. I overlooked the cold up until yesterday, but as expected, this is a bit…”

Subaru: “Judging from the way you’re talking about it, do you know why it’s this cold? If so, then let’s do something about it. If the source of this is some sort of witchbeast like “Jack Frost”, then let’s exterminate it. Let’s do it ASAP too. Sensei, please sniffle”

Subaru instigates him to join in with his idea little by little, as Roswaal puts his hand on his chin. He was just about at his limit with his drooping mucus and his frozen train of thought. He was reaching the point where he’d be capable of causing a moral hazard by taking everyone else’s clothes off.

Roswaal: “Subaru-kun, are you peerhaaaps pretty bad with cold weather?”

Subaru: “I complain about winter being cold, summer being hot, spring making me sleepy, and about matsutake mushrooms being expensive in the fall. I’m the classic example of a weakling, sniffle.”

Roswaal: “Don’t know what matsutake mushrooms are, but I’m understanding that you are a young man with very short patience. If that’s so, then there’s nothing that can be done about it. We aren’t going to go complain.”

Roswaal waves his fur mantle and starts to walk as if to guide Subaru, who followed him. Subaru steps on the long fur carpet and squints to look out the clouded window.

Roswaal: “Interested in what’s out there?”

Subaru: “No, I’m not. I wasn’t raised in a snow country, so I’m not well informed on this, but I wouldn’t be surprised if we were to have snow with it being just this cold. See, I’m worried about clearing the snow on the village’s fields, if we were to have snow that is.”

He’s been told that it’s almost time for the harvesting of the fields for the Alam village near the mansion.

Subaru, being someone who was intimate with the villagers, had made a promise with the children to help with the season’s harvest. Even without that promise, snow was not welcoming weather for it.

Roswaal: “Subaru-kun you…get along particularly well with children, huuuh.”

Subaru: “Just a coincidence. Besides, I’m not fond of those selfish, rash creatures called kids. However, they hug me, so it can’t be helped…”

Roswaal: “Yes yes, that’s what’s commonly known as being “tsun tsun” back at Subaru-kun’s home town, riiiight.”

Subaru: “sniffle! Ahh, shit, my noseee! snifflesniffle! Oh shitt!”

Subaru uttered inconvenient words and sniffled to force a cover up. Roswaal overlooks that with suppressed laughter and traced the window with the finger of his held out hand.

Roswaal: “Well, have no worry; it is this cold, but it shouldn’t reach all the way to the village. Since after all, this chill is only around the area of the mansion.”

Subaru: “I can’t relax! What is up with that mysterious phenomenon? Do we just assume it’ll sort itself out?!”

Roswaal: “This cold won’t spread, since there are two girls who went around and dealt with it. I wonder if they did it sneakily before they got caught by you yesterday.”

Subaru: “…Talking about Beatrice and such?”

Roswaal’s words cause him to remember Beatrice’s strange behavior from yesterday. He didn’t know what she was doing since early morning, but perhaps she was decreasing the amount of damage from the chill.

If that was the truth, the person she was helping would be—

Roswaal: “I don’t need to explain who is the source for this cold, do Iiii?”

Roswaal, who was guiding him, stopped walking at the same time Subaru arrived at an answer.

Subaru was very familiar with the the room of the Roswaal’s residence west wing’s top floor that was right before his eyes. This is because this was a place he’d visit once without fail during the day to see the room’s owner.

Roswaal: “Emilia-sama, sorry to intrude you this early in the morning. Can we come in for a biiiit?”

Emilia: “—?! Roswaal?! Uhh, uhh, hey wait! Wait!”

When Roswaal called out at the door, they heard rushing sounds from the room as a voice responded to them.

It was a silver bell like voice that Subaru knew even beyond the door, but it caused him to show that he felt very conspicuous disturbance and uneasiness. He felt uncomfortable. He also felt uncomfortable about the owner of the room being up at this time.

They spent several weeks under the same roof. She wasn’t very good at waking up.

Roswaal: “Suuubaru-kun”

Roswaal calls Subaru’s name, who was knitting his eyebrows, and pointed at the room’s doorknob. Surely he wasn’t asking him to open the door, was he? Subaru reaches out for the doorknob while having doubt in his mind.

Subaru: “It’s cold! What is up with this thing?! Emilia-tan, can we come in?!”

Emilia: “Eh?! What, Subaru’s here too?!”

Subaru: “I am here, but you didn’t pay attention to what I said. You have something else to say, don’t you?!”

Emilia: “Something to say…something to say? …Good morning?”

Subaru: “How polite of you to greet…wait no! Ahh, dammit, I’m opening the door!”

The doorknob he felt was so chilled to the point that he thought that he was feeling ice. It was highly likely that there would be an even more intense chill within the room, considering how cold the doorknob was.

Subaru: “I’m coming in! If you are in the middle of changing your clothes, then thanks!”

Emilia: “Not “sorry”?!”

Subaru opens the door to the room, having both his concern and secret intentions come out at the same time. The door had a resistant that made a sound, which sounded as if it was coming off from the floor, and once that happened, the blocked cold wind came overflowing from the room.

Subaru: “No wayy! It’s coldd!! Whatt is the meaning of this?!”

Subaru shrieks at the cold wave that was beyond his expectations and looks inside the room with an astonished look in his eyes. Upon looking inside, he saw Emilia against the bed with both hands held out as she stood still.

Her face quickly blushes, and while she used the bed to hide that from Subaru he says

Subaru: “Emilia-tan, just what is…”

Emilia: “Yo-You can’t just do that! For you to enter without getting permission from the owner of the room first, that’s just rude…yes that’s reeaally rude, right? See, um, hey, do it again!”

Subaru: “And that’s what Emilia-tan says, but what does the owner of the mansion have to say about it?”

Roswaal: “I grant you permission to enteeer.”

Emilia: “Roswaal!”

Subaru pushes aside Emilia’s request with sophistry and stepped into the room.

The source of the cold wave was without a doubt the inside of this room. It’s identity was made clear from Roswaal’s evidence, Beatrice’s actions, and from Emilia’s childlike attitude of trying to cover up the mischief.

Subaru: “Where is Puck, the source of all this? I have a bone to pick with him, as someone who is a representative for those sensitive to cold.”

Emilia: “The source? What do you mean by source? He didn’t do any…er weelll, that’s not really right, but I don’t know.”

Puck: “—It’s fine, Lia. No matter what you do, it seems this is about the limit for hiding it, soo.”

She was bad at realizing it was time to give up and acted flustered, but what helped Emilia out of the situation, someone who couldn’t make tricky lies, was the resignation of none other than the perpetrator of the riot himself.

In response to that voice, Emilia ruffles her eyebrows, turns around at the bed, and puts her hands on her waist.

Emilia: “Jeez, Puck you idiot! I was so close to fooling them too…”

Puck: “Eh, it would’ve been impossible even after 100 years.”

Emilia: “Eh?!”

Putting aside Emilia, who was unironically surprised, Subaru takes a peek at the bed behind her. The spirit who was behind the case for the cold wave was circling around on top of the blanket.

Subaru: “You really do seem like a cat when you do that.”

Puck: “Mmm, sorry for causing trouble.”

The grey furball moves himself around in response to being called out to, and his black, round eyes look at Subaru. The kitten that was small enough to hold on one’s hand, Puck, shrugs his shoulders, gives a wry smile at Emilia, and says,

Puck: “Don’t get mad at Lia and Betty, okay? You two, think of this as something I did for myself.”

And that is how he covered up for his beloved daughter and younger sister with care.

4

Subaru: “Magicletting Period?”

Subaru puzzles over the unfamiliar word with a frown on his face.

He was at the Roswaal’s residence’s dining room, and all of them were gathered together. Everyone was surrounding Puck, who was on top of the table, including Ram, who was bad at getting up, and Beatrice, who tried to run away.

There was another source for the cold wave that was had these past few days, not just Puck. Just what had they found out here? What popped up into the conversation as an additional source was the start of the “Magicletting Period”, some particular vocabulary.

Subaru: “What is the Magicletting Period? It’s not just a mating season?”

Puck: “I’m not an animal, and I don’t have something like a mating season. That’s rude.”

Subaru: “That comment worries me from all angles.”

Subaru turns to his surroundings with a bewildered face in response to Puck, who was washing his face with an exposed appearance of a cat. Once he did this, the person who raised her hand at his glance with a “yes” was Rem.

Rem was in a maid outfit for ice season, which she hadn’t used until yesterday. There was a lot less exposure in this outfit, but even then, looking at the legs exposed with the short skirt made him feel chilly. It was common for him to not understand the mentality of a girl wearing a skirt in winter, even when he crossed into this world.

Rem: “The Magicletting Period is a phenomenon that happens periodically just for the existences that have strong magical power. Each of their od for the strength of their magical power—the od influences the attributes of the magical stones, so it’s really limiting.”

Subaru: “Is od once again something that is different from mana and gate?”

As far as Subaru’s knowledge went, mana was the source for the magical power of this world. Gate is the organ that circulates mana inside and outside the body, and it seemed that gate had a direct relation to the quality of a sorcerer’s attributes.

Incidentally, Subaru’s attributes as a magic user were mediocre. To make matters worse, as of now, he’s been firmly told to not use magic because of how he allowed himself to use his gate unreasonably.

Subaru: “Judging from what Rem said, I’m guessing od is more important than mana and gate?”

Ram: “—That ignorance is enough to become a crime against Roswaal, you being the employee that you are.”

And then Ram let out a blunt sigh at Subaru, who said something that showed his shallow understanding of magic. Ram was next to Rem, bundled up in even thicker clothes. She makes a scowling expression with her light pink eyes and says,

Ram: “I’m questioning your common sense now that you’ve said that you don’t know about od. You’ve reached an extreme level of imprudent shallowness, Barusu.”

She always abused him with her words, but they were even sharper in this cold wave. Ram scolded Subaru with her look, holding onto her sister’s arm to keep herself warm while she breathed foggy breath.

However, unlike Rem, she had cute earmuffs on, so her look had no effect.

Subaru: “I’ve thought this since the day before yesterday, but Nee-sama is really bad with the cold, huh.”

Ram: “Weak points and strong points are entirely subjective matters. I do not live life while seeing things with a narrow outlook like that. Stop saying oblivious things, it’s stupid. Go die.”

Subaru: “The second half of your statement was piercing!”

Beatrice: “This is just the usual, but leaving this up to you guys wouldn’t really allow the conversation move forward, I suppose…”

The impatient girl, Beatrice, sees the exchange between Subaru, who didn’t forget to provoke her even in this cold, and Ram, who was displeased, and forces her way into the conversation. She wore her usual dress as she pointed her finger at Subaru.

Beatrice: “It can’t be helped, so I will give an explanation. od is a life stone…it’s a source of magical power that spirits, humans, witchbeasts, and any other type of life have within them, no doubt about it, I suppose. od is like a type of vessel for magical power, so it’s also an organ that saves up the mana taken in from gate.”

Subaru: “Hmmm, a vessel that stockpiles magic. Go ahead and continue.”

Beatrice: “The way you’re speaking irritates me, I suppose… Anyways, we’re dealing with a great amount of mana of outstanding od. However, there’s a limit to any type of vessel’s capacity, I suppose. And the mana that overflows because of the od meeting its limit…it’s necessary to emit it before that happens.”

Subaru: “Bring it out before your stomach explodes inside, huh. … So something like constipation?”

Beatrice: “Think about how you word it, I suppose!”

As Beatrice finishes her explanation, she resents Subaru, who interpreted what she said in his own way. However, he was now able to understand the details of the riot that happened thanks to her.

Subaru: “In other words, it’s this cold because of Puck letting out his saved up mana.”

Emilia: “…Yeah, that’s what it is. Sorry for not saying anything about it.”

The truth of the situation becomes clear. Emilia hung her head in despondence. Subaru sees Emilia’s behavior of taking responsibility for this pet cat’s actions as a guardian and gave a side glance to Puck, the war criminal. Then he says

Subaru: “That’s some bothersome reduction of constipation…is it something that’s done regularly?”

Puck: “About once a year. I let it out moderately when I lived with Lia in the forest. However, you guys may be having these reactions because of how I’ve been quiet about the matter ever since I came here. Tehehe”

Subaru: “Don’t you “tehehe” me!”

Subaru makes a face of astonishment at the cat that let out a shy laugh. After that, he folded his arms and continues.

Subaru: “Well, I won’t complain because it’s necessary for you to let out your magical power. But why did the effects of it suddenly get stronger these past three days? There are other ways to do it, aren’t there?”

Puck: “Hmmm, I was being careful about it’s effects and did it little by little since the start. However, considering how the amount of mana was greater than usual, and how I thought that nobody would say anything even when it got cold, I thought to myself “Hmm? I wonder if I can do it a little more? Alright, I can I can! Everyone is surprisingly simple to deal with!”…”

Subaru: “You are careless with your work!”

Just when he thought this was perhaps due to circumstances beyond his control, it was actually the result of simple negligence.

In any case, the peculiarity from sensing the temperature lower 10 degrees each day is something anyone would notice. Thinking about how this chilling cold was a result of Puck getting carried away with himself caused displeasure to grow.

Beatrice: “It is essential for a great spirit like Bubby to go through the Magicletting Period. Out of consideration for Bubby’s cuteness and hairiness, put a stop to this meaningless noise, I suppose. sniffle”

Subaru: “You’re having the sniffles too! Or rather, I thought you’d be in a pickle too once this got found out, but you played a trick and put on a barrier to trap the coldness. Am I right? Tell me the truth!”

Beatrice: “Bffft. I have no clue what you’re talking about.”

Subaru: “You just blew your nose!”

The top of Beatrice’s nose became red, but she still continued to defend Puck. When Subaru became dumbfounded by the obstinate girl’s attitude, Emilia took his place and came into the conversation with a “Wait”.

Emilia: “You see, Puck and I have been reeaally thinking about the incident that happened. However, Puck should've been close to finishing his Magicletting Period…right Puck?"

Puck: "Yeah. At the same pace, about three days would've been enough."

Subaru: "We wouldn't be prepared for that! If it got cold at this pace, we would fall over from freezing to death!"

Puck wasn't being serious enough about the matter, considering how he was the one responsible for it. It seemed like Puck did not feel the coldness himself, and so he kind of felt like it was something they'd have to deal with themselves.

Subaru: "By the way, I wasn't worried about Puck because he's a spirit and has fur that combats the cold, but aren't you cold with such thin clothing, Emilia-tan? I want to see Emilia-tan with fluffy thick clothes."

He showed his true motive with the last part of his words, but the first part was him seriously worrying about Emilia. Emilia was wearing the thin dress that she always wore, even in this cold.

In response to Subaru's point, Emilia looked down with an increasingly apologetic look.

Emilia: "Well um, I am contracted with Puck, you know? Which is why the effects from receiving Puck's magic are kept in control. So, that's why um, I am umm, good with this cold…"

Emilia becomes more and more apologetic, and the assumptive girl looked as if she got smaller. She was acting self punishing a lot this time partly and seemingly because of how she felt guilty about how she was fine with the cold.

The pricks of her conscience would be scathing if she were the only one to avoid damage because her parent's uproar.

Subaru: "Isn't it a bit pitiful to cause this much trouble for your daughter? Let's think of something to do about it."

Puck: "I get it okay, I'm sorry. Even I think it would be nice if there was another method, but did you think of something? I'm fine with using all of my mana."

Subaru: "How about you shoot some relevantly powerful magic into the sky?"

Puck: "In other words, you're giving me "that"? The permission to cause destruction and destroy this wor—"

Subaru: "Not giving you that."

Puck: "Just kidding~"

Be it a natural disaster or destroying the world, the exchange was aloof, even if it was a joke. Subaru had a feeling that he wouldn't receive a satisfactory response if he tried to carelessly affirm it, so he held back on speaking rashly for a bit.

Ram: "But the problem with this cold is the hindrance it causes for work. The efficiency of my work has actually gone down remarkably these past three days."

Subaru: "Well if you don't get out of bed, then yeah I'd think your efficiency would drop. Is this Magicletting Period only related to spirits? How about powerful magic users…like Ros-chi and Beako?"

If it included powerful magic users, then they shouldn't be exceptions either. After he tried to take a stab at his interest, Roswaal shrugged his shoulders, and Beatrice was fixing her drills.

Roswaal: "In my case, I use my magical power daily and keep it in check. I have my everyday business to take care of, so my od is always fine."

Subaru: "Why is it that in your everyday business Ram…ah, forget about it. I don't want to know."

In response to Roswaal's side glance, Ram blushes and looks downward. If the suspiciously inappropriate relationship between the head of the mansion and the maid was close to what he thought it was, it would be vivid to him and he wouldn't want to know about it.

Beatrice: “I do fine with my preservation of the forbidden archives and my “door crossing”, I suppose. Yes yes, and lately it’s been useful for striking a loud mouthed human.”

Subaru: “Yeah yeah, cute cute.”

Subaru brushes off her provocation, ignores the pouting girl, and looked at Emilia and Rem.

Subaru: “Then how about Emilia and the others? Mating season…er I mean Magicletting Period, do you guys not have that?”

Rem: “The demonic commending period is only limited to magical powerful attributes that are strong enough to outbreak, so…”

Emilia: “Myself as well, as a magic user, the demonic commending period doesn’t really seem to be related to me…ah, but there were plenty of experiences through Puck. So I’m sorry for this incident. I regret it…”

Subaru: “Emilia-tan sure is joking a lot with her masochism today!”

She had an honest and serious personality, but as for today, it was backfiring on her. This was the one time where Subaru would take the place of the calm faced little girl that they were holding as a criminal and would have no choice but to pitch in and help.

Subaru: “Alright, then I guess I’ve got no choice but to give it what I’ve got and look for a solution. First of all, when was the most recent time you used magic while feeling good about it?”

Puck: “If we’re talking about recently, then it might be when I used it to fight against a wicked girl at the king’s capital. I used enough to soak up all my mana.”

Subaru: “The motivation that just came to me is coming out because of the faded wound of my stomach!”

He had a memory of when he suffered damage from “guts hunting” and had gripping pain from the scar he received just a month ago. This was just to let out magical power, so it was impossible to energetically prepare a dangerous opponent like that.

Puck: “If that can’t count, then maybe it was at the forest when Roswaal came to see Lia. It’s embarrassing to admit it, but I do feel like it was very enjoyable.”

Roswaal: “Ahhh, that certainly was exciting. That might’ve been the first time in my life I experienced a magical battle of that scale, perhaaaps.”

Puck: “I did surprise you because it was sudden without an appointment. Hahaha”

Roswaal: “Well we seriously did clash with each other for the whole day and night, after aalll.”

They were casually laughing with each other, but contrary to the atmosphere, the truth was that it was very dangerous. If these two really did compete with each other like they said, it would be so catastrophic that you’d call it “Apocalypse Now”.

Emilia: “After that, I heard that the map had to be rewritten, but…”

Subaru: “Okay, that’s out too! I reject the strategy of writing a formidable enemy as a “friend”!”

Emilia: “Eh?!”

Subaru: “Don’t give me that! Don’t change the topography because of a fight! Apologize to Inou Tadataka!”

Emilia: “I am sorryyy Tadataka-san. Am I fine now?”

Subaru gets her to apologize to the great man who created a map, and then gets worried from realizing how this was a more difficult challenge than he thought it’d be. He wanted Emilia to lend him knowledge if she could, being someone who had an abundance of experience, but

Emilia: “Puck didn’t really bother anyone when I was with him at the forest, and I didn’t really think the Magicletting Period was that much of a problem. And so I was in a pickle…”

Subaru: “And then these few days are the result of worrying. I understand your feelings of wanting to do something yourself, Emilia-tan, but that's when everyone else…that's when it's okay for you to rely on everyone, myself in particular."

It didn't feel bad to rely on someone. That was something that was even more relevant if it was Emilia. Next there would be Rem, sometimes Ram, then Beatrice and Puck, and it would be okay to add Roswaal to that list too. Then also the villagers, the children, and—wait, isn't that surprisingly a lot of people?

It seemed that he had increased the amount of acquaintances he had in this world. If that was the case, he wanted to take care of those bonds.

Subaru: "If the world turned into ruins and a journey begins to defeat the devil king Puck, it would be troublesome…When it comes to peacefully making temporary measurements, we could… oh that's right."

Emilia: "—! Subaru, did you think of something weird again?"

Rem: "As expected of Subaru-kun. I am impressed."

Subaru: "Those expectations are false starts!"

Subaru gives a wry smile at Emilia, who got her teeth into the matter, and Rem, who was making quick judgements. He walks up to the dining room's window completely filled with clouds, rubs the window with his palm, and looks towards the mansion's courtyard.

Subaru: "The coldness is restricted to this mansion because of Beako's barrier, huh."

Beatrice: "That's right, I suppose. If the chill escapes to anywhere besides the building, then the garden trees and the flower beds would become pitiful. That's why I kept the barrier at a moderate extent, I suppose."

Subaru: "I see you show consideration for the garden. I'll sincerely give you my props for that one. …By the way, about the barrier, can you tamper with the barrier even now? If you can, then I have a request for you."

Beatrice: “There’s nothing I can’t do, I suppose. However, what do you want to do?”

Subaru: “Fufufu, something that is interesting, fun, and crosses over the Magicletting Period, of course.”

Subaru snaps his his fingers with one hand while having the other touching the window, and then points at the ceiling. Roswaal was the only one who had one of his eyes closed while chuckling, while everyone else responded to that gesture by opening their eyes wide.

While having Subaru’s figure reflecting in his yellow eye he says

Roswaal: “I won’t object something that seems interesting. I also had great interest in the spiritism from a few days ago, after aalll. And so, what do you have planned for this mansion and the great spirit’s Magicletting Period? I wonder.”

Subaru: “I’ll write out the formulation of the plan and I’ll read the project. Back at Hokkaido of my hometown…there are notes about my home town in a broad sense, but it’s a festival of that hometown. Let’s squander the rest of Puck’s mana in a grand way.”

What came to Subaru’s mind was a snowscape festival that has only been seen on TV. It was a grand festival held in white snow countries, and borrowing the name from its pioneers he would call it—

Subaru: “The first chitty chitty—the holding of the Roswaal residence’s snow festival!”

“…”

He had a decisive look with his thumb put up and his teeth sparkling. Everyone responds to Subaru’s announcement by holding their breath.

Emilia: “Chitty chitty snow festival…”

Emilia heard that name, says it again, and then tilted her head.

Then—

Emilia: “Do we need…that chitty chitty part?”

—She let just the adoption of that part pass by her, and then he would begin to work out the details for the snow festival.

5

And with this and that, the plan suddenly headed towards implementation, progression is made—

Subaru: “Alright, it’s begun. The first snow festival! Everyone, do you all want to go to New York—?!”

Everyone: “Ye-Yeahh…!…?”

Voices of approval raised sparsely in response to Subaru’s spirit, who was leading a meeting in front of the public.

Subaru wasn’t having much results with their spirit, but he didn’t mind it, as he gazed at the scenery before him. To Subaru and the people he had on board with his plan, the first thing to take care of was making the festival have a fun atmosphere.

Currently, Subaru and the others viewed the Roswaal residence’s front garden that became a snowy landscape, and on it there was a great number of people. To be specific, the people that were gathered were mainly the residents of the Alam village.

The villagers had ice season clothes to protect themselves against the unreasonable cold, but they had something more than displeasure against the coldness on their facial expressions. Something was standing out vaguely.

Festival—it was because the unspirited people had roughly no reaction to that one word.

Puck: “Nevertheless, for this to be a snow festival…Subaru’s ideas surprise me as always.”

And then the one who made his appearance was Puck, who came out from being rolled up in Subaru’s scarf. The one who used his remaining mana to create this landscape gazes at the festivals participants and caresses his whiskers.

Subaru: “In regards to not using up resources wastefully, you cannot make light of modern people who lived through the days of gluttony. At any rate, if you can’t hide it, you might as well have a party.”

Puck: “I didn’t think this would become a party. Humans complain about it getting colder, and yet they don’t complain about the snow. It sure is hard to understand how you guys think.”

Subaru: “It is like a natural calamity, but humans do have this habit of getting excited at snow and typhoons.”

Puck: “Hmm, yeah that is confusing.”

Even when Puck heard Subaru’s explanation, he tilted his head in confusion.

Humans were beings that wanted to do stupid things every now and then, although a paranormal being like him may not have understood it. They get scared of natural menaces, but occasionally they are able to turn them into fun. They truly were inconsistent creatures.

Villager: “Subaru-sama, go on!”

Subaru: “Oops, right right. Sorry!”

And then a villager called out to Subaru, who had been talking with Puck. Incidentally, they shouldn’t be able to see Puck, so it looked as if Subaru was talking to himself for a long time. However, they did not talk about it, which showed how the villagers understood Subaru to a high extent.

Subaru: “Anyhow, I’ll explain the rules. To put it briefly, you all have this mansion’s front garden! Use the snow and ice here. The idea of this snow festival is to compete against each other with your creative personalities and creative powers in an artistic festival! There’s also a wonderful gift prepared, so by all means, aim for victory!”

Everyone: “Yeah—!”

The villagers who acted as participants got extremely excited from hearing a single word about a wonderful gift. It was a festival organized by the feudal lord Roswaal. It was natural for them to have their expectations rise for a gift.

Subaru: “Alright, then you all have until this fire fades away! Ready, let’s rock and roll!”

Everyone: “—?”

Subaru: “Oh, by rock and roll I mean start! Start, start!”

They followed Subaru’s command and the snow festival starts, although there was a questionable misstep.

Each of the villagers cooperated and went to work, but they required a good amount of concentration power and skillful fingers to create a snow sculpture. He looked forward to seeing what type of artistic masterpieces they’d come up with.

Subaru: “Will it be marvelous? I wonder if it’ll be marvelous.”

Subaru gazes at the villagers, who took the challenge of creating a snow sculpture with seriousness, and he jumps off the snow platform, appearing to be satisfied.

From this point on, a few hours would have to pass for the performance show to finish. While he waited, he headed towards the other part of the snow festival where one more experiment with the remaining mana was being held.

There were the long-awaited snow and ice. It would be a shame if the party ended on a simple note.

Subaru: “How’s the work going over here?”

Young man: “Ahh, Subaru-sama. Looks like you’ve had success too. We are doing well here as well.”

The person that responded to Subaru’s greeting and turned around was this young man of the young people group of the village. He sweated from his forehead and was breaking ice. Similarly, there were group members here and there working by putting ice onto carts.

Subaru: “Nevertheless, it looks like they’re enjoying themselves, playing in the snow over there. Don’t you think you got the short end of the stick?”

Young man: “No we didn’t. This is also for the sake of the village. Also, the feudal lord said that it seemed that the fire season is going to be hot this year, so I wanted to show my thanks for this proposal.”

The head of the young people group laughs while wiping the sweat off his hair in a crew cut, not even having a care for the breeze. Subaru nods at his response, and is relieved from knowing how his plan didn’t end up being a forceful one.

In every direction, he saw young men breaking ice, working hard for the snow festival. They saw this as an honorable duty to take up, as they prepared the ice for fire season and for the village’s ice house.

They simply could not miss out on preserving food and ice to cool themselves against the heat during hot weather season. In this world where there wasn’t a technique to make ice, the ice house was very important.

Subaru just happened to remember being told about that, being someone who went in and out of the village frequently.

Subaru: “But heavy labor is heavy labor. Even when it really would be advisable for myself to help too…”

Young man: “That’s not the case at all, because we are helping Subaru-sama. If we spend any more time at this rate, we’ll be hit divine punishment. Moreover, you also showed us something good.”

Subaru: “Something good? Did something really happen?”

Subaru did not have an occasion come to mind. He tilts his head and the head of the young people group looks away in response. When he sought to follow his eyes, he saw Rem and Ram running around the front garden in a hurry. They were engaged in managing the snow festival, and the ice season maid appearance's freshness looked as cute as ever.

Young man: "Just from seeing that appearance, you feel moved. Isn't that so, Subaru-sama?"

Subaru: "…Ahh, that might be true. If it really is okay to, then I'm glad."

The group members give deep nods in response to the satisfied leader's words. If that was their way of showing a consensus, then Subaru understood that it was a firm handshake between him and the leader.

Subaru makes sure of their spirit, and once again returns to the meeting place for the snow festival. As one expected, Subaru also didn't know much about the snow, but if he went around and gave advice moderately—

Child: "Ah, it's Subaru!" [Child: "There he is, it's Subaru!" [Child: "Have a taste of white terrawr!"

Subaru: "Ohh, you guys sure are lively even when it's cold!"

The people who met Subaru, who returned to the meeting place, were kids simply bursting with high spirits. They made steam come out from their hot bodies and were running around enthusiastically, oh so enthusiastically.

Child: "Wahahaaa, snowww!" "Child: "Jyahahaaa, snowww!" "Child: "Bahahaa, snowww!"

They slip on the snow, sprawl on it, and then rolled around. These kids were fully enjoying the snowscape. They transformed into captives of the snow, but Subaru did not laugh, as he remembers their childish minds. He simply gave a deep nod.

Subaru: "But someday you'll realize it. You'll realize the truth that you guys were the ones playing in the snow and…"

Petra: “Ah, looks like Subaru doesn’t have anything to dooo. Hey, hey look! I made this with snow!”

The girl that stepped up to Subaru, who was showing shallowness while being pretentious, simply chops away his current state. This was the beautiful girl of the village whose future they were looking most forward to, Petra.

Petra had a rabbit made of snow placed on her hand.

Subaru: “Ohhh, it’s a snow rabbit! They make mountain hares here too?!”

Petra: “Ehehehh, cute, isn’t it? Did it come out well?”

Subaru: “It did it did! Alright alright, then I have something even more wonderful arranged. Watch this.”

Petra: “—?”

Subaru finds leaves and pebbles in a place nearby as Petra tilts her head. When he put it on the mountain hare she made, just like that, the arrangements for its eyes and ears were done.

Petra sees this and her expression quickly becomes bright.

Petra: “Wow, amazing! Subaru that’s amazing! It became a rabbit! A rabbit!”

Subaru: “Heheeem. Right? If you get that happy, then my spirits will rise too! Alrightt, then let’s make it more powerful! Let’s not only put on eyes and ears, but a tail and wings too. Also, a missile, a function for transformation assembly, a cockpit, and a caterpillar too…”

Petra: “Ah, hey wait, wait…”

The mountain hare was being remodeled within Subaru’s hand, as he did not hear Petra’s voice, who was trying to stop him. After a few minutes, it lost its initial look, and transformed only into a simple weapon to hurt people. He completed the “Aviation assault model great fire power war weapon Y U K I—U S A G I”.

He also hurt the innocent girl's mood a lot, though that was natural.

Subaru: "Yeahhh, a woman's heart is as fickle as autumn weather… a girl's mood is hard to understand. spit"

Subaru spits out the snowball that hit his face, and saw Petra off, who became more distant. It seemed that the tickling boy heart could not match the little girl's tastes.

Subaru: "I guess Petra is more of a real robot type of girl, rather than a super robot type of girl."

Child: "Hmmm, I feel like you're wrong either way."

Subaru: "Nah, it's too early to come to conclusions. Next time I'll attack with the real robot route."

The future where he'd once again get hit with a snowball by Petra is decided, and then Subaru looks around the exhibition hall with the snow sculptures that were starting to be finished. He saw many poor quality works, considering how it was their first time making snow sculptures, but even then, they were artistic masterpieces created through everyone combining their efforts. It was difficult to put a specific label on it.

Subaru: "But wouldn't it be a shame to lean towards a realistic motif? Perhaps it's because there's no concept of characters. There's a lot of castles and animals…oh, this looks pretty good!"

Child: "Ohh, thank you, Subaru-sama. This is my Wolgarm masterpiece!"

Subaru: "It's like you're implying I'll forget about the incident after they pass just because of the cold! I'm not laughing!"

It was a snow sculpture of the witchbeasts that caused an unprecedented dilemma where they were chased away from the mansion and village just a few days ago. The source for his goosebumps wasn't just the cold, as the fear and the tension from the incident were still fresh in his mind.

Subaru: "I do like the stress on impact, and I want to evaluate your efforts. However, you did not show enough consideration for the judge's mental trauma. Thus, I give this seven points! I look forward to your next piece of work!"

When Subaru criticized the snow wolgarm, the male creator gave a bitter smile, as he said "8th in points, huh". Seeing that interaction, Puck tickles the back of Subaru's neck with his tail.

Subaru: "Afun, what is it?"

Puck: "It's about your grading of this snow festival, but who are you doing this with?"

Subaru: "Me, Roswaal, and the village's chief as a masked judge are participating in the grading. If the judge's face comes to light, people might try to buy their rank through bribing him, after all. I have an attitude of being determined to deny that type of dirty manipulation of ranks in this festival for the competition of art."

Puck: "Seeing how you're doing all that, I'm wondering if there are people who want the wonderful gift."

Subaru: "It sure is a possibility. The present is a wonderful gift that is a one of a kind in this world."

Whether it had a money type of value or not, the only thing rare about it was the handwriting. When Puck found out about how the wonderful gift would come from his pocket, he makes a surprised face with an "Oh, really?".

Puck: "It's not Subaru's concern, and yet you were really generous with this."

Subaru: "Aren't Emilia-tan and you the ones who are worried? Cooperation is something you'd do. Usually."

The labor wasn't that big of a deal. Subaru was enjoying the festival in itself. He did not even hesitant on making such promises for cooperation. When it came to debt, Subaru was the one who had far more.

Puck: "Hmmm…I do feel a lot of "that" about that side of you,

Subaru.”

Subaru: “You are being too vague, so I don’t get what you’re saying. I can’t understand if you simply put it as “that”□□□”

Subaru reacts to Puck’s voice, who let out a chuckle, and then he suddenly stopped walking. When he did, the young ladies working at the front are noticed by Subaru, and then they happily clap their hands.

Rem: “Ah, Subaru-kun! Please take a look. It’s a sister collaboration snow sculpture made by Nee-sama and I!”

Subaru: “So Rem and Nee-sama aren’t helping, but participating instead. That’s surprising.”

The cheerful girl Rem points at their work that was directly nearby. To the side of the snow sculpture, there was Ram, who was wearing thicker clothes than the rest. She had her arms folded, looked at Subaru, and snorted her nose.

Ram: “Oh, Barusu. Looks like you were called over by our artistry and arrived defenselessly.”

Subaru: “Putting how you make it sound as if I’m willingly walking into disaster aside, I did come to see you guys. Why is Ram participating in this extremely cold festival? You even looked like you didn’t want to help.”

Ram: “I have permission from Roswaal-sama. Do you perhaps highly prefer Rem and the others to play outside of the mansion in the snow while only I act lazy in the bed?”

Subaru: “You are being unnecessarily aggressive, but you’re saying that you don’t like being left out, right?”

When Subaru becomes dejected from Ram’s perverseness, Rem gently stepped in front of her. Then she holds onto her sister’s hand, whose nose was red from the coldness, and says

Rem: “I forcefully invited Nee-sama. Nee-sama says that playing in the snow is childish, but I really want to play with Nee-sama…”

Subaru: “Do you not feel guilty for making your sister say this much, Nee-sama?”

Ram: “I’m superior for feeling Rem’s love strongly. Be jealous.”

It was difficult to talk down a person started to have a defiant attitude. Subaru quickly gives up on breaking through farfetched arguments, and then looks at the sisters’ snow sculpture collaboration. The snow sculpture had a white cloth covering all of it and was the size of a life size human. Speaking of Rem’s skillfulness, it had quite the sense of an artistic masterpiece.

Subaru: “Rem and Ram, this is a masterpiece created through the concentration of your guys’ power, skill, and sisterly love.”

Rem: “Yes, I think Nee-sama’s instructions helped with my ineptness, and then this is perhaps the best result.”

Subaru: “Didn’t you just look at Nee-sama? The truth has come out! …so, what is the name of this work?”

Rem: “Yes. The name is “The wonderful Subaru-sama statue”!”

Subaru: “I can see the end result just from the name!!”

Rem neglects Subaru’s shouting and removes the cloth that covered the snow sculpture. Once she did this, the exposed snow sculpture represented a single man. You could see how particular the details were in this gem.

They were fanatical about the details; the small parts were fairly polished. The results of this snow sculpture simply had the potential to overpower the other works. It was just that, if he had to point out just one fault about the snow sculpture, then it would be that it didn’t nail down a certain motif.

Rem: “Nee-sama wanted to make Roswaal-sama, while I wanted to make Subaru-kun, so our opinions differed.”

Ram: “It’s the conclusion that resulted from finding a meeting ground.”

Subaru: “It seems like you conceded, but you didn’t!”

The sisters talking about their secret story causes Subaru to have trouble evaluating the snow sculpture before him. It was beautiful how they dealt with a single work as sisters, but to think that those efforts resulted in a blasphemous type of snow sculpture…

The “Wonderful Subaru-sama Statue” collaboration work looked like it was copying Roswaal at one glance, but you could also feel indications of Subaru’s looks on it. It had a model that drove his way of seeing things mad when trying to put it into words.

Roswaal: “Oh, what do we have hereee? Being gathered around a place like this, what are you all…oh, this is…”

Roswaal, who was going around the exhibition hall and grading works, meets up with Subaru and the others, who were in front of the Subaru-sama statue. He comes face to face with their snow sculpture, and then Roswaal shows a stiffened expression that was seldom seen. He loses the appearance of a smile from his mouth, is unable to make a comment, and looks around restlessly.

Ram: “Ah, Roswaal-sama…you’ve seen something embarrassing. However, take a good look please.”

Rem: “It is a collaboration between Nee-sama and I. The whole body is there, but please evaluate it without favoritism.”

Ram and Rem see that the marker was present, and then they sought for evaluation. Ram having an overflowing amount of self confidence was the usual, but Rem also had some self confidence, who was someone that spoke humbly.

You could see that they had expectations for a high score for their snow sculpture, but—

Roswaal: “Alright, sorry to break it to you, but it gets 5 points.”

Ram: “And thennn?”

Subaru: “That’s final! It is what you see! You’re praying for a rise from this!”

Ram: “I can’t believe this…”

Ram looked at Roswaal with astonishment, but he shook his head and raised his right hand. He had four fingers raised, giving them even less points than the amount Subaru gave.

Incidentally, each judge had 10 points, so a perfect score would be a total of 30 points.

Roswaal: “The results weren’t bad, thouuugh. It kinda feels like these results are giving me the chills.”

Ram: “The concept shouldn’t have been wrong…just as I thought, Barusu was obstructive.”

Rem: “This can’t be right! Nee-sama and I negotiated our ideal visions, so it’s odd to be unsuccessful. Surely this is just because the times still haven’t caught up.”

Ram and Rem heard Roswaal’s brief review, and then the sisters rushed into discussing about it. However, if those were the things they reflected on, then it felt like their next work they’d finish would be indescribable again.

Subaru: “Or maybe it’s because we could only feel weird about them as people who have been used as the theme…”

Emilia: “Ah! Subaru, I found you! Beatrice and I also snuck into the competition. If you’d like, come see the snow sculpture…oh, wow. What is this? This snow sculpture gives off a preeetty weird feeling.”

Subaru: “Righttttt, I couldn’t be righttt.”

Emilia casually came by and also showed a strong reaction against the “Wonderful Subaru-sama Statue”.

This meant that mankind hadn’t arrived at the time where they’d catch up with that sense yet.

Anyhow, the first snow festival went on like that—and Petra was decided to be the winner. The winning work was the “Aviation assault model great fire power war weapon Y U K I—U S A G I”, which earned a total of 28 points.

It was a victory obtained by her in a way that was cunning with determination.

6

Emilia: “I think it’s weird how I received 9 points even when I tried that hard…”

Puck: “The event might’ve been a bit of a tough one for you and Betty. Look, how should I put it…it’s because your guys’ snow sculpture didn’t really have much artistic impression.”

Emilia and Puck exchange words at the front garden after the snow festival and the cleaning.

Emilia looked displeased as she stood in front of the Puck snow sculpture she made, pouting with her face. Next to it, there was Beatrice’s Puck sculpture that she made. They received 9 and 7 points, respectively—ever since the results of that grading, she wanted to guess the meaning of how she apparently left out details in regards to the portrayal.

Perhaps one should say that mankind wasn’t quite at the stage where they would be able to evaluate the avant garde snow sculpture.

Emilia: “But Subaru really only said weird things. He is well informed, huh. It shouldn’t have been possible to have a festival using snow, being near the great Elior forest, after all.”

Puck: “It was a festival that was possible because it was an area where snow is rarely seen. If we lived in an area where we had no room to enjoy snow, then he wouldn’t have come up with this festival.”

Emilia: “That’s right, I suppose…Yeah, maybe.”

Emilia gives a deep nod at Puck’s words while looking around at the remaining snow sculptures in this exhibition hall at night.

Thanks to Subaru's idea of having a snow festival as a solution for Puck's Magicletting Period, his od was in a stable condition. The intense chills these past few days would also completely settle down tomorrow.

Emilia: "But if that's the case, then surely these snow sculptures will melt tomorrow too, huh. There's so many of them too. It's reeaally a shame."

Puck: "That's how snow works after all. Its form does not last forever. That's all. That's all there is to it."

Puck's words cause Emilia to feel subtle discomfort and didn't point out anything. She just stops walking in the middle of looking around at the snow sculptures and looked up at the sky with shining stars.

The starry sky spreads all over up high, looking down at the snow sculptures in the air free of the cold.

Puck: "It's too bad Lia, Beatrice, and the children of the mansion weren't able to win."

Emilia: "That girl's mountain hare was well done, so it can't be helped. Roswaal and the old man gave high praise for it. …though it was weird how Subaru was quiet about it considering how he was in high spirits."

Puck: "I have no comment for that. However, I wonder if she liked the wonderful gift."

Emilia: "I wonder too. It was Subaru's hometown's…what was it called…corn potage? Something like that."

The prize for winning the snow festival was a mysterious item that he had. It had never before seen letters and drawings lined up on it. The bag that had a strange feeling—it seemed that there was food inside, but it was a little weird.

Incidentally, at the same time Petra was eating the "Corn Potage Snack" at the village and was being taken aback by the deliciousness of it, but that was another story.

Emilia: “Maybe it would’ve been a good idea to consult Subaru from the beginning. If we did, it would’ve been settled without fretting about time like that.”

Puck: “That’s trueee. However, you can’t grow up as a child who leaves anything and everything up to someone. Even if you can’t manage it, try your best until you know it, okay?”

Emilia: “Yes~ I understand.”

Emilia’s giggles as Puck caresses his whiskers, letting out a “Good”. After that, they had a short moment of silence, then Emilia suddenly begins to speak.

Emilia: “Hey, do you remember what Subaru said at the end of the festival?”

Puck: “—When it becomes the Magicletting Period next year, let’s have a snow festival again. I usually don’t like festivals, but if it’s that child, then they do feel like a party.”

Emilia: “I reaally feel a little “that”…about that side of Subaru.”

Puck: “Yeah. I also feel “that” about it.”

If Subaru was here for this situation, he might’ve made a pout at being left behind by the two who were having a vague conversation. It was a conversation that could only be followed if he had known them for a long time and had a family like relationship.

Emilia: “Next year, huh. …I’m not sure what the future has in store. I wonder what will happen.”

Puck: “It’ll be what Emilia wishes for. I think that would be nice if it turned out like that. Not considering if we’ll be able to do something like what Subaru said at that time, that is.”

Emilia: “Are you against snow festivals, Puck?”

Puck: “I’m not. I also had fun, and you looked like you were having fun too, after all. …However, I don’t know if Subaru will be happy or not when I stay by your side until next year.”

“…”

Emilia held her breath quietly in response to Puck’s words.

She was in a serious situation and couldn’t make any rash judgements. Even the environment surrounding her would have sudden changes after a year.

Her heart was to blame for having Subaru—for dragging that kind boy into that vortex.

Puck: “His stomach’s wounds, the wounds caused by the witchbeasts biting him—that child’s remaining scars are the result of Lia’s actions. I know you haven’t forgotten about it, but you need to keep that in mind.”

Emilia: “—Yeah.”

Puck had an easygoing voice, and yet he was never just soft with his words when talking with Emilia.

Emilia nods, and Puck washes his own face in silence. After that, he gazes at the snow sculptures around Emilia and says

Puck: “But it would be nice if we have it again next year. Have a snow festival, I mean.”

“…”

Puck: “Being able to do it next year would mean me having too much mana to the point of having a demonic commending period, and nobody other than Subaru would be able to lead a festival.”

If they could have a snow festival next year too, then that would mean Emilia would spend another year safely and that Natsuki Subaru would stay at the mansion too.

Emilia: “Ye-Yeah. —Yeah, I think that’d be nice too.”

Emilia gives many nods at Puck’s unexpected words and a smile comes on her face. In response to Puck's beloved daughter's smile, he flips his whiskers in a seemingly satisfied manner and—he keeps the dangerous unease in his chest to himself.

Would they be able to have another snow festival next year? Would they protect the conditions needed from now for the year?

Would Emilia's safety, Subaru's safety—and on top of them, Puck's own safety, and the other determining factors—

There were many big changes that came about in these several months. From now on, just how much of that—

Emilia: "Puck, what's wrong?"

Emilia tilted her head at Puck's look, who kept silent. In response to her, Puck immediately makes his ears stand with his usual manner and

Puck: "Mmm, it's nothing. I was just thinking about how it will become hot as usual starting tomorrow."

Emilia: "Ah, come to think of it, that is true. Subaru and Ram might start throwing complaints at each other again."

Emilia worries about the next day as a matter of course without paying attention to Puck's fear.

Puck responds to his honest, straightforward beloved daughter's emotions by continuing to swing his tail while keeping his mouth shut.

—While the silence is kept to indicate something would happen in the year for next year's snow festival.

Alcohol Panic

1

There is a multitude of unused establishments within the Roswaal L Mathers territory's main mansion. It is located away from the city, but close to the mountain forest, and is a site that has a size comparable to a small castle, being made up of three different wings.

The main wing consists of principal establishments such as the dining hall, the parlor, and the large public bath, while the east wing has establishments such as the guest room used for visitors, and the private room for the mansion's residents and maids. And lastly, there is the west wing that has many multipurpose establishments.

The west wing is used much less in comparison to the other wings. It would be enough to classify the establishments as multi-purposed, but to be exact, you could say that only establishments of disordered roles were gathered at the west wing.

It had an uneventful dance hall, along with a warehouse containing unadorned paintings and other works of art. There were things like unvaluable books in Beatrice's forbidden archives; there was too much unused establishments.

Hence, although the west wing was included in the cleaning rotation, it was a completely unused building in regards to everyday life. There was a place in the west wing that people went in and out of the most, but it was just a storage room in the corridor that connected to the main wing, so it was understandable how it became deserted.

Subaru: "Therefore, it's not really worth completely cleaning it up like this for 3 days…or wait, I wonder what kind of point of view that Nee-sama has on it."

Subaru took off his uniform coat, and said these words with his sleeves tucked in while having the duster in his hand.

He sweeps away the floating dust with his hand with a frown on his face. It was apparent that the dust fluttering in the air would not go away, no matter how thorough he was with the cleaning. It really was quite the annoying opponent to deal with.

Subaru: “I really do wonder where dust goes and comes from. Nee-sama, what do you think?”

Ram: “What…? Stop saying stupid things. Move with your hands, not with your mouth. No matter what Barusu says, Roswaal’s wishes shall be fulfilled perfectly. That is our job.”

Subaru: “Okay okay, I understand. Then I will do my…the hell?!”

Subaru raised a criticizing voice at the perpetrator who kicked his butt while he was making his admirably splendid speech. After taking a look, he saw Ram, the person who answered him coldly, on top of the wooden box at the corner of the room with her legs elegantly crossed.

Of course, she was there without a mop or dust cloth in her hand, yawning with her hand on her mouth, cleaning—

Subaru: “Just when I thought you were working without complaints, I see this! We’re a team that halves the work between us, aren’t we? If it’s quartered instead, we won’t be able to finish!”

Ram: “If you are unable to feel shame about your own incompetence, then you are done as a human…you are useless, Barusu.”

Subaru: “Can you take a good look at the current situation, then speak?! Look at it objectively. You think I’m the useless one?”

Ram: “Nothing will change if you’re missing a little help for something like cleaning an unused storage room.”

Subaru: “Whatever happened to the Ram that said she’d fulfill Roswaal-sama’s wishes perfectly?”

Ram sighed with feigned ignorance at Subaru widening his eyes, which he did because of the withdrawal of her previous refreshing marks.

The Roswaal residents' routine duties were split between three people: "Subaru, an employee, and the two sisters, Ram and Rem. However, 80% of the mansion's functions were taken care of by Rem, while Subaru and Ram cooperated for the remaining 20%—they were taking care of it, but these were days of dire distress.

These two, who halved the labor between each other, were imposed with this work, but it was clear that they were feeling discouraged with cleaning and tidying up the unused storage room of the unused west wing.

Having the cleaning actually start was enough to completely kill Subaru and Ram's motivation.

It was standard for the mansion's cleaning to be done in rotation, cleaning the three wings one day at a time. Their motivation declined quicker because of how the west wing had cleaning three days prior, and because of how it wasn't very dirty considering that.

Subaru: "However, there's a reason behind what you say too. I'm using the duster, but I feel like the dust is just flying away and the feeling of achievement…achoo!"

Ram, who was skipping out on her work while sitting on top of a wooden box, saw Subaru sneeze from the dust with the duster in his hand. And to make matters worst, just as the collected dust flew into the air, the cusp of it invaded the shelves at the side. Subaru crouched and picks up the tool, whose use he did not understand, that fell on the floor, seemingly with annoyance.

Subaru: "Dirtying things myself and tidying things up by myself, bad things sure are happening one after another…oh?"

In the midst of picking up the tool that he dropped, Subaru found an incomprehensible joint on the floor. He traced the floor with his hand, and when he checked to see what it was, it seemed to be that there was a wooden cover for underfloor storage.

Subaru: “Ram, there is a hidden door here, but do you know what’s inside?”

Ram: “…Don’t know. Forget about it, Barusu. There’s a chance that insects will come flying out the moment you open it. If you’re gonna do it, then do so after I leave this room and lock it.”

Subaru: “Why lock the door? Also, it’s already too late.”

Subaru pulled the knob of the storage that he found and lifted the underfloor cover at once. Ram’s words gave him a bad image in his head, but his curiosity got the best of him.

Immediately after that, Ram quickly got off the wooden box and rushed over to the room’s door. While giving a wry smile at Ram, who had preparations to run away efficiently, Subaru nervously peeked into the underfloor storage and—

Subaru: “—Ohh?”

And then Subaru widened his eyes in astonishment.

2

Roswaal: “—And thus, the things you discovered from the underfloor storage are mi~ne. Subaru bowed respectfully and respectfully pushed the wooden box in front of him onto the desk.”

The search of the west wing’s storage room—as a result of the search that caused him to forget about the initial goal, an unexpected treasure was discovered.

The person who received Subaru’s report, Subaru appearing to have his chest puffed up with pride, was the person sitting at the work desk, Roswaal. The daytime version of him as a feudal lord was busy with businesses he had to take care of, which contrasted with how he had an eccentric outfit, eccentric speech, and eccentric behavior.

However, when Subaru rudely cut into hist time, Roswaal was far from displeased and instead seemed to be happily letting out a loose smile.

Roswal: “I see~. Come to think of it, quite a while back, by chance I heard about a wine cellar somewhere in the villa. Under the floor of the west wing…to think that it was in a place like that…”

Inside the wooden box that was placed on the desk appeared to be an expensive bottle of sake decorated with wood chips.

Subaru heard him say wine cellar, but he was more puzzled about a different part of Roswaal’s statement.

Subaru: “Hm? Did you just say villa? But that sake was found under the mansion, you know?”

Roswaal: “Ahh, that’s easy to explain. This mansion is located here just to prepare for Emilia-sama’s king election, and it’s essentially my residence’s villa. The Mathers’ principal residence is more towards east. Well, the place I’m in is the Mathers’ mansion, so there’s not really much importance in distinguishing between the two.”

Subaru: “It’s a villa with it being this big? Then the principal residence must be…actually, I’m scared to know, so I won’t ask. Anyways, about that unexpected thing, that basement isn’t one of Roswaal’s preferences, huh.”

Roswaal: “I am currently the head of the family, but before that it was my father’s and my grandfather’s. Perhaps the basement’s wine cellar was my grandfather’s idea, or maybe it was a prank by my grandmother. I’ve been told that they were heavy drinkers.”

Subaru frowned at Roswaal, who smiled with his purple painted lips. It was quite the unrelated matter to Subaru, considering how he was talking about his own grandfather. Roswaal closes one of his eyes at Subaru’s doubt and Roswaal: “Ah~, my bad. I didn’t mean to have you hear about it. … But things like that are true.”

He was apt to forget about his excessive workload at the mansion, but this place truly was a different world. The common knowledge on life expectancy in this world most likely differed a lot from the common knowledge on it at Subaru's original world.

Things like the long living races and the magical existences could not simply be compared with modern medicine.

Subaru: "…Anyhow, I thought I'd at least report it and brought it, but what are you going to do about your grandfather's leftover collection? A lot of it is still unused."

Roswaal: "Hmm, good point. Keeping it in the basement like that as something like ground reinforcement would be wasteful, huh. —By the way, Subaru-kun, how are you with sake? Are you the type that can drink however much he wants? Or are you perhaps someone who gets red just from the smell of it and says thing like "I don't wanna go home tonight…"?"

Subaru: "That line I've heard about, something I've heard comes out at mixers, is said here too, huh. …Also, I've never really been an active drinker. Drinking is for after I turn 20."

Roswaal: "20? My goodness, that takes some patience."

Subaru replied to Roswaal while wrinkling his brows to frown at his doubt.

Subaru was actually being truthful. There wasn't really any particular reason for Subaru to get his hands on sake when he was back at his original world as a minor. By the way, he also never went to a single mixer before.

Natsuki Subaru spent his days doing things completely unrelated to sake, tobacco, and women.

Roswaal: "My, that is surprising. Considering Subaru's personality, I thought you'd definitely try to look cool and get your hands on things like alcohol and tobacco."

Subaru: "I kinda get what you think of me, but unfortunately, you are wrong. Actually, there was a time when I tried putting one of the cigarettes my father forget to put out on my mouth once, but…"

Roswaal: "But?"

Subaru: “The moment I did, my father returned, and I was hit plenty of times. To make matters worst, I was scolded by my mother, her fallaciously saying that I wouldn’t get taller…anyway, those hands were traumatizing.”

He may have learned about tobacco and sake if he had bad friends, but fortunately, Subaru had no bad friends, let alone any good friends. Thus, he had no opportunities.

Subaru: “Even if I were to try and stray off onto the wrong path, I couldn’t find any in the first place…huhuu, what a joke.”

Roswaal: “You are feeling nostalgic about that, but if that’s the case, you probably wouldn’t be very happy about being given this as a reward.”

Subaru: “Ah, that’s true. There actually was a time where I was offered this sake before from this geezer and drank it, but I only thought about how it was burning my throat, stomach, and head. Or rather…”

Roswaal sought to award Subaru alcohol as if it was something natural. Subaru responded to this by pointing at the box.

Subaru: “Can someone of my age really drink this? I said this earlier, but I am still below 20 and am a minor. Im at that age where I can’t look at porn sites without a guardian, you know?”

Roswaal: “I do~n’t really get it, but I feel like you wouldn’t be able to look at them even if you had a guardian. Putting that aside, in Lugunica you’re OK to drink sake if you’re above 15.”

Subaru: “Ohh, that’s useful…”

Subaru properly used his “OK”, and Roswaal continues speaking with a “Moreover”.

Roswaal: “It’s the kingdom’s rule, but each region prefers to have their own territorial laws. In other words, the territorial laws around this vicinity are decided at my own discretion.”

Subaru: “Wow, that’s abuse of your authority. By those territorial laws, the judgement of my innocence and…actually, normally you'd be innocent by the king's laws after you're older than 15, but…"

Even though the law assured him, there was no change about his indifference towards the sake gift.

It was natural because he didn't know its taste and value. Having said that, treating it as an item he'd sell would be rude towards Roswaal, who was handing it over to him as a reward.

Subaru: "It's even decorated with a ribbon. Should I put it at the end of the room…? It'll refresh, and after I turn 20 I can open it in commemoration, having the deep emotions in my chest walk me towards the future. Stuff like that."

Roswaal: "That's a far-sighted plan. Finishing work before you sleep, the time you eat after a hot bath…wouldn't even be necessary to seek chances to drink sake too. It's not pro~crastination."

Subaru: "Unreasonably offering sake to someone who can't drink seems to be called alcohol harassment. It might become an incident for a lawsuit, so be careful. Moreover, you say these things, but does Ros-chi drink?"

Roswaal: "I drank to some extent back then, but the times I do have been lowered remarkably these past several years. Well, I'll drink on occasions like banquets. Basically, I keep my limits in mi~nd. Also"

Roswaal shook his shrugged with his shoulders. He said that he only drank to a certain extent, but even with that attitude, an overwhelming aura came floating from him. He could not imagine what his drunk self would be like.

Subaru: "But, I'm kinda interested in how I would be with alcohol."

He had no interest in it until now, but he suddenly became interested in his drinking limits because of how they were talking about sake the whole time.

Once it became like this, he wasn't just curious about himself, he was also a bit curious about how much Emilia and Rem could drink as well.

However, if there was no occasion for it, he'd never be able to find —

Subaru: "That's right, let's have a banquet! Ros-chi, you said you drank alcohol on celebrations, right?"

Roswaal: "Hm? Yea~h. I did certainly say that. I do drink enough to feel good if it's for special gathe~rings. I am human, after all."

Subaru: "Rightt! If it's a gathering, then there's no stopping you."

Roswaal: "Huhuhu, sheesh. —What are you planning with getting me drunk?"

Subaru: "That's rude. You're not who I'm aiming for, Ros-chi!"

He retorts Roswaal's statement, him giving Subaru a meaningful look, and then Subaru clapped his hands. That expression made his face look bad—no, he did not have a face of an evil man; he just had scary eyes.

However, that was just the face Subaru had whenever he said something astounding, something that was also typical of him. Roswaal had a look that seemed to be a look of expectation in his eyes in response to Subaru's expression.

Subaru spoke of his idea with magnificence, though he wasn't sure if he could live up to his expectations.

Subaru: "If we prepare a celebratory gathering, then it would be okay to bring out the sake in the basement for a banquet, right?"

Roswaal: "—Indeed. Well it didn't really seem to be a useful wine cellar after all. To some extent, I'm kind of entrusting the purpose of the remaining sake to you. Nevertheless…"

Subaru: "Nevertheless what?"

Roswaal: "Using a banquet as an excuse to see Emilia-sama and Rem get messed up…Subaru-kun is planning something that's pretty typical for a bo~y."

Subaru: "That wasn't even my intention. Stop thinking like that could be my only intention!"

Roswaal: "No no no, I don't mind it."

Subaru: "I told you, that's not it!"

He had no intention for that at all, but his ulterior motive grew a bit, and the plan of the banquet began.

3

Subaru: "And thus, a plan to hold a cherry blossom viewing party has been decided, so please actively participate!"

Emilia: "Cherry blossom viewing?"

As soon as the abrupt boy Subaru visited the room, Emilia tilted her head at him.

Today Emilia had her hair up in a ponytail and she wore a long skirt. She had her finger on her cherry blossom lips, but she wasn't surprised by this sudden proposal.

She became used to Subaru's sudden proposals. This was a reaction she had because of her guessing the situation.

Emilia: "I've never heard of cherry blossom viewing, but it sounds kinda fun. Viewing cherry blossoms, huh."

Subaru: "Yes. Back at my hometown, these cherry blossoms would bloom into a pink color after ice season. At that time there would be boisterous merrymaking under the sakura trees…that's what cherry blossom viewing is."

Emilia: "Huh? But, I feel like that isn't really viewing flowers…"

Subaru: "That's the darkness of cherry blossom viewing caused by not being able to experience it too much. Well, it's held to be boisterous after all."

Subaru smiles wryly at his pokes at the essence of cherry blossom viewing and concludes the discussion on it.

In short, Subaru, who received a reward for discovering the wine cellar, gave this proposal, but holding a cherry blossom viewing to honor the mansion—this was what the banquet gathering was passed off as.

It wasn't about Subaru wanting to drink; it was more about his interest in everyone else's reactions to it.

He might've been particularly interested in seeing someone like Emilia make a complete 180, being sexy after drinking. If the situation turned into something like that, perhaps a dangerous charm would grow.

Subaru: "There will be things like sake and food as treats to enjoy the pretty cherry blossoms. That is the greatest goal of this cherry blossom viewing we'll be having! It's not because there will be sake and that I want to see Emilia-tan get messed up or anything, okay?"

Emilia: "Ah, I understand. Jeez, that's not okay, Subaru."

Subaru: "Eh?! What?! There's no way you've found out my plan! Impossible!"

Emilia: "Children shouldn't drink sake, or else they will stop getting taller."

Subaru: "No way! The same reason my mom had?! Also, I'll have you know that I'm not a child that breaks the kingdom's laws! I'm 18 this year, after all! I have Roswaal's permission! I am an adult! An adult!"

Emilia: "I don't think an adult would make such a fuss like that. But, Subaru is 18, huh. That's reeaally surprising…I thought you were younger."

He was scolded for a reason he's been told of sometime in the past, and then Emilia gives a bittersweet smile at Subaru, the noisy one.

She probably added that one word precisely because she didn't feel like his face was fitting for his age.

Subaru: "Foreigners do say that the Japanese seem to have childish faces. By the way, how old did you think I was?"

Emilia: "12…no, 13! About 13!"

Subaru: "Isn't that younger than Felt?! Also, there's wasn't much of a difference even after you corrected yourself!"

Or more accurately, it wasn't much different than Earlham Village's children's judgement. The children tried asking Emilia what age they looked to her, but the conversation wouldn't go anywhere, no matter how much time elapsed.

Subaru: "Phew, I'm tired. Also, you've been saying that I'm a child, but how about you, Emilia-tan? Can you drink sake? Are you the type that is okay with everything on the menu, from top to bottom?"

Emilia: "Sorry, I don't really understand what you're trying to say."

He imagined Roswaal to be a heavy drinker, but he could not figure out how much Emilia would be able to drink. She could be an extreme heavyweight, and he could also imagine her to be an extreme lightweight.

Emilia mumbled an "Ummm" at Subaru, who narrowed his eyes to investigate and Emilia: "You said that, but I've also never drank before. Ah, I'm also of drinking age. I'm not 13."

Subaru: "I'm not wondering about that. If Emilia-tan was 13, I would be committing a crime."

Emilia: "Why would that be?"

Subaru: "It's because Emilia-tan is so cute that it makes me want to commit a crime."

Emilia: “And guess what, it’s about sake, but Puck said, “Don’t drink i~t”

Subaru: “You heard me, but you’re going to ignore me?!”

Subaru was taken aback from Emilia’s new way of warding him off, but she had no reaction to that; instead, her neck pendant glowed, and a different voice came into the conversation.

Puck: “—That’s obvious. Sake is a drink for bad adults. Lia will always be my cute daughter, so you don’t need to get involved with stuff like that.”

The particles of the overflowing light from the pendant formed the shape of a kitten at the same time he said those overprotective words. The manifested kitten spirit sits on Emilia’s shoulders and pats her cheek with his paw.

Puck: “I won’t allow you to stray my child off onto the wrong path. I will drink every bit of the sake that is shown in front of Lia, after all. I will not hand Lia over, shasshasha”

Subaru: “Ah, so you want to participate and drink too, huh.”

Puck, who was shadow boxing, labeled himself as Emilia’s guardian, and yet it was just him really wanting to get his hands on alcohol. Anyways, it seemed like he approved of the cherry blossom viewing, so that was relieving.

Subaru: “Emilia-tan, how about you? Are you okay with Puck participating?”

Emilia: “Eh? Yeah, I’m fine with it. It seems like Puck doesn’t want me to drink sake, but I can enjoy myself too by eating delicious food while viewing flowers. But how about everyone else?”

Subaru: “Roswaal is OK with it, considering it was something I planned with him in the first place. So, if Ros-chi is okay with it, then Ram should be fine too. I need to ask Rem for things like preparing the food, so if I ask her as sincerely as possible, I’ll get her consent. I’ll be helping with the cooking too, so.”

At first, Subaru had rough fights with peeling vegetable skins, but thanks to him being a person of small capabilities, he had been helping with the cooking lately. His ambition was different from Ram, whose improvement of her steamed potatoes has been on a halt for many years. There was also the difference in levels of enthusiasm between him and the lecturer.

Emilia: “Rem sure does seem to reeaally enjoy herself whenever she cooks together with Subaru. I’ve got it! How about I help with the cooking too? Subaru did doubt my cooking skills before.”

Subaru: “Something like that did happen before. …wait, I haven’t been open with my suspicions about that before.”

Emilia: “Pout You are stubborn. I made a delicious rice ball, didn’t I?”

Subaru: “The flavor was delicious. It’s just that I was kinda worried about how it looked.”

Previously, there was a time when Subaru had a pile of errands to do and the bento that Emilia made him hold—inside was a simple rice ball, but the shape was different from one and its size was strange. It was big enough to have a child’s head in it. Eating all of it would be enough to waste his stamina.

It wasn’t about the flavor; he had problems with amount of seasoning and its condition. That is how Subaru evaluated Emilia’s cooking skills.

Emilia: “Hmph. If you say that much, then fine. I’ll definitely cause you to be dumbfounded when we cook for the cherry blossom viewing. And after that it will be too late to apologize, by the way.”

Subaru: “If we’re talking about being dumbfounded, then it’s already happened plenty! But well, I’ll look forward to it.”

Emilia had an angry face, while Subaru had a relaxed one. Emilia was dissatisfied, being someone who wanted to triumph over Subaru, but she was looking forward to the anticipated event, so it couldn’t be helped.

Emilia: “So when will the cherry blossom viewing be held?”

Subaru: “Even if I said “There’s no time like the present!”, we don’t have enough prepared for it today. However, if we don’t do it as fast as possible, the hype will die down, so talk to everyone, and it will be held the day after tomorrow.”

He wanted to make a specific schedule such that it wouldn’t conflict with the schedule of the mansion’s busiest person, Roswaal. They would hold the cherry blossom viewing on a day when he wouldn’t be away from the mansion for the night.

Subaru: “Guess it would be best to hold it at the forest’s flower garden right? Since it’s called cherry blossom viewing. It really would be awesome if cherry blossoms were there, but the season and the world are different, so.”

Puck: “Looking at a bunch of flowers while drinking sake…hmmm, that is elegant. Ah, but there’s something I’m worried about if we do hold it at the forest.”

Subaru: “Something you’re worried about?”

Subaru was lost in his thoughts deciding where the meeting place would be when Puck entered the conversation with his tail standing up. While washing his face with his hand, the kitten said “You see” at Subaru’s doubt as a preface to his next statement and

Puck: “If it’s held away from the mansion, Betty can’t participate. That child won’t leave the mansion, because that is her duty.”

Subaru: “Eh, Beako’s? I don’t really get it, but can’t she sneak away just for a little bit? Plus, the person in charge of the mansion approved of the cherry blossom viewing, you know?”

Puck: “Subaru, I get what you’re trying to say. But the reason Betty stays at the forbidden archives isn’t necessarily because Roswal told her to. Thus, that child won’t leave the mansion.”

In response to Puck, him being awfully conclusive about the matter, Subaru explained his reasoning and then kept silent.

You could say that Subaru had a difficult type of relationship with Beatrice, who secluded herself in the forbidden archives. However, he would feel guilty if he left her out and had the cherry blossom viewing. There was no doubt about that.

She was a dishonest little girl. If they had something like a cherry blossom viewing without her and she found out about it, she would obviously never let that go.

Subaru: “Ahhh, Beako is hard to deal with! …Wait, but didn’t she come all the way to the village to heal my injuries before? What was that about?”

Puck: “That was an exception among exceptions. I was the one that made the request, but I was surprised with how she listened.”

Perhaps Beatrice’s merciful heart was moved because it was a highly urgent situation. Whatever the reason may have been, the conditions were too different to label a situation between life and death as a game.

Emilia: “If Beatrice can’t go, then the cherry blossom viewing is off…right?”

Emilia looks down with seemingly regretful eyes at Subaru, who was silent and didn’t have any good ideas come to mind. He saw the lonesome look in her eyes, and then Subaru’s spirit got fired up, as he had to do something about it.

Beatrice wouldn’t leave the mansion. She could not see the flower garden if she didn’t leave the mansion. His original intention was to have a banquet, using cherry blossom viewing as an excuse to have one. It was important to accomplish the duties and prepare the place. These were the things he was thinking about.

Subaru: “—Alright, then let’s do this!”

Subaru came up with an idea to recover from this hopeless situation and clapped his hands loudly.

Subaru’s epiphanizing behavior caused Emilia’s bluish purple eyes to shine, as if they were glimmering with hope.

4

—After 2 days where this and that happened, the appointed day for the party immediately arrived.

After obtaining Emilia’s consent, the preparations for the party moved at a quick pace. This was because of Rem, the enthusiastic girl, put in major effort for Subaru’s idea that he was mostly responsible for.

Rem: “I cannot let Subaru-kun embarrass himself, so I’ll work at full power too.”

These were the strong words of Rem, who chopped up the fish and meat so fast that you couldn’t see her cute face.

Thanks to Rem cooperating without a hint of disagreement on her face, the parties preparations progressed smoothly, despite the increase in work. Subaru and Emilia helped with the cooking and the preparations for the hall too, but the extent of the effects they had will not be revealed in order to preserve their honor.

In any case, they were right before the start of the banquet. Subaru left the preparations for the hall up to Rem and the others, and headed over to a place to fulfill a role that only he could do.

This certain place was—

Subaru: “So yeah, the preparations are there. If you come, everyone would be there.”

Beatrice: “…I don’t understand why I’d go, I suppose.”

Subaru moved freely throughout the mansion and found the forbidden archives through his explosive intuition. Beatrice previously overreacted in all of her reactions, but lately she’s had a face of complete resignation. On one hand, he thought quietly to himself that he was glad about it, but on the other, he also felt unsatisfied. Thus, he threw away those feelings away for today.

Subaru gave a friendly tap to Beatrice’s shoulder, who was sitting on the usual stepladder. Then

Subaru: “I’m telling you to stop missing the point. Today is the day for everyone in the mansion to view cherry blossoms together. You’d probably complain if I told you in advance, so I made it a surprise just for you!”

Beatrice: “The first and second half of your statement contradict each other! I don’t really know what a cherry blossom viewing is, but whatever it is, if I have to participate in such a foolish event…”

Subaru: “See? I thought you’d say that. A persuasion that should’ve taken two rounds has been settled in one instead. You were going to end up participating while complaining anyway, so stop wasting time and let’s go!”

Beatrice: “You are being bothersome, but I get it. So stop making that face, I suppose! You are irritating! Irritating! What do you know about me?! And anyway…”

Beatrice shakes off Subaru’s hand, who was trying to bring her out, and she jumped off the ladder. And then surely she was glaring at Subaru with her light blue eyes.

Beatrice: “Be it cherry blossom viewing or some other event, I will not leave the mansion. Just do it with you and the others, I suppose. I will not go to any…”

Subaru: “I won’t allow it. Leaving you pouting at the mansion and going to the party? I’d feel unpleasant and there’s no way I’d be able to enjoy the party. Have fun and be a sacrifice for our sake. No buts.”

Beatrice: “Wh-Who gave you the right to say such a thing?!”

Subaru: “Ah-Ah-ah, can’t hear you~”

Subaru shut his ears in front of Beatrice and ignored her opinion as she yelled. That behavior caused Beatrice’s face to get redder and redder, but Subaru still continued to speak to that girl with an angry heart.

Subaru: “Puck told me that you have some complicated circumstances and that you can’t leave the mansion. Thus, I took those conditions into consideration and polished the plan. Hence, the preparations are already done, and all that's left is for me to kidnap you."

"…"

Subaru: "Honestly, I understand your feelings. Whatever type of fun event it is, going out for it just before it happens is troubling enough to kill. However, the truth is, if you do try and go out, you will have fun in one way or another. I'll give you the first forceful push."

There was no response from Beatrice, who had a sullen face. However, this was precisely because she answered with a sigh of resignation and a loose posture. Subaru lets out a slight smile, taps her shoulder, and then brings her out of the forbidden archives.

And just like that, the two stood up, left the mansion's corridor, and finally reached—

Subaru: "Come in come in. We are the final participants."

Beatrice: "Jeez, just what are you planning, I suppose…"

He pushes the back of the girl with an unenthusiastic face, Beatrice, and opens the door in front of them. And then Subaru lets out a smile of satisfaction at the doubtful girl, whose eyes were filled with astonishment as she glanced to the side.

Subaru: "And thus, today is the party for deepening the friendship of all the mansion's members…the Roswaal residence organization's first "Stargazing" party! "

Subaru jumps in front of the startled girl, Beatrice, and makes a grand declaration with his hands spread out.

This was the Roswaal residence's west wing's top floor—the forgotten dance hall. In this dance hall that had been decorated, something that hadn't been done for a long time, a wind blew from the open terrace, caused by the quick footed dancers enjoying themselves. Food was lined up at the corner of the spacious room, but the amount was moderate because of how many participants there were. Instead, they were completely absorbed with the quality and its appearance.

Emilia: "—Ah, it's Subaru and the others. Beatrice is with him too!"

The arrival of Subaru and the others gets noticed by Emilia, who came to the hall beforehand, and then she raised her voice at them. Everyone else responds to that voice, and Rem rushed over to them.

Rem: "Good work, Subaru-kun. Leaving Beatrice-sama up to Subaru-kun was the best idea after all. As expected of the person in charge of the mansion's Beatrice."

Subaru: "Heh, I'm embarrassed. Well, this is the least I could do as the best Beatrice worker."

Beatrice: "I don't recall you being the person in charge of me, nor do I recall you being my worker! This is extreme disgrace, I suppose!"

Beatrice was angry at the two cheerful individuals, but Subaru and Rem calmly ignored her. Beatrice quivered angrily at that treatment, but a small silhouette gently swooped down upon her shoulder.

Beatrice's suddenly became cheerful upon seeing the furball that appeared right beside her face.

Beatrice: "Bubby!"

Puck: "Welcome Betty. I thought that you'd perhaps lack the willpower to go and wouldn't come…but as expected, Subaru knows what makes you tick."

Beatrice: "N-No way that's true! Bubby will always be my number one, I suppose. Yeah. Yeah, that's it. That's definitely true, I suppose."

Puck: "Ahaha, I'm happy. That would be nice if it really was true."

For some reason Beatrice's cheeks stiffened just for a second in response to Puck's reply. However, Subaru took no note of their exchanges and listened cautiously to Rem's explanation of the hall.

Rem: "The cooking and the setting of the table were done by Emilia-sama and Nee-sama. Subaru-kun also helped with the pre-cooking, enough so that there was less labor than usual."

Subaru: "Is that so? But didn't things like the hall decorations increase the amount of work? I'm really sorry about that. I'll definitely make up for it somehow next time."

Rem: "Don't worry about it. In exchange, tonight I'll have you let me see your sleeping face for longer than usual."

Subaru: "Hm…? Didn't you just say something kinda odd? Sleeping face?"

Rem: "Nope, I didn't say anything odd~"

He felt like he heard something that he could not ignore, but the matter was avoided due to Rem's cute smile. For now, Subaru headed towards the terrace to lead the stargazing party while he tilted his head.

Emilia: "Subaru, good work. You brought Beatrice over too. Impressive impressive."

Subaru had went to greet Emilia. She patted his head while smiling at this terrace exposed to the nightwind. The feeling from the touch of her white fingertips caused Subaru to narrow his eyes awkwardly.

Subaru: "Well, kinda seems like you've been satisfied like this. Kinda feels like I want to make you aware of how I am a man, not a kid, and you're a woman, through a certain request. That's the kind of dilemma I'm having."

Emilia: "—? I know that Subaru is a little man and that I am a woman."

Subaru: "Umm, you see I want to take away the unnecessary part of that label so…"

Ram: “Barusu”

Ram, the person who stood next to the terrace standing with Roswaal, gave a sharp glare at Subaru, who was giving in to his ulterior motive. It seemed like she was telling him “Hurry up and start” with her look and her tone, so Subaru gave a bitter smile.

Rem: “Subaru-kun, here you go.”

Subaru: “Oh, thanks.”

Rem acted as a waiter and presented a silver tray as if the timing was planned. There were glasses of sake on it. He took one and looked around him.

Emilia, Rem, and Roswaal and the others—everyone had a glass in their hands. Beatrice was next to Puck and was also holding a glass of juice while pouting.

Subaru: “Ehhh, I thank you all for participating in today’s “Stargazing Party” at the Roswaal residence. After this, we will work together for one cause, and that is to deepen friendship with this party. Well then, first I’d like to talk about the benefit of the essential part of this party. I will talk about the three three essentials of life—”

Emilia: “Hey, hey, Subaru. By any chance, is that talk going to be reaaally long?”

Subaru: “No, I was going to make a joke saying, “Aren’t they your stomach, your wallet, and your store of patience with your mother?” but…”

Ram: “Barusu”

Subaru once again had that sharp look shoot through him. He dejectedly hands over the floor to the one who hosted the program —in other words, the mansion’s representative, Roswaal.

Roswaal, who had been laughing at those interactions, raises his glass slightly and

Roswaal: “Even if I have a long greeting, it’ll just have dampen everyone’s enthusiasm. Thus, I have one thing to say—The people who have gathered here like this are comrades, no matter what circumstances. There may be various hardships in the future, but we will join forces and overcome them. And so, let’s have a toast for today’s divine protection of the stars.”

Everyone: “—Cheers!”

Everyone tilted their glasses and overlapped with their voices in response to Roswaal’s speech, which was so normal that it was a letdown.

The bumping of their glasses makes a light sound, and then the banquet calmly began under the starlight of the night.

5

Well, that was how the stargazing party began enjoyably and calmly.

It was called a banquet and a gathering, but it wasn’t specifically to celebrate something. If there had to be label for it, perhaps it would be called the celebration of the settlement of the witchbeasts incident, along with the celebration of the recovery of the casualties that resulted from it.

The abundance of food set up on the table was a result of having more than the usual amount of passion being put into making it. Of course, it wasn’t as if Rem’s usual cooking was missing anything crucial, but there was a special flavor in it tonight.

He looked up at the stars and enjoyed a little bit of sake while banqueting on those dishes.

He wasn’t able to make the plan of viewing cherry blossoms under the full bloom cherry trees into a reality, but they had a whole view of the sky of the crisp and cold night from the terrace. Throughout the whole sky, he saw stars that glowed, a sight that fared with cherry trees.

The air was refreshing and perfectly clear. The open sky had not a single cloud. He was enjoying the stars, and yet all the best conditions were lined up. It was the best situation for stargazing sake. Subaru's own name was also associated with the stars, and he was enthusiastic about being able to persistently show his vast knowledge of stars.

However—

Emilia: "Hmmm? Wats wrong, Subaru? You sheem kwinda…aha, that's a reeaally weird face. Also, it's unfair uf you to have that much. Subaru is planning on making everyone have all the candy to themselves~"

Subaru: "I feel hurt from you saying I have a weird face, and plus I am not having a lot! Ahhh, jeez. Emilia-tan, you can't do that. Look, see how much you spilled…"

The girl who came snuggling up to him, Emilia, had a happy smile with an embarrassed face. The boy who calmed her down, Subaru, makes a displeased expression with his lips and once again empties the glass with one gulp. The amber liquid fades his cherry blossom lips, he starts to feel a little sick, and then lets out a sigh of hot breath.

Emilia: "Oomyoo…sake is goood. It's unfair that this stuff has been kept a secret from me until now. Everyone kept this hidden from me. Sneaky…sneaky? Yeah, that was sneaky~ huhuhu"

Subaru: "Ahh, damn this girl's cute!"

Emilia sat down on the terrace's floor and was pouring more sake into her glass. Looking at the amount of empty sake bottles that had already been lined up, you could say that Emilia had quite the drinking capacity.

She wasn't drunk enough to pass out, though considering that, it was pretty quick for the situation to turn into what it currently was.

Subaru: "Speaking of what I imagined, this would be it. Speaking of what I impression I had, this would be it. However, on top of being weak to sake, Emilia-tan also has bad drinking habits, huh…"

Based on what he saw from socializing with Emilia up until now, Subaru had thought that Emilia probably would only be either extremely tolerant with alcohol, or extremely weak with alcohol. The result, as you see—he was still happy with her cute but rambunctious relationship with alcohol, not causing trouble with things like her beginning to take off her clothes, or her beginning to vomit.

Though it was very worrying, considering how she wouldn't listen to him if he suggested that she stop drinking.

Subaru: "If I could I'd stop her. I want to put her to sleep, and I'd even sing a lullaby to do so, but…"

Emilia was leaning on him with her amorous cheeks that made him dizzy. He had a reason for not stopping the situation. It was simply because he couldn't move.

This is because—

Rem: "—Subaru-kun"

Subaru: "Yes, what is it, Rem-san?"

Rem: "Hed"

Subaru: "That hurts you know, Rem-san."

Subaru sits with his legs crossed at the terrace. Rem had her head placed on his lap. She had an ordinary unemotional expression, but her face was red enough to make him worried.

Rem used Subaru's lap as a pillow, but her movement was slow and she had few requests. She was now just biting on Subaru's thigh as if it was an afterthought. She wasn't showing signs of a bad drunk.

But, he had doubts about if he could call it a drinking habit. Rem sure was drunk, but unlike Emilia, she didn't have a single sip of sake.

Subaru: "To think that you got this dead drunk just from the smell of sake and not from the air and the atmosphere…But if that's the case, then what happened with the sake used in things like the cooking? There was even times where Ros-chi poured wine.”

She also served glasses of sake at the start of the stargazing party. In response to Subaru’s doubt, the girl on his lap, Rem, moved only her head and looked up at him.

Rem: “Pleasee don’t make funs of me, Subaru-kun. Subaru-kun. Subaru-kun.”

Subaru: “The usual calling me three times, huh. Umm, what is the meaning of this?”

Rem: “I feel shtrained because I’m alwaysh doing important work. But, todayy is a fun gathering, sho I feel a bit relaxed. Soo, it’s yoouuur fault, Subaru-kun.”

She smiled with her whole face. However, the way she spoke was suspicious, and on top of that, she had inconsistent reasoning.

Moreover, at the middle of the conversation, she put her arms around Subaru’s back and was pushing her head against his stomach. It was a violent way of spoiling herself, but this girl was a complete drunk. While being surprised from this side of her, Subaru casually patted Rem’s head, and she purred in delight.

Subaru: “What are you, a cat?! You are an oni…or rather, with my knowledge I imagined onis to be tolerant of sake. But perhaps the history about that is inaccurate when it’s a different world.”

Ram: “I don’t know what you are comparing onis too, but it’s true that the oni clan is a race that is tolerant of sake. Ever since I was little, I also drank at the adult’s banquets.”

Once Subaru cocked his head in puzzlement at oni drinking capabilities, he heard Ram from behind responding to his doubt.

Subaru: “You really just admitted to underage drinking as if it was nothing, huh. I’m not trying to meddle with the Oni rules…but the expression you have and the way you’re speaking make me suspicious.”

Ram: “Of course. We train differently.”

When Subaru turned around, he saw Ram sitting on a chair elegantly tilting a glass. She was wearing maid garments, and yet she conducted herself with overflowing elegance as a female noble would show. This is what her constant behavior of unbreakable confidence and her constant remarkable dignity reminded him of.

That girl who acted like a female noble, Ram, glared at Rem holding onto Subaru with her arms and

Ram: “I see that Rem is enjoying the drinking party. How lovely.”

Subaru: “This is enjoyment…it looks like she’s extremely enjoying herself, but Rem being like this really is just the atmosphere. She hasn’t had a sip of alcohol, and yet this is how she is. Was Rem like this at the oni village banquets?”

Ram: “…Rem and I had complicated situations. Moreover, I also didn’t want to get Rem involved in adult only gatherings.”

Ram responding while looking down caused Subaru to hesitate from asking more. He just heard about the sisters’ horns the other day. Asking about their hometown was taboo.

When he completely forgot about it and brought up the topic, he wanted to believe that his judgement was becoming cloudy because of the sake.

—He found it really hard to understand the situation around him, but in truth, Subaru also was drinking a lot of sake.

It would be nice if he got intoxicated and started to have a new side of himself, like Emilia and Rem, to be charmful, but sadly, Subaru was tolerant with alcohol.

He was not drunk and could still interpret his situations. He was quite amazed with his own genetics.

Subaru: “The flavor of sake wasn’t bad. …That’s what I’ve learned, and I guess the fact that I shouldn’t get girls to drink sake carelessly.”

Ram: “I feel like that also is pushing it too far.”

He was shocked because of all the countless empty sake bottles that were around Ram, who said those words and tilted a sake cup. Things like her attitude, genetics, talent, and other random things all depicted her manner as an oni.

Subaru: “Ram is a heavy drinker, just like I thought. Which means that the others…Puck, wow.”

He headed towards the hall, saw Puck on the table, and then opened his eyes wide.

Puck boasted himself and had said “I won’t let Lia drink sake”, but it seemed that he completely forgot about that spirit and was immersed in a bowl of sake, enjoying his bath of alcohol.

At the front, he saw Roswaal give a sake cup to the person he was talking with; it was a spirit and an imperial sorcerer being surprisingly friendly with each other. And then—

Subaru: “Ah, I see. Beatrice, that rascal.”

Subaru searches around for a little silhouette, and looks at the girl beside the terrace. Beatrice sat on the railing of the empty terrace, her hair swaying along with the wind.

He saw her poignant expression, which was an expression indicative of loneliness, making Subaru let out a sigh.

Subaru: “Well, guess I’ll go mess with her for a bit. Emilia-tan, I’m sorry, but look after Rem.”

Emilia: “Hmmm? Ya, got it. Here here, Rem, come here~. Mmhuhu, sooo cute.”

He politely unwraps arms of the still eyed girl that she had around his back, Rem, and left her to Emilia. Emilia takes the unmoving girl, and hugs her happily as a reward. The two cute girls rubbed their cheeks against each other while Emilia gently rubbed Rem's blue hair.

Subaru: "…I want to take a picture of this."

Ram: "I'll burn it into memory."

Ram let out a vigorous nod at Subaru, who didn't want to let the situation pass by him. He left the rest up to Ram's memory and headed towards the terrace, where Beatrice stood still.

She was certainly gazing at the starry sky. He leans against the railing next to her and smiles.

Subaru: "Don't let it end with the two of us. You wouldn't be able to bear being seen as a loner, don't you think?"

Beatrice: "That would be an unreasonable insult, I suppose. Also, mind your own business. …You are the one who said to not drink sake in the first place, I suppose. What am I supposed to do?"

Subaru: "Becauuse, I did invite you, but when I imagine a girl like you drinking alcohol, then I couldn't allow it. It's painful imagining a girl that had the taste of sake slip into her memory drink in the forbidden archives by herself. I don't want to think about it."

The purpose of this party was to have fun. There was no reason to make this girl commit crime. Or rather, this certainly was something Puck should have put an end to.

Subaru: "And yet, that cat is drinking heartily in an alcoholic bath. What kind of hedonist is this guy?"

Beatrice: "I won't let you insult Bubby, I suppose. Moreover, Bubby's behavior shows just how much he trusts me. So it's not like I feel lone…"

Subaru: "Ah! Emilia-tan and Rem are closer than they were earlier. Wait…!"

Beatrice: “It is beyond rude for you to come this far and do things like talk with me inattentively, I suppose!”

Subaru: “Ahh! No, you’ve got it wrong! Emilia-tan and Rem were getting into this thing over there and I was feeling these good manlike feelings. It’s not like my heart’s been stolen, but I need a camera…!”

Beatrice: “You are not convincing me at all!”

On the other side of the terrace, Emilia was patting Rem’s body, while Rem purred with Emilia embracing her. On top of the situation being lovely, they were also being gay.

Subaru: “I’m so sad that I’m not over there…!”

Beatrice: “It’s fine, I suppose. Roswaal has taken Bubby away from me. It would be suiting for me to shiver in the nightwind all by myself.”

Subaru: “My bad, my baddd. The host will get hurt if a pouting guest pierces through him like that with words. Jeez, guess I’ve got no choice.”

Subaru laughs at the girl who insulted him as unfaithful, and he jumps off the railing just like Beatrice did. However, just before he settled on the ground, he felt giddy from the sake and was about to fall.

Subaru: “Ohwa?! Sh-Shit! I thought I was gonna become smashed tomato!”

Beatrice: “Can you not laugh at a talent like risking your life like that? Even if you were to die like a smashed insect, I probably wouldn’t be that amused, I suppose.”

Subaru: “Don’t take responsibility for hospitality when I’m at the risk of life! That was really dangerous, huh.”

Subaru wipes off his cold sweat, and sat down next to the shocked girl, Beatrice. She wasn’t welcoming him, but she wasn’t running away either. This meant that Beatrice was okay with him sitting next to her.

Subaru: “Alright, then I will have a lovely talk with you, seeing how you’re lounging around. I actually wanted to use the starry sky as a way to talk about romantic topics and get lively with Emilia-tan, but the alcohol had an unparalleled amount of effect on her, so the plan has been setback.”

Beatrice: “I hear nothing but a schemer that sounds like he’s had his plans foiled, I suppose.”

Subaru: “Yes, that’s true. I know that’s true! But forget about that for now. And so, about the stars back at my hometown…over there, each of the stars have many anecdotes to go with their names.”

Subaru had these talks about stars, which people would certainly listen to, and it managed to make Beatrice interested and brought a smile to her face. Subaru holds his breath as she looks up at the stars throughout the sky while she showed enthusiasm like that.

When Subaru looked up at the starry sky, he was confused for a second, although this was something that happened every time.

—At any rate, the stars high up in the sky looked different from the heavenly bodies that Subaru knew well.

There was the Polaris star that stood out, shining brightly, and there was the Big Dipper that lined up near it. He did not know where the seasonal, awaited Summer triangle was. Neither did he know where the Winter Triangle, the Orion constellation, and the Cassiopeia constellation were either.

Ironically, he’d quickly know the answer if he looked up at the night sky. He’d understand that the stars in this world were in completely different locations compared to the stars in his world, based off their arrangement.

Beatrice: “…Looks like you forgot about them. If you have nothing to say, then I’m gonna go over there, I suppose.”

Subaru: “I didn’t forget about them. I was just puzzled because there are so many…first, look. The excessively glowing star over there is Polaris. Basically, if you get lost, rely on that star. That way is generally north.”

Beatrice: “No way. That’s south.”

Subaru: “Okay, then they’re the southern polar stars.”

Beatrice: “What do you mean “Okay then”?! It sounds like you’re just improvising whatever’s suitable!”

In truth, Subaru really was saying whatever was suitable. However, he hid that fact behind a bold smile and continued talking. If he pulled out here at a scene like this, he would be defeated, though he didn’t know what the match was, probably due to the sake.

In response to Beatrice’s doubtful look, Subaru points at the southern polar stars and

Subaru: “Look for other stars using those southern polar stars as a starting point. Look a bit lower, do you see how the five stars line up to form an “M”? That is the Cassiopeia constellation.”

Beatrice: “I don’t know what an “M” is, and I don’t see a form of anything.”

Subaru: “Don’t see it, feel it. Ah, if you don’t know what an M is, you can think of it is an anchor instead. The story behind Cassiopeia…well you see it’s a story about a prideful, loveable mother named Cassiopeia who displeased the people around her because of how she boasted about her daughter Andromeda too much. Something like that.”

Beatrice: “…The stories behind the stars sure do stink of humans, I suppose.”

Beatrice is amazed by Subaru’s stories. He relaxes his cheeks at that impression, which she let out with a sigh.

Subaru: “Riiightt? Back at my home town, people treat the stars like gods, but so many of those “gods” are only troublemakers. So they’re quite human! And that is what’s interesting about them.”

Beatrice: “Calling them gods is exaggeration. You sure did explain complex existences in a pretty egotistical way.”

Subaru: “When you think of supernatural existences, you think they’re awesome. But, when you see a similar existence, a spirit, submerge himself in a sake bath without a care in the world, then that’s not convincing at all.”

Ahead of him, Subaru saw Roswaal pouring new sake into the empty alcohol bath that Puck was in.

Beatrice was also looking at the scene. While making an expected serious face, she said

Beatrice: “Bubby is a great spirit that is unusual in every way. So uh, stop using Bubby’s composure as a standard for spirits, I suppose. Bubby is just super special.”

Subaru: “Thank you for managing a difficult followup. So, about the other stars…that’s right, okay! Let’s look for the one and only Subaru!”

Beatrice: “…Huh?”

In response to Subaru snapping his fingers and his teeth glistening, Beatrice perceived him as a pitiful thing, causing Subaru to hurriedly shake his head at her behavior.

Subaru: “Wait wait wait, don’t pity me! It’s different. Subaru is my name, but I am named after a star. “Subaru” is a star cluster that has many stars gathered together. So I’m suggesting that we should look for that.”

Beatrice: “Your parents have done a cruel thing to you, naming you after a twinkling star in the night sky like that, I suppose.”

Subaru: “Don’t look down upon it by implying it failed to live up to its name!”

He actually did care about it. It seemed like he was going to come in conflict with that complex, so Subaru pointed his finger at the sky while covering it up with a frivolous attitude.

Subaru You might not be interested, but stay with me for a little bit more. I thought I'd spout some drunk nonsense, so."

Beatrice: "…I didn't go as far as to say I wasn't interested."

"…"

Beatrice whispered those words quietly to Subaru, who was in high spirits. When he opened his eyes wide at that unexpected word, the little girl looked away slightly. Her cheeks were slightly red.

Subaru: "What is this what is this? You are a dishonest loli! It can't be helped. It just can't be helped! Alright, then I guess I'll continue the super fun talk about the starry sky!"

Beatrice: "You are loud, I suppose. You're irritating."

Subaru: "Yeah yeah, cute cute!"

Subaru's attitude improved completely because of Beatrice's attitude and started to talk a lot with a good mood. He looks up at the unfamiliar starry sky, and started to talk about an abundance of misdirected stories without stopping.

He kind of felt like the ease of his head was joining together with the ease of his heart.

6

Beatrice: "Roswaal"

Roswaal: "Oh, had enough with your rendezvous with Subaru-kun?"

Roswaal says this, shakes his glass, and smiles at the girl who came back from the terrace, Beatrice. In response to the clown's words, Beatrice gives a displeased looking frown.

Beatrice: "Keep your jokes reasonable, I suppose. Me having honest fun times with that? I'm not amused."

Roswaal: "Jeez you are not honest with yo~urself. That part of you doesn't change, hu~h."

Beatrice: “That’s a given, I suppose. I’m not Bubby’s next apprentice for that aspect. Moreover…”

Beatrice glances at Ram, who sat facing Roswaal. Roswaal guesses the meaning of that look. When he gave an acknowledging gesture with his chin, Ram silently left her seat.

Ram drinks the glass of sake in her hand dry, bows, and then headed towards the terrace. Subaru, Emilia, and Ram were sound asleep, lying down peacefully.

Ram covers each of them with prepared blankets one at a time. She did it politely with Emilia, affectionately with Rem, and then with Subaru, she did in it a way so that his face was concealed.

Roswaal: “Girls not used to drinking are cute. Subaru-kun did appear to be fine, but it seems like he surprisingly hit his limi~t.”

Beatrice: “He collapsed as if he couldn’t take it anymore, I suppose. The way he walked and the way he talked were suspicious from the start…he’s always crazy, so it makes sense how I wasn’t noticing it.”

Roswaal: “In comparison, you supported him as if you understood how he became unable to move from his drunkenness. Did you see a difference between that and the usual Subaru-kun…? I wonder.”

“…”

Roswaal: “I’d like you to stop making that scary look with your eyes, since it’s just a mere jo~ke.”

Beatrice lets out a long, tired sigh at Roswaal, whose intention was to tease implicatively. This heavy, frail sigh was as long as the amount of time they’ve known each other.

Roswaal shrugs his shoulders in resignation at that gesture she made, which didn’t suit her childish appearance.

Roswaal: “Did you not enjoy this evening? “

Beatrice: “Did you think otherwise? Boisterous partying like this… as someone who hates peace being disturbed, this is something that irritates me the most.”

Roswaal: “You sure about that? When I consider how you’ve been lately, I can’t honestly nod my head at that. You were just submitting to the silence of peace. The real you is…”

Beatrice: “Roswaal”

The sharp look and the sharp voice she gave Roswaal made him stop speaking in the middle of his sentence. Just then, an awkward atmosphere came floating in. However, that—

Puck: “Betty”

Beatrice: “…Bubby”

The third person that was left at that place, Puck, tilts his head in doubt while being in a bowl of sake.

Puck: “Betty, you didn’t really like this party?”

Beatrice: “…That…that’s not really true, I suppose. Just seeing Bubby enjoying himself is enough happiness for me. However, today Bubby reeks of liquor, so I won’t hug you, I suppose.”

Puck: “Nyan.”

Puck splashes inside of the bowl of sake and then sinks. He drinks all of the sake in the bowl in one gulp and drives away the smell of liquor from the body as he jumps out.

Puck: “How do I smell?”

Beatrice: “You still reek of liquor.”

Puck: “Then how about this?”

In response to Beatrice’s judgement, Puck’s body illuminates while he shakes his whiskers. The cat’s body reconstructs after that flicker of light, and then all of the effects from before were gone.

Roswaal: “Being able to go on without having a hangover, what a convenient nature.”

Puck: “In exchange, the sake I drank and the food I ate are gone, though. Looking it that way, the bodies of spirits aren’t very amusing.”

Puck winks at Roswaal’s straightforward impression and then climbs onto Beatrice’s shoulder. Puck brings himself close to her cheeks, his liquor smell being gone, and then Beatrice glares at Roswaal.

Roswaal: “Oh, that’s an angry face. What the he~ck happened?”

Beatrice: “I just want to hear your real intention, I suppose. What was the point of this thing tonight?”

Roswaal: “It’s just like what I said before the to~ast. Everyone here needs to work together for the problems in the future. —For the sake of my dearest wish, these are the members. That’s what I’ve decided.”

“…”

Roswaal: “You should prepare yourself too. The time for fulfilling that long long contract is near. At the very least, I am prepared for it.”

Roswaal talks in a serious tone and heads towards the terrace with a glass in his hand. Roswaal had the sleeping boy and the others projected into his eyes beyond the world of blue amber.

Beatrice, who knew his dearest wish, did not affirm his decision, nor was she negative towards it. And then the reason Beatrice abandoned choosing one is because she had chosen to take up a vast amount of time.

Roswaal: “…No matter what happens, I am wishing for your success. That is one of my few motives, as a person who only forms lies.”

Beatrice: “This is some boring sentimentality, I suppose. Are you saying that I should have sympathy for you?”

Roswaal: “Empathy. After all, You and I are unique accomplices in this world.”

Roswaal says those words and put up a fresh glass onto the table. The glass was filled with amber sake. The clown pushes the glass in front of the girl.

Beatrice: “What is this?”

Roswaal: “It’s yours. It would be cruel if you ended up not being able to drink a single drop of sake after you were invited to this banquet. Plus, the children who disagreed with you drinking seem to be sound asleep.”

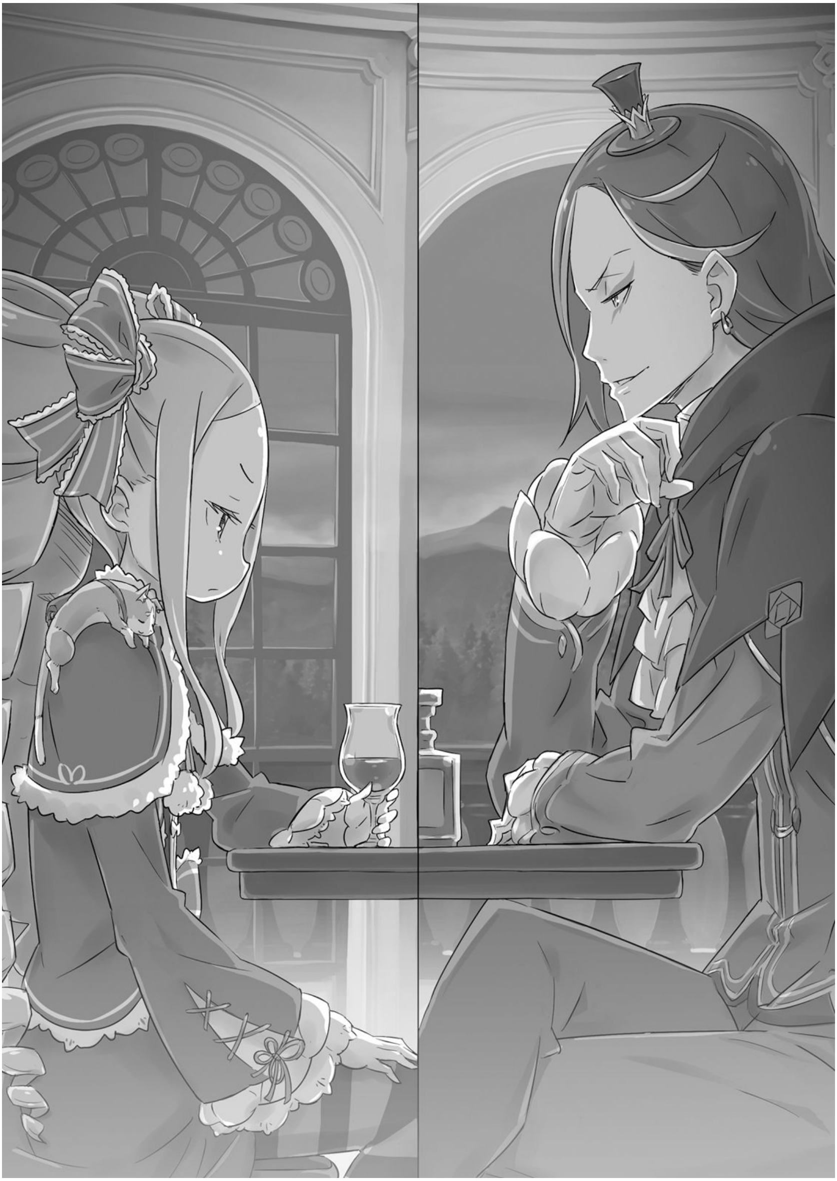
Roswaal closes one of his eyes with an evil smile and offered the sake to Beatrice. Beatrice responds to those words by reaching for the glass. However, just before that, the wind blew.

The breeze that flew in from the terrace and filled the stillness of the night caused Beatrice to remember a conversation from before.

“…”

And then, she pushes the glass back and rejected the offer of sake.

Beatrice: “I won’t drink it, I suppose.”



Roswaal: “Is this you being faithful to Subaru-kun? Once again, you are surprisingly…”

Beatrice: “Don’t misunderstand me here. The reason why I won’t drink isn’t because I listened to what that kid said, I suppose. …It’s because my mom told me not to a long time ago.”

Roswaal kept his silence as a response to Beatrice’s reply. Seeing how it had an instant effect on him, Beatrice pet Puck’s back with a face indicating that she was done with the matter.

She did have a night like this before. —Under the night sky, Beatrice’s mother did not make a pleasant face at Beatrice tasting sake. She felt like there were also other voices that told her to stop.

Thus, the person that continued to stagnate in the forbidden archives could not violate the words her mother said that day.

Beatrice: “That’s all there is to it. —What he said has nothing to do with me, I suppose.”

Beatrice says this explanation and never tasted the sake.

The night of the banquet advances.

The night of the banquet where the host learned about the taste of alcohol and the troubles with it, and where the girls’ drinking habits became completely exposed, slowly advances.

Only the starry sky looked down on those peaceful hours in silence.

Emilia and Ram’s Bumpy Master-Servant Relationship

“Ugeh…”

The moment the girl entered the guest room without even knocking, she ended up raising her voice at the sight that awaited her within.

The girl possessed sweet, lovely features. Sporting short, uniform hair, her almond eyes shone a light crimson. But contrary to her lovely appearance, the girl seemed to have a sharp, intellectual aura about her.

But even that aura dissipated as she grimaced at the unpleasant sight before her.

“—That voice, is that you, Ram? Sorry to surprise you.”

The next voice did not come from the girl—From Ram, it came from a person who was already in the room beforehand.

This voice was as clear as a silver bell, and merely hearing it would shake the listener’s heart for better or for worse. But this time around, the voice sounded strangely confined as it reverberated through the room. This was only natural.

The reason being that the owner of the voice was in this room with a bucket completely covering their head.

“…What is this, Emilia-sama. To cover your head with a bucket in a place like this.”

“Fufufu, can you not tell just by looking?”

“I can only imagine that this is Barusu’s fault.”

“You’re kind of acting like this is reeeally weird? Also, Subaru does have something to do with this whole bucket thing, but I’m keeping this secret from him. Please keep quiet about this.”

“Barusu has something to do with this, but it’s a secret from him…? That’s rather complicated, Emilia-sama.”

With the bucket still on her head, Emilia was sitting in a chair in the middle of the guest room. Ram’s conversation with her while unable to even see her face failed to touch on the heart of the matter, and was thus going nowhere.

“Hmm, Alright, I’ll explain. Off you go.”

Perhaps having noticed Ram’s frustration, Emilia slowly took her bucket off.

As she did so, her long, glistening silver hair spilled out of the bucket. This hair which was alluring as moonlight itself flowed down her back as she blinked and set her amethyst eyes on Ram.

All the while, she held the bucket to her chest as if it was precious to her. Ram knit her brows.

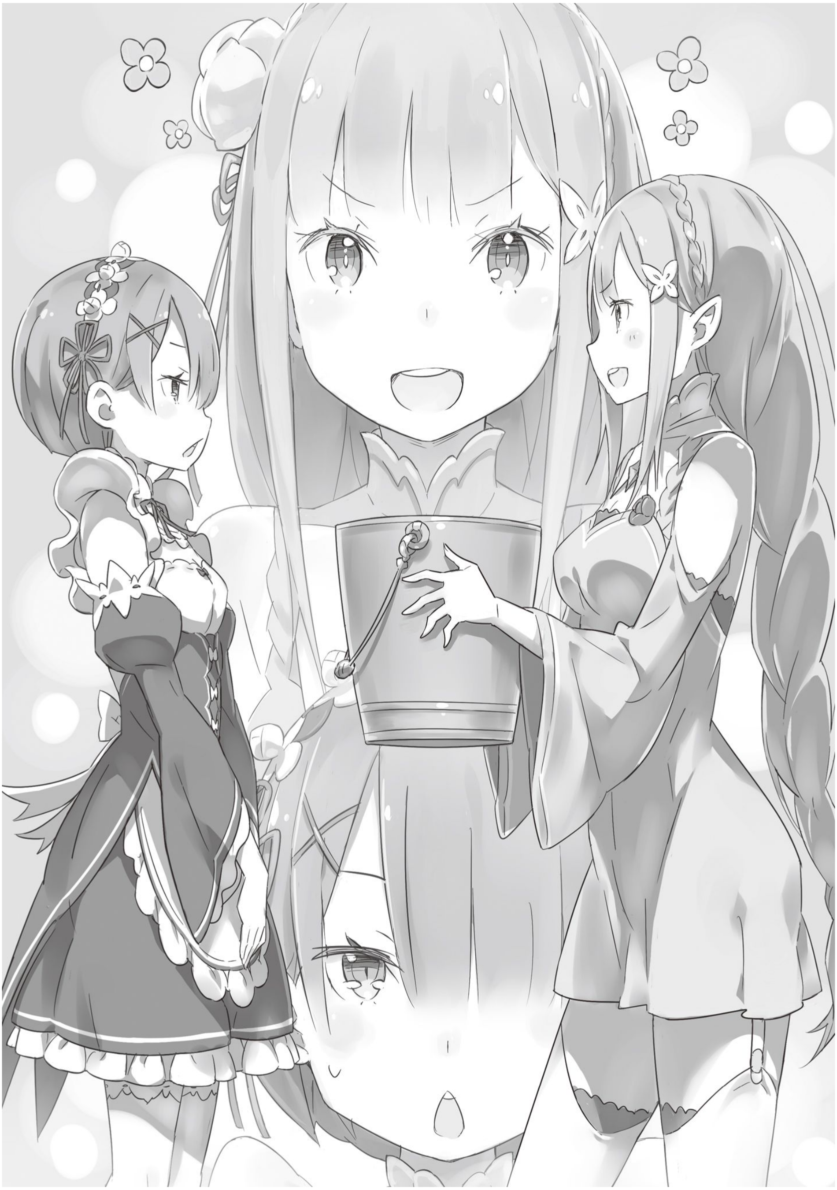
“As far as Ram remembers, you were not afflicted with a perverse obsession with buckets.”

“Yeah, it’s not like I’m particularly crazy about buckets either. But this bucket right here is my sensei, so that’s why things ended up like this.”

“…”

She was awaiting a normal response, so this answer that made her head hurt all the more caused Ram to narrow her eyes. In response to this reaction, Emilia hurriedly waved her hands,

“Ah, no, that’s not it! Umm, I’d better explain from the start. Do you remember what happened this afternoon? Not that I really want you to…”



"Are you referring to that singing that sounded like a bird's death throes?"

"Th-That's… What I'm talking about, yeah, right…"

When Ram bluntly got right to the point, Emilia hung her head with a sad smile.

As Ram cast a sidelong glance at Emilia's disheartened state, the events of several hours ago replayed in her mind. This was during their short break after they had finished the first stage of work in the mansion, and everyone had some free time to do as they pleased.

Ram was walking around the mansion looking for her much beloved little sister when she heard it, a completely bizarre voice entered her ears when she passed by the dining room. Suspecting that this voice that sounded very much like a bird being strangled to death was yet another one of her colleague Subaru's pranks, Ram barged into the room, but—

"But what I actually found within that room was your unfortunate figure sincerely attempting to sing."

"Don't call it unfortunate! Although I will admit that that was kind of horrible."

"Kind of."

"Reeeeally horrible! Are you happy now? You're so mean, Ram! Beh—!"

Tormented by a strange sense of stubbornness, Emilia's attitude turned completely sullen. However, Ram tilted her head, not feeling the sense of disappointment she had expected from this response.

Ram had assumed that Emilia who knew of her tone deafness was someone who was easily influenced.

"Despite this, you are not discouraged. Does this mean you've suddenly become defiant in this short time?”

“I don’t know what kind of impression you have of me, but I haven’t become defiant or discouraged or anything! Nor do I even have time for that sort of thing, I’m burning up!”

“Heeh, is that right.”

“Yes, that’s right. I’m burning up. I’m seeeeeriously on fire.”

In response to Ram’s indifferent reply, Emilia’s eyes sparkled as she repeated herself any number of times. Her expression was very clearly saying, ‘Ask me what I’m so excited about, ask me, ask me’, causing Ram to sigh.

“Emilia-sama, it truly does seem to me that Barusu has had a hand in this.”

“I don’t think that’s the case, though…”

“…Well then, for what reason exactly are you burning up?”

“Ah, you want to know? Fufu, and with that I shall return to the tale of the bucket. This must be quite the shock, isn’t that right?”

“I suppose so, it would be absurd if the bucket had no relation to this.”

As Emilia showed off the bucket she was holding, Ram momentarily felt relieved that they were finally returning to the topic at hand. Emilia’s fingers gently stroked the bucket’s surface as she continued,

“Subaru told me about this. That there are some ways to correct t-tone… Deafness.”

“Please continue without shame.”

“And then, he said the first step was to put a bucket over my head to confirm my tone deafness. It thought that was another one of his pranks at first, but that wasn’t the case at all. Subaru was seriously thinking about how to help me, so I figured I should do my best as well.”

Her enthusiasm was splendid, but the connection between her tone deafness and this bucket remained unclear. Although reflecting on their conversation thus far, Ram could hazard a guess as to what was going on here.

"You wanna know what the connection is between tone deafness and buckets?"

"Yes, absolutely. When you have a bucket over your head, the sound of your voice reverberating within would allow you to comprehend the extent of your tone deafness. If there exists some other explanation, please do elaborate."

"…Ram, could it be that you actually knew what buckets could do all along?"

"Well, Ram has been using buckets for quite some time after all."

The contents of their conversation were utterly meaningless and thus her responses became increasingly perfunctory as well.

As Ram boldly boasted in her formal manner, Emilia's attitude seemed to be one of comprehension, "I see." This straightforward reaction made Ram feel just a little uneasy.

—From Ram's perspective, her relationship with Emilia posed some unusual difficulties.

It went without saying that to Ram, her one and only master for life was none other than Roswaal. Her body, mind, and soul, everything she had—Barring her love for her little sister, it would be no exaggeration to say she devoted all of herself to him.

And Emilia was absolutely indispensable to Roswaal's plans. Consequently, Roswaal welcomed her into his mansion and treated her as someone even higher than himself.

Of course, Roswaal had ordered Ram and Rem to follow his example, but—

"…She's completely unreliable."

That was the sort of impression Ram had of Emilia.

When she accompanied her to the capital, she separated from Ram and ended up having the insignia that qualified her as a royal selection candidate stolen from her. Such incidents caused Ram's wariness to steadily build up over the four months they'd known each other.

At the very least, Emilia was not someone Ram felt like she could count on just like that. She was also completely lacking in refinement, there was a limit to how flawed she could be as a person.

"So you have decided to practice on your own in order to correct your tone deafness, Emilia-sama? And moreover, at this hour."

"Umm, That's how… It is. I mean, if I were to sing in my room it would probably be an inconvenience to everyone else. There's no one around this part of the building, so I thought it would be fine to sing here."

"Meaning you did not expect Ram to come looking around here. Ram does not do this very frequently, however."

Showing consideration in her own way, Emilia had decided to move elsewhere and Ram had ended up happening upon her, that appeared to be the gist of it. Perhaps one could call this a false alarm. All the more so now that she had discovered that Emilia was merely practicing to correct her tone deafness.

"Although I do not think this is something one ought to go as far as to cut into their sleeping hours for."

"Even I can't say anything in response to that. But I ended up bothering Subaru and the others a whoooole lot today, so… I want to do this properly."

"…"

"The truth is that the reason everyone went along with my singing practice was for my sake, isn't that right. Not to correct my tone deafness, but to, umm… How do I put this?"

“To relax, is it?”

“Right, to relax. It was reeeeally fun, but in all that fun the tension ended up leaving me, so I wonder if that was how it was.”

Emilia donned a faint smile as she spoke, Ram who was an outsider could not give her an accurate answer.

However, she could make a guess.

The reason Roswaal let Emilia have some time to enjoy herself even though she should have been studying every single day in preparation for the royal selection—Everyone in the mansion knew that Emilia had been pushing herself too hard these past several days, and that willpower of hers was going nowhere.

Simply put, Subaru and Roswaal were working together in secret in order to change Emilia’s mood.

“Even though he is Barusu, to think he had fun conspiring with Roswaal-sama, what a crafty little…”

“Ram? Your eyes kind of look super fierce right about now, are you okay?”

“Yes, I am fine. I merely lost my cool for a moment. Well then…”

Having noticed the consideration of those around her, Emilia whose mood should have changed was now staying up late to practice singing. This was completely backwards, or rather, Ram got the feeling that their original objective was a failure.

As Ram thought such things, Emilia placed a finger on her lip and smiled in response.

“It’s alright. Everyone came together to teach me how to relax properly. Now, while I’ll be sure to remember that, I also want to be able to sing.”

“Although it seems to me that having you sing was secondary to them.”

“I know that. But I want both. Is it wrong to say that?”

As Emilia tilted her head, her attitude displayed the simple desire to overcome her shortcomings, and Ram assented having understood this. Emilia really was a little different after all.

“Do you not think you have become greedier than you used to be, Emilia-sama?”

“Don’t you know, Ram? That I’m actually trying to become the ruler of this country.”

Compared to the scale of this goal of hers, most other things were hardly even worth mentioning. This response of hers caused Ram to smile.

This was not a wry smile nor was it one of ridicule, it was a rare smile from the bottom of her heart.

“Ah, you’re smiling. Did I say something funny?”

“I wonder? It’s just, Ram’s opinion of you has changed ever so slightly.”

“Really? That makes me pretty happy then.”

Those words meant that Ram was looking down on her before, but Emilia decided to ignore that part and accepted it wholeheartedly.

Honest and easily deceived, one might think she would be easy to manipulate as a puppet. But due to her flaws, she could also do things that were completely unexpected. This girl’s nature was truly bothersome.

However—

“But to earnestly give it your all despite your flaws… I cannot say I dislike it.”

That nature was something Ram always saw in her darling other half.

No matter how different they were from her beloved little sister, Ram could not hate anyone who strived to overcome their shortcomings. Because that was a feeling Ram could not understand.

“Did you say something just now?”

Emilia looked puzzled, she could not quite catch Ram’s murmur which was as quiet as a whisper. Meeting her gaze, Ram shrugged slightly.

“Yes, I did say something. I was wondering if your rigorous training has produced any results, Emilia-sama.”

“Mm, I can’t overlook what you just said. Very well. You came at exactly the right time, so listen closely. The truth is I improved quite a bit in the afternoon alone. But I’ve advanced even further beyond that now!”

“Well then, please give it your all.”

Extending her hand towards Emilia who was full of vigor, Ram sat down on the guest room’s unused bed. This ruffled the sheets slightly, but it was Subaru who would have to fix them tomorrow. No problem.

“La, la, lalala—”

Receiving Ram’s signal and her gaze, Emilia looked just a little tense as she started singing. Her voice was slightly too shrill when she started, but it settled down soon enough. She was actually singing.

Considering she started with a sound that could be described as a bird’s death throes, her current advancement could be considered a historic achievement.

“…”

She started burning up as she sang and swayed her shoulders as she became increasingly engrossed in her singing. Even Ram who was listening intently ended up closing her eyes and devoting herself to the song before she knew it.

‘The Sword Demon’s Love Song’ was an extremely popular love song passed down in the kingdom for generations. Liliana, a traveling minstrel who had once stopped by the mansion, had performed it so well that even Ram was secretly taken in. Of course, Emilia’s singing was still lacking a number of ways compared to hers. She still made mistakes that stood out. But it wasn’t bad.

“…”

When the song approached its end, it was as if the scenes the lyrics described were manifesting in her closed eyes. Realizing just how deeply absorbed she was in this song, Ram smiled wryly.

And with that smile still on her face, the song came to a close, and Emilia turned to look at Ram.

“That is all. Your impressions, please.”

“Yes… Nine points.”

“Eh! You mean out of nine?”

“You’re quite audacious all of a sudden. I mean out of a hundred, of course.”

This scathing appraisal caused Emilia to drop her shoulders in dejection. However, she immediately clenched her fists tightly and looked up.

“But I’ve gotten a little better, right? How many points would I have gotten when I first started?”

“It is rather absurd that you think you would get any points at all.”

“It was that bad?!”

To begin with, even calling it singing would be an insult to the concept of songs. That was how bad it was. So compared to that, Emilia’s current level definitely got a passing grade.

"But I'm sure a passing grade is not enough to satisfy you."

"I suppose so. I wanna work harder and become better. Also, it looks like I'm still no good with songs besides the Sword Demon's Love Song after all…"

Scratching her cheek in an embarrassed manner, Emilia pointed out her flaws. Ram sighed at Emilia's ambition and the enthusiasm that came with it.

At this rate, this singing practice that was supposed to be a change of pace for her might once again cause her to overexert herself, putting them back at square one.

"Very well, then let us do this every other day. You shall practice here only on a fixed schedule. Ram shall free up some time as well."

"…You'll do this with me? Ram, with me?"

"It would be worrisome if there wasn't someone watching over you."

This was what Ram truly felt, of course she also had the ulterior motive of doing it for Roswaal's sake.

But even setting that aside—The song wasn't bad, she thought.

"Thank you, Ram. I'll do my best with you and bucket-sensei!"

"Please do not place Ram on the same level as that bucket."

And with this bumpy conclusion, it was decided that for now, these nightly practice sessions would continue.

Beatrice and Rem's Cumbersome Cleaning

1

"Gah, I suppose."

The moment the door was opened without a knock, the girl was greeted with that sort of voice by the room's owner.

The girl had a face with soft, lovely features, and light blue eyes that made one think of the calm surface of a lake. Her hair, the same color as her eyes, was trimmed short, and her body was wrapped in a maid outfit that had been altered to provide more exposure. Her round eyes held both faint surprise and relief, and surprise won out for the moment.

Her gaze was directed towards the middle of the room, where someone was seated on a stepladder in the center of the forbidden library.

"Beatrice-sama, please forgive me for bothering you so late at night."

The maid, Rem, was late in bowing her head because of her surprise—the room's owner let out a long sigh at her.

The room's owner was a little girl who appeared far more childlike than Rem. However, her sigh carried a curious sense of age, and was terribly mismatched with her doll-like outward appearance, which was well-suited to her gorgeous dress.

It goes without saying that judging her by human standards might itself be a mistake.

"Truly, to be visiting someone this late, you haven't learned your manners, you know."

"Yes, I have nothing to say for myself. But…"

"You shouldn't say 'But' right after saying 'I have nothing to say for myself', I suppose!"

Going red in the face, and shaking her unmistakable curled hair, the little girl, Beatrice, raised her voice. While once again lowering her head at this reaction, Rem nevertheless spoke her thoughts.

"Beatrice-sama, it seems that you are more irritable than usual this evening."

"…Well, listen to you, you know. What would you know about Betty?"

"This is only Rem's intuition, but perhaps it's related to a bucket?"

"…?! Wh, wha, what evidence do you have to go and say something like that, I suppose?!"

"It's because you're cradling that bucket so carefully, Beatrice-sama."

"Drat, you know…!"

In a single moment, the chill in the air was dispersed by Rem's pointed question. All that was left was Rem's victorious look after laying hands on the truth, and Beatrice, wide-eyed after being found out.

And in Beatrice's arms, just as Rem had pointed out, a bucket was cradled…For the last few days, there had been an important connection between the Roswaal manor and buckets.

"Rem was surprised as well. To think that you were concerned about being tone-deaf, Beatrice-sama."

Letting out a sigh composed of surprise and admiration in equal parts, Rem nodded several times.

Beginning from the stay of the minstrel Liliana, Emilia's tone-deafness came to light, and she began training to correct it. After that, it seems that the situation expanded further, and Beatrice's tone-deafness came to light as collateral damage…

“Rem, too, has heard that buckets are useful for correcting tone-deafness. Honestly, when she first heard that from Subaru-kun, she was skeptical, but Emilia-sama’s ‘Sword Demon’s Love Song’ has improved markedly…Rem wishes you good luck!”

“You should really do something about the habit you have of occasionally rubbing salt in people’s wounds without realizing it, I suppose!”

“…?”

Being reprimanded after trying to offer support, Rem tilted her head to the side with a questioning look on her face. At Rem’s response, Beatrice held up the bucket while looking even more weary.

“Setting that aside! Setting that aside, it would be troubling if you were to misunderstand! It’s not like Betty is being moved to action over a meaningless measurement of this and that about singing, I suppose. I would never agree to let someone make me wear a bucket, and saying that I’m tone-deaf, well, calling that a bold-faced lie would be generous.”

“Well then, may I request a verse from ‘Sword Demon’s Love Song’?”

“Even if you request it, I won’t sing, I suppose!”

“It’s fine. As a result of Emilia-sama’s state of affairs, Rem has recently been carrying earplugs with her.”

As Rem took white earplugs from a pocket, Beatrice scowled at her. However, not wanting to get caught up in the flow of things, she firmly shook her head.

“A, anyways, Betty being tone-deaf is nothing but a lie spread by that man, I suppose. He’s trying to ensnare Betty with evil rumors, you know. You shouldn’t be deceived, I suppose.”

“…In that case, Beatrice-sama, why are you holding a bucket?”

“If you think about how a bucket is used, you’ll understand that right away, you know.”

"Besides wearing it?"

"Would you stop talking about wearing it, I suppose!"

A use for buckets besides wearing them; when she was asked that, Rem was immediately lost in thought.

Was there actually a use for them besides wearing? Recently, anyone around Rem who had been speaking of buckets was either wearing one, or trying to get someone to wear one.

"Goodness, I can't think of anything besides the usual, using it for cleaning up…"

"That's! Correct! You know! What other way to use it would there be, I suppose?!"

"I see, you really outwitted me. Nicely done, Beatrice-sama."

"I wasn't, I wasn't trying to outwit you, you know…"

As Rem showed her admiration with a curtsey, Beatrice let her shoulders sag with an exhausted expression. The little girl atop the stepladder cradled the bucket to her chest, and let out the biggest sigh yet.

"I didn't think of you as the sort of girl who would say such outlandish things, I suppose…"

"Beatrice-sama, too, has never spoken like this with Rem in the past."

"…and you never spoke so impertinently, either, you know. As well,"

Glaring reproachfully, Beatrice stared at Rem. And then, she finally drew her attention to what had been at Rem's feet, ever since she entered the forbidden library.

For her midnight visit to the forbidden library, Rem had not come empty-handed. Around her feet where several different cleaning tools, and amongst them was, of course, a bucket…

“…I’ll at least ask what you’ve come here to do, I suppose.”

“That would be to allow the bucket you are holding to be used for its original role, Beatrice-sama.”

If one wasn’t wearing it, then the original role of a bucket was none other than being a cleaning tool.

As Beatrice narrowed her eyes at that reply, Rem smiled faintly and announced:

“…I thought we could begin a simple top-to-bottom cleaning of the forbidden library.”

2

“Simple, and yet a top-to-bottom cleaning, I have some doubts… you know.”

Remaining seated on the stepladder and looking nonplussed, Beatrice mumbled quietly to herself. Paying no mind to what she heard, Rem used a feather duster to delicately brush the bookshelves that filled the forbidden library.

It was a vast, grand forbidden library. The Roswaal manor was a fairly large-scale building, but even then, fitting in a library of this size was no simple matter.

Unrestrained by real space, it was a monumental feat only made possible by mastery of shadow magic, the superspell that connected another dimension with this one, Beatrice’s “Door Crossing”.

In the forbidden library that was completely cut off from the influence of the outside world, it was said that even the passage of time could go unnoticed. Whether that was true or not, even the books in the forbidden library that were clearly ancient showed no sign of deterioration. For that very reason, the precious tomes remained in their original condition.

Unfortunately, Rem wasn’t equipped with the sort of discerning eyes that would allow her to see their value at a glance.

“Damaging or ruining the books will not be permitted, I suppose. Be extremely careful, you know.”

“Yes, I understand. It’s only a matter of brushing off the dust, and wiping them clean.”

Without stopping her cleaning, Rem quietly responded to the cautionary words that Beatrice tossed to her.

The important point of cleaning a library was, as you’d expect, taking care not to damage the books. Paper absorbs water and oil easily. It seemed unlikely that mold would grow in the forbidden library, but if dust could accumulate then perhaps mold could grow as well. Using as little water as possible, Rem focused on using the duster.

“…”

For a short time, silence reigned in the forbidden library, broken only by the swish-swish of Rem wielding her duster. As that went on, Beatrice’s eyes were lowered to the book she had been reading, but she turned the pages slowly. Repeatedly turned back to the same page, she eventually muttered “Oh, enough” and raised her head.

“Isn’t there something you want to say to Betty, I suppose?!”

“Something from Rem to Beatrice-sama? Ah, you are adorable as always this evening, Beatrice-sama. Please be at ease. Sadly, you’re no match for nee-sama, but…”

“Why is Betty being belittled over an unrelated matter, you know?! Never mind that; don’t you think there’s anything strange about the situation where you’re being made to do the cleaning all alone?”

As Beatrice swung her legs while seated on the stepladder, Rem tilted her head with a ‘Hmm’.

Rem hadn’t the faintest idea what Beatrice was trying to say. Originally, it was the events of the bet a few days ago between Subaru and Beatrice that led her to decide on cleaning the forbidden library.

Giving Beatrice a sense of belonging in the mansion…While scratching her head at the meaning of the plan Subaru had hatched, Rem gained a chance to enter the forbidden library for the first time in a long while. At that time, there was something inappropriate to the serene space—put plainly, the air smelled of a lack of sufficient cleaning.

Since then, she'd been walking about in the mansion night after night, cautiously looking for an opportunity…

"Rem is doing just as she had wished to do, so she doesn't feel any problem in particular…"

"It looks like the servant mentality has seeped into your very bones, you know. The fact that Betty is holding a bucket is because she planned to use it…not wear it, I suppose."

"If you weren't planning to wear it, then you, too, were going to clean the library, Beatrice-sama?"

"Lately, someone's been entering and leaving the forbidden library without permission, and so the influence of the outside world has been streaming in frequently. Normally, feather-dusting is unnecessary here… that's how it should be, but despite that, well, as the librarian of the forbidden library, this is a serious state of affairs."

"…"

Mumbling and going red in the face, Beatrice spoke quickly as she strung together various reasons. Looking straight at the face of the girl who wasn't looking her way, Rem came to a sudden, strange realization.

It was unclear what sort of whim it was, but it seemed that Beatrice wanted to help with the library's cleaning. However, she was sensitive about it, and couldn't bring up the idea herself. Rem, too, was familiar with being unable to openly talk about one's own desires…In the past, she'd caused trouble for her older sister Ram time after time because of it.

Rem, who was timid and lacked courage, was saved many times by her sister's consideration and kindness. The days of trying to be a replacement for her sister were something she'd put behind her, but…

"I won't hesitate to imitate nee-sama's good points."

Even if she couldn't become her replacement, there were hundreds and hundreds of things about Ram that were worth imitating. Thinking about this moment as one of those times, Rem was able to gracefully extend her hand.

As Rem offered the hand opposite the one holding the duster, Beatrice looked down at it.

"What's this?"

"Normally, it would be very rude to ask Beatrice-sama to help out with the cleaning, but… I do understand your sense of responsibility as the librarian. So, just this once."

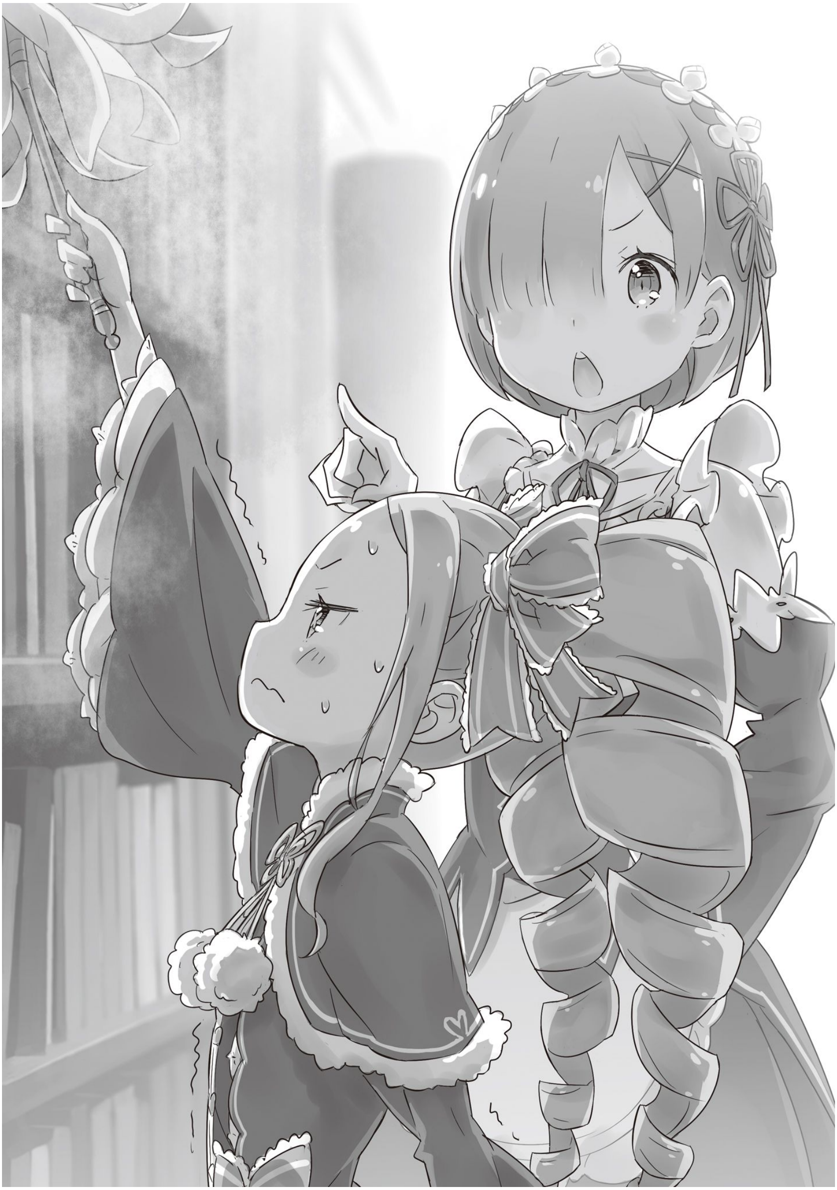
Imitating Subaru and Roswaal, Rem winked at Beatrice.

Glancing sideways at that expression, Beatrice took Rem's hand with a resigned attitude.The young girl stepped down from the stepladder, and lightly brushed the hem of her skirt.

"In that case, I'll take you up on that offer, you know. As a special exception, I suppose.It's not like I ran my mouth off about having the bucket for cleaning, and after that you actually started cleaning so I had no choice but to go along with it, you know. Don't get the wrong idea, I suppose."

"At this moment, Rem understands the circumstances of the situation better than anyone else in the world, so there's no need to worry."

As Rem nodded in response to the absurd excuse, Beatrice sniffed and took the duster from her. Holding it as she turned slowly towards a bookshelf, she began dusting violently. Rem rushed to speak up in response to the rather majestic use of the duster.



“Th, that won’t do, Beatrice-sama.If you use it that roughly…”

“…? But, to get the dust to come off, you have to use about this much strength, you know.”

“Even so, the books will be damaged! When the dust has hardened…you can remove it with an old toothbrush, like this. Ah! Please don’t move a book around holding onto just the cover…!”

“Such a fussy girl, I suppose. Really, the books of the forbidden library aren’t like the flimsy books outside it. They’re nothing but good solid books, so something like this won’t damage or break them…ah.”

Grasping the cover of a thick book, Beatrice had been shaking it violently. A fairly dramatic sound occurred near her hand, and the contents of the book fell completely out, leaving the cover behind.The dislodged pages scattered on the floor.

An unpleasant silence settled over that scene, and Beatrice cleared her throat.

“Well, this sort of thing happens now and then, you know.”

“Where did the sense of responsibility of the forbidden library’s librarian go…No, thinking back calmly about it, it does seem like Beatrice-sama has always been throwing and stepping on her books…”

As she thought back on it, Rem didn’t have that many memories of interacting with Beatrice. However, even with her scarce experiences with setting foot inside the forbidden library, between the numerous books piled on the floor, and the books that had been thrown at Subaru over these last few weeks, she’s seen poor treatment of the books fairly frequently.

“Beatrice-sama, this isn’t good. With this, the great spirit will be upset with you as well.”

“Thi…this has nothing to do with Bubby, I suppose! On top of that, if Betty isn't good enough, then what about that foolish girl? Bubby never scolds her, I suppose."

"That's because Emilia-sama's way of doing things is simply a bit masculine; she can still manage most things."

The topic of Emilia's life skills came up, but Rem's evaluation of her was exactly as she said. Further, Emilia made no excuses for her limitations. Rem envied her in that.

Setting that aside…

"While it may be presumptuous, it seems there's no choice but for Rem to give Beatrice-sama some guidance."

"There's not really any need to get so serious about it…"

"It simply won't do. Once you've decided to do it, do it properly. Rem, too, wouldn't want to do something halfway. Let's get cracking!"

While Beatrice suddenly began to have second thoughts, Rem approached with a serious look on her face, and announced that. A sense of responsibility filled her chest, and Subaru's voice echoed in the back of her mind. Studying letters, doing odd jobs around the mansion; when Rem stood in for Ram as the one in charge of guiding him, he would call her this.

"Tonight, Rem is Beatrice-sama's 'Spartan demon instructor'."

"I don't think you understand what that means, you know!"

"It appears that Subaru-kun is fond of demons, so it probably means something very good. Now I'm blushing. But blushing aside, let's Sparta."

"nga~h! What a turn of events, I suppose!"

With her pale blue eyes burning brightly, Rem caught Beatrice as she attempted to flee. Then, turning up the sleeves on the little girl's dress, she gave her a duster and a dry cloth.

“Firstly, cleaning must be done from the top. It’s far more than can be done in a single day, so even when Rem isn’t here, please do your best and keep working at it, Beatrice-sama.”

“A~h, why did it turn out like this? …This, that, and all of it, it’s all his fault, you know.”

Pushing Beatrice onward as she pouted, Rem instructed the little girl in everything she needed to know about “Library Cleaning”.

Under that demon instructor’s Sparta, the librarian who had served for so long was rebuked time after time—each time, she ended up cursing the black-haired young man.

Chapter 75:
Reunion x Postponement x The Eyes of Reversal

1

—A complete loss of sensation in his limbs, and an intense, burning pain as if his entire body were being incinerated. His consciousness blacked out, and he plummeted headfirst, leaving behind all sound and everything else.

For Subaru, “death” was akin to that sensation.

Having died countless times and in countless different ways, Subaru alone understood the commonalities that arose when experiencing “death.”

“Return by Death” was similar to having those lost sensations violently reawakened all at once.

A massive influx of information would suddenly flood back into him: the lost sensations, the sensory organs meant to perceive them, and the brain that was supposed to organize that information, all of which had previously shut down.

It was only natural that he’d become disoriented, unable to process everything, and be slow to grasp the situation.

In other words—

“Mmm.”

“Agh—?!”

A shiver ran down Subaru’s spine as he felt a gentle nip on his earlobe, and he scrambled backward, almost tumbling over. His heart pounded from the intense, sweet sensation he’d never experienced before. He frantically looked around to see:

“I thought you were spaced out, so I played a prank, and what a delightful reaction… Ferris is gonna get addicted to this.”

Ferris said, laughing alluringly, gracefully posing with a finger to his lips. At the same time, Subaru realized the teeth he'd felt on his earlobe belonged to Ferris, and he collapsed.

"My first sweet nibble… taken by a cross-dresser…!"

"You don't need to be that down about it. More importantly, let's continue our discussion. Your eyes suddenly flew off somewhere, and we're still stuck with our momentum broken."

Ricardo retorted, scratching his large ear, to a dejected Subaru on all fours. Those around him nodded in agreement, indicating that Subaru's quick recovery was desired.

In front of them, Subaru continued to show his shock and exhaustion, still struggling to process the impact of having experienced "death."

—He died. He died again.

He failed. He hadn't thought things through enough. Despite having warned himself and those around him not to let their guard down, to always be vigilant, it still wasn't enough.

Just before his consciousness faded and his life returned to the heavens, he recalled Emilia's tear-streaked face.

His chest tightened.

He had fought all this time with only one thought: he absolutely did not want to make her cry, did not want to make her sad.

Yet, through his own death, Subaru had inflicted an unhealable sorrow upon her.

"—Let's sort this out."

Ferris crept closer again, as if to spur on Subaru, who had been scowling in regret and silence. However, Julius, raising a hand midway, cut him off.

He wagged a finger at the pouting Ferris, then turned his refined face toward Subaru.

“From here, we head to the Mathers territory, where the Witch Cult awaits. Our objective is the annihilation of the Witch Cult—and the essential condition here is the capture of the leading Archbishop. Also, to prevent them from being caught in the fight with the Witch Cult, the residents of Roswaal Manor and the surrounding areas will need to be evacuated. As for transportation for the evacuation…”

“I’ve already secured merchants by asking Anastasia-san and Russell-san… My apologies. I’m calm now, it’s fine.”

Wiping his mouth, which had been panting, Subaru returned to his spot in the circle and apologized to Julius. Julius, in response, raised an eyebrow in slight surprise.

“There’s no need to concern yourself. Rather, I’m glad to confirm that my understanding is correct. It seems you’re not particularly skilled at explanations.”

“Like I said before, I’m not used to talking in the middle of a large crowd like this. Remember, a shut-in’s social skills decline in proportion to the number of people they’re facing.”

Julius’s sarcasm—in this case, likely intended to distract a flustered Subaru. Subaru consciously ignored the irksome feeling of recognizing that thoughtfulness, along with an inexplicable tickle.

Then, he looked around again, becoming aware of the nearly fifty people staring at him.

This was the third time he was explaining the situation in front of them.

Even for an inexperienced shut-in, going over the same scene three times was enough to get used to it. The weight of entrusting others with their lives still pressed heavily on his shoulders, but—

“The Witch Cult’s Sin Archbishops are formidable foes. The Witch Cultists aren’t easy to deal with either, and I’m sure there will be casualties on our side in this fight. First, I need everyone to understand that.”

"…"

When Subaru began to speak after his preface, everyone responded with silence. However it wasn't a negative silence. It was because everyone was intensely focused on Subaru, determined not to miss a single word.

This was a form of trust, which meant—

"We defeated the White Whale, and honestly, I think everyone would want to return to the capital immediately for a triumphant return. You're tired, and there isn't anyone here who isn't injured. In this situation, I don't know what to say to all of you who are lending your strength to protect my… my master… only 'thank you.'"

He turned his head.

Subaru etched into his mind the faces of each and every one of the many pairs of eyes staring at him. Among the faces he imprinted, he recognized several that had been torn apart by the unseen hand in the previous loop.

He wouldn't forget their faces.

These were the people whose lives had been restored through Subaru's death and "Return by Death."

Yet, in the battle ahead, Subaru would once again cause someone's death through his own choices. A bloodless victory, whether against friend or foe, was impossible.

If he had been more capable, perhaps it wouldn't have come to this.

If Subaru were strong enough to repel anyone, wise enough to find a way out of any situation, noble enough to never be disheartened by adversity, and an idealist who would never tolerate any weakness, perhaps he could avoid casualties.

However that was impossible. Subaru was weak, foolish, and even his heart was fragile.

He couldn't stand on his own without someone's help, nor did he believe in himself enough to manage without clinging to someone.

That's why—

"Let's defeat the Sin Archbishop this time. To do that, I'm going to give everything I can, everything I have to offer, without holding back. So, please, lend me your strength."

"…"

"I need everyone. —Please, help me protect the people I care about."

Subaru put his hands on the ground and bowed his head.

He pressed his head firmly down, an embarrassing, cheap, and worthless head. This was the first time he had ever truly, earnestly, "bowed his head" like this.

"Subaru, raise your head."

"…"

At Julius's voice, Subaru slowly lifted his face.

Spread out before him was a chaotic dance of light, blinding like the morning sun.

—It was none other than the sight of knights kneeling, holding up their drawn swords.

This was the second time he'd felt his heart supported by the gleam of swords.

Only Subaru, who could actually experience "Return by Death," could truly comprehend this. Through countless, unwilling "Returns by Death," Subaru had come to a realization.

The world unfolded in myriad different ways, repeating over and over again.

Even in such a world, what consistently happened was born from “a strong, strong human will, unaffected even by the world’s fluctuations.”

In other words, the feelings of those who helped Subaru in the same way, again and again—

“No matter how many times it repeats, no matter how foolish I am and come back… you’ll still lend me your strength. You’ll make me stand up, again and again.”

Just like Rem did.

Just as Rem supported Subaru no matter how many times it repeated, their presence also strongly propped up Natsuki Subaru’s wavering will.

For Subaru, this was “salvation” that surpassed anything else—any power he could be given, any wisdom he could be granted, any hope.

“Sorry for bringing down the mood right before the decisive battle. Forget it… or don’t, but keep it a secret from everyone.”

“Let’s just say we’ve got a good story to tell before we meet Lady Emilia. Now, could you tell us about the Witch Cult?”

“I’m not bringing a roaming mercenary like me in front of the noble Emilia-tan. After the job’s done, take your money and go home. — Alright, I’ll talk.”

Subaru exchanged their usual lighthearted banter with Julius, then slapped his own cheeks to hide his embarrassment. He took a breath, then looked up.

“First, the Sin Archbishop leading the Witch Cult is the representative of ‘Sloth,’ and—”

He had no time to regret being killed, to wallow in failure.

He had to transform the cause of his death and the reason for his failure into possibilities to struggle against and fight through.

That was why he had returned.

2

In his mind, Subaru re-evaluated the new facts revealed in the previous loop and the conditions they needed to overcome. He then relayed all the information without reservation to the subjugation force.

Understandably, there was considerable unrest among the subjugation force as they heard about things like the “Unseen Hand” and “possession.” Since these techniques differed so fundamentally from any magic they knew, it was difficult to expect them to easily accept it. With only one known form of magic, imagining other heresies wasn’t easy.

On the contrary, Subaru, having been exposed to nothing but fictional settings, could accept these concepts more flexibly. The bloodline of the Japanese, the homeland of subculture, had inherited the understanding to readily accept and digest worldviews where superpowers, magic, and curses coexisted.

“Anyway, putting aside such idiotic conclusions, let’s talk about Petelgeuse…”

As before, dealing with the “Unseen Hand” remained Subaru’s responsibility; he was the only one who could counter it. Under special circumstances, if Wilhelm’s skill allowed, they could potentially manage it with the sand-scattering tactic from two loops ago, but in terms of certainty, it was difficult. Subaru facing it was still the optimal approach.

Furthermore, a more troublesome fact about “possession” had come to light: Petelgeuse—or rather, the body being possessed—had a self-destruct function. Since he could switch hosts upon death, they should have anticipated that he would always have a means of suicide. That was the biggest cause of their failure last time.

Given that the self-destruction occurred while the host was unconscious, it meant the self-destruction could be activated by a will separate from the possessed host. In other words, there was a high probability that all Witch Cultists were rigged with a self-destruct mechanism.

Even if they managed to destroy all the targets of his transference—

“He’ll ultimately try to take me over…”

That was the biggest hurdle.

Two loops ago, he was completely overwhelmed and forced into suicide. Last time, he resisted significantly, but the current situation was, as they say, indicative of the result. It was a very rough guess, but once it became a struggle for control, it was likely very difficult to push Petelgeuse’s spirit out.

That’s why they had concluded last time that preventing possession was the goal, but—

“Puck’s useless, too. If the ice-sealing strategy is out, we’re genuinely at a dead end.”

The despair Subaru felt when Emilia and Puck appeared on the battlefield was still unforgettable.

The thought alone sent a shiver down his spine, leaving him breathless. However, he still couldn’t understand why he felt such a strong aversion.

What he did clearly understand was that he absolutely refused to let that situation repeat.

“Emilia-tan and Petelgeuse must not meet… I don’t know why, but I have a bad feeling about it. No, I do know why, actually.”

Allowing such a pervert and a sweet girl to meet could not, by any favorable interpretation, have a positive effect on the girl. It was only natural to feel revulsion.

He quickly dismissed this unanswerable problem and began to search for a strategy.

“Since Puck is unusable, and Emilia-tan can’t meet Petelgeuse, she’s out of the running as well… Julius, can't your spirit magic freeze a person solid or something?"

Subaru, hand on his forehead, thinking hard, called out to Julius, who was riding alongside him. They had already moved from the circular strategy meeting, and were now well on their way to Mathers territory.

Of course, carrying Subaru and kicking the ground powerfully was his reliable partner, the one whose existence made Subaru deeply thankful for the opportunity to restart through "Return by Death"—Patrasche.

Subaru leaned into the trust transmitted through the reins, gently stroking Patrasche's back as they ran. He could tell Patrasche cast a quick glance his way, as if to say, "Don't get too familiar."

"Pardon me for saying so, but haven't you improved remarkably quickly at riding? Just a moment ago, I felt you were more being carried by that ground dragon."

"It's about entrusting your faith and letting the wind guide you, right? Going through that predicament together maxed out my trust gauge for her. Oh no, I've been conquered…!"

Subaru squirmed, wrapping his entire body around Patrasche's back. Patrasche, as if annoyed, shook her upper body, jostling Subaru wildly.

"Whoa, whoa, whoa?! Hey, don't be shy! I know you love me even if you act all tsundere about it!"

"I can't shake the feeling that there's a fundamental disconnect in your perception… but it would be undignified for me to interfere with your relationship with the ground dragon, so I shall refrain. —Now then."

Julius sighed, as if resetting the conversation, to Subaru, who was lightly patting Patrasche's back to calm her. Then, he winked at Subaru.

"To answer your earlier question… I can only say it's difficult.

While it’s true I can use fire-attribute magic through my contracts with the six spirits, I am neither a pure spirits arts user nor a spirit myself. If you expect such precise execution of a spell, I cannot confidently affirm it.”

“You’re surprisingly timid. Won’t that make the title of ‘Finest’ cry?”

“I have no particular attachment to that moniker. Being unable to admit what one cannot do, and prioritizing vanity over trust, is far more significant. Are you not the same?”

“You’re really a nasty guy, aren’t you…”

Subaru sighed, averting his gaze from Julius and acknowledging his own insignificance.

At this point, Subaru had just revealed the fact of Julius being a spirit user. Soon, they would transition to a full-group meeting for continued travel, using Nect, a composite Yin-Yang magic. While they still hadn’t devised a plan that could be called 100% successful —

“We’ll just have to make the most of the plan we’ve refined as much as possible, and hope it works out.”

Relying on the newly acquired information, and carefully considering the crazy things the madman had said, Subaru refined his plan. It was a decision that caused him great pain, and—

“I confirm, Subaru. Are you truly alright with moving according to this plan?”

“Don’t be redundant. I’m the one who proposed it, so there’s no way I can just say, ‘Nah, I’ve changed my mind,’ now. …Emilia-tan will probably be mad, though.”

After using Nect to transmit the plan’s outline to everyone, Julius questioned Subaru’s resolve.

Subaru responded with a blank expression, and in his mind’s eye, he pictured the beloved girl.

The smile he had just received, the warmth of her hand when they reconciled, her tearful voice just before he lost consciousness—they blurred gradually behind his eyelids, fading away.

He bit his lip, admonishing himself for almost succumbing to effeminate sentimentality. Deeply disgusted with his own nature, which was about to justify weakness under the pretense of “isn’t there another way?”, Subaru accepted the painful choice.

“Don’t make that face. It’ll dull my resolve; it’s not like you.”

“However, this is too unfair to you. If we put more burden on us, we could reconsider the conditions…”

“Don’t give me chances to act spoiled and say ‘No!’ like that. Even the courage you see me squeezing out, it’s all borrowed.”

Subaru replied with a wry smile to Julius, who kept checking his resolve.

Being worried about like this, no matter who it was from, was nice. However, Subaru had already accepted these burdens as necessary and chosen this path. Therefore—

“I haven’t thrown away the future where I can laugh with Emilia-tan in the end. It’s just that the path to get there looks a little steep. Besides, if we play our cards right, no one but us will even notice how steep it is. Easy, right?”

“…I envy your audacity, being able to boast ‘easy’ like that. I just can’t suppress the unease I feel towards things that aren’t justly evaluated. I am still immature.”

“Hey, come on, my finest knight! The only reason I can stay this optimistic, and the only way I’ll get to passionately embrace Emilia-tan in the end, is if I have your strength! …Hey! What are you making me say?! That wasn’t my true feelings! Don’t misunderstand me!”

“You’re a busy man. —But I understand your sentiment.”

Julius couldn’t help but laugh at Subaru’s flustered expressions.

Subaru snorted at the sight of the handsome man, turned his face away, and gazed towards the horizon.

In the distance, the end of the grassland and the tip of the forest began to faintly appear. Once they arrived, they would pass through several forest paths and enter Mathers territory.

Subaru's heart stirred, and he felt a grinding sensation, but he continued to look forward.

"…"

"Oh? What is it? Are you worried about me? You're a cute one."

As if considering the silently contemplating Subaru, Patrasche subtly swayed her back from side to side as she ran. Subaru responded to her concern with a pat of his palm, then rummaged through the luggage strapped to his back.

Inside was the crucial element of his current plan. As his fingers found its texture, relief and a faint pang of pain simultaneously settled in his chest.

However he would not hesitate anymore.

He had made his decision. He had repeatedly asked himself if this was the best course of action. The fact that he still couldn't completely accept it was Subaru's weakness. It was a problem Subaru had to solve by himself.

"Alright, this time, I'm finally going to claim the best part—"

"Of course, you shall. Don't worry, we have meticulously planned this. There's no need to consider failure. Our preparations are perfect. Once this is over, I'd like to share a drink with you."

"Don't you dare raise a death flag—!!"

Subaru's angry shout rang out at Julius's words, even though Julius shouldn't have known the concept of a "death flag." His voice echoed, loud enough to reach even the distant sky of Mathers territory.

3

—The sharp morning sunlight pierced Emilia's sleep-deprived eyes, and she stirred, roused from bed by a faint pain.

Her silver hair, which had fallen across her forehead, cascaded down as she sat up, shimmering like moonlight reflecting a waterfall. She blinked a few times, remaining half-sitting, and for a moment floated in a state between sleep and wakefulness. Lately, her sleep had been restless, and she was conscious of her lingering fatigue. However, she knew these were necessary burdens, problems she had chosen to shoulder herself. There were no excuses.

"It's morning already…"

She had probably fallen asleep a few hours after midnight—meaning she'd only managed about two hours of sleep. Her head felt heavy, and her thoughts were sluggish, as if mired in mud.

She wasn't typically a morning person. It took her time to shake off drowsiness and even more time to start her day. Given the difficult problems that had plagued Emilia these past few days, it was no wonder that lingering fatigue and endless worries were chipping away at her spirit.

—A week ago, she was called to the capital, where all the Royal Selection participants gathered. Four days had passed since she returned to the mansion, formally given authority as its mistress. The immense pressure that had rained down on her in just those few days was enough to overwhelm the girl that was Emilia.

"I thought I understood… but I really only thought I understood, didn't I?"

Emilia bit her lip, clutching the sheets as she thought of her own inadequacy. Her mind flashed back to the past week, which had passed in a blur. Summoned to the capital, meeting the other Royal Selection candidates again, performing an unaccustomed political maneuvering to deliver her policy speech, and then—

"…Subaru."

Emilia closed her eyes, as if enduring pain, as she uttered the name of the boy she had left behind. How was that cheerful, easily hurt, and somehow always desperately trying to help others, slightly overly zealous boy doing now?

The argument they had during their last parting, his expression like a child left behind, was burned into her eyelids, searing Emilia's conscience repeatedly.

Making him wear that face, making him say those words, making him hear words she didn't want to hear—it was all her fault.

Yet, Emilia still believed that it had been for the best. She didn't think she should have avoided the emotional explosion that led to them expressing their true feelings and ultimately parting ways.

Rather, it was the correct choice to air their grievances then and go their separate ways. It was the right decision. Subaru and she shouldn't be together.

She was a half-elf, after all.

An existence deemed evil simply by being. An existence whose very being was denied. An existence that was shunned, excluded, looked down upon, rejected, and targeted by negative emotions.

Being together could never be good for anyone. On the contrary, being near her would surely cause that kind boy unpleasant experiences. In fact, because Subaru "was by Emilia's side," he ended up fighting a duel with Julius and was severely wounded, both physically and mentally.

She didn't want him to experience that feeling again, nor did she want to cause it.

At the end of their argument, Subaru must have given up on her, she thought. Emilia had rejected Subaru, who had given her boundless, unconditional kindness, by throwing selfish words at him. Though he raised his voice and acted as if he were yelling, to Emilia, he looked nothing more than a crying child.

The truth he murmured at the very end—that alone, she believed, was her sole regret.

—A hope that Subaru, perhaps, might treat her not as a half-elf, but as something separate from such a designation.

It was a faint, fleeting, futile hope. She had hurt him to push him away, yet selfishly craved comfort. Subaru clearly rejected Emilia's womanly plea. He firmly cut her off.

—That he couldn't not give Emilia special treatment.

After those words, she closed the door, creating a physical distance between them. She felt a clear sense of disappointment spread in her chest, disappointed in herself. Disappointed in her own greed, feeling uncomfortable with kindness that was only given, using various pretexts to hurt and push away the kind boy, and then feeling terribly lonely once she had actually put distance between them.

Shaking off the separation from Subaru, she had been desperate since returning to the mansion from the capital.

There was so much Emilia needed to know, so much she needed to learn. Originally, she had lived deep in the forest, avoiding contact with people and unaware of worldly affairs. She hadn't even known what a "king" was until she left the forest.

And now, she, such a person, aimed for a throne that would entrust her with the lives of people living in vast territories. Emilia was aware that this was an incredibly reckless and ignorant decision. But she had to do it.

—Because she had reasons strong enough to compel her.

"Lia, you're frowning. You're not cute when you do that, so maybe stop?"

Suddenly, as she leaned out of bed, her thoughts were interrupted by a leisurely voice. Looking up, her sapphire eyes met a small spirit with gray fur. To her, he was like family, having been by her side since she could remember.

"Good morning, Puck. You're early today."

"Morning, Lia. I woke up a bit early… is what I'd like to say, but honestly, I was worried about you. Yesterday was probably a bit of a shock."

Emilia lowered her gaze at Puck's words, as he floated idly, swaying his long tail. She recalled yesterday's events, the direct cause of her heavy head and heart—the moment she was rejected when she tried to speak to the nearby villagers.

"I knew it would happen, though."

"Even if you know you're going to fall, when you fall, blood comes from the wound and it hurts. I think understanding something and actually experiencing the pain are different things."

Puck mercilessly blocked her escape, responding to Emilia's childlike tone. Emilia knew he wasn't being mean, simply stating facts and his honest feelings, so she couldn't think of a rebuttal.

"Puck…"

"Hmm?"

"Puck, um, what do you think I should do? For me… no, not just me, but for everyone, to do better?"

"You should do whatever you like, Lia. I'm on your side no matter what you do, and I'm only an enemy to anyone who stands in your way."

It was a reassuring answer from her strongest ally, but not the one she sought. And Emilia knew perfectly well that such an answer was all she'd get. Puck was Emilia's ally, but he wouldn't agonize with her over her problems. He was her absolute affirmative, and nothing more.

"No matter what you do, you can't abandon the village, can you? Ram went to the village again this morning, so shouldn't we wait for her report?"

"…Right, Ram. She hasn't rested at all either, has she?"

Puck's murmuring words didn't reach her, and Emilia thoughtfully pressed a finger to her lips. In her mind, she recalled the many unusual occurrences that had happened yesterday.

—After returning from the capital, and ever since Roswaal left the mansion for negotiations with influential figures, Emilia had focused on gaining knowledge from the academic and specialized books given to her to study. She devoted herself to her studies, grudging sleep and as if fleeing from guilt. It was late the night before last that Ram reported to her, "There's a strange presence in the forest."

Even with Ram's clairvoyance —her ability to synchronize with others' vision and expand her visual range by switching targets—she couldn't ascertain the identity of this presence. However, she couldn't choose to do nothing about its existence. So, under the pretext of strengthening defenses, Emilia went down to the nearby village and urged the villagers to evacuate to the mansion—and was rejected.

Emilia was surprised that she had been shocked by this. She thought she had long since become accustomed to being disliked, shunned, and detested by others because of her heritage, but she was surprised to find that her heart still held the capacity for hurt. Then, it suddenly dawned on her.

She had been hoping. That by throwing herself into the flow of grand events and taking a step to change her standing, the reactions of those around her would naturally change from before.

Such a convenient thing was impossible. The fact that she had some connection with the villagers might have been a distant cause for her heightened expectations. However, at that time, she had hidden her identity. She couldn't possibly admit, even if her mouth were torn, that she had been on friendly terms with them in that state.

"What am I doing, after all?"

She was hurt by the rejection, yet she desperately pleaded, only to be unheard, and she had meekly retreated to the mansion. Just as she was agonizing over whether she could do nothing but sit idly by, the next report that came in was that a large group of merchants had suddenly descended upon the village.

Her eyes widened in confusion at the incomprehensible report, when a person claiming to be the merchants' representative arrived, carrying an official letter. The seal bore the crest of none other than Duchess Crusch Karsten. When she broke the seal of the letter, whose contents she couldn't imagine—

"It was just a blank piece of paper inside."

As Emilia looked at the paper spread on the desk, Puck, as if reading her thoughts, preempted her and stated the outcome. Yes, the official letter had been blank.

When she questioned the representative about the true intent, he shook his head, saying he hadn't been told the contents. Ram, who was present, appeared greatly displeased and drove them out of the mansion. She then headed towards the village, presumably to negotiate with the merchants for their departure.

—Part of her felt a sense of duty, wondering if she should just leave it to them.

Equally, she feared the possibility of the situation becoming more complicated if she went herself. She noticed that the merchants who had delivered the letter were looking at Emilia with glances tinged with fear and aversion.

The fact of the Royal Selection had already been publicly announced, and the candidates' names and backgrounds were known to the populace. There was hardly anyone left who didn't know Emilia was a half-elf. From now on, those looks, those attitudes, that rejection, would become commonplace everywhere.

She should have been used to it, to freezing her heart. She should have been used to ignoring the pain of fresh wounds, forcefully wiping away the flowing blood, and still walking without looking down. So, to suddenly focus on it now—

“Lia, someone’s returned to the mansion.”

“…Ram, perhaps. Has the situation in the village been resolved?”

Interrupting her thoughts at Puck’s call, Emilia changed and stood up. Since Puck hadn’t requested a specific hairstyle today, she simply ran a comb through her hair and let it fall down her back. Her silver hair swaying, Emilia sighed softly, then left the room. She then headed towards the entrance hall to greet Ram, who she assumed had returned. No matter how the village situation had been resolved, there was much to discuss, including what to do next.

“Ram, I’m sorry for leaving everything to you. About what happens next—”

“Lady Emilia.”

Emilia spoke as she saw Ram open the large front door and enter the mansion. Ram looked up at the sound of her voice, then moved aside from the doorway.

“—Lady Emilia, please forgive my sudden visit.”

Passing through the door Ram held open, an elderly figure stepped into the mansion. Emilia raised her eyebrows slightly in surprise at the familiar person.

“Um, if I recall… you were with Lady Crusch, weren’t you?”

“Yes. I am Wilhelm Trias, permitted to be at the lowest rank of retainer in the Karsten Ducal household. I have come this time as my master’s proxy.”

Emilia felt humbled as the old gentleman introduced himself, kneeling and performing the deepest bow. And as the initial strong impression of his sharpness faded, she noticed that the old gentleman’s attire bore visible marks of numerous injuries.

“Your attire, why is it like that?”

“My apologies for my unsightly appearance. On the way here to the Mathers territory, I had the misfortune of encountering a witchbeast. I simply had to wield my sword a little."

"You're… not injured, are you?"

"There's no cause for concern. Rather, I wish to convey my master's intentions."

Emilia nodded to Wilhelm, who urged her to get to the main point rather than worry about his well-being. The mention of Crusch reminded her of the official letter. Emilia began, "An official letter arrived from Lady Crusch, but—"

"The contents were blank… and we were at a loss as to how to respond."

"Blank, you say. —I see, the situation is exactly as I heard."

Hearing Emilia's words, Wilhelm subtly narrowed his eyes. There was an inexplicable intensity in that mere gesture, causing Emilia to involuntarily choke up. Wilhelm, however, shook his head at her reaction, saying, "No."

"Regarding the blank official letter, it was not our intention… However, I am aware of its original contents. Please, do not worry."

"Contents… I see, so it was a mistake or something. Good, that it wasn't… harassment."

As she quietly added her final, unnecessary concern, Wilhelm's lips curled into a small smile, saying, "Of course not." Then, his expression grew serious.

"Lady Emilia as well as Ms Ram, I ask that you board the merchant's dragon carriages stationed in the village. And for now, that you evacuate from this vicinity—that is my master's intention."

4

—Wilhelm's explanation could be summarized as follows:

A notorious criminal organization, infamous even in the kingdom, had infiltrated Mathers territory. There was a high probability they were hiding in the nearby forest, and a subjugation force had been organized to defeat them. Crusch Karsten was appointed as the leader of this force, which was assembled under her name, given certain authority, and dispatched to Mathers territory. The plan was for this force to flush out the aforementioned group, and to minimize harm to the surrounding area, residents were advised to evacuate. The merchants were hired to provide transportation for this evacuation, and the plan was for them to carry the villagers and Emilia's group to safety.

"Why is Lady Crusch involved in maintaining public order in Roswaal… Mathers territory?"

"This is just between us, but Lord Roswaal has proposed a treaty alliance. The details involve the allocation of mining rights for the magical stones contained in Elior Forest, do you understand?"

"—Yes, I see."

Emilia nodded, concealing some indignation at Wilhelm's hushed reply. While Emilia had been racking her brain alone, wondering what to do, Roswaal had apparently been working behind the scenes, pushing things forward. She knew it all along, but still, even if he was using Emilia's presence, he clearly didn't have any expectations for her.

"But, even if we evacuate…"

"Ideally, we would like Lady Emilia to head to the capital and hold a meeting with the head of the household, Lady Crusch. However, it's difficult to take all the residents to the capital…"

"Half of them will be guided by Ram to the Sanctuary. There should be enough safety and space to accommodate them there."

Emilia's anxieties and concerns, which she was about to voice, seemed to have already been considered. With Wilhelm and Ram answering her questions so efficiently, Emilia had no words of opposition. However, the feeling that things were moving too quickly and that she was merely being swept along was hard to accept.

“Listen, I’m still wondering… about this.”

“—Excuse me!”

Just as she was about to press her questions, the conversation was cut short by the sound of a door being violently flung open. Looking over, she saw a young man tumbling in as if he had kicked the door open. The young man, wearing a white robe, stared intently at Emilia, then slowly turned towards Wilhelm.

“Strange movements have been observed from the group lurking in the forest. They may be about to move. There’s no time to spare…”

“Faster than we anticipated… With this many people entering the village, it was only a matter of time before they were noticed, I suppose.”

“What shall we do, Sir Wilhelm?”

“—Emilia-sama.”

In response to the young man’s question, Wilhelm looked up at Emilia, his gaze sharpening. Pierced by his blade-like, keen eyes, Emilia gasped softly, understanding that there was no time to waste in idle contemplation.

It wasn’t that she had no questions. However, the fact remained that there was a strange presence in the forest, as Ram had sensed, and Wilhelm’s identity was vouched for by Crusch’s name. Above all, with Roswaal absent, she was the one with the authority to make decisions for this mansion and territory. No matter how disoriented the situation made her feel, she had to make the decision herself. Therefore—

“—Understood. I gratefully accept your kindness. As for persuading the villagers…”

“It has already been completed without a hitch, Lady Emilia.”

Ram calmly stated that the biggest concern had been cleared.

Emilia then turned to look back at the mansion, furrowing her brow about what to do with its last resident. But even that was quickly addressed when a small cat, floating down from the upper floor like a leaf dancing in the wind, appeared.

“Betty says she’s not going. She’s closed door crossing, so the rest is up to you. And the subjugation force, you shouldn’t do anything to the mansion, okay?”

“Understood, Great Spirit.”

Puck, who had gone to confirm Beatrice’s intentions before Emilia could even make a decision, returned. He then burrowed into Emilia’s silver hair, secured his usual spot, and yawned. Then, he whispered so only Emilia could hear:

“You do whatever you want. I’m on your side.”

“—Let’s move. We don’t want to put the villagers in danger.”

Emilia waved her arm, giving the instruction. Ram indicated her compliance with a curtsy, holding the edge of her skirt, and Wilhelm nodded graciously. Only the young man who had brought the report subtly clutched the edge of his robe.

“That’s more like it,” he murmured softly, though Emilia didn’t hear him.

5

—Once the two from the mansion joined the village, the process of boarding the dragon carriages began.

The villagers seemed quite obediently following the members of the subjugation force; they showed no signs of complaining or significant anxiety. In fact, many even seemed somewhat excited by the unusually large number of dragon carriages.

Emilia was greatly surprised by their efficiency, but what surprised her most was when she heard her dragon carriage assignment.

“—Nice to meet you, miss.”

"Um…"

The bright-haired girl bowed her head. She was one of the children Subaru had befriended, whom Emilia had seen many times in the village—her name, if she remembered correctly, was Petra. She was around eleven or twelve years old, one of the older children in the village. With her at the forefront, other children were assigned to the dragon carriage Emilia was supposed to board.

"Isn't this some kind of mistake? Because…"

"It's no mistake. Lady Emilia, you will be riding in this carriage with these children. Due to the seating arrangements in the carriages, it simply can't be helped."

Driven by anxiety, Emilia caught hold of the young man who had been busily moving around nearby. However, his reply was entirely different from what Emilia had expected, only increasing her apprehension.

—Traveling in the confined space of a dragon carriage, together with children.

She couldn't help but feel it was an attempt that would cause an extremely unpleasant sensation, not so much for Emilia, but for the other party.

"Are there no other carriages? These children, too…"

"You think they'd dislike riding with you, don't you?"

"…"

"Did you confirm that with these children? Or are you just assuming they'd dislike it, that they'd hate you?"

The young man continued, pressing Emilia as she fell silent. She realized he was the same person who had rushed into the mansion earlier, quite an intrusive young man. Tilting her head at the strange sensation, Emilia stammered, "That's not…"

"I know without asking. So, for the sake of these children, another carriage…”

“I don’t think it’s good to use children as an excuse to run away from your own weakness.”

This time, Emilia gasped, choked by his utterly rude tone. Then, in front of her, he knelt down, meeting the eye-level of the young girl who had been anxiously watching their exchange.

“How about it, Petra? Do you want to ride in the same carriage as this lady?”

“…”

Please don’t ask such a question, Emilia thought, clutching the pain in her chest. It was a question with an obvious answer, and an obvious answer that would cause her pain. Knowing she would be hurt didn’t make the pain any easier. Puck was right. Even if you’ve been hurt countless times, a new wound brings new pain. So why, she wondered, would he—

“No, I don’t mind! I’m happy to be with miss.”

“…Huh?”

Emilia gasped in astonishment. Petra walked up to her and gently took her hand. From their clasped fingers, the warm body heat peculiar to children flowed, and Emilia blinked. As she stood there, unable to hide her surprise, Petra smiled shyly with an adorable expression.

“Miss… you’re the potato stamp miss, right? You always came with Subaru to watch the morning radio calisthenics.”

“…………”

“I couldn’t see your face, but I could tell you were always having fun, miss. I saw Subaru having so much fun talking with you. Subaru liked miss so much… so, I’m not scared of you either!”

“…Ah.”

Something welled up inside her, and Emilia involuntarily let out a small sound. Her eyes felt hot, her throat constricted, preventing words, and a pain shot through the back of her nose.

“Miss, let’s ride together? They said everyone was trying to make you all alone. So I’ll hold your hand.”

“—Yes, yes.”

“You don’t have to be lonely anymore, okay?”

“—!”

Innocent, pure eyes, completely devoid of the world’s injustices, malice, or anything tainted. Just that—the feeling that was always there for Emilia, the persecution that was always there, the discrimination that should have been normal—none of it was present in those eyes.

“Me too!” “I wanna be with the missus!” “Let’s go already!”

The children started to clamor loudly, and a boy about Petra’s age—Mild—began to admonish them and push them into the carriage. Watching the boisterous children, Petra chuckled softly.

“Shall we go, miss? They might be a little noisy, though.”

“…No, it’s fine. I’ve gotten used to being bothered by noise next to me this past month.”

She shook her head, and a smile naturally appeared on her face. She began to walk, her hand still held by Petra. The warmth of another’s hand felt on her fingertips. The blessing of being spared the pain she had stubbornly claimed to be used to, without even realizing it.

SETOWI

“That’s right… I need to thank you too.”

Stopping and turning, Emilia looked for the young man from earlier. She wanted to say a word of thanks to him for leading her to this small happiness.

“…Huh? Where did he go?”

However, the young man was nowhere to be found where she had just turned.

6

—He pushed through branches, trampled grass, and darted through the animal path as if leaping. He ducked under trees, broke through thickets, and entered a dim area, emerging into an open space surrounded by dense greenery.

He stopped and waited a moment. Three more shadows, just like him, dashed into the clearing. The four figures nodded at each other, and one knelt in the center while the other three stood guard. The person kneeling reached into his pocket and pulled out a small, hand mirror-like object. It was undeniably a mirror, but in the dimly lit forest, where light sources were extremely limited, he couldn’t even easily check his own face.

However, for the mirror’s owner, this was no problem at all. His original purpose wasn’t to see his own face. The goal was to “connect to another place” through the mirror.

He poured magic into the hand holding the mirror, infusing mana into the engravings carved along its rim. Once initially activated, this rare magical artifact—a dialogue mirror—would absorb minuscule amounts of mana from its surroundings to fulfill its purpose. Most such devices were built-in and too large to carry, making a portable one like this exceptionally rare. The man felt a surge of exhilaration as his sense of duty grew, realizing how important his position was, entrusted with such an item and role.

Just as he opened his mouth to speak through the mirror to the other side—

“I see, so that’s how you were leaking information. These dialogue mirrors are pretty convenient, aren’t they? …Before you get all fired up with duty, you might want to remember your comrades’ faces.”

A figure, similarly crouched, spoke right beside the kneeling man. The man gasped and looked up, forced to feel an intense sense of incongruity with the person standing before him. It was as if his consciousness refused to recognize someone right in front of him.

“If you can’t even tell faces apart, then to me, you’re just ‘comrades’ who reek of the same stench. —Screw you, you small fry.”

Saying this, the figure in the white robe stood up and spat out the words. Then, before the stunned men—Witch Cultists—he shook his head and pulled back the hood that had completely covered it.

What was revealed was black hair, a color possessed by only a very limited number of races in this world. His three-white-eyed glare overtly expressed his ill humor, accompanied by a defiant, provoking smirk.

Seeing that much, the Witch Cultists finally clearly understood who it was.

“The sin of interrupting my emotional reunion with Emilia-tan is a heavy one, you guys.”

Pointing a finger skyward, the white-robed figure, woven with “recognition hindrance magic,” fluttered its hem. Natsuki Subaru then delivered his declaration to the men:

“Now, spill it. Tell me everything you know!”

—To show them his glimmer of reversal, he snapped his fingers with a loud flourish.

Chapter 76:
Behind the Scenes x Trickery x Pinky Promises

1

—Let's go back in time a bit, to the strategy meeting en route to Mathers territory.

"We're not telling the villagers or Emilia-tan that the Witch Cult is closing in. The reason for evacuation… I think something vague, like bandits or brigands have infiltrated the area, should be fine."

"The basis for concealing the truth is… I suppose I don't need to ask."

Julius sighed in understanding as he heard the opening of Subaru's plan. He felt similar reactions coming back from several of the people connected via the speaking stones.

"Thanks for the understanding reaction… Just as you all thought, if it gets out that the Witch Cult is involved in this commotion, there's a high chance the victims' resentment will be directed at Emilia-tan. I didn't want to think of them as people like that, but…"

Subaru knew full well that things wouldn't turn out as he hoped, having seen it firsthand.

Emilia's lineage was no exception even for those good-natured villagers; she was merely a detestable bloodline to be shunned.

His indignation and rebellious spirit against that twisted discrimination were endless, but he couldn't overturn them immediately here and now. Subaru temporarily forgot the deep-seated irritation simmering in his chest, calming himself with a long sigh.

"Bandits, then. Let's stick with that. The guys who were causing trouble in the capital region have infiltrated here, and Duchess Karsten's camp, our ally, has come to assist. How about that?"

"It's cliché, but it's not as flawed as it sounds. The problem is whether Lady Emilia and the villagers will be fooled by it…"

"Actually, with this many people assembled and the advance merchant troop already there, I think it's enough to distract them from any unnaturalness, don't you? Besides, we're not trying to fool every single person. I have someone in mind who won't misjudge that part."

Julius half-closed an eye and replied, "Is that so?" to Subaru's confident demeanor. Taking his place, the one who fired questions at Subaru's plan was…

"I understand you want to keep Lady Emilia from being criticized, but if that's all, I don't quite understand Subaru-kyun's idea just now, nya~?"

"You don't understand… which part?"

"The part where you're not planning a dramatic reunion with Lady Emilia, nya, Subaru-kyun."

The one who mercilessly probed the part of the plan that most troubled Subaru's heart—it was Ferris.

He didn't hesitate even when Subaru stammered, pressing his questions further:

"You've allied with Duchess Karsten, cooperated in the White Whale subjugation. And now you're returning with reinforcements to defeat the external enemy threatening the territory—this sounds like some kind of heroic tale, nya. I heard you had a terrible parting, but I think this is more than enough to redeem your reputation, nya~."

"Listing them out like that makes my achievements sound idiotic… Well, considering the consequences of what I actually messed up, I don't think I can make up for it with anything less than this kind of feat."

"Ferris thinks Subaru-kyun should reflect on his actions a little more objectively, nya."

When Ferris grumbled that about Subaru's self-deprecating remark, agreement seemed to ripple from those around him. While he was happy for their concern, he couldn't stop self-deprecating, remembering the foolishness he'd committed during his separation from Emilia.

How many achievements would it take to erase such foolish actions and harsh words?

"There's no way I can erase them. That was my true self back then."

The selfish, overconfident person who shamelessly sought his beloved's heart. Now, looking back, he wanted to avert his eyes from his ugliness—but that was also him.

"That's why, honestly, I want to go back with achievements and apologize for everything that happened then, but…"

"You can't do that, nya?"

"If she knew I was here… no, if she knew I was staying in the village to fight the external enemy, she's not the kind of girl who'd meekly run away. Nine times out of ten, she'd stay with me. Or she'd turn back halfway. She's that kind of girl."

"But you two had a fight, didn't you? Even so…"

"If she were the kind of girl who'd feel relieved leaving the person she quarreled with to face death, then… I wouldn't have been so devoted to her."

The biggest failures of last time were neglecting caution against Petelgeuse's maliciousness despite expecting his counterattack, and letting Emilia meet the madman when he knew they shouldn't—those two.

Regarding the former, a solution is starting to become clear from refining several hypotheses. It's ironic that this is also thanks to dying last time.

Regarding the latter,

"Not letting Emilia-tan realize that the external enemy is the Witch Cult and that they're targeting her. Not informing her that someone connected to her… that is, me, is in the subjugation force fighting the external enemy. These are the essential conditions for keeping Emilia-tan away from the battlefield. I'm stating it definitively."

"Is it really necessary to be that cautious, nya? I think Lady Emilia wouldn't be a hindrance even if she joined the subjugation force, nya? She even has that Great Spirit with her…"

"Considering Duchess Karsten's example, I think it would be best for Emilia-tan to lead from the front to gain fame… but I'll pass this time. I can't let Emilia-tan undergo the Witch Cult's—the Archbishops' ordeal."

Subaru's resolute declaration was met with a shrug and an expression of understanding from Ferris. Receiving that, Subaru looked around to see if there were any other questions, and sighed in relief after confirming that no one raised any doubts.

"For convincing the villagers, it'll be more reassuring if they know it's me and… Duchess Karsten's army. I'd like Ferris and Wilhelm-san to cooperate."

"Understood." "Roger that, nya."

As he heard their consent, Subaru pulled a white robe from his luggage and put it on, feeling a slight unease about the length of the sleeves and hem.

Made larger for its original owner, it covered Subaru's body without issue.

"The faint scent of Emilia-tan is boosting my motivation—!"

"I'll pretend I didn't hear that last remark… but from what I can see, that robe seems to be imbued with a rather unusual spell."

"To tell you the truth, it's the special medicine that's been protecting me from Emilia-daze deficiency these past few days. On sleepless nights, I secretly press it to my face and use it to relieve my pent-up feelings… Hey, what's with that look? I can't help it!

Getting excited over your crush's possessions is a path everyone goes down, isn't it?!"

Subaru felt as if Julius's ground dragon, which had been running alongside him, had widened its distance, and he became indignant. Julius sighed in exasperation at Subaru and then, prefacing with "So," he continued,

"To return to the topic… that robe? The moment you put it on, your presence seemed to fade."

"Ah, apparently it's woven with some kind of 'perception hindering' spell or something. It's a convenient item handmade by Roswaal… and originally Emilia-tan's personal possession. By chance, yes, by chance, it's in my hands now. I didn't steal it, okay?"

"I'll pursue its origins eventually, but… Ah, I see."

Midway through his reply to Subaru, Julius nodded, understanding dawning on him. Subaru felt an unpleasant sensation, as if his thoughts had been read, and he glared at the handsome knight with an even worse look, saying, "What is it?" But the knight remained composed.

"I suppose it's a renewed understanding of your self-sacrificing nature. To be frank, it's not logical… You are quite the opposite of Lady Anastasia."

"Since I intend to get everything I want in the end, I think there aren't many people more greedy than me, actually. Emilia-tan's praise and everything else, they'll all be mine. It makes me fired up!"

As Subaru gripped the reins and bared his teeth in a smile, Julius sighed for what felt like the umpteenth time, then looked forward and muttered in a voice no one else could hear,

"Occasionally, like now, there are times I curse this body of mine as a knight."

That was what he mumbled.

2

—Up until now, the plan was to enter Mathers territory and immediately eradicate any Witch Cultists whose locations were known.

However, this time we couldn’t start a fight with the Witch Cultists right away and provoke their vigilance. We had to maintain as much stealth as possible, exit the highway, enter the village via the forest path, and persuade the villagers about the evacuation.

Honestly, being ambushed by Witch Cultists at this point would have been a fatal development for the operation. If we were to engage the Witch Cult even once, all the plans we had so carefully crafted would be rendered useless.

Fortunately, no such rude interruption occurred during our march into the territory, which we undertook with the highest level of caution ever, and:

By the time the subjugation force reached the village entrance, the atmosphere in the village was already thick with suspicion.

We had presumably ridden straight and fast to get to the village, but seeing the cluster of dragon carriages parked at the edge of the village, it looked like the merchants had arrived sometime last night.

Considering that Subaru and the others had fought the White Whale in the middle of the highway, rested, and then departed, it was only natural for the advance merchant party to have a few hours’ advantage, even with their detour. In other words,

“The blank letter of introduction has already been delivered to the mansion…”

Seeing that, Emilia, who received it and was likely greatly confused, and the person who was beside her and also saw the same document, “First a merchant bringing a blank letter of introduction, and now an armed group appearing… It seems you don’t understand whose territory this is.”

She greeted Subaru and the others, who strode boldly into the village, with hostility, looking up at them with an insolent expression, hands on her hips.

A lovely-faced girl with short, pink hair, her small frame clad in a maid’s uniform—Subaru knew, however, that beneath that cat-like charm, she hid a sharp and deceptive personality.

“So, what business brings you all to this village? This commotion… I can’t believe it’s unrelated to the merchants who suddenly showed up in the middle of the night.”

“I know there’s been some misunderstanding, but don’t glare at me with such hostility. It’s our first reunion in a while, you could at least do a little tap dance with a smile, you know?”

“Selfish excuses… I’ve heard that nonsense before.”

Subaru replied from atop Patrasche with a playful gesture to her sharp gaze. Then, at his response, the girl —Ram— raised an eyebrow as if realizing something. Staring intently, she fixated on Subaru, clad in the white robe, and said,

“…Barusu?”

“Yep, that’s right. Seriously, this robe is amazing. Even when talking to someone I know, they have to doubt and scrutinize me, still half-believing. It’s demonic.”

Subaru threw back his hood, revealing his face, and let out a sigh of admiration. Then he twisted his body and dismounted gracefully from the ground dragon.

“For now, about this situation—oof!”

He failed his landing. A dull crack echoed from his ankle, and sharp pain shot through his brain. He crouched on the spot, almost in tears.

“L-Let’s… let’s talk…! What’s the hidden agenda behind this whole scene, please let me explain…!”

“Your constant sloppiness is truly Barusu-like. I heard you were left behind in the capital after offending His Grace… What nerve do you have to show your face back here?”

“Are you really that merciless?! I can’t really argue, but yeah, I’m back, showing this face! Though I didn’t come back empty-handed.”

Forgetting the pain in his ankle, Subaru stood up with force, gesturing with his hands in front of Ram to show he was well. As Subaru and Ram stood face to face, talking,

“—Hey, that person at the front of that group…”

“Isn’t that Mister Subaru, talking to Miss Ram?”

“Ah, it’s Subaru! You’re back?”

The villagers, who had been watching the situation’s progress with anxious expressions and probably leaving the negotiation entirely to Ram, began pointing at them and talking amongst themselves.

This was likely the result of Subaru’s appearance upgrading the unknown, mysterious group to ‘a mysterious group led by someone we know’.

“So, what business brings such a large number of people back with you? If this is retribution, Ram, as the caretaker of the mansion, will have no choice but to resist to the end.”

“Do you really think I’m that ungrateful?! If I do something bad, I deserve to be scolded, right? And holding a grudge or sulking about it… Well, I did, but…”

“Just as I thought. We’ll use Barusu as a hostage and force our way to the mansion.”

“That’s a quick conclusion! I’m not holding a grudge or sulking right now, so believe me!”

Subaru, parrying Ram who might actually try to put him in a headlock with her small staff, raised an open palm towards her.

“Retribution is out of the question, and I didn’t involve this many people for a prank… Did you receive the letter of introduction from the merchant?”

“…If you can call that blank paper a letter of introduction, then yes, I received it. Ram interpreted it as more of a challenge, however.”

“Were you always that hot-blooded? Don’t take everything so aggressively, eat some small fish and get some calcium to calm down.”

Subaru gave a wry smile at Ram’s constant biting remarks, then explained that the blank letter of introduction was a mistake. Ram nodded reluctantly, but then said,

“So, regardless of the letter’s content, the formality is to be trusted. In that case, what was the original contents?”

“Why, of course, it’s about my original purpose for staying in the capital—the alliance between Emilia-tan’s and Duchess Karsten’s camps.”

Subaru flared his nostrils at Ram’s question and proudly gestured with his arm towards the assembled subjugation force. As if on cue from Subaru’s gesture, two figures stepped forward from the group.

It was Ferris and Wilhelm. They stood beside Subaru and greeted Ram with their respective bows.

“I am Wilhelm van Astrea, dispatched on this expedition as an envoy of Her Grace, Duchess Crusch Karsten.”

“I’m Ferris, Duchess Crusch’s top knight, nya. Old Man Wilhelm is the leader of the group behind us, and Ferris is the assistant leader, nya? Nice to meet youuuu.”

Wilhelm’s solemn greeting contrasted sharply with Ferris’s utterly frivolous one.

Presented with such contrasting greetings, Ram blinked, uncharacteristically taken aback, and said,

“Your polite greetings are much appreciated. I am Ram. I serve as the head maid at the mansion of Margrave Roswaal L. Mathers.”

She immediately switched her demeanor, gracefully pinching the hem of her skirt and bowing politely. Just observing this gesture, one could indeed glimpse the perfection of her maid training. Though, when it came to actual work, her serving skills were quite rough around the edges.

“The reason these two and the others have come is simple. I think Ram has probably noticed already… They’re reinforcements to drive away the suspicious individuals lurking in the forest.”

“…How did Barusu know that?”

“It’s pretty famous news in the capital, actually? The margrave’s territory, which openly supports a half-elf and gets shunned by everyone else. —There’s no better place for up-and-coming bandits to choose as a temporary hideout, you see.”

Subaru lowered his voice and smoothly lied to Ram’s question. Ram narrowed her eyes thoughtfully at Subaru’s reply, while Ferris and Wilhelm changed the wrinkles on their faces with their respective reactions. However,

“That’s the pretense.”

“Huh?”

“Keep your voice down, and don’t make a loud surprised noise, I don’t want anyone else to hear… The ones in the forest are the Witch Cult. They’re targeting Emilia, and they intend to kill everyone in the village.”

“—!”

Subaru leaned in close, lowering his voice, and told Ram the truth.

Ram’s eyes widened slightly at the revelation, and she gasped as if choking. Then,

“Whoa, whoa, whoa, what’s going on? That’s not what we discussed, nya. Weren’t we supposed to keep quiet and go with the bandit story?”

Subaru shrugged and shook his head at Ferris, who interrupted, clearly surprised by the sudden change in plans, “Hey, hey,” he said.

“You can’t expect to fool everyone with such a childish trick. I intended to tell Ram the truth from the beginning. If there’s no one on the evacuating side who’s privy to our circumstances, we won’t be able to handle unforeseen situations.”

“—Is she to be trusted?”

This time, Wilhelm asked with a sharp gaze at Subaru, who revealed the true intention of his disclosure. Subaru met the Sword Devil’s gaze head-on and nodded confidently, “Yes.”

“There’s no one more suitable than Ram to be in on this. After all, if our story doesn’t line up, Emilia-tan will be in trouble… and that equals a disadvantage for Roswaal. You wouldn’t misjudge that, would you?”

With a testing tone and a provocative smile, Subaru turned back to Ram. Ram closed one eye at Subaru’s words, and a small smile touched her lips.

“What’s wrong, Barusu? You’ve become quite cunning since I last saw you.”

“I learned the hard way that to stop thinking leads to bad things. So, what’s the real answer?”

As Subaru wiggled his finger at the end of his raised hand, Ram let out a long, small sigh, then slowly shook her head as if resigned.

“—If it benefits Lord Roswaal, Ram will do anything and cooperate with anything. Does that answer satisfy you, Barusu?”

“Yeah, perfectly. You’re a model attendant, Ram.”

Ram accepted the agreement to deceive her temporary master for the sake of the master she truly served. Subaru smiled at her with the expression of a mischievous kid playing a trick—no, plotting mischief.

3

“I’ve thought this for a long time, but Barusu truly seems to be an idiot.”

—This was Ram’s first comment after Subaru had thoroughly explained the operation’s outline and she had finished listening.

Even while interjecting with questions, she had listened to Subaru’s entire plan, expressed her understanding and agreement, and then added those final words.

“I’m flattered to be praised so much.”

“Just say it… Seriously, you’re not going to tell Lady Emilia anything, are you?”

“I keep telling you! Stop dragging out my lingering feelings, everyone! I’m fine, it’s okay, no problem! In fact, isn’t it super exciting to secretly and heroically save that important girl in her time of need?”

Ram sighed in resignation at Subaru, who stubbornly maintained his flippant attitude. Then she looked at Wilhelm and Ferris.

“I sympathize with the stress you must feel, just like with our servant trainee.”

“While Subaru-dono’s impulsive actions, words, and emotional expressions are somewhat prominent, he is a person of great promise. At my age, there is much he can teach me.”

“Ferris hasn’t quite figured out Old Man Wilhelm yet, so maybe I’ll just take Miss Ram’s words at face value? Well, I do think he’s gotten a little better, nya.”

Wilhelm's high praise and Ferris's slight tsundere reaction. Ram looked at Subaru after hearing their responses.

"You seem to have successfully endeared yourself to them."

"Your opinion of me is abnormally low, isn't it? It's fair, I guess, but it still bums me out."

And so, their conversation with Ram came to a close.

Once she accepted that she had no objections to Subaru's plan, most of his concerns vanished. The only remaining issue was—

"I know it's been a while since we last met, but can everyone please listen to what I have to say?!"

Stepping into the center of the village, Subaru waved his hands wildly, gathering everyone's attention.

The uncomfortable merchants, the anxious villagers surrounded by strangers, and the members of the subjugation force who had been ordered to stand by, all simultaneously fixed their gaze on Subaru.

Though it was his intention, having everyone's eyes on him at once heightened the tension. Subaru managed to push down the pressure he felt with a sense of mission, then put on a smile.

"First off, this commotion is pretty much my fault. It seems like communication wasn't getting through in a lot of places. I want to try and smooth things over… is that okay?"

He raised a finger to the sky, addressing everyone.

Only silence returned his question, leaving him with a terrible feeling of being left behind.

Getting no reaction from such a large crowd after a call out was mentally draining. He suddenly felt like apologizing to his homeroom teacher for all the times he'd napped during HR back in his old world.

Just as Subaru was getting lost in this nostalgia,

"—Let us hear what you have to say."

A single person stepped forward towards Subaru, saying this.

It was none other than a familiar figure with distinctive white hair who emerged from among the villagers, commonly known as 'Village Elder,' an ordinary old man unrelated to the actual village chief position.

The Village Elder, with the dignity of a representative, stroked his impressive beard.

"We were anxious, not understanding the situation. You're going to explain it… and if it's the village's benefactor, we can't very well refuse to listen."

"Village's benefactor? That's a bit much. I just…"

"That's being too modest, Master Subaru. That night, if you hadn't gone into the forest and brought the children back, who knows what would have happened. After that, there's not a soul in the village who doesn't know what you did."

A young man with a buzz cut stepped forward, interrupting Subaru who was about to object to the Village Elder's words. The youth, a member of the young men's association, roughly raked his fingers through his short hair.

"Don't look so anxious, everyone will listen. You've done just as much for us as Lord Roswaal has."

"Don't see through my little rabbit mind, pretending to be brave and all… I'm happy, but seriously, I'm super embarrassed! I look like an idiot for putting on a serious face!"

Subaru clutched his head, unable to bear the unexpected warm words that made his ears feel like they were turning red. He then spun around in place for a moment to cool down. Meanwhile, the villagers slowly gathered around Subaru, ready to listen.

Naturally, they formed a circle, like during radio calisthenics.

“Oh, well, group activities are always useful. I’d love to jump into some radio calisthenics for the first time in a while with this momentum, but we don’t have time, so let’s get straight to it.”

The number of eyes on him was roughly the same as before, but the gazes directed at him were familiar ones.

Their friendly demeanor, so characteristic of the people he knew, filled his heart with joy. Last time, Subaru felt he had seen their negative side here and was anxious if he could handle this explanation well, but:

“If there’s good, there’s bad. That’s just how humans are.”

Subaru muttered softly, then closed his eyes, forgetting his anxieties by gritting his teeth. Then, regaining his usual defiant, impudent urchin look, he stamped his foot on the ground.

“Alright, everyone, lend me your ears for a moment of quiet. This might be a bit shocking for you all, living peaceful, relaxed lives, but please listen calmly. Actually…”

—Interjecting with clever jokes throughout, Subaru conveyed the false information about the ‘bandit arrival’ to the villagers. He also adjusted his voice volume so that the seemingly eavesdropping merchants could hear, and explained everything without allowing questions or interruptions until the very end.

“So, that’s why I took the liberty of acting while the lord was absent. The subjugation force that came are some of the finest elite troops in the capital, and what’s more, they belong to a ducal house! They’re seasoned professionals, so you can rest assured… What do you think?”

He spoke in a lighthearted manner, pushing reassurance like a sales pitch, then tilted his head at the very end to gauge their reactions. He tried to maintain an optimistic attitude as much as possible to avoid fanning their anxieties, but even so, given the situation, the villagers’ unease was palpable.

“It’s sudden, but we have livestock to tend to…”

"The fields need care too. Can't we just settle this without leaving the village?"

"With this many people, couldn't we fortify the village and keep the bandits out?"

Such opinions began to be heard sporadically.

It's difficult to persuade when every single one of those opinions has at least some valid points. Subaru was about to open his mouth, trying to somehow bundle it all with sophistry, but…

"You seem to be mistaken, we are not giving you a choice."

"Wait!"

Ram cut in with a voice so cold it seemed almost heartless, completely bypassing Subaru, who had been trying to pacify them and find a compromise.

As the villagers looked up in alarm, she crossed her arms and snorted softly.

"Since Barusu is talking, it might feel like a suggestion, but this is a higher intention—a lord's command, reflecting Lord Roswaal's wishes. Your safety, your lives, all of that is secondary. You will obey the Margrave's proxy."

"You can't say it like that! I know you're a harsh-speaking character, but I can't just let that slide here. These people have their lives to consider…"

"Barusu, you lack self-awareness just as much."

Ram pierced Subaru with a sharp gaze as he tried to argue further. He didn't flinch, but furrowed his brow, unable to fathom her intentions.

"In this situation, the only one who can claim to be Lord Roswaal's proxy here is Barusu, who was entrusted with the negotiations in the capital. As the lord's proxy, you must fulfill your duty to the villagers."

"Duty, you say…"

"A lord has a duty to protect the lives and peace of their people. If evacuating them for their safety is a lord's duty, then ensuring compensation for any disadvantages that come with it is also a lord's duty."

She said it flatly, then pouted at Subaru as if to say, 'Don't make me spell it out.' At her attitude and the content of her words, Subaru scratched his head and shook it exaggeratedly, yelling, "Ugh!"

"You're really hard to understand. What is it? Or am I just so bad at reading a woman's heart that it's hopeless? So annoying."

"It's insulting to think Ram can be easily understood. All of Ram is dedicated to Lord Roswaal. I don't want Barusu to understand me at all."

Her curt reply and her enraptured statement about her master. If you only looked at that part, you'd certainly think she and Rem were sisters, beyond just their appearance.

So, Subaru cleared his throat, as he was about to blush from an unnecessary memory of his interactions with Rem, and turned back to the villagers.

He nodded at them, who looked anxious at the argument that had broken out in front of them.

"Ah, I'm sorry about Ram's harsh way of speaking. Honestly, my opinion is the same. Everyone evacuating… that's a decided matter. I really don't want to give orders or anything, but it's risky to stay here and guarantee your safety. My opinion is that we should spend whatever effort we can to avoid risk."

"…"

"Of course, I understand everyone's concerns. The livestock, the fields, you probably can't even properly prepare if you're suddenly told to leave. So, about compensation for that… I don't have the authority, but I only have one head to bow, so I'll bow this head and plead with Roswaal. I'll do my best to ensure no one is at a disadvantage.”

As he spoke, Subaru was once again reminded of how limited his reach was.

Feeling pathetic, yet resolved to show his sincerity, he knelt down so everyone could see.

A murmur spread, and Ram’s eyes widened. Only Wilhelm and Ferris, who were behind him, watched Subaru’s actions with a resigned expression.

“—Please, everyone, I know you have a lot to say, but please bear with it. Then, please, let us protect you all.”

“…”

“I’m begging you. That’s why I came back.”

The silent villagers remained mute, as if something was caught in their throats.

It made sense—Subaru, who was their benefactor, was pressing his forehead to the ground, pleading, ‘Please let us protect you.’

Their positions were completely reversed.

From an outsider’s perspective, it was a baffling sight, but it was certainly a very Subaru-like scene.

“—Ah, you just can’t help it, can you, Master Subaru?”

Someone’s voice could be heard, as if bubbling over.

That sparked it, and the impulse to laugh spread throughout the surroundings.

SETOWI

"When he says he'll protect us so earnestly, we can't help it."

"Oh dear. I actually feel my heart warming up for the first time in a while."

"Master Subaru is truly a troublesome person."

Subaru tentatively lifted his face.

The dazzling morning sun burned his eyes from beyond the human barrier, and for a moment, his vision turned white. He shielded his eyes with his hand, then looked out at the world that emerged.

"…Thank you, everyone."

"—No, thank you, Master Subaru."

Surrounded by troubled smiles, Subaru laughed, looking as if he was about to cry.

4

—Thus, the villagers' persuasion was amicably resolved through a strangely peculiar discussion where those offering protection bowed their heads to those being protected.

We gave the merchants a similar explanation about the "bandit" scenario and instructed them to evacuate, splitting into two groups: one towards the Sanctuary and the other towards the capital. After assigning the dragon carriages and villagers, and just as everyone was about to board and begin moving,

"I have just one more request,"

Subaru said, raising his hand and drawing the villagers' attention.

Though the previous discussion had been amicably settled, Subaru hesitated to voice his next suggestion under their gaze.

To be honest, he himself felt it was a subtle point whether this suggestion was even necessary. However, for two reasons, he wanted this proposal to go through. They were—

"I'd like someone to ride along with Emilia… the half-elf girl in the mansion."

At Subaru's suggestion, the previous lively atmosphere instantly fell silent.

As an awkward silence began to settle over the village once more, Subaru struggled to keep his disappointment, thinking, "Just as I thought," from showing on his face.

"I think you all know about the royal selection proclamation in the capital. That Lord Roswaal… is a supporter of a candidate, and that candidate is the half-elf girl."

"…"

"I know you're all uneasy. I understand there are many things that are hard to digest. Even so, I'm asking you. Please don't let her ride in the dragon carriage alone."

He wasn't sure if his voice conveyed anxiety or sorrow.

Listening to Subaru's words, the villagers exchanged glances, their expressions thoughtful. Still, it wasn't impossible to feel that just their consideration was a different development from before.

However, sensing that a positive response wasn't likely, Subaru quickly raised his hand to say, "My bad," and cut his losses, but—

"—Petra?"

Before Subaru could raise his hand to stop himself, a small palm was already extended upwards.

Surprised, Subaru looked at the owner of the hand, and she puffed out her red cheeks, looking at the adults around her.

"Why isn't everyone listening? Subaru's so troubled, and he's asking with such a tearful face. Why won't anyone help him?"

Her words were terribly honest and unadorned, and precisely for that reason, they cut deep.

Devoid of all the entanglements adults held, it was the strongest punch in the world, allowed only to a child.

The adults grimaced with even greater guilt than before, trying to find words to soothe the girl, but—

“The miss at the mansion, she’s the one who always wears white clothes, right? She brings the stamp for radio calisthenics.”

“Huh, ah…! Yes, yes, that’s right. She’s the stamp missus.”

Looking back, Subaru couldn’t help but smile as he remembered the peaceful days.

A time of calm, when he could simply enjoy everyday life. Every morning, he would go down to the village with Emilia, do radio calisthenics with the villagers, and stamp their hands with the potato stamp he’d carved.

Yes, memories of happy days—and by her side during those days, she was there.

Perhaps a familiar image had been in a corner of their memories, as the adults also began to understand the meaning of Petra’s words. And while their hesitation kept them silent, the children around Petra also started raising their hands one after another.

“Me too! I’ll ride with her!” “If Petra’s riding, then it can’t start without me, right?” “You’re not gonna let just big brother look cool, I’m going with Petra too!” “Subaru looks like he’s about to cry so let’s help him!” “Yeah, let’s do it!”

The children clamored, and in their center, Petra smiled proudly.

Subaru placed a hand on his chest, feeling a sense of relief at her expression, which was too cute to be called a triumphant smirk.

“Can I ask you? That girl, she’s so tough and stubborn and headstrong, but she gets lonely, and I worry if no one’s watching over her.”

“I guess I’ll watch over her for Subaru.”

A sigh of relief escaped Subaru’s lips.

Then Subaru walked over to Petra, who had made the promise, and held out his pinky finger to her. Smiling at the bewildered girl,

“This is how we do it: we hold out our pinky fingers and hook them together. Then we sing ‘Pinky promise, solemn oath’ and break it off. Can you do it?”

“Y-Yes!”

A more energetic reply than he expected came back, and Subaru smiled, saying, “That’s the spirit,” as he intertwined his finger with the girl’s. Then he slowly taught the confused Petra the song.

“Pinky promise, solemn oath,”

“If you lie, you’ll swallow a thousand needles!”

“—Pinky promise broken!”

Their fingers separated, and a promise —a contract— was exchanged.

Petra promised Subaru that she would never leave Emilia alone, and Subaru promised them that he would absolutely protect them and the village’s safety.

—This promise, this time, absolutely, he would not break.

“This time, let’s go without any lingering worries. Let’s do it, everyone!”

Subaru punched his fist into the air, and everyone present raised their fists. Just as a cheer was about to erupt, voices rising high,

“—Ah! It’s a stealth operation, so everyone quiet, quiet!”

Everyone quickly had to shut their mouths, which was a bit of an anticlimax.

5

—As an aside.

“Ehehe…”

Subaru, who had given the command, was stroking the girl’s head with his other hand, opposite the one he had clenched. No one but the cat-eared knight and the pink-haired maid noticed that the girl’s cheeks were flushed, and she was gazing at Subaru with intensely warm eyes.

Chapter 77:
Prisoner Negotiations and Reunion

1

—The scene returns to the moment Subaru removed his hood and revealed his identity to the Witch Cultists.

As Subaru snapped his fingers high above his head and confidently delivered his lines, the Witch Cultists, who had been merely observing the situation until then, sprang into action.

One, holding a Dialogue Mirror, and two others, flanking Subaru, simultaneously reached into their robes, pulling out daggers shaped like crucifixes—

"—Too slow."

With a single word, pointing out the cultists' misjudgment, the Sword Demon descended from between the trees.

A silver flash streaked through the air, and the arm of the cultist gripping a dagger was severed halfway up the bicep, flying through the air. Blood splattered, and the gleam of the blade, streaking through the darkness, painted a path of cruel beauty.

The thud of the arm hitting the ground and the sound of gushing blood spattering on fallen leaves created a chain reaction. Yet, even as they were consumed by the searing pain of losing an arm, the Witch Cultists immediately decided to retreat without a single groan. They bent their knees, spun around, and tried to escape in three different directions. However,

"My apologies, but your footing is already within our grasp."

Their feet, just about to step forward, sank into the ground, causing all three to lose their balance and drop to their knees. Immediately, blades were pressed against the necks of the men attempting to stand.

Wilhelm, who had struck first, and Julius, who had made the ground muddy with his follow-up. And then,

“It was Ferris, just here for the good parts!”

Ferris, with an expression like a peace sign, and having uncharacteristically drawn a dagger, was beaming affectionately at Subaru.

Ignoring his flippant demeanor, Subaru exhaled a sigh of relief that the situation had progressed largely as anticipated.

Aside from Subaru, only these three, highly capable and trustworthy individuals, had come to this location. The rest of the knights remained in the village to guide the evacuation. As for the mercenary group, they had been assigned to a different task. If this mission had failed, that fallback plan would have been crucial, but —

“Glad it went well. If I’d messed up after acting so cool, it would’ve been more than just embarrassing. Ferris, can you handle the hemostasis? We can’t have them dying before we get answers.”

“I don’t think you should be saying that with such a pale face, nya~?”

A strained voice and dry lips. He thought he was hiding his expression by putting his hand to his forehead in the dark, but he’d been seen right through. Subaru made a bitter face at Ferris’s remark and closed his eyes once.

The gruesome exchange that had just unfolded before him.

Unlike the witchbeast incident or the battle with the White Whale, he still wasn’t used to seeing humans fighting and cutting each other down. The deaths of people, and the corpses, still felt like something from another world.

Feeling almost dizzy from the unreality of the severed arm, Subaru lightly shook his head to banish his faint-heartedness. While he composed himself, Ferris applied hemostasis to the Witch Cultists to prevent blood loss, and then Julius and Wilhelm sequentially bound them.

“Still, you had a good eye to spot an informant among the merchants, nya~.”

“It was obvious they’d switched the blank letter the moment we heard about it. Ram said the envoy from Crusch-sama’s camp who brought it immediately turned back to the capital after hearing that… This time, we were short on time, so our selection of collaborators for transport was sloppy. The world is usually a little worse than your worst expectations.”

Subaru calmly responded to Ferris’s praise with an answer born of experience, then sighed deeply as he looked at the prisoners.

A gaunt man, an elderly man. Above all, the man holding the Dialogue Mirror, who had been trying to pass on information to Petelgeuse—Subaru recognized his face.

“I remember you. You’re Ketty, right?”

“—Why?”

“Hmm, why indeed? Feel free to ponder as much as I have, you know?”

Called by name, the man —the merchant named Ketty— uttered a single question. Subaru replied evasively, feeling a slight shock that someone he knew was an enemy, yet at the same time, a certain sense of understanding given the preceding events.

Ketty was someone Subaru had encountered in the very first loop that began in the capital.

After the Lifaus Highway was covered in fog, Subaru, abandoned by Rem while detouring, had met him while desperately running through a village to secure transport. Through him, Otto was introduced, and in that first loop, Subaru had managed to return to the Mathers territory. Though, by that point, everything was already too late—a worst memory.

In the second iteration —which was hopeless anyway— then the third iteration.

Driven by vengeance, he rushed through the road and encountered a group of merchants midway. It was again Ketty and Otto who were overseeing them. Subaru, with the same idea as this time, hired Otto and his group to secure transport for the villagers, bidding farewell to Ketty, who remained behind, saying he was “heading to the capital.” Afterwards, Subaru encountered the White Whale, and the merchant group was annihilated.

Thinking about it now, even though he was present at crucial junctures of their actions, he had seemingly, as if on purpose, avoided all the troubles. This meant that,

“It’s because he was in the know, isn’t it? If we’d left him alone, the location of the Sanctuary, which was supposed to be unknown, and our two-pronged evacuation efforts, would have been completely exposed.”

“However, fortunately, we seem to have thwarted their initial move. Furthermore, this should allow us to pre-empt the Witch Cultists who must be lurking in the forest.”

As Subaru collected his thoughts, Julius took over, nodding slightly. Subaru agreed; it was an expected outcome, but—

“Aren’t these guys awfully tight-lipped? If we try to force them to talk, I have a feeling they’ll just yell, ‘Glory to the Witch Cult!’ and kill themselves.”

“Indeed, the Witch Cultists have a deeply rooted custom of not fearing death. For four hundred years, their unfathomable nature has been partly due to this. Entire captured groups committing suicide, leaving the truth shrouded in darkness… it’s not uncommon.”

Wilhelm affirmed Subaru’s grim speculation.

Subaru stuck out his tongue, saying “Ugh,” at their stereotypical fanatical mindset, and was worried Ketty and the others might self-destruct on the spot.

To dispel Subaru's concerns, Ferris clapped his hands loudly and said,

"Alright, alright, no more gloomy talk, nya~. Ferris isn't out here on the front lines for nothing, nya~."

"No, you eagerly followed along when I mentioned I had a lead on an informant. Honestly, I wondered how you'd manage without any combat ability."

"My, how rude, nya. Let Ferris clear up Subaru-kyun's terribly misguided notions, nya~."

Ferris winked charmingly, making Subaru glum, then slowly approached the men. He then rolled his large cat-like eyes, carefully observing all three. Targeting the elderly man among them, he touched the man's forehead with his right palm.

His delicate fingers gripped the man's forehead firmly, and he exhaled a tiny breath. Then,

"Mix it up—"

"—!!"

Ferris's palm glowed faintly, and a pale light enveloped the man's entire body, centered on his forehead. It was the same light as when he performed healing, and Subaru had received that very same healing many times to repair the abnormalities in his Gate—but the effect was dramatically different.

"Ah… guh… ugh!"

Just as the pale light enveloped his entire body, the man suddenly began to convulse, his eyes wide, his tongue lolling out in agony.

His eyes instantly bloodshot, saliva dripped from the corners of the groaning man's mouth. Soiling the ground with drops, the man continued to gasp like a fish, enduring the never-ending torment.

"Hey! What in the world are you…?"

"I'm just interfering with the water inside their bodies to make them suffer a little, nya. Don't worry, I won't turn them into vegetables. —Though I will turn them into dolls, nya."

Subaru raised his voice at the sudden act of prisoner abuse—especially one where he couldn't tell what was happening from the outside—but Ferris coolly continued, humming a tune. Subaru felt a chill down his spine at the sight, but Wilhelm clapped him on the shoulder from behind.

"It may seem a bit rough, but it's a necessary procedure when dealing with the Witch Cult. Please, Lord Subaru, bear with it."

"It's not like I'm so soft-hearted that it pains me to see enemies being hurt, but… seeing them suffer this much, I kind of want an explanation, honestly."

Observing the situation out of the corner of his eye, Subaru twisted his mouth, expressing displeasure at the unchanging, torture-like treatment of the man. Then, as Subaru stood there discontentedly, Julius raised a finger and said, "To explain it simply,"

"Ferris applied water-element magic to them under the guise of healing, didn't he? He seems to be able to interfere with the mana he passed inside them, and to some extent, deprive them of their influence."

"…So, what does that mean?"

"It means that anyone Ferris touches, if their resistance is a little low, will turn into an obedient little kitten for Ferris, nya~."

Ferris, satisfied, brushed his knees as he casually replied to Subaru's furrowed brow. He waved off Subaru's suspicious gaze with an easy gesture, then pointed to the Witch Cultist he had just touched, saying, "There, it's good now."

"There's a time limit, but now I think you can get some information out of him, nya? Once the effect wears off, you have to wait a while before you can do it again, nya~."

As he spoke, Ferris slowly turned his head, looking at the remaining two Witch Cultists, and smiled deeply, saying,

“There are still two more, so it’s perfectly fine, nya.”

“Sometimes, I feel like I catch a glimpse of your sadistic side, and it freaks me out… You’re not serious, are you?”

“If we can get the information out of them, then I won’t have to be serious, nya.”

Ferris placed a finger on his lips and swayed his body, laughing off Subaru’s concern.

Subaru looked to Wilhelm and Julius for their opinions on Ferris’s attitude, but both shook their heads in unison.

“It is not a means to be praised for its humanity, but we must accept it as a small matter before a great one. As for the remaining two, if possible, we would like to escort them to the capital as they are.”

“They are valuable sources of information. The Witch Cult has been operating in the shadows for a long time. We must use them effectively to grasp their tail.”

The opinions of the two aligned with Ferris’s stance, and Subaru, recognizing that this was no time to be picky about methods, closed his eyes to his internal dissatisfaction.

Then, clearing his throat, he faced the Witch Cultist, whose eyes had already become unfocused, and said,

“Alright, let’s just ask what we need to. How many Witch Cultists are participating in this attack? How many groups have they split into and are hiding in the forest?”

“…”

“Hey, he’s supposed to answer honestly, but he’s clammed up.”

A silent response to his question. Subaru looked at Ferris with suspicion, who shrugged his slender shoulders from side to side and stuck out his tongue, saying,

“They can’t answer what they don’t know, nya. Silence means they don’t know, right? Let’s move on, next, next!”

“Unsatisfying. Alright, then let’s talk about Petel… the Sin Archbishop who’s leading you. Tell me his name, appearance, and what he can do.”

“Archbishop’s… name… is Petelgeuse… He’s a thin man, with green hair… and a gaunt face where his bones stick out…”

The man mumbled, answering Subaru’s questions honestly. Listening to his answer, Subaru felt a strange sense of understanding, thinking, “Ah, so even his followers think he looks sickly thin,” and continued his questioning. But then,

“What abilities does he use?”

“…”

“How many ‘fingers’ have you hidden in the forest.”

“…”

“Your birthday, blood type, and favorite body part on a girl.”

“…”

“I give up!”

Subaru quickly reached his breaking point with the sheer number of silent responses.

Even with the caveat that they couldn’t speak about what they didn’t know, interrogating someone with so much undisclosed information about their own organization was a tough job. It was even possible that Subaru held more information than they did.

Subaru ran his hands through his hair, pondering what to do, when Ferris, who had supposedly stepped back, tapped him on the shoulder as if unable to bear watching.

"Honestly, Subaru-kyun, you're just hopeless, nya."

"Don't say that, Feriemon, these guys are too ignorant…"

"What's 'emon,' where did that come from?"

"Similarities with cat ears… Oh, he lost his cat ears!"

Ferris, deeming Subaru's response to be nonsense, sighed and swapped roles with him in the interrogation. Subaru, disheartened by the implicit criticism of his inadequacy, ceded the floor, and then,

"Hmm… what's this?"

He picked up an object that had fallen at his feet—a Dialogue Mirror, unused, that had dropped from Ketty's hand. Wiping off the grass and dirt, he scrutinized it and found it remarkably similar to the folding hand mirrors he knew. "Compact" might be the closest image.

"A mysterious item that transforms you if you chant a magic spell… No, it is actually a mysterious item. Abracadabra, amen and ramen."

Subaru mumbled something random, opening and closing the compact in his hand. The mirror inside reflected his grimace, which he hadn't seen in a while, and on closer inspection, he realized his complexion was terrible, a mix of dirt, sweat, and blood. Emilia couldn't see him like this.

Just as he was consoling himself with that thought about the current situation, the hand mirror suddenly changed. Its edges began to glow and heat up.

"Whoa… oh? Hey, did I touch something weird?"

He frantically fiddled with the Dialogue Mirror in his hand, but the light gradually intensified, showing no signs of fading. The suspicion that he had broken it grew stronger, and at the same time, his past conversation with the bald old man about "magic tools being traded at very high prices" came to mind, making him break out in a cold sweat.

Julius noticed Subaru's internal struggle with a financial crisis.

"Subaru, what in the world are you…?"

"I-I didn't do anything! I just used some weird magic words, I swear I didn't do anything special! But now it's getting kinda weird…"

"Could it be… you dispelled the activation spell?"

Julius, slightly surprised by Subaru's stammering excuses, rushed over. He then looked at the Dialogue Mirror in Subaru's palm with an incredulous expression.

"Dialogue Mirrors are common among magic tools, but connecting to a paired mirror requires proper procedures. In particular, the activation spell is one of the only parts you can freely manipulate once connected, and there are limited ways to extract it other than asking someone who knows it…"

"Huh, wait, what does that mean?"

"It means you've almost completely accomplished what Ferris was trying to extract just now. If you can release the Dialogue Mirror's activation spell and identify the connected mirrors…"

Julius took the Dialogue Mirror from Subaru's bewildered hands and began to manipulate it, gathering mana at his fingertips. At first glance, it almost looked like he was operating a smartphone or a tablet, leaving Subaru, who was stuck at flip phones, to just wait patiently.

However, what seemed like a complex operation finished in just about ten seconds.

"—Well done, Subaru. We've now located the other Dialogue Mirrors connected to this one."

"Awesome… So, it's like a GPS function, right? Can you tell from here?"

“I don’t know what a ‘GPS’ is, but yes, we know the locations of the Dialogue Mirrors. The Dialogue Mirrors connect to two places… one is in the forest, but the other is a bit further away.”

Subaru followed Julius’s gaze as he looked up from the Dialogue Mirror and toward the forest. Though obscured by the green of the trees, if Subaru’s sense of direction was not mistaken, Julius was looking toward the mountains, a place he had been before.

The west side of the village—the very forest where the Ulgarm pack had been.

After Roswaal’s witchbeast extermination, the presence of dangerous creatures should have likely decreased. With its sheer cliffs, it was a place Subaru had once “thrown himself from,” so its significance was not lost on him.

“The Witch Cult is there, then… That’s a new one.”

Petelgeuse’s “fingers”—Subaru predicted that this term referred to the madman’s agents lurking in ten different locations. Through his two previous loops, Subaru had already roughly identified eight of these hiding spots.

If he considered these three merchants, who had been hiding informants, as one of the previously unknown locations, then the newly revealed spot would be the very last one.

“Only two locations show up on the Dialogue Mirror. Can we assume there are no Dialogue Mirrors in other places?”

“Even though they circulate often in the market, Dialogue Mirrors are still rare magic tools. The method of production is known, but considering the funds, time, and effort involved—it’s hard to say it’s very worthwhile.”

Subaru nodded along to Julius’s shrug, though he held a different opinion.

Subaru hadn’t had any particular interest in military or war-related information in his original world. Even so, he knew the importance of speed and accuracy in information transfer.

Could they truly not imagine the developmental potential of this technology, which they dismissed as “not worthwhile”?

“Well, putting aside my thoughts on mobile phone proliferation for now, if that’s confirmed, then it’s good. If reliable information transfer relies on Dialogue Mirrors, and their owners are in two locations…”

—He concluded that one location was likely Petelgeuse’s.

It was natural for the head of the group, the leadership at the end of the command chain, to possess a Dialogue Mirror. And if there was one with a spy lurking within the opposing group, and then another location, that would be—

“A backup, or a trump card… Either way, we’ve got their tail.”

Subaru clenched his fist, biting his lip at the turn of events, feeling a renewed sense of resolve.

Then, he turned towards Ferris, who was still interrogating, and Wilhelm, who continued to keep watch, intending to share the information.

“You two, lucky for us, the Dialogue Mirror worked. With this, the remaining…”

“—!!”

Subaru approached, defenselessly raising his hand. The moment the prisoners saw the Dialogue Mirror glowing in Subaru’s hand, their demeanor, which had been docile until then, completely changed.

The two, other than the one Ferris had put under his spell, twisted their faces into ferocious expressions and, while still bound, launched themselves at him, leaping as if to fly.

“—Oh.”

Subaru froze in shock. Ketty, still bound, lunged at his throat, baring his fangs as if to rip it out. However just before he reached him, “My apologies—”

A slash cut through the air, and the tall torso was split in two, falling apart.

Ketty, scattering a large amount of internal organs and blood, let out a beast-like roar and convulsed on the ground, having lost his lower body—then died with a malevolent expression.

Unlike Ketty, who had been subjected to Wilhelm’s slash, the other one—

“Bu-bu-bu-bu-a-a-a-fa-a-ba-ba-ba-ba—”

Still in the posture of having lunged forward, he collapsed to the ground, his limbs trembling, his tongue hanging out as if his throat were parched, and his eyes bloodshot.

His skin, visibly reddened even in the dim light, and his blood vessels were swollen, unable to withstand the internal pressure, with green patterns covering his entire body.

“…Hey, hey.”

Subaru mumbled, realizing he had somehow collapsed to the ground. Julius, who had come from behind, lent him a shoulder and helped him up. Though, his lower legs weren’t cooperating, and it took him quite a while to stand.

“My strength of will was too great, and I lost my temper. My apologies.”

Wilhelm sheathed his blood-wiped sword, apologizing for cutting down Ketty. Then, he squatted down and examined the convulsing body of the other man.

“He, too, no longer breathes. —Ferris, you’ve done something cruel.”

“It was so sudden, I couldn’t help it, nya. I don’t want Subaru-kyun’s neck bitten off and get scolded by Lady Crusch. …What’s wrong?”

Ferris stuck out his tongue at Wilhelm, who had confirmed the death. Not looking at their exchange, Subaru stared at the dead man's body, which was covered in what looked like blisters.

His expression was one of agony, his face so distorted that his original features were unrecognizable at a glance. It was an incredibly brutal way for a person to die, and above all—

"I didn't even touch him, but… did you do this?"

"That's right, nya. A little application of water magic. —Even gentle mana that heals wounds can become poison if too much is poured in. It's problematic if the water in your body gets too healthy, right, nya~?"

Subaru could not hide his horror at Ferris, who, unperturbed, twitched his cat ears on his head.

The man's death—it was so gruesome that even Wilhelm, who had just cut someone down, showed a bitter expression. Seeing Ferris do it with no remorse whatsoever sent shivers down Subaru's spine.

Most of all, if what he just said was true,

"You…"

"Hm?"

"…No, never mind. The other one's fine, right?"

Subaru shook his head slightly, abandoning further inquiry as it felt like poking a sleeping dog.

The question he swallowed was this:

—You could kill me the same way, couldn't you?

Ferris's magic that caused the water in the body to run wild. If it was limited to those who had received healing —healing mana— from Ferris, then Subaru perfectly fit that condition.

He remembered the overwhelming pain and death that had afflicted him during the previous attack.

Violent heat, as if his entire blood was boiling, even his brain.

If Ferris had done that, then that death was exactly the same as the man before him—

“The survivor is going to be taken to the capital for interrogation… right?”

“Ferris’s suggestion still holds sway over him, so there shouldn’t be a problem. So, Lord Subaru, about the Dialogue Mirror you mentioned was usable.”

Wilhelm responded to Subaru, who, looking pale, averted his gaze from Ferris. He subtly stood so as to obscure the bodies and Ferris from Subaru’s view.

“If the location is known, let’s launch a surprise attack. Otherwise, if they become suspicious due to a lack of regular contact, our advantage will be lost. Before that happens—”

“…That’s true, yeah. We’ll do that. But still…”

Subaru nodded at Wilhelm’s suggestion, organizing his thoughts.

Petelgeuse. The eight known hiding spots from experience. The newly discovered last location. The Dialogue Mirror. Emilia and the others fleeing. The battle. The possession. Spirit Arts.

“—Ferris.”

“Nya~?”

“If you can control that person, you can make them use the Dialogue Mirror to talk, right?”

Subaru, whose thoughts had accelerated, opened his eyes and asked Ferris. He blinked once at the question, then happily parted his lips and said,

“I can, nya? It’s easy-peasy to intentionally send misinformation to connected parties using the Dialogue Mirror. —Shall we do it?”

“Yeah, let’s do it. Don’t make them say anything too elaborate. We don’t want to raise suspicion by giving too much away. Just something like ‘no change in situation, continue standby’ will be fine.”

As long as their anomaly wasn’t communicated, it was a confirmed fact from experience that the enemies would remain quiet until at least midnight.

As long as the fact of their escape by dragon carriage wasn’t exposed, keeping Emilia and the villagers out of danger wouldn’t be difficult.

“Find out their regular contact method and have them convey the current information to the two connected locations.”

“There might be codes or something, so I’ll be careful about that too, nya. Fufuun, Subaru-kyun might have matured a bit, Ferris is happy, nya~.”

Nodding at Subaru’s instructions, Ferris, for some reason pleased, took the Dialogue Mirror and cheerfully turned back to the man. Watching him interrogate and gather intelligence while humming, Subaru called out to Wilhelm and Julius.

“I have a request for both of you, or rather, I want you to accept roles as we enter the final phase. Is that alright?”

Man proposes, God disposes—to achieve victory, every possible hand must be played.

For destiny had never once smiled upon Subaru without him doing anything.

2

—With the Witch Cultists who had infiltrated the merchants now eliminated, and the internal threat removed, the immediate worries had vanished.

"May fortune be with you—"

Emilia's words, as she boarded the dragon carriage, and her gaze, filled with both gratitude and concern for Subaru and the others remaining in the village, were deeply etched in his memory.

Subaru's heartache at not revealing his identity to her, hidden under an invisibility cloak, was difficult to express. Honestly, he wished he could confide in her right now and hold her hand.

"Well, I'll just think about it and endure for now. I've got the memory of holding her hand without getting yelled at, so I'm not going to cry."

He brushed off his feelings with a casual remark, watching the departing dragon carriage with the knights.

Several escort knights on ground dragons were guarding the carriage during the evacuation. They took extra precautions to be as inconspicuous as possible, even splitting into two groups mid-journey.

One group, with Ram, headed for the Sanctuary, and the other, with Emilia, for the capital. Roswaal was supposed to meet them at the Sanctuary, and Crusch at the capital. With thorough backup plans in place, their safety was, in a sense, far greater than Subaru's.

The children who had begged to ride with Emilia also held her hand firmly as they boarded the carriage. Remembering Emilia's genuinely joyful reaction filled Subaru's heart with warmth.

He did notice Petra's eyes, next to Emilia as they boarded the carriage—they seemed to burn with some kind of rivalry, which bothered him a little, but he decided it probably wouldn't have a major impact. Especially since Petra was a child who usually listened to Subaru well.

"Letting the joyful emotion wash over me, and using the situation to get Emilia-tan away. …I've really become a scumbag who manipulates people's hearts. It's a far cry from when I was rumored to be someone who couldn't read people or the atmosphere."

He had also asked the children to not mention Subaru's name and not let Emilia go outside while in the dragon carriage.

Subaru had concluded that both the former and the latter were reasons she had returned to the battlefield last time.

At that time, if someone had been riding with Emilia in her dragon carriage, if someone had been there to stop her actions—would things have turned out differently?

If someone genuinely cared for her and held her back, the kind Emilia surely wouldn't have been able to disregard them.

Subaru had intentionally created this situation by giving the children a role and by keeping his presence from Emilia.

If she ever learned the full truth later, she might despise him for it.

Even if he knew the future through Return by Death, deceiving someone's heart for that reason, let alone manipulating them for his own convenience, was unforgivable. So,

"I'll definitely keep this a secret for the rest of my life…"

He wasn't good enough to say "it's safe as long as it's not exposed," but he certainly wasn't a masochist who would willingly expose himself. He resolved to take it to his grave.

Just then, to Subaru,

"Looks like the villagers and the half-elf girl have left, then."

Ricardo, the large beastman, approached with a rough tone, swinging his great axe over his shoulder. Subaru grimaced at his slightly blood-splattered figure and let out a small sigh.

"Don't call my cute Emilia-tan a 'half-elf,' you half-dog."

"Whoa, being called a 'half-dog' is more humiliating than I thought! I've learned something new today! Excellent, excellent!"

His sarcasm was met with booming laughter, leaving Subaru with no choice but to give a wry smile. Then, his expression suddenly vanished, and he looked up towards the forest.

“So, how was it? The ambush?”

“We knew their location, and they weren’t on guard at all. It wouldn’t be right for mercenaries who’ve been paid to mess that up. We handled it perfectly.”

Ricardo opened his beastly mouth wide, showing his fangs as he laughed belligerently.

As if to prove his words, mercenary groups on Ligers successively burst out of the forest, circling the now-empty village, demonstrating their continued vigor.

“Hee-hee! Kill ‘em all!”

“We captured prisoners properly, though. Don’t say such bad things, big sis!”

Seeing the brother and sister, who were leading the charge, having such amusing yet unsettling conversations, it seemed the results were excellent.

Even knowing the high probability of success, it was a situation that had filled the sending party with anxiety. Subaru breathed a sigh of relief at their safe return.

“Oh, and by the way, there’s a small problem.”

Then, Ricardo lowered his tall back and leaned in close, whispering to Subaru. Sensing something ominous in his demeanor, Subaru furrowed his brows.

“Wh-What is it? I have a bad feeling, so please try to say it with as much excitement as possible.”

“Really? Well, then, if you insist!”

Ricardo, taking Subaru’s attempt to mask his fear seriously, responded in an incredibly loud voice. A ringing in Subaru's ears echoed in his skull from the eardrum-shattering volume, making him wince. Mimi, riding a Liger, dashed around them, shouting, "Hee-hee! It's a festival!"

"Shut up! That's not what I meant! What if our movements get exposed after we worked so hard to evacuate everyone quietly?!"

"Bro! Bro! Your voice is loud enough already!"

Ricardo burst into laughter at Subaru's shouting.

Unsatisfied with the sudden change in his demeanor, Subaru shook his head, saying, "Never mind."

"Just tell me. If there's a problem, we need to know before executing the plan so we can adjust. Right now, we need to eliminate even one uncertain factor…"

"Nah, there won't be any problems with the plan, probably. It's just that, while we did capture the Witch Cultists… there's a separate issue."

"Separate issue…?"

Not understanding what Ricardo meant, Subaru tilted his head, expressing his doubt. Ricardo nodded at Subaru's reaction, and as if to say it was faster to show than tell, he raised his arm.

"Hey, bring that guy over here."

His subordinate nodded and ran off, returning with a Liger.

A bound human was riding on its back, and as it gradually approached, Subaru's expression shifted from doubt to unease, then to certainty.

"When we ambushed the Witch Cultists' lair, he was in the back. Looks like this guy was just unlucky and got captured by them."

Ricardo said, scratching his head, as the gagged figure groaned in front of him. He seemed to be complaining about unfair treatment, or perhaps begging for his life. After overcoming his initial shock at the pitiful sight, Subaru—

“Pfft!”

Couldn’t help but burst out laughing.

He pointed a finger, roaring with laughter at the bound and helpless figure.

“You! I thought you were gone, but you got captured, Otto!”

With that, he shouted the name of the final character, who, due to bad luck, hadn’t shown his face until now.

Chapter 78:
Insanity of Madness

1

After Subaru’s uproarious laughter finally died down, Otto, whose identity had at last been confirmed, was released from his restraints.

Rubbing his bound wrists and the corners of his mouth where the gag had been, Otto, his face still red, glared at Subaru with resentful eyes.

“Thanks for saving me… though I’m not exactly in the mood to say it sincerely.”

“Hey, hey, what kind of talk is that towards your lifesavers? If people remember you as an ingrate, it’ll make doing business a pain in the neck and just choke you out in the long run, you know?”

“Agh! So you already know all about my situation! Thank you! I owe you my life! I felt like I was already dead!”

Subaru’s teasing, which alluded to Otto’s background, made him shout out an exasperated apology.

The communication mirror taken from the informant, and the two hideouts connected to it—one was determined to be the cave where Petelgeuse was hiding, and the remaining one was believed to be the location of the last “finger” that Subaru hadn’t known about. Therefore, in parallel with guiding Emilia and the others to safety, Subaru had given instructions to the beast-human mercenary group to launch a surprise attack and eliminate the danger beforehand.

As a result, the Witch Cultists, who had received false reports due to Ferris’s suggestion, had no inkling of their movements and were caught off guard, annihilated by the surprise attack—with several prisoners taken, and for some reason, Otto, who had been captured by them, successfully rescued. Even better news was the identity of the prisoners Ricardo and his group brought back—more specifically, there was a familiar woman among them.

“She’s the woman Petelgeuse has possessed twice. So far, his possession rate with her is one hundred percent.”

Regardless of whether he chose her willingly, there was a high possibility that if Petelgeuse lost his current body, the next person he would possess was among the prisoners. Since she had been knocked unconscious and restrained, even if Petelgeuse were to lose his current host, the likelihood of him choosing to possess her next had decreased. And since the locations of other potential backup hosts were already known to them—it was safe to say they had taken a big step closer to victory.

The blank imperial letter, the last “finger.” As several fragmented pieces began to connect, Subaru felt a sense of certainty that he was correctly forming the “paper of the future.” The fact that Otto had been rescued this time could also be considered a part of that.

From the forest, the mercenary group’s pack of Ligers appeared, along with Otto’s ground dragon, which Subaru also recognized, pulling a dragon carriage. Having had his entire fortune seized and his life held in their hands, Otto must have felt as if he wasn’t truly alive. In fact, it wasn’t hard to imagine what Otto’s fate would have been if things had proceeded as they did before. Thinking that if he had cleared it as before, he wouldn’t have had the chance to reunite with him like this, the mistake was worth it.

“Yeah, well, we’ll just say that’s how it is. Pfft.”

“What was that reaction? Did I do something to you?!”

Otto yelled at Subaru, who spat to hide his embarrassment and frustration, but Subaru brushed it off with a casual “that’s that” and changed the subject.

“So, how did you end up getting captured? It’s weird that it was just you.”

“Well… there were some circumstances that are very difficult to put into words…”

“Most of the people coming to this territory now are merchants who’ve gathered at Roswaal Mansion from the capital, looking for quick cash, you know?”

“You practically know all the details and you’re still asking, aren’t you?! Yes, that’s right! I jumped at that lucrative offer, thinking I could get ahead of everyone else, so I rushed down a bad road trying to be the first one there, and unfortunately, I ran into the guys who were set up in the forest and got caught! Go ahead, laugh if you want!”

“Nah, I mean, when you tell me to laugh after hearing such a greedy story, it kinda makes me pull back a bit…”

“I’m not satisfied!!”

Subaru lightly crushed Otto’s attempt to laugh it off with false bravado and once again sneered at his shameful, unreasonable shouts. It seemed that his merchant’s spirit and surprisingly reckless side hadn’t changed, which was a relief. Feeling good about their long-awaited conversation, Subaru quickly scanned him.

—To see if there was anything suspicious about his demeanor, or any strange hostility.

Ricardo, who was observing the two from a distance, was exercising similar caution. Given the circumstances under which he had been brought out of the hideout, it could be said that most of the suspicion had already been cleared at this point, but it was better to be safe than sorry. Considering that Ketty, the leader of the merchants, had been an informant, even Otto, with whom he had built a relatively close relationship, could not be trusted carelessly.

Each time he repeated such doubts, Subaru found himself disliking the way his heart grew hardened. No matter how many times he repeated the world, Subaru couldn’t truly know people’s true intentions, their hearts, or their pasts. Therefore, he had no choice but to keep doubting. He struggled to be trusted, all while unable to truly trust others at heart.

"I've really become a nasty guy, haven't I?"

"What was that?"

"I said, 'Glad you're safe.' You'll be safe in this village for now, so just stay put. As for that get-rich-quick scheme, all I can say is, 'My condolences.'"

Subaru disguised his self-deprecation with a light remark, and at his words, Otto looked around with a surprised expression. Then, belatedly, he realized that the sight he was looking for wasn't among the villages, and his face showed it.

"N-No way… Could it be, by any chance, already…?"

"You missed your chance to jump on that money-making scheme. Well, you'll just have to accept that just being alive is a profit in itself. Good luck selling your oil."

Subaru patted Otto's shoulder sympathetically as his face turned pale, and leaving him on the verge of collapsing, Subaru looked over the group that was preparing. His eyes met Ricardo's, who was watching him. Ricardo twitched his nose as if to say Otto had been assessed, and then rejoined Mimi and the others. Subaru breathed a sigh of relief, sensing he had also received the veteran mercenary's stamp of approval, and roughly explained the situation to Otto, trying to prevent any further recklessness from him in this place. Although Otto seemed somewhat distracted, Subaru finished explaining the situation with gestures and hand movements, with Otto interjecting occasionally.

"So, that's why the 'mountain bandits' in the forest —you already know them, they're the Witch Cultists— the people here are the subjugation force to defeat them. In the meantime, this might become a battlefield, so we were gathering merchants to evacuate the villagers. I'm sorry you got completely caught up in the mix, but we can't let you leave the village now, so you'll have to wait here until things are settled. Okay?"

"O-Okay?"

“I’m glad you accept. A few people will remain, so please make sure you don’t stray from them. Alright then, let’s talk again once everything’s cleared up.”

Having said only that to the stunned Otto, Subaru put him aside for now. Instead, he headed towards the subjugation force, which seemed to have finished their squad formation and alignment, and called out to Julius and Ricardo, who were leading them. Julius, who turned around, looked at Subaru and then at Otto in the distance.

“It was a reunion with an acquaintance, wasn’t it? Have you warmed up to your old friend enough?”

“I laughed like an idiot, talked nonsense, and then secretly peered into the depths of his being to see if he was hiding anything. I feel like such a bad person I’m starting to believe I’m an idiot.”

“It’s good to know you’re satisfied. If you no longer need to doubt someone you don’t want to doubt, then that’s enough, I’d say. — What about him?”

Julius admonished Subaru’s self-deprecating remark and asked about Otto’s fate as he looked disheartened. In response, Subaru lowered his chin and spread his arms, indicating the village.

“We’ll leave him in the village. There’s going to be a standby squad anyway, so they’ll protect him there. I’d rather not add more trouble by making him chase after the evacuated group now.”

“That would be best. Then, prolonging this only creates unnecessary risks. Shall we move soon?”

Julius nodded at Subaru’s answer and, narrowing his eyes, asked a question filled with fighting spirit. In response to his call, Subaru saw the knights lining up and Ricardo’s expression tighten. The fighting spirit intensified, and the atmosphere of the battlefield grew thick.

Subaru lifted his chin, gazing at the sky, and let his thoughts drift for a moment. There were some uncertainties, but he was confident he had eliminated as many risks as possible. He had done his utmost, and now all that remained was to wait for fate to smile upon them. In that case, spending any more time would only be a foolish act that would dampen their morale.

“—Let’s do it. Stick to the plan.”

Subaru lowered his gaze, looking over everyone as he quietly rallied them. In response, the knights also nodded and began mounting their waiting ground dragons and Ligers.

Beside Subaru, Patrasche, eager for her turn, came up to him with high spirits. He stroked her firm hide with his palm before climbing onto her back.

Julius and Ricardo were lined up on either side of Subaru, and with their gazes on his back, Subaru took a small breath.

“Alright, let’s do this, everyone. I’m counting on you, so lend me your strength—!”

2

Based on his previous battle experience, Subaru had a theory about Petelgeuse’s “possession.”

First, Petelgeuse’s “possession” works by transferring his consciousness to another body when his current one stops functioning.

Second, the targets for possession aren’t just anyone; they’re limited to the bodies of his subordinates, whom Petelgeuse refers to as “fingers.”

Third, given the “finger” analogy, there are likely a total of ten spare bodies. One is stationed at each hidden location, ready to be swapped into in an emergency.

Fourth, even if Petelgeuse isn’t killed but only rendered unconscious, if another “finger” detects it, a system is in place to forcibly make the current body commit suicide, triggering the possession phenomenon and executing the transfer.

Fifth, if all the “fingers” to possess are lost, Petelgeuse will resort to possessing Subaru’s body as a last resort. This possession is incredibly potent, and no matter how strongly Subaru tries to maintain his consciousness, he won’t be able to resist it. —That sums it up.

“Putting it into a bulleted list really highlights how unbelievably unfair it is. He also has ‘Unseen Hand’ and the authority of ‘Sloth’? That’s just too malicious to even talk about.”

The shadowy, invisible demonic hands, “Unseen Hand,” deliver fatal blows.

“Sloth” is a mental contamination that crushes the will of those without resistance and drives them insane. And even if you overcome those and take his life, “Possession” means he can’t be killed in one go.

If life were a one-shot game, this lineup would make anyone throw in the towel.

If Subaru were to challenge him without any prior knowledge, he’s confident he’d be killed a hundred out of a hundred times. It’s only by repeatedly enduring and maintaining his memories, continuously strategizing, that he’s finally seeing a glimmer of hope. This explains why the Witch Cult has been so dominant for 400 years.

Petelgeuse possesses powers specifically tailored to kill on first encounter.

If you think of it as a surefire pattern that works on anyone, it makes sense why he’s so highly valued within the Witch Cult, so much so that his name is exceptionally well-known.

That’s precisely why Subaru is indispensable in confronting Petelgeuse.

He’s the only one who can face someone who easily pulls off first-encounter kills with the experience of not being a “first-timer.”

It’s no exaggeration to say that Natsuki Subaru is Petelgeuse’s natural enemy.

Subaru exited the dense forest, heading towards a familiar cave he had visited many times before.

The world was covered in green as far as the eye could see, a place where one could easily lose their sense of direction, yet his steps showed no hesitation. He had trodden this path countless times for the same purpose. His senses, his feet, guided him there as if tracing experiences etched into his memory.

Not once had Subaru approached that place with a fighting spirit.

Both last time and the time before, Subaru had resigned himself to his role as a mere pawn for buying time, or rather, for diversion, and he focused solely on completing that task.

Before that, he had been consumed by murderous intent, a sense of desperate finality, and those negative emotions alone.

This time, it was different. This time, it wasn't like that.

Subaru had come here with his resolve to fight firmly set.

To personally bring an end to a long, enduring feud and the battles he had repeatedly fought.

"—Welcome, most beloved faithful."

The forest opened up, revealing a wider view. Subaru felt the sunlight on his eyelids and the hard rock beneath his feet. Squinting, he looked ahead to see a towering cliff blocking his view, and a gaunt figure standing in front of it, arms wide open, welcoming him.

This must be their fifth encounter.

One would think that repeatedly facing someone would eventually lead to a somewhat favorable impression—but with this man, it seemed that would never be the case.

"I am a Sin Archbishop of the Witch Cult, representing 'Sloth.' Petelgeuse Romanee-Conti…!"

Petelgeuse extended his fingers towards Subaru, introducing himself with his now-customary line. The madman, his black priest's robes fluttering and yellowed teeth bared, looked at Subaru with an excited tone.

"It is a good day, a wonderful day. To think that on this fated day, when I had just decided to undertake the ordeal, I would be able to welcome a new child of love…! My heart feels like it will burst with tears of joy, emotion, and admiration!"

He placed a hand on his chest, contorting his slender body as if embracing himself. Struggling to keep revulsion from showing on his face at the madman's bizarre antics, Subaru took a small, deep breath and said,

"It is an honor to meet you, Archbishop. It is truly embarrassing to have joined you right before the ordeal is to commence. However, if you would allow this body and soul of mine to join the ranks of the faithful undertaking this trial, there would be no greater honor."

Subaru bowed, knelt, and showed Petelgeuse the utmost respect. Witnessing this, Petelgeuse's eyes welled up with tears again in what seemed like overwhelming emotion, and he soaked his cheeks with a torrent of them.

"Oh, oh, what a magnificent spirit! What a clear display of love! So much! I cannot recall a time when I cursed my own slothfulness more! To think that I, that the Witch Cult, has not welcomed a devout faithful like you as a comrade until now is nothing less than a failure born of my sloth! Oh, please forgive me! Please forgive my sloth for overlooking even a single drop of the guidance of love that you pour into the world—!"

Perhaps to counter Subaru's kneeling, or rather, to express the depth of his own emotion, Petelgeuse threw his limbs to the ground and began to punish himself by striking his forehead against the rock face. This self-mutilation, carried out with merciless force, tore open his forehead and caused blood to flow, yet he didn't seem to mind.

Considering his habit of biting his fingers and his penchant for self-harm, Subaru had assumed he simply enjoyed it. However, now that there was a possibility that this body wasn't Petelgeuse's own, it became harder to simply dismiss it as mere self-mutilation.

In any case, it wouldn't do for him to self-harm to the point of dying right now.

Their covert plans hadn't fully progressed yet. They still needed to buy time and lead the situation exactly where they intended.

"Archbishop, please stop. The Witch would not be pleased by such actions."

"Ah, but, but, but, but, but, but, but, but, but, but, but, but, but! To be forgiven for the slothfulness of my actions! My foolishness! My faithlessness in not repaying love! There is no other way than to punish and discipline myself!"

"That's not true. If it were the Witch, she would surely be pleased to see you carry out the ordeal and repay her favor, rather than see her beloved faithful harm themselves."

Subaru approached and stopped Petelgeuse from continuing his self-harm, telling him this. Petelgeuse abruptly ceased his erratic movements, his eyes wide as he looked up at Subaru. Subaru silently nodded, feeling a shiver of dread creep into his heart from Petelgeuse's fervent gaze.

Suddenly, a skeletal hand forcefully grabbed Subaru's arm.

"—Everything, just as you say."

"—!"

"Oh, I was wrong, I was mistaken, I was not righteous! Yes! The ordeal! What I must do now is not self-punishment, self-harm, or suicide, but the ordeal! To respond to the beloved Witch's favor, carrying out the ordeal is the mission to which I must stake my very life! To forget that and revel in self-pity, how foolish! Oh, your words have opened my eyes! Wonderful, wonderful, wonderfullllllll—!"

Petelgeuse violently shook Subaru's gripped arm, expressing one-sided gratitude before standing up. He roughly wiped the blood dripping from his forehead with his robe's sleeve, then bit and crushed a finger in the same mouth that had just declared self-pity foolish.

"My slothful self has no value. Diligence is the most noble thing in this world, and sloth is the most despicable vice. Therefore, I will forever distance myself from my inherent sloth through diligence. Oh! You are truly diligent, aren't you! To be able to welcome you as a new faithful is truly, truly, truly, truly, truly, truly, truly, truly, truly, truly, truly, truly, a joyous thing!"

His words had no consistency, and his logic was completely disjointed.

He spoke of regretting self-harm, then bit his finger. One moment he was shedding tears of shame over his rash actions, and the next he was laughing joyfully as if he'd forgotten everything.

Subaru thought he understood that Petelgeuse's words and actions were erratic, but even with that understanding, he still couldn't keep pace.

He caught a glimpse of such a deranged personality that Subaru, who was trying to continue the conversation to buy time, inadvertently fell silent.

"—Let's talk about the ordeal."

Holding his breath and closing his eyes, Subaru suppressed those incomprehensible emotions and spoke.

He brought up the "ordeal," the main objective of this attack that the madman had mentioned repeatedly. As far as Subaru knew, Petelgeuse had never delved into the contents of the ordeal.

Petelgeuse called this attack an "ordeal" and consistently spoke of testing Emilia. So what exactly was his true intention?

What would it take to overcome the "ordeal" that Petelgeuse posed? Subaru had no desire to understand the madman at all, but he couldn’t face him unless he believed there was some basis for his actions.

At the very least, if he couldn’t believe he could understand what they sought at the end of this ridiculous endeavor…

“Upon our meeting, I would very much like to hear about the purpose of this activity—the ordeal, Archbishop.”

“—The ordeal.”

Petelgeuse muttered, as if suddenly erasing all prior emotion.

A shiver ran down Subaru’s spine at his quiet demeanor, but he managed to keep it from showing on his face and waited for him to continue.

Previously, when he had tried to delve into the topic of the ordeal like this, he had been asked to present the Gospel, and the conversation had broken down. What would happen this time?

Swallowing a strangely bitter mouthful of saliva, he felt his stomach burn in the silence.

Just before he could no longer stop the cold sweat from beading on his forehead and running down his face,

“The ordeal! Yes, the ordeal! It is a trial! We must carry out the ordeal! If we do not test, if we are not tested, I came for that very reason!”

Petelgeuse’s face lit up, and he began to bounce around on the spot.

Subaru, stiff with tension, was momentarily stunned by the sudden, loud shout. Before him, Petelgeuse continued in his high-pitched falsetto,

“We must test! We must test if this newly discovered half-elf is worthy of bringing down the Witch! If the body is worthy as a vessel, we secure it; if not, we make them pay the price for their disrespectful birth!”

“Bring down the Witch? A vessel? …The price?”

“Loneliness! Negative emotions! The very gloom is what elevates the nature of the vessel to be worthy of the Witch! Therefore, my slothful self, my will, my fingertips must perfectly prepare it! Oh! For love! For love! We must repay it!”

As the madman reached his fingertips skyward, as if to grasp the heavens, and with the content of his words, Subaru felt a chill run down his spine as he saw a kind of answer.

If “vessel” and “bring down” were to be interpreted as he understood them, then…

“If, as a result of the ordeal, that half-elf is found worthy as a vessel… then you will bring down the Witch into that vessel…”

“The Witch of Envy, Satella, will manifest in the world —again! How long, how much, how much I have waited for that day, that moment, that instant! If I can be of help, a small aid, a foundation for that… there is no greater joy!!”

Petelgeuse’s voice was filled with joy as he shed tears of emotion.

Listening to it, Subaru felt a nauseating discomfort at the fact that the Witch Cult’s objective was far more malicious than he had imagined. In other words, they acted so cruelly, committed such massacres, pushed Subaru so far—

“You don’t see any value in Emilia, do you?”

To them, Emilia’s existence was merely a vessel to contain the Witch’s soul.

Before the Witch’s soul entered, no matter how noble the body’s owner’s will, how earnest, how loved—none of that meant a thing.

This was an endless insult to Emilia’s very existence, and for Natsuki Subaru, whose heart was stirred by her, it was an unbearable humiliation.

In the process, turning a village into a scorched wasteland likely caused them no remorse, no concern whatsoever. They could unconsciously disregard that each life they took had a story, dreams, and a tomorrow.

If not, how else could they so calmly, without even laughing, perform such horrific acts?

"—Monster."

For a moment, in the single word of enmity that escaped Subaru, Petelgeuse didn't notice.

A monster with incomprehensible thoughts, with ideals that could never be shared, a monster with whom he would never understand —that was Petelgeuse Romanee-Conti.

"Archbishop, I have listened to your profound discourse. I am truly impressed by the Witch Cult's philosophy; it exceeds what I had heard. I will most certainly accomplish the ordeal."

"Oh! As expected, you are wonderful! Yes, that is it, that is it, that is how it must be! If we do not unite, single-mindedly, and throw ourselves into our true purpose, we will lose our meaning as ourselves! My fingers, my feet, my eyes, my nose, my mouth, my tongue, my blood, my bones, my flesh, my soul—all of them are for dedicating to the Witch! From the moment I received her favor, from the moment I knew I was loved, my existence is but dust and ashes meant only to repay that love with my whole being… Oh! How slothful!!"

Subaru's flattery, which tasted rotten even to him, seemed to be taken at face value by Petelgeuse, who showed no suspicion.

Proudly, he spoke of his overflowing, self-serving faith. He then reached into his robe and pulled out a black-bound book —the Gospel— and began to turn its pages.

"The words etched in the Gospel, that speak of love! They make me resolve to act! To uphold love, to carry through with my actions, obstacles are indispensable! Obstacles must exist! Obstacles are a matter of course…! Therefore, my daily diligence, my faith that resists sloth, is tested, tested, the time of ordeal given to me—!”

Petelgeuse followed the words on the page with his finger, foam forming at the corners of his mouth, his bloodshot eyes darting across the text.

To Subaru, who had once succeeded in snatching the Gospel from his hands, the book in Petelgeuse’s grasp was nothing more than a foreign book filled with incomprehensible characters.

However, Petelgeuse must have understood what was written.

With each word he traced, his cheeks flushed with excitement, and his eyes filled with joy and delusion.

Then,

“—Present your Gospel.”

Tilting his head ninety degrees, bending at the waist, and spinning around, Petelgeuse looked at Subaru.

Subaru froze at those words, then closed his eyes, realizing the inevitable question had come. In his experience, even if the conversation had barely been coherent, this question from Petelgeuse would always cut it short.

Every single Witch Cultist was said to receive a Gospel, which served as their scripture.

The background of how they were chosen or who sent them was a shadowy part of the Witch Cult that even Wilhelm and others didn’t know.

Even setting aside those unknown aspects, possession of the Gospel itself was a required proof of being a Witch Cultist.

“Please present your Gospel. I desperately, desperately, desperately, desperately, desperately, desperately, desperately, desperately, desperately, desperately, desperately, desperately, desperately, want you to tell me what the Witch has bestowed upon you.”

With each “desperately,” he tilted his head left and right, gazing at Subaru with movements so dizzying they could make a viewer sick.

Judging from his posture and demeanor, Subaru concluded that the signal he was waiting for hadn’t come yet. The task of buying time was still ongoing—to keep the conversation going, he first took a breath.

“About the Gospel…”

“Yes, the Gospel. If you have been recognized as a faithful, it should be in your hands…”

“Actually, it might be some kind of mistake, but the Gospel has not been delivered to me.”

Interrupting Petelgeuse’s agreement, Subaru revealed he didn’t possess a Gospel. Petelgeuse’s eyes widened at his words, but before he could say anything, Subaru thrust out his palm, saying, “Hold on a minute!” and interjected. Then,

“It’s true I don’t have a Gospel! But… my love for the Witch truly overflows within my heart! Even if I don’t have a physical Gospel, what else could this intangible emotion be but the lament of my soul to repay the love I’ve been given?!”

“—You are…”

“Even if the form is different! I, too, am merely a leaf, just like you, Archbishop, completely devoted to the Witch. I will assist with the ordeal with all my being. I will dedicate everything, thinking of the Witch. No, my very existence, down to the last fragment of my soul, has already been entirely yielded to the Witch!”

Subaru continued, throwing out words in rapid succession, not allowing Petelgeuse to retort. He raised his fist, stomped his foot, and contorted his face as if squeezing out his innermost thoughts.

“Or, Archbishop! Sir Petelgeuse, will you deny this lament of my soul?! Will you laugh at my miserable and foolish appearance, clinging to an intangible love?! That’s fine too, I can accept that. But! Even so! This faith of mine cannot be shattered by anyone.

Love, love alone, is everything!”

Subaru punched his fist towards the sky, having said everything he wanted to with complete abandon.

As for Petelgeuse, he quietly listened to Subaru’s ragged breathing, and at the end of his shouting, he let out a “Hmph,” and said,

“What a fresh whisper of love…”

As if struck by lightning, the sternness in Petelgeuse’s expression vanished.

The madman was deeply moved by Subaru’s words, tears flowing down his face as if his heart had been cleansed.

“Please forgive my sloth for doubting you. You are wonderful, truly wonderful without exaggeration. Unlike me, who lacks the confidence to loudly declare my love without a physical Gospel, without the Gospel. A rich favor that speaks for itself—you are truly worthy of it.”

Kneeling in utter admiration, Petelgeuse placed a hand on his chest, showing respect for Subaru’s faith. If one were to isolate that moment, Petelgeuse’s demeanor indeed looked like that of a devout religious figure.

Observing his attitude, Subaru couldn’t help but feel a certain sentiment. It was—

“This guy’s a pushover.”

“Did you say something?”

“Please raise your head, Archbishop. I am not so grand a being as to be treated that way. More importantly, aren’t we—equally devoted to the Witch and meant to cooperate to repay her love?”

Subaru put on a perfectly sincere smile, as if to deceive him, and extended his hand to Petelgeuse. Petelgeuse blinked, then took Subaru’s hand, saying “That is right,” and stood up, closing the Gospel in his hand with a snap.

"Calling myself a Sin Archbishop, I seem to have been too narrow-minded. I am ashamed of myself. For your consideration, I thank you. I swear to respond to the Witch's love, which brought about this encounter, with the utmost diligence!"

"Yes! Exactly right! Let's continue to strive together!"

"Oh, joyous words. Even without the Gospel, your resolve is truly magnificent—such strong favor, are you not perhaps 'Pride'? If so, even without the Gospel, you should be aware of having absorbed the Witch Factor, I think."

"Witch Factor—?"

Subaru tilted his head again at a word he had heard before but whose meaning eluded him.

Petelgeuse nodded at his questioning voice.

"The faithful receive the Gospel, and those in my position as a Sin Archbishop receive the Gospel along with a Witch Factor. Without the Witch Factor, to speak of the ordeal is…"

He stopped speaking abruptly. As Subaru frowned at his demeanor, Petelgeuse tucked the Gospel into his robes and pulled something else out instead.

In his outstretched palm, he held a faintly glowing hand mirror—

"—!"

"My apologies. A contact from my fingertip… It seems there's been a change in the situation. Our meeting must have something to do with it. I hope it's good news."

Petelgeuse, looking down at the communication mirror, didn't notice the slight change in Subaru's expression. Without noticing, he opened the hand mirror and saw himself reflected in its surface.

"It is I. Is there some anomaly—"

"Uh, what was it again? Oh, right. Tra-tra-tra!"

"Huh?"

His expression froze before the image and words of the person reflected in the mirror.

Watching Petelgeuse's stunned reaction, Subaru vaguely understood what was reflected in the communication mirror he couldn't see.

Even the sight of the person with cat ears shaking, waving, sticking out their tongue, and speaking the prearranged password.

"Who are you…? Why is my fingertip…?"

"Tra-tra-tra."

"Huh?"

In front of the questioning Petelgeuse, Subaru quietly repeated it.

Petelgeuse tilted his head, hearing Subaru's murmur. Subaru gave a wide grin to Petelgeuse, who clearly indicated his incomprehension.

It was a completely different smile from the forced one he'd worn earlier—his true smile, like a mischievous brat with a twisted mouth and bared teeth.

"It means, 'We succeeded in the surprise attack.'"

"What…? I don't understand what you mean…"

"You don't understand, huh? Ah, don't worry."

Subaru kindly explained the meaning of the password, then nodded to Petelgeuse, who still showed no understanding. And then,

"—Because I understood what you were saying just as little!!"

A full-force right straight landed squarely on the madman's face the —pent up- frustration he had endured finally exploded, sending the slender body flying.

Petelgeuse groaned as he tumbled, his eyes rolling back as he couldn't hide his surprise at the sudden violence that had assailed him.

Looking down at the pathetic man, Subaru unclenched his fist and pointed a finger.

Then, he declared,

“I endured a lot, but I’ve reached my limit. Now, let’s end this, Petelgeuse Romanee-Conti!!”

Chapter 79:
The Self-Proclaimed Knight and the Finest Knight

Subaru thrust out his right hand, middle finger extended, and declared war with his fist. Petelgeuse, knocked down by the blow, wore a dazed expression, unable to wipe away the blood trickling from the corner of his split lip. His lips trembled, quivering,

“What in the world… do you understand what you’re doing?! I am a Sin Archbishop, a Sin Archbishop blessed with the Witch’s favor! For you, who also receives her love, to strike me…!”

“Outrageous, you say? Sorry, but I’m sick of hearing that kind of talk. I’m not going to discuss you or what you believe anymore. The Witch, she can go to hell, Petelgeuse.”

Subaru scoffed at the madman, whose face was frozen in a grimace, and then lightly beckoned him, a clear provocation. As if that gesture reminded him of his fury, Petelgeuse slammed his hand on the ground as he rose, his bloodshot eyes widening as if they might pop out.

“Fine! I understand! If you, if you have forgotten the Witch’s favor, her grace, if you claim ignorance, then I will use the love bestowed upon me to make you atone for that disrespect! I don’t understand, I don’t understand, I don’t understand, I don’t understand, I don’t understand, I don’t understand, I don’t understand, I don’t understand, I don’t understand, I don’t understand, I don’t understand, I don’t understand, I don’t understand, I don’t understand, I don’t understand, I don’t understand! Why! Why do you reject love! I don’t understand your true intentions!”

“Is the world insane, or am I? When you’re cornered by irrational circumstances, and nothing goes your way, you tend to fall into a dead end of thought and wonder that…”

Subaru listened to Petelgeuse’s spittle-laced ravings, recalling the calamities that had befallen him and the turmoil in his heart during those times.

He remembered those moments when he insisted he was right, loudly proclaimed that everyone else was wrong, and then threw childish tantrums, screaming and yelling.

How was that any different from the madman's behavior before him now?

"Well, I always think it's a difficult question to answer, but I can say this much."

"…"

"You're the crazy one. I'm right. —Let's end this here, Petelgeuse!"

Petelgeuse's eyes trembled with a dark delight at Subaru's words.

It was a murky joy, born of his intoxication with his own diligence, as he prepared to punish the fool who dared disrespect his faith. At the same time, Petelgeuse's shadow exploded, and countless demonic hands stretched out from beneath him toward Subaru, aiming to tear off his limbs, twist his neck, and bathe in his blood.

However,

"Why—?!"

"Come here, bogeyman, to the sound of my hands clapping—! Though I'm not that relaxed!"

Twisting his body and leaping widely from side to side, he narrowly dodged the approaching palms. The number of approaching arms stopped at seven, likely not because Petelgeuse was underestimating Subaru, but because he still didn't grasp how many 'arms' had returned to him.

In any case, the number was manageable, the speed was slow, and since it wasn't even a surprise attack, avoiding the initial blow wasn't all that difficult.

Of course, if they were to follow the usual script, there would have been no need to risk such close proximity. It would have been enough to incite Petelgeuse's frenzy from a distance and leisurely evade his indiscriminate ‘Unseen Hands’.

However this time, Subaru didn’t choose that option. Even knowing the danger, he chose to confront the ‘Unseen Hand’ in close proximity to Petelgeuse. He was doing it to snatch victory, even while brushing past the ‘Unseen Hand’ that could turn his bones to dust with a mere touch.

“Impossible, it shouldn’t be… Why?! Can you see my! My bestowed favor! The authority of Sloth, the ‘Unseen Hand’?!”

“Ask the Witch who supposedly covered my body with her stench. Oh, wait, unlike me, you don’t have permission to meet her freely, do you?”

“What do you mean by that…?! You, it’s as if you’ve spoken with the Witch! With Satella…!”

“We’re so close, she has touched my heart. Literally.”

Petelgeuse’s face turned beet red with indignation, and he bit down on his fingertips to suppress an unbearable surge of emotion. There was the sound of nails, bone, and flesh being crushed, and a dull thud as if his teeth might break from their roots.

At the same time, the amount of shadow gushing forth increased in response to his emotions, and sweat beaded on Subaru’s forehead as the difficulty of evasion skyrocketed. However, this also revealed a certain truth to Petelgeuse,

“‘Unseen Hands’ are returning?! Why is this?! My fingertips… what happened to my fingertips!!”

Even though his own number of ‘hands’ had increased, Petelgeuse was agitated, as if confronted with an unacceptable truth. And so he should be. The increase in the number of Petelgeuse’s ‘Unseen Hands’ meant that—

“As expected, the ‘Unseen Hands’ he used to control his subordinates—his ‘fingertips’—are returning to his main body because they’ve lost their targets.”

Subaru had confirmed that when Petelgeuse was defeated and possessed another body, the number of ‘Unseen Hands’ he could use tended to increase.

He also knew that the number tended to increase after a surprise attack that wiped out the ‘fingertips’—the hiding places of his subordinates.

From this, Subaru had previously inferred that if the host body wasn’t destroyed, he would revive by possessing another. And if the host body was destroyed, the ‘Unseen Hands’ would increase, strengthening his combat power. Subaru was utterly fed up with Petelgeuse’s troublesome nature.

It seemed that his inference was correct, as the madman was agitated by the increased number of usable arms following the disappearance of his ‘fingertips’. Subaru clenched his fist, confident in the accuracy of his deduction, but

“The survival of the main target is going to be much tougher!”

Petelgeuse, still in a state of confusion, didn’t extend the maximum number of ‘Unseen Hands’ Subaru had ever seen, which was over a hundred. However, the number of encroaching black palms still exceeded twenty, already far beyond Subaru’s capacity.

He ducked, slid in, performed a rondat, twisted, and leaped high. His footing was bad, causing him to fall on his backside, a fine play that helped him make a miraculous dodge just above his head.

Feeling a searing pain in his tailbone, Subaru, half-sobbing, got to his feet and put some distance between himself and Petelgeuse.

Currently, he had no injuries from the ‘Unseen Hand’. His scraped knees from the fall and the tailbone pain were excruciating. He might even have a crack.

“Hey, hey, how pathetic, you can’t reach me! Aren’t you ashamed to expose your incompetence and try to gain sympathy, especially when you’re supposedly blessed with favor and all that? Aren’t you, the fool, Slothful?!”

“—There are a few points of concern.”

Subaru tapped his foot on the rocky surface, interjecting his taunts. However, in response to Subaru’s provocative remarks, Petelgeuse dispelled his previous rage and calmly murmured.

He held up a finger, covered in blood, and waved it as if to show it off,

“Losing my fingertips is unavoidable. My diligence was insufficient, my thoughts did not reach far enough, I was slothful! I admit it, I have no choice but to admit it. But, but, but, but there are too many things I don’t understand even after thinking about them! How you can see the ‘Unseen Hand’, your skill in pinpointing the fingertips’ locations, and why you, who possess no direct combat ability, would offer yourself before me!”

“…”

“Therefore, I think this. There’s no point in thinking about things that can’t be understood. Therefore, I, who am not slothful, shall consider and agonize over matters that can yield results. —Why did you appear before me? Why do you draw my attention with provocative actions and words? It is because—”

—This is bad, Subaru instinctively thought, reading Petelgeuse’s intentions, and bit his lip.

He had thought that by endlessly provoking and taunting Petelgeuse, he could keep him focused only on immediate matters and prevent him from discerning Subaru’s true intentions. But he was naive.

Too many convenient situations had unfolded for Subaru, and conversely, too many hardships had piled up for Petelgeuse. As a result, it had given him an opportunity to calmly re-evaluate the situation.

If Petelgeuse correctly perceived the current situation and deduced a perfectly reasonable solution, Subaru would be finished. And, contrary to Subaru’s hopes, Petelgeuse realized it.

“If the ‘Unseen Hand’ can be seen, and it takes time to deal with it—then I shall mobilize all my fingertips and resolve this with a numerical advantage!”

“He figured it out normally—!”

Simply put, the force Subaru could draw out on his own was limited to Petelgeuse himself. Even then, it was an imperfect form that would fall short if the ‘Unseen Hands’ grew to an enormous number.

Currently, thanks to Subaru’s desperate acting to buy time, the ‘fingertips’ of Petelgeuse had been annihilated by the separate contingent of the subjugation team. Including the merchant and the hidden ‘fingertips’, nine locations have been confirmed.

However, the last location has not yet been touched, and where that last location is—it’s right there.

Directly below the cliff face at Subaru’s back, there’s a rock larger than Subaru’s height. Behind it is an entrance leading to a cave, and the last ‘fingertip’ remains beyond that.

If Witch Cultists were to swarm out from there, Subaru’s forces would be completely overwhelmed. Therefore, Petelgeuse’s sudden realization now was tantamount to a death sentence for Subaru.

“Wah—!”

“Ha—!”

However that was only if it had happened a few minutes earlier.

“What?!”

A resonant wave churned the forest air mightily, becoming a raging torrent of destruction that peeled back the rocky ground and tore through the center of the cliff face as its final stage.

The entire cliff section directly above the large rock crumbled, the collapse expanding to engulf the cave, the large hole, and partially, Subaru, who was dangerously close.

“Dangerdangerdangerdangerdangerdangerdanger—!!”

His skull barely grazed by a rock mass that would have crushed it, Subaru crawled out of the dust storm, looking as if he had barely escaped with his life.

Pointing at Subaru’s undignified state and holding her stomach, laughing in a high-pitched voice, was:

“Ahahahaha~! Big bro is running away like a bug~! Look, Tivey, look, look~!”

“I am looking, and I think the timing was bad. If it had been any other timing, I think bro would have been beaten to a pulp.”

The younger brother admonished his elder sister, who was innocently laughing after causing destruction that nearly engulfed Subaru. With a mix of relief that they “made it in time” and resentment that he “nearly died, seriously,” Subaru rushed towards the beast-human siblings.

“You two, I’m glad you came, you damn rascals.”

“Oh my, big bro, you’re saying it wrong? It’s ‘Thank you!’ ‘You’re welcome!’ Yay!”

“I think it was the correct statement, expressing a feeling of both wanting to thank and not wanting to. But still,”

Tivey narrowed his eyes, his cat-like pupils sharpening as he glared at Petelgeuse. In his line of sight, Petelgeuse stared blankly at the collapsed cliff face with a Noh mask-like expression.

His stance, demeanor, and appearance showed almost no combat threat.

If it came to a test of strength, a sprint, or a fistfight, Subaru could win in any of those areas. It would be even more so for Tivey and Mimi, siblings who made a living from fighting.

However, Petelgeuse’s terror lay in a different dimension than such obvious threats. Subaru didn’t miss the slight flicker of fear that crossed Tivey's face, perhaps sensing this.

"Is that a Sin Archbishop? …Just looking at him gives me a bad feeling, like my mind will become unstable."

"When you gaze into the abyss, the abyss also gazes into you—that's what the ancients said. You shouldn't look too directly. I recommend looking out of the corner of your eye, or indirectly through a mirror. It's best not to get too close."

"Why~?"

"His breath smells incredibly fishy and it's physiologically impossible. It kind of stings my eyes."

Calming Tivey, who seemed about to be swallowed by the atmosphere, with a lighthearted remark, Subaru looked at Mimi, who was laughing cheerfully. However, she only tilted her head cutely, looking puzzled, and apparently felt no threat whatsoever. Amazing.

"Anyway, it's great that you two joined up. We wiped out the reinforcements, and honestly, I was about to be game over."

Considering that Subaru's hopes would have been crushed if the two had arrived even a little later, or if the current wave of attacks had been delayed, it was truly a last-minute intervention.

Thanking them for saving his life, Subaru glanced at the forest out of the corner of his eye,

"So, how's the main guy? Still can't link up?"

"Juli should be here soon. Me and Sis just got here first by a small margin."

"Who's Juli? Not Julius? If it's Julius, he'll probably be here soon~. I can smell him."

Lightly dismissing her brother's concern for Julius, the sister pointed at the forest and snorted her nose.

It was unclear how much to trust her completely cat-like sense of smell, but if a rendezvous was near, then nothing could be better.

Though extremely regrettable, the capture of Petelgeuse could absolutely not be achieved without Julius's cooperation.

"—Still, it's strange."

Petelgeuse, who had been silently lost in thought until now, slowly turned his head. His rolling eyes widened as they settled on Subaru, and he extended his tongue, dripping saliva,

"That attack just now must mean you have known the location of the cave, which I had concealed with a visual discrepancy spell. You also somehow saw through the presence of the fingertips I had hidden in the forest. You possess eyes that can see my 'Unseen Hand' as well as its existence. Considering you destroyed the fingertips beforehand, it seems you know even more than that."

Petelgeuse pulled out the Gospel from his robe again and ran his eyes over the pages. He repeatedly reached the last page and then returned to the beginning, repeating this cycle, yet his mouth began to twist as if the answers he sought remained elusive,

"The Gospel! My guide to destiny, has nothing written in it! Then what is your existence?! You receive favor, yet despite that, you scorn the Witch! You stand in my way as I conduct the ordeal, thwarting all my plans…!"

Petelgeuse stomped his feet, showing his unbearable irritation through his actions.

To Petelgeuse, Subaru's actions must have been utterly incomprehensible. His pre-emptive strike on the trial, allowing the villagers and Emilia to escape, the decimation of his subordinates by surprise attack, and the exposure of his own authority and secret techniques—all at the hands of someone who also shared the Witch's favor, his very anchor.

What else could this be but a nightmare for Petelgeuse?

Reflecting on his own actions, Subaru almost laughed at how perfectly his obsessively thorough plan to crush Petelgeuse had fallen into place.

Even after doing all this, Petelgeuse was still a man whose depths were unknown. Subaru had already faced death five times in the loops originating from the Royal Capital.

Five times, Subaru had ended the world without saving anyone.

It was only by accumulating such despair and experience that he could finally reach this level. He didn’t care about nightmares for a madman. Subaru had seen nightmares, literally to the point of death.

So now, what lay before him was the reality Subaru had finally wished for.

“Indeed, indeed, indeed, indeed, you are ‘Pride’—!”

“My name is Natsuki Subaru.”

Interrupting the voice that gnashed its teeth and tried to call him ‘Pride’, Subaru pointed a finger.

Then, he declared to the stammering madman,

“I am the knight of Emilia, the silver-haired half-elf. I don’t know about ‘Pride’ or whatever, but that’s the only title I want, I don’t need anything else.”

He had kept running to make those words a reality.

Mimi gasped “Hoo-eeh!” in admiration at Subaru’s words, and Tivey closed his eyes, subtly lowering his chin. And Petelgeuse, who had received the words head-on,

“That’s enough.”

He let out a somewhat exasperated sigh and shook his head. He shook it. He shook it. He shook it, violently, wildly,

“You dare not repay love! You’ll regret this sloth that fears not even witches! What sloth! What sloth! Wh-Wh-Wh-Wh-Wh-Wh-Wha… sloth!”

Petelgeuse yelled, spreading his arms and opening his mouth wide, his shadow swelling monstrously.

The number of rising black witch hands reached the maximum Subaru had ever experienced—easily exceeding a hundred, they stretched into the sky, and then the shadows scattered in all directions.

“Are you serious…?”

The sheer power of the black palms easily snapped trees and effortlessly lifted fallen logs that had been broken in half. From the collapsed cliff face, several rock fragments the size of Subaru’s head were picked up. Still, the empty hands roamed the forest, seeking prey, returning with menacing objects in their grip and rising into the air. The sheer number, weight, and lethality—just seeing it made him feel like he could die a hundred times over.

“If you can see the Unseen Hand, then how about pure violence?! Can you avoid all the nearly one hundred acts of violence, the diligent destruction my authority demonstrates?! Come now, come now, come now now now now now now now now now now now! Are you ‘Sloth’?!”

Without time to utter a word of warning, those acts of violence were hurled at the three figures standing frozen. Rocks and fallen trees rained down simultaneously—faced with a bombardment that filled their vision, everyone cowered as if transfixed.

“Wha—!”

“Ha—!”

The moment their targets were in sight, the siblings’ shouts met the incoming destruction.

Resonance waves shook the air, and numerous hurled obstacles shattered, scattered, and burst into tiny fragments. Still, not everything was broken through.

"Ooh?!"

"Don't space out!"

"You'll die!"

Pulled backward simultaneously from both sides, Subaru was lifted and moved back. Just a few moments later, the unresisted rock fragments crashed one after another onto the spot where Subaru had been, sending tremors through the ground.

Beyond the rising smoke, Petelgeuse's cackling laughter echoed. And as if to amplify that laughter, more arms appeared above the smoke, already preparing to hurl another mass projectile.

"The strategic objective here has already been achieved! The Fingers are wiped out, and the last remaining one has been successfully buried alive…! Which means…"

"Which means what?"

"What're we gonna do?"

"—Retreat! Retreat!"

At the same time as Subaru's pathetic cry, the projectiles were launched again. Feeling the presence of death behind them, Subaru and the siblings leapt back, evacuating the area.

They kicked off the uneven ground and plunged into the forest for cover. Enduring a storm-like wind pressure, they sprinted through the forest, knowing the situation was dire.

"This is bad, bad, really bad! Damn it, unexpected! Those arms can do more than just tear people apart?! Where's Julius?! Patrasche—!!"

Subaru's words tumbled out in extreme confusion as he ran across the grassy ground. Mimi and Tivey ran alongside him, keeping an alert eye behind them.

Unlike the two of them, who were used to running, Subaru's steps were shaky, and he had to watch his footing lest he trip. Why could he never just calmly stroll through the forest? It always felt like he was running for his life.

“Whoa—?! What’s that—?!”

Next to Subaru, who was muttering his grievances at full throttle, Mimi let out a disgusted cry. Drawn by her voice, Subaru glanced back and genuinely regretted what he saw.

Of course, Petelgeuse wasn’t going to let Subaru and the others escape. He was pursuing the three who had gone into full-speed flight—but his method of movement was impossible.

Petelgeuse was curled up, holding his knees in a seiza-like position. He was gripping his own curled body with “Unseen Hands,” moving by extending countless witch hands like spider legs. The power of the black palms was still intact, and any obstacles in his path were uprooted and scattered. Just straight ahead, a malevolent “Sloth” tore through the forest in pursuit.

“He’s floating, but I’ve never seen such a creepy way to float!”

“Ah, that’s right! Is that how it looks to you guys?!”

The scene was different for Subaru, who could see the “Unseen Hands,” and for them, who couldn’t. For Mimi and the others, it must have been a nightmarish sight of Petelgeuse flying in a seiza position, but for Subaru, it was a nightmare beyond nightmares—being carried by countless arms. It was merely a question of which was worse: the worst, or worse than the worst.

The situation worsened further.

“—Ah! Be ‘Sloth’!!”

“Dammit—!”

Immediately after the roar from behind, a black light instantly incinerated the world. That momentary flash that covered Subaru’s vision had no effect on him. But for the two running alongside him…

"Ow?"

"…ugh!"

Their strength drained, and the siblings were about to collapse, but luckily, outstretched arms caught them simultaneously. Subaru cradled their small bodies under both arms and ran through the forest, holding the dazed duo.

It was the manifestation of Petelgeuse's insidious secret technique, "Mental Corruption." It was one of Petelgeuse's authorities that robbed everyone of their will to fight, except for Subaru and a few other resistance-trained subjugation squad members.

He had thoroughly explained this mental corruption to Mimi and Tivey.

That they likely couldn't resist it, and that if they were corrupted, their minds would lose balance and they would suffer.

However even after hearing that information, the two had come to Subaru's aid. Even knowing their will to fight would be broken if they faced it, they had still come to help Subaru.

That's why,

"Why don't you abandon your dead weight and flee?! Those foolish idlers who succumb before the authority of 'Sloth'! Why do you desperately protect them?!"

"Shut your damn mouth, you idiot! I'm a fluffy-fanatic! If a fluffy-fanatic abandons fluffy kids, how could tomorrow's meal taste good?!"

He couldn't abandon them.

With the two in his arms, Subaru's speed continued to accelerate. Petelgeuse, closing in from behind, seemed surprised by Subaru's hidden strength, but the distance between them still continued to shrink.

Between Subaru, who was desperately running through the forest's rough terrain with two children in his arms and unfamiliar footing, and Petelgeuse, who tore through the rough terrain and obstacles without hindrance, the initial conditions for their chase were already different. He wouldn't be able to escape for another few dozen seconds.

That desperate situation—

"I love you, Patrasche—!!"

Subaru leapt over a natural depression and, bursting through the trees, saw black scales ahead. His partner, who had been waiting, crouching with a sleek, velvety back, responded to Subaru's call and had run all the way here. Subaru literally threw himself onto her back, wrapping his arms around Patrasche's body to keep the siblings in place, then shouted,

"GO!!"

"—!!"

Whinnying, Patrasche lowered her posture and took a sharp first stride—instantly catching the wind.

The rough forest path and the various obstacles strewn about, Patrasche powerfully trampled and surmounted them all with strong strides. The ground wasn't even a beast path, just a pure green expanse.

If ground dragons were similar to horses in his original world, then for Patrasche, trained to run on flat land, running on the rough forest path was an unthinkable outrage. And there was no time to walk slowly; it was a full-speed sprint.

"You're the best—!"

Even his earlier cry hadn't been an earnest belief that Patrasche would come to his rescue. It was just a desperate, exasperated nonsense that tumbled out of his mouth in a pinch.

Patrasche responded to it, entering the forest of her own accord to help Subaru. How many times had this ground dragon saved Subaru since the battle with the White Whale?

“Everyone, everyone… I absolutely, definitely won’t…!”

Mimi, Tivey, even Patrasche, had continued to lend a hand to his pathetic self.

Therefore, Subaru had to respond. He had to respond to what was given with something even greater than what was given. For that was the only answer that would make the flower of trust bloom.

“However far, however far… just how many cards were you hiding?! If you knew even this, even this, then just who are you…!”

—He hadn’t read this far.

Subaru inwardly responded to Petelgeuse, then reached for the reins and gave Patrasche instructions. Patrasche sensitively picked up the clumsy commands, tilting her body slightly and turning in the direction Subaru desired. Little by little, little by little, so subtly that Petelgeuse chasing from behind wouldn’t notice, yet surely—he was turning back.

Leaping over depressions, squeezing through gaps in the trees, bursting through the forest and getting covered in mud, racing through the dim green labyrinth shielded from sunlight, they found themselves—

“We’re back!”

“This is… where we were just now?!”

Bursting out into an open area again, it was the cliff battlefield where they had confronted Petelgeuse just moments before. Returning to the scene heavily marked by destruction, Subaru scanned his surroundings. However, before he could find what he was looking for, Petelgeuse let out a strange cry,

“I don’t know what you’re plotting, planning, or aiming for! All of it, absolutely everything! It shall perish here, vanish, and be gone!!”

Other witch hands, separate from those crawling on the ground, once again lifted fallen trees and rock fragments, hurling mass projectiles at them, exposed in an area with no cover.

Patrasche, sensing the threat, tried to accelerate and shake them off, but it was impossible to dodge the relentlessly approaching onslaught—Patrasche raised her tail and tried to shield her master even a little. At that instant,

“El dona.”

A wall of earth rose from the ground, an improvised barrier directly intercepting the hurled destruction. The barrier cracked under the impact, then fulfilled its purpose and immediately returned to its original earth form.

For a moment, Subaru, still curled up on Patrasche’s back, blinked blankly, unable to comprehend what had just happened in that instantaneous offense and defense. Then,

“I came to our meeting point and couldn’t find you. I was a little worried.”

“…That’s because you’re slow. What were you dawdling over to be this late from schedule?”

“It took time to transport the injured to the village. I was aghast when I arrived, but… I’m just glad we could rendezvous.”

“It’s thanks to our goddess… Later, introduce me to your male companion.”

Subaru slumped, stroking Patrasche’s flank. In response, Patrasche shook her body as if to say, “That’s none of your business,” but in the face of his current relief, such a protest was like a gentle breeze.

At any rate,

“My apologies for the delay. It seems the situation is progressing as planned.”

Drawing his slender sword, a handsome man walked gracefully over the rocky ground and stood beside Patrasche.

Subaru couldn't recall how many times he had felt irritated by the sight of his light purple hair swaying in the wind and the hem of his Royal Guard uniform fluttering. Yet, that figure, which invoked such irritating memories, now, at this very moment, was frustratingly dependable.

"Julius Juukulius, Knight of the Royal Guard of the Kingdom of Lugunica."

Announcing his name, Julius held up his drawn sword vertically, pointing it at Petelgeuse.

Petelgeuse, who had stopped at the forest exit at his appearance, widened his eyes, awaiting the next words. Quiet breathing, silence, and then the six types of lesser spirits shining around Julius.

"I am the sword of the Kingdom, here to cut you down."

"A Spirit Arts user, right? …No matter how far, truly, no matter how far…"

More than the declaration, Petelgeuse was showing intense anger at the sight of the lesser spirits fluttering around Julius. This sight, this reaction, made Subaru feel that the hypothesis he had discussed with Julius was even more likely to be true.

"Julius."

"He's clearly insane at first glance. He appears to be floating, but that must be the power of your 'Unseen Hand' you spoke of?"

"Yeah, he's like a spider, floating by extending his arms."

Julius gave a small shrug in response to Subaru's answer, saying, "That's unsettling." Then he glanced at the siblings Subaru was holding.

"Are the two of them… injured? They seem off."

"I told you, it's mental corruption. If you get hit, your mind breaks… That's why I told you not to come. But I really appreciate it."

Expressing his gratitude with a snarky remark, Subaru pulled the two children closer. Then, Mimi stirred in his arms, her small mouth moving as if trying to convey something.

He gently leaned his ear close to listen, and she said,

"If you win here, you'll be super cool."

He widened his eyes and looked at her, and Mimi was smiling genuinely amidst her distressed gasps. The impact of her expression, her attitude, and her words on Subaru was immeasurable. So,

"Let's do this, Julius."

"Are you certain?"

At Subaru's call, Julius spoke, as if asking for his resolve.

Subaru pulled his chin in response to that question, his eyes burning with an unyielding determination.

"Can't pull back, can't break, can't lose. I don't want to lose anyone else."

"I am the man who thoroughly defeated you. I still believe my actions had my own reasons and significance, but to you, they were nothing more than self-righteousness."

In response to Subaru's answer, Julius recounted the unforgettable events that had occurred between them. The humiliation and pain from that time vividly resurfaced, piercing his chest.

"I am not asking you to dig up the past or atone for sins. Your resolve is heavy, and your decisions and actions have shaped the path to this point. Therefore, I must ask. In this situation, with my presence beside you, can you truly achieve your goal without reservation?"

"…"

"Can you trust me?"

Julius's question was terribly vague, out of place, and immature.

However it was necessary to make Subaru confront the sharp thorn that had been continuously asserting its presence in the deepest part of his heart.

At the Royal Selection, Subaru had made an utterly disgraceful display, and instead of redeeming himself, he had gone to the training grounds, further staining his reputation, and had everything crushed by Julius.

He had been able to stand up again only thanks to the devotion of a single girl who had supported him by his side.

Now that he had stood up, if he were to recall his past feelings, what would they be like?

What color of light did that burning passion from that moment, that instant, now ignite within Subaru?

"—I hate you."

"Yes, I know."

"Your elegant-looking hairstyle annoys me, and your overly polite way of speaking feels suspicious. Yet, you clearly look down on me. Oh, and when I first saw you, you kissed Emilia-tan's hand, didn't you? If I were to kiss every last bit of Emilia-tan's body from now on, that would be an indirect kiss with you, wouldn't it? Don't mess with me!"

Thinking back, Subaru had disliked Julius even before they exchanged their first words.

Given how Emilia had been treated dismissively, Subaru had harbored ill feelings towards Julius from the start. It had escalated in the Royal Selection hall, exploded at the training grounds, and the embers had continued to smolder.

Even at this very moment, it was fiercely hot, burning relentlessly in Subaru's chest.

"My limbs were broken, my head was cracked open, and even my permanent teeth were rooted out like I was brushing them. It's fine now that I've healed, but normally, that would be traumatizing enough to make me unable to walk outside. Do you even know what restraint is, you bastard?"

"I'll have you know, I held back quite a bit."

"Seriously? That's you holding back? You really are the most annoying guy."

Subaru, who called himself a knight, had layered powerlessness, ignorance, and recklessness, making a fool of himself.

Julius, who had beaten Subaru down, fulfilled his power, ability, and role, and demonstrated what it meant to be a knight.

Subaru felt sorry for himself being cast as the victim, but if he were to look at it objectively, that figure was precisely the "knight image" that Subaru endlessly sought.

"—I hate you, 'Finest' Knight."

"…"

"That's why I'll trust you. My humiliation knows what an amazing knight you are."

More than anyone else in this place, more than anyone else in that place, Subaru knew Julius's sword.

That's why Subaru entrusted his fate to him. Because he knew the weight of that sword from back then.

"I'm counting on you, Julius. —I'm entrusting everything I have to you."

"…"

Subaru dismounted from Patrasche and faced Julius.

Julius closed his eyes in response to Subaru's words, and a few seconds later, slowly opened them. Subaru was reflected in his gaze. He took a short breath, held it, and said,

“Then I shall answer with my whole being—”

Julius raised his sword to the sky and murmured, and the lesser spirits blessed it.

Circling around the sword, the vibrant spirits danced in the sky, with the white and black lesser spirits shining particularly brightly.

The glow intensified, strengthened, and then emitted a blinding light—

“—Is the charade over now?”

Petelgeuse, crawling out of the forest, interjected, seeing that their exchange was coming to an end.

Floating in mid-air, Petelgeuse tilted his head. His bloodshot eyes wandered, and with unfocused gaze, he pointed at Subaru and the others.

“What can one Spirit Arts user do? For a mere spirit to stand in the way of my, my path, my love, my loyalty, is utterly presumptuous! Therefore, perish, vanish, and be gone! Yes, Indeed, be gone, gonegonegonegonegonegone—!”

Extending his tongue, biting his fingers, and letting blood drip from his mouth, Petelgeuse screamed a death sentence and stretched out his “Unseen Hands” all at once toward them.

The surging black palms, filling their vision like a tsunami, sought to engulf and crush Subaru and the others whole—at that instant,

“—Clarista.”

A flash of iridescent light instantly sliced away the encroaching “Unseen Hands.”

Sparkles danced, illuminating the blade’s trajectory with reflected light. The black delusion that should have been in the path of that trajectory vanished, and the destruction that should have occurred was also gone.

"—Huh?"

Petelgeuse's stunned voice.

In response, Julius swung his iridescent knight sword and, prefacing his words with "There's no need to be surprised," said,

"If I can be touched by it, then I can also touch it. If it's an ability that can interfere, then there's nothing that this blade, combining all six attributes, cannot cut."

Julius held his knight sword, imbued with all six contracted spirits, and stated this calmly. However, Petelgeuse's question wasn't about that.

He trembled, pointing at Julius with his bruised, reddish-black fingers,

" You, you shouldn't be able to see it. You shouldn't be seeing it. The 'Unseen Hand' was cut…! That fact is less of a problem than this! See, see, you should, you should, you shouldn't, shouldn't, shouldn't, shouldn't, should not, not, not, not, not be able to!"

Petelgeuse choked on his words, stunned, terrified of losing his anchor.

At his appearance and demeanor, Subaru felt a certain empathy for the first time—and, overriding that, the pleasure of a "serves you right." He truly felt like he had finally outsmarted him.

"I'm the one seeing it, Petelgeuse."

"—?"

"I'm the one seeing your 'Unseen Hand.' Julius is just seeing what I'm seeing. It's more unsettling than I thought, though."

—The true essence of the high-level communication magic, "Nect."

Julius had told Subaru that when using this magic, which was used for widespread multi-person communication, “if you heighten empathy too much, you lose the boundary between self and other.”

That meant a synchronization of senses, and if they connected even deeper, it meant,

“It should also be possible to consciously share and maintain a portion of our senses—when you first brought this up to me, I doubted your sanity.”

“But it worked, didn’t it? A man needs guts; you gotta try anything.”

Julius, who was synchronizing a percentage of his five senses with Subaru, would be seeing what Subaru was seeing—the sight of Petelgeuse being suspended by the “Unseen Hands,” hanging like a grotesque giant spider.

Similarly, Subaru was also feeling the surging mana throughout Julius’s body and the warm wave emanating from the lesser spirits.

“If you ask me, I don’t want to keep this situation going for long.”

“I completely agree. I’d respectfully decline if asked again.”

At Subaru’s wry words, Julius gave a sarcastic laugh and braced himself.

His rainbow-colored sword pointed forward, aimed at the pathetic, foolish, yet utterly undeserving madman whose trump card, the “Unseen Hand,

Screaming, blowing apart Petelgeuse’s shadows, he flung his demonic hands, no longer even aiming properly, in every direction, scattering destruction purely on impulse.

Before that grotesque display, Subaru took a deep breath, steeling himself, determined not to avert his eyes.

“Alright, I’m sick of this ‘sharing feelings’ thing. —Let’s just end this.”

“Yes, let’s.”

An upward slash obliterated the raining black demonic hands, and a returning strike bisected a palm that had lunged in from the side. Watching the vanished arm turn to particles and dissipate into shadows, Julius smiled.

“With your eyes, I shall cut him down. —My friend, Natsuki Subaru.”

Chapter 80:
The End of Sloth

1

—A rainbow's radiance strikes down the encroaching darkness.

The clash had already spanned dozens, even scores, of exchanges, and Subaru continued to watch, enduring the intense pain coursing through his body, as sword and palm scraped against each other.

Julius's sword—a blade wreathed in rainbow hues—was enhanced by "Clarista," a composite magic of six attributes. This allowed its tip to reach even Petelgeuse's authority, "Unseen Hand."

With every slash, the severed demon hands dispersed, turning to dust and vanishing into shadow. Though the exact principle was unclear, "Unseen Hand" seemed incapable of regenerating in the face of these rainbow sword strikes. Each shadow lost, one after another, ignited a visible fury in the madman's expression.

"This isn't funny! This isn't a joke! This cannot be! To trample my love…my loyalty…with such a method…!"

Spewing irritated curses, Petelgeuse extended arms from the seemingly inexhaustible, swelling shadows, aiming indiscriminately at Julius's arms, legs, and head.

The parrying blade met them, or Julius twisted his body to evade, as the finest knight danced across the battlefield—literally, dashing through it in a sword dance.

"—!"

The number of "Unseen Hands" tearing through the air and closing in was always over ten. There was no way to sweep them all away with a single swing. For every one he cut down, for every evasion, unavoidable injuries still marred Julius's body.

He miraculously hadn't sustained any fatal damage, like being gripped or torn apart. No, not a miracle, but a result made possible by Julius's exceptional combat prowess.

It was precisely because Subaru was aware of supporting Julius's razor-thin victory that he could keep his eyes fixed on the scene before him.

Black fingertips grazed his thigh, and Subaru grimaced at the pain of his leg being gouged. He grit his teeth against the agony, suppressing a cry as a sharp sensation tore through his shoulder.

Through "Nect," a shared sense—Subaru and Julius's bodies and five senses were currently synchronized at a considerably deep level. This allowed Julius to see Petelgeuse's "Unseen Hands" through Subaru's vision, and conversely, Subaru could feel the overwhelming mana emanating from the rainbow-hued knight sword in Julius's grip.

However, disregarding these benefits, it wouldn't be an overstatement to declare this synchronized state highly unstable.

Visual synchronization sometimes caused multiple scenes to overlap, creating an unsettling sensation as if his right and left eyes were seeing entirely different landscapes. Physical empathy conveyed not only the exhilaration of battle permeating Julius's entire body but also the sharp pain etched into his flesh, directly to Subaru.

Constantly experiencing "two sets" of sensations—the touch of wind on skin, the feeling of feet pressing into the earth, the taste of blood and saliva mixing in his mouth, the dull, murky ringing in his ears—the strain on his mind and body was more than simply double.

How much easier would it be if he could seal off his taste, smell, pain, and touch senses now? It was the dilemma of an itchy sensation in a spot he absolutely couldn't reach, like an itch on the back of someone else's head.

"Honestly, I really just wanna get this over with…"

Subaru moistened his lips with his tongue, muttering this amidst the mass of discomfort that enveloped his entire body. This feeling, too, had probably been conveyed to Julius. He couldn't afford to be careless.

If he could instinctively give in to weakness, he'd abandon all his senses and shut down his consciousness right now. Despite proposing this strategy himself, he felt that much aversion to empathizing with another.

However there was nothing to do now but seal away those helpless, weak feelings.

Because—

"My body's gradually getting used to it. Subaru, shall I speed up?"

"Yeah, I'll keep up, so don't worry!"

As he spoke, Julius lowered his stance and plunged into the overwhelming mass of shadows. Slipping, crawling low, he dodged palms and swept away three witch hands at once with an upward slash from directly below. Annoyingly weaving through the dispersing, dust-like shadows, he immediately counterattacked with a ground-gouging stomp—the palm aiming for the end of his action shimmered and scattered before the rainbows counter attack.

Julius lightly twirled, swinging his rainbow sword as if to shake off the lingering malice of the demon hands attached to it. Behind his handsome, stern face, his eyes remained closed, never once opening.

Due to visual synchronization, if they were to fight with both their eyes open, their vision would alternately overlap, blurring the world. Thus, Julius had decided to close his own eyes, entrusting all visual information to Subaru's sight.

This unforeseen turn of events initially bewildered Subaru, and he was about to vehemently complain about Julius's judgment, but reasons emerged that forced him to swallow all his objections.

One was that Julius's decision to abandon his own sight was correct. This at least avoided the folly of hesitating when faced with two overlapping scenes.

The other was the conclusion of Julius's thoughts that led to him abandoning his sight.

"Idiot, idiot, you're messing with me… You really are a pain in the ass!"

Abandoning his own vision and entrusting all he saw to Subaru meant that he was proving with his life that he trusted Subaru to fight without looking away.

Furthermore, entrusting all his senses to Subaru's vision wasn't a simple matter. Subaru's eyes were, after all, Subaru's body's, not an accessory to Julius's body.

This meant Julius was currently performing the astonishing feat of fighting while perceiving his own body from an objective, third-person perspective, as if looking from behind.

"This ain't like a game… If it is, then it's a shitty game where it's game over if you get caught once. Entrusting your life to that, both you and I are crazy."

Julius's body soared through the air, leaping to avoid the whip-like trajectory of an arm and grabbing a tree branch. Subaru craned his neck to keep him in sight, careful not to let them get too far apart. Because, after all,

"You needn't worry only about me! If I just defeat you, then it's all over!"

Petelgeuse's real target wasn't Julius, who was risking his life on the front lines, but Subaru.

Subaru was the linchpin of this battlefield, the "eyes" needed to overcome "Unseen Hand." And for Petelgeuse, above all, Subaru was the great sinner who had made a mockery of his faith.

"Julius, watch out! Get back! Get back! Follow me!"

“My, my, how troublesome!”

Kicking off a tree trunk, Julius landed near Subaru with inhuman agility, a horizontal leap. Simultaneously, “Unseen Hands” closed in on both of them. Julius completely ignored the palms aimed at his back—reducing the damage to a mere graze on his skin with minimal movement—and pierced the demon hand that tried to rip off Subaru’s neck with a thrusting tip.

Next, the rainbow’s gleam arced, clearing away the palms that had grazed Julius. Turning the crisis around, the knight, still with closed eyes, smiled at Subaru:

“I understand your desperation, but why don’t you try defending yourself a little? At this rate, I can’t even face the enemy head-on.”

“I’ll throw those words right back at you! I can’t calmly watch either! Can you see the desperate knight through my eyes, huh?”

“I see a handsome man with a troubled expression, eyes closed. He looks like he’s blessed with good lineage and talent.”

“There’s a suspicion that you and I are seeing different things!”

Subaru stuck out his tongue at Julius’s self-praise, then frantically retreated from the surging wave of palms. Subaru tumbled, while Julius, combining a backward leap with slashes, caused the arms to disappear before advancing again.

What was terrifying about Julius was his ability to adapt to the act of controlling his own body from an overhead perspective, even in the midst of battle.

Unlike Subaru, his experience of pushing his body to its limits and enduring pain, and his life as a knight who grew stronger in battles exchanging killing intent, strongly influenced this.

Subaru’s current limit was to tremble in fear of battle, unable to perform even at his usual level, let alone above it.

Warriors, including Julius, elevated themselves in battle, bringing forth more than their true strength.

The fact that Subaru was involved in a part of such a warrior's battle was barely supporting his timidness and weak will.

His back and thighs, grazed and gouged by palms, his brain hammered by the throbbing pain in his shoulder.

Gritting his teeth and enduring the pain, Subaru didn't look away.

Dashing, leaping, sliding in, countering, stomping, recoiling, advancing, ducking under, standing firm, slipping through, circling around, side-stepping, twisting his body, looking back, charging in, springing up, kicking, refining his actions.

Slicing away, cutting down, thrusting, cutting upwards, kicking away, flowing cuts, striking, sweeping, piercing, cleaving, flashing, bringing down, knocking away, cutting and sending flying, slicing and dicing. The accumulation of sword strikes and slashes turned "Unseen Hands" back into dust.

As the ominous darkness spread, threatening to engulf his vision, the figure of the knight performing a sword dance with a rainbow-colored sword was so beautiful it seemed unreal.

It was a scene so fantastical that one might almost forget it was a fight to the death.

This feeling was likely because Subaru could sense the spirits' pulsations through Julius. Something similar in the raining palms—

"This can't be… This can't be happening…! Why? Why?! How can this be, my authority! I was loved, I must be loved, I am loved! I am loved! This much, this much, this much! If not, why, why, why, why, why… why did the Witch guide my existence?!"

"I can't indulge your incoherent ramblings. The black witch hands have been sufficiently reduced in number. Above all, fighting through Subaru's eyes has become familiar to my body."

Turning his head in the direction of the screaming Petelgeuse, guided by sound, Julius subtly held his breath, then pointed the tip of his sword at the madman.

"—It's about time I seriously cut you down. The root of the threat that has menaced the kingdom… no, the world, for so long, 'Sloth,' ends here."

"Impossible! You won't! I…! For four hundred years, I have diligently served the Witch, embodying her will, showered in her favor! And I… I, of all people, to be thwarted by such… by such a foolish wretch who only leads minor spirits! It absolutely cannot be!!"

Baring his teeth, Petelgeuse unleashed his fury at Julius's declaration.

The content of his outburst made Subaru feel that the speculation he and Julius had exchanged was strongly coming true. Then, he was, after all—

"Julius—!"

"I know! Sin Archbishop, prepare yourself—!!"

With a stomp that gouged the earth, Julius's body leaped forward.

Petelgeuse opened his mouth, screaming something as he frantically deployed "Unseen Hands." Hands spread into the air, to the ground, into the forest, pressing in from all directions, without a gap, to envelop Julius's body—

"—Al Clarista!!"

A rainbow aurora incinerated the world, and the palms that were about to crush Julius vanished in an instant.

It was Clarista's highest-tier magic, clothing the sword in rainbow light.

Though for an instant, the encirclement Petelgeuse had created completely disappeared, clearing a path without any obstacles between Julius and the madman—!

Petelgeuse, who had been floating in the air but lost even the demon hands that sustained him in the aftershock of the rainbow aurora, fell to the ground. His emaciated body trembled with rage as he struggled to his feet.

Julius, running towards the madman, moved without hesitation. He held his posed blade straight, its tip once again glowing with rainbow light, aiming for Petelgeuse's chest.

"You won't!! Ul doona!!"

Spreading both hands, as if to meet Julius head-on, Petelgeuse chanted. Immediately, a torrent of mana interfered with the earth—earthen walls rose in front of Julius, encircling Petelgeuse from all sides, moving the madman away from the blade.

Then, from behind this barrier, powerful black palms, gathered together, circumvented and aimed to embrace Julius's body.

At this rate, Julius would need one more action to break through the wall, and that movement would delay his action against the witch hands by one step. This was a choice between a fatal wound for Julius or losing the chance to corner Petelgeuse.

—If only Julius were fighting alone here.

"Burn, fighting spirit! Roar, magic ball! —My full power is 120 kilometers per hour!!"

Twisting his body, lifting his leg, and stepping in as he rotated his shoulder for a full swing—a magic stone was hurled from Subaru's hand at a speed that was somewhat misleading for a fastball.

The throw, released from the hand of an ordinary person who hadn't specially practiced pitching, nonetheless struck directly at its target with the concentration of an extreme state.

"What is this…?!"

The destructive energy hidden within the red magic stone shot past Julius's back and slammed into the earthen wall that was acting as a barrier—there, it exploded with light and intense heat, filling the space in front of Petelgeuse with red flames.

“Could it be, this from the very beginning…!”

“Your defeat is that you faced this battle alone!”

Leaping through the flames, Julius’s thrust pierced Petelgeuse’s chest.

The rainbow light penetrated Petelgeuse’s body, and the aurora incinerated his emaciated form from within.

He was slammed against the earthen wall behind him, impaled like an insect on display, flailing his limbs and spitting frothy blood from the corner of his mouth.

“Foolish, foolish, f-foolish… This, my body… This…”

“A blade that binds six attributes will burn your body from within. If your true nature is as we suspect, then you should simply vanish!”

Julius twisted the impaled sword, making Petelgeuse scream.

The knight sword’s radiance intensified, and before its light, Petelgeuse couldn’t even use “Unseen Hand” to distract, nor could he overturn the situation with a chant.

However, Petelgeuse’s frenzied gaze still showed no sign of giving up on life.

“I can’t end! It can’t end! It shouldn’t end! I have diligently served! To succumb to lazy resignation, to a lazy end, is unthinkable! So, then, no matter what…!”

Screaming, struggling, writhing, Petelgeuse pushed open his wound, amplifying the source of his pain. In sync with his movements, Julius pushed the tip even harder, moving the blade to destroy his heart—and then,

“I’ve lost my fingertips, and even now my body is being damaged… but, but, but! I still! I still have! A body remaining…!”

All his previous hosts had been crushed beforehand, and Petelgeuse screamed defiance against surrender at the end of his last body.

His eyes, filled with madness, stared directly at Subaru.

A shiver ran down Subaru’s spine, and Petelgeuse’s mad laughter deepened.

“Ah—my brain, it trembles.”

“—!”

The next moment, Petelgeuse’s body, impaled by Julius, crumbled as if its strings had been cut. The light left his eyes, and all life ceased, vanishing from his limp, downward-tilted head.

The moment he saw that reaction, Subaru knew what was coming. He immediately placed his hand on his chest, drawing something from his pocket, and at the same time,

“Julius! Release it!!”

“Understood!”

Responding to Subaru’s call, Julius kicked over Petelgeuse’s corpse, then turned and rushed towards Subaru. His eyes were open, and immediately, the doubled sensory pressure that had been weighing on Subaru’s body vanished.

In its place, another presence intruded into Subaru’s body. It was—

“As I thought, your body has the aptitude to contain me! Even you, surely, didn’t anticipate this! Ah, ah! Ah! You’re truly slothful, aren’t you?”

Petelgeuse’s mad laughter echoed so close it felt as if it were nestled beside his brain.

Next, Subaru’s body, against his will, reached out its right hand towards Julius, who was running closer. Then, Subaru’s shadow swelled, and “Unseen Hands” erupted from within, aimed at Julius, who had lost his means of sight—

"Ugh!"

"—Huh?"

Subaru's body, which had been about to perpetrate the atrocity on Julius, swayed unsteadily. A floating sensation, as if feverish, suddenly made his skull vibrate violently, and Subaru collapsed to the ground without even being able to break his fall.

As he fell, the dialogue mirror he had been holding clattered from his hand.

"If I know your location through the dialogue mirror, this much is possible, nya~. But Subaru-kyun, to devise a self-sacrificing plan, you're such a silly-billy ♪"

From the surface of the dialogue mirror, which he could no longer confirm, a familiar mischievous voice reached his eardrums. It was Ferris, who had been observing the situation through the mirror and, as per Subaru's instructions—at the signal of Petelgeuse's possession—transformed Subaru's body into a "puppet," similar to the Witch Cultists he had interrogated.

However, Subaru's consciousness was still intact, and it was merely a localized mana surge of water, limited to depriving him of bodily freedom.

"If I can't maintain a sane state of mind, there's no way I can use 'Unseen Hands,' right?"

"No way… No, no, no, no, no, no, no, no, no, no, no, no, no! You… I anticipated even me possessing your body and doing this?!"

As the Petelgeuse in his mind trembled in astonishment, Subaru, in a hazy, drunken state, defiantly replied, "Of course."

As Subaru and Petelgeuse continued their struggle, Julius, who had rushed over, paid no mind to the fallen Subaru. He retrieved Mimi and Tivey, who were lying at Subaru's feet, and then placed them on Patrasche, moving them away from the battlefield. With this,

"A hostage strategy with 'Unseen Hands' is impossible. Are you ready to give up yet?”

“Give up… I will steal your body as I am, and I will be me, I will be me, me, me, me, me, me, me, me, me, me, me, me, me, me, me, me, me, me, me, me, me, me, me, me, me, me, me, me?!”

Petelgeuse, in a frenzy, truly began to go mad, beyond his usual state.

Listening to Petelgeuse’s glitching words, Subaru responded with a sigh to the stubborn madman, then, as if resolved, closed his eyes.

“Ferris might genuinely try to kill me if you possess me. So, I’ll fight you my own way.”

“What… are you going to do?”

Taking a breath, Subaru recalled the previous loop.

The final moment when Petelgeuse possessed his body in the battle on the plains. Subaru, battered and broken by the mana surge Ferris caused in his body. That unimaginable suffering, and the madman’s figure screaming just like Subaru. In other words,

“Forcing synchronization with another—that’s the true nature of your possession. Petelgeuse Romanee-Conti of Sloth… no, Spirit Petelgeuse Romanee-Conti!”

“Me—!!”

Subaru shouted his speculation aloud, confronting the Petelgeuse within him.

In their discussion, Subaru and Julius had arrived at the answer to Petelgeuse’s true nature.

When a certain speculation about the true nature of his possession and its mechanism formed, they reached the conclusion that it could only be that.

Petelgeuse was a spirit who gained bodies by forcibly overwriting and possessing others. “Aptitude” meant discerning those with sufficient aptitude to form a contract with Petelgeuse, and possession was the result of a one-sided, selfish contract formation.

Julius's rainbow blade —"Clarista"— bound all six attributes, an ultimate mana destruction art that could break through the protection of any attribute. It contained the power to cleave even Petelgeuse's main body, a spiritual entity composed of mana. That's why his sword could reach Petelgeuse.

"Me! A spirit! I don't want to be lumped in with such a lowly existence! I am a being who has overcome spirits! I have transcended spirits, escaping an ambiguous, wavering existence, and gained a single will through favor—a chosen existence! And you! You dare speak as if you understand, you bastard!"

Petelgeuse, enraged by Subaru's words, screamed, his existence exploding.

His words, ironically, served to confirm their speculation. Thus, Petelgeuse, in denial of that fact, revealed his fury, refusing to acknowledge it.

"Love changed me! Love gave me will, meaning to my existence! All of it, everything, is the Witch's blessing, the Witch's favor! Then, then, then, then, then, then! This body, this soul, everything should be offered for the Witch!"

"Your sermon is quite enough. —Then, I'll grant you a special meeting."

"What! With whom! What are you talking about—!!"

"With the Witch you've been waiting for—."

At that answer, the Petelgeuse in his mind widened his eyes, his face stiffening in shock, losing his words.

Burning the astonished expression onto his eyelids, Subaru took a deep breath, drawing that moment closer.

—Come on.

"—I can 'Return by Death'!"

The moment the taboo words left his lips, the world's movements slowed.

Then, it arrived—

2

In a world stretched wide with only darkness, that presence was led.

There was nothing; it didn't even know where its own body was.

Only consciousness existed; it couldn't perceive anything else.

Even if it tried to reach out an arm, the arm's presence wasn't visible, and it seemed nothing in this world could be touched by an arm.

Indeed, its awareness of body parts like hands and feet was starting to blur. What meaning did the presence or absence of a body hold in this world?

Abandoned in this world, severed from its physical form, existing only as consciousness, as a soul.

That terribly unreliable sensation, that overwhelming sense of loss—it realized there was a part of itself that felt intensely nostalgic for it, and consciousness strengthened its feelings of rejection, finding this fact hard to accept.

However, a change came to the world of darkness, a change so profound that the direction of its own emotions, the target of its overwhelming passions, all ceased to matter.

"…"

It was a human figure, appearing in that jet-black world, shrouded in a darkness so deep it seemed to paint over the black itself.

It was a woman, that much it could sense. Her face, her limbs, all were hazy, indistinct, nothing clearly defined.

Yet, in such a world, consciousness arrived at a single truth and rejoiced.

Blessing the encounter with the presence that had appeared before it, filled with trembling emotion.

All the days leading up to this moment had existed for this encounter.

Long, long days it couldn't even remember—all of them had been spent for this very instant, this mere fleeting moment.

It was frustrating that fingers didn't exist. It wanted to step closer, to take her hand immediately.

It was frustrating that a mouth didn't exist. It wanted to put the full extent of these feelings into words and unleash them.

It was frustrating that a body didn't exist. If desired, it wouldn't mind offering up its entire flesh.

It was frustrating to be only consciousness. Because this was all it had to offer.

"…"

She remained silent.

It could distinctly feel that her consciousness was directed towards it. Just thinking that it was within the world she was conscious of made it feel as though it was ascending to heaven.

Then, the "love" it sought was spoken from her lips, and consciousness reached the true answer—

"—Wrong."

It was a voice colored by deep, faint disappointment.

Consciousness had been ready for any words to thrill its heart as if it were hearing a heavenly voice. Yet, despite finally hearing that voice, what assailed consciousness was the shadow of anxiety, refusing to cease its outpouring.

In the place where “love” was supposed to be spoken, where it was supposed to reach the answer it had longed for, here—

“—You are not that person.”

Disappointment filled the voice. Then it was immediately replaced by another emotion.

Namely—

“Why is someone who isn’t that person in my and that person’s place—?”

Rage was imbued in the voice.

They were words that denied it. Words that rejected it.

Not understanding the meaning of being treated this way, consciousness tried to utter a lament, clinging to her words.

Consciousness had no mouth. No limbs to convey its will. All consciousness had was itself; it could not touch her, exchange words with her, let alone be loved by her, and,

“—Vanish.”

The confusion, bewilderment, and lamentation of consciousness conveyed nothing to her. Even if they did, they held no meaning.

For her, consciousness was worthless, meaningless, and futile.

Rejection and denial affirmed the despair of that consciousness.

With that, consciousness was severed from the framework of this isolated world, sinking further and further away, vanishing as if dissolving before the longed-for encounter.

Her figure receded.

That figure, for which it had yearned so intensely, so ardently, disappeared into the distance.

She no longer paid any heed to the lament of that consciousness.

She simply looked down quietly,

“I love you, I love you”

She just kept chanting “I love you,” but it wasn’t for this consciousness; it was for someone else entirely.

3

“Ugh! I’m back!”

The sensation of his heart being crushed, the witch hand assailing Subaru in a world where time stood still—he was sure it was the Witch's hand, leaving her scent on him.

The Witch of "Envy"—she was surely connected to Subaru's "Return by Death" in some way. Perhaps she was even the one who invited Subaru to this world, and,

"Someday, I'll figure it out… But for now!"

Subaru forced his still-uncooperative limbs to tremble, somehow clawing at a rock to pull himself upright. He wiped the drool from the corner of his mouth onto his shoulder, enduring a pounding in his ears and an unyielding nausea, finally managing to stand with great difficulty.

Supporting himself with a hand on the rock, Subaru looked straight ahead.

"This… can't… be…"

Ahead, Petelgeuse's corpse, dragging a trail of blood, began to move again. He had possessed Subaru, tasting the Witch's palm through their synchronized senses.

Facing the intense pain, which he hated even to recall, Petelgeuse giving up and releasing Subaru's body was the expected last resort.

—It was concerning, though, that he didn't remember hearing Petelgeuse scream, being too preoccupied with writhing in pain himself.

"At worst, I was ready to repeat it as many times as it took until you left… But to give up after just one try, you're a real spineless coward."

As he spoke, Subaru felt his arms give out, about to collapse. Just then, an arm reached from behind him, barely catching him and pulling him upright.

It was Julius. He had returned with Patrasche, and after confirming that Petelgeuse had retreated from Subaru's body and returned to his dying husk, he said,

“This time, let’s finish it.”

He drew his sheathed knight’s sword, and the renewed Clarista magic dyed the blade rainbow-colored.

With the shimmering, trailing blade in hand, Julius charged straight towards Petelgeuse.

Dragging his body, Petelgeuse, on the verge of death, couldn’t react to Julius’s approach.

The damage to his pierced body, and an expression far more defeated than that, showed Petelgeuse dragging himself along, utterly crushed by despair.

Eventually, his body reached the edge of a cliff, where he leaned his back against the rock face and turned to face them.

Having lost even the will to put on his mad act, Petelgeuse looked up at Julius with a dazed expression. Then his gaze shifted to Subaru—and suddenly, his eyes ignited with fierce emotion.

Tears welled up, drenching Petelgeuse’s cheeks in torrents.

Unlike the tears of joy he’d shown many times, these were simply a testament to an incurable, unredeemable delusion, overflowing purely from vexation.

Petelgeuse shed tears, his voice trembling, reaching out towards the heavens as if trying to grasp something that wasn’t there, screaming.

“Witch… Witch! Witch! Witch! I offered everything to you to this extent! I discarded everything for you to that extent! I gave you everything I could think of, so why?! Why?! Why do you abandon me?! Why?! Why?! Witch! If so… then why did you give me love… your favor…?!”

“What you offered wasn’t faith or love, and certainly not yourself. It was merely the passersby who happened to be walking around you."

Subaru sharply cut off Petelgeuse's pleading lament.

There was no value in listening; Petelgeuse's words were merely the product of self-righteousness, of self-absorption. As Wilhelm had said, it was presumptuous to even call it "love."

"—!"

Julius sprinted, closing in on Petelgeuse's gaunt body.

Petelgeuse only vaguely turned his now tearless eyes towards the raised blade—the knight's sword tip pierced his chest again, and a torrent of light exploded.

A mass of mana residing in the body—the rainbow aurora utterly incinerated the spirit's existence, making Petelgeuse vanish from the world.

The blade was withdrawn, and Petelgeuse stared blankly at his bleeding chest.

Then he turned his unfocused eyes skyward, reaching his hand towards the heavens, still,

"—My brain… trembles."

One "Unseen Hand" shot up from the shadows towards the sky, extending endlessly towards the dazzling sun.

However, that hand grasped nothing, and the palm reaching into the void eventually greatly gouged the cliff face, violently carving into the rock and creating cracks.

—It likely wasn't an intentional act. It was probably meaningless even to Petelgeuse, merely a manifestation of his delusion.

A collapse occurred above Petelgeuse's head, and large fragments of the gouged cliff face broke off. Directly beneath them was Petelgeuse, still reaching for the ungraspable heavens, and, “I was loved—”

A mass of rock crushed his body from directly above, and the sound of flesh and bone being pulverized echoed grandly.

Ground tremors and explosions erupted in a chain reaction, and in an instant, Petelgeuse’s gaunt body was buried under a grave marker of rubble.

Julius, having escaped the collapse, walked to the spot where Petelgeuse had been. His gaze fell upon a large amount of fresh blood flowing from under the boulder. Seeing it, he shook his head, sheathed his drawn knight’s sword, and turned around.

Subaru, too, walked towards the spot without a single word.

His steps were unsteady, and compounded by the uneven ground, his pace was terribly slow, but he reached the grave marker and let out a small breath.

There was no admiration, no sense of accomplishment, no satisfaction.

Only a hollow feeling of emptiness spread through his chest.

Subaru didn’t commit the tactlessness of speaking concepts like victory or defeat here.

He merely uttered the words that passed through his blank mind.

“Petelgeuse Romanee-Conti.”

With that single phrase, this battle was brought to an end.

—The Sin Archbishop of the Witch Cult, representing ‘Sloth’, Petelgeuse Romanee-Conti.

—The battle of Julius Juukulius, the Finest Knight, and Natsuki Subaru, the self-proclaimed knight.

Before the grave marker of rubble, Subaru took a small breath and said,

“—You really were ‘Slothful’, weren’t you?”

Chapter 81:
Pursuit

1

Subaru exhaled a short breath at Petelgeuse's tombstone, averting his eyes from the other traces of battle.

When he turned around, he was greeted by Julius dusting off the hem of his clothes, and Mimi and Tivey, who had dismounted from Patrasche's back, shaking their heads.

The effects of the spiritual contamination on the siblings seemed to have largely cleared. It was likely due to the demise of its source. While he couldn't quite unravel the mechanism of the spiritual contamination, he hoped there would be no lingering ill effects.

"It's not very convincing coming from me, someone who once had that guy literally inside my head… But seriously, there's really nothing left, is there? That's terrifying."

Petelgeuse was a spirit, and at one point, he had even tried to form a contract.

Beings that try to force contracts upon you, whether in his original world or this one, never leave a good impression. This was especially true for a madman who had escalated to a mutual killing spree.

"A mutual killing spree, huh? That's a line I'd never say in my everyday life."

Shaking his head, Subaru realized his sensibilities were becoming tainted by this other world. Even if he couldn't judge whether it was a good or bad thing.

His unusual sentimentality was probably due to the sense of relief that came from overcoming a major challenge. Looking back, this loop, which started in the Royal Capital, had been a continuous series of the biggest hurdles since he was summoned to this world.

It wasn't strange to feel a sense of exhaustion now that they had achieved their final objective.

"I never thought I'd feel sentimental after defeating Petelgeuse… Get a grip, me. If I calm down, look up, and think about it, there's still a ton to do."

After all, his initial and biggest goal of reconciling with Emilia hadn't been achieved yet in this loop.

Starting with their quarrel and separation in the Royal Capital, followed by the alliance with the Crusch camp and the subjugation of the White Whale. Then, the events surrounding the Witch Cult subjugation, where he tricked them with false information to evacuate the villagers. And the post-event explanations, including cleaning up after these situations—he had finished the physically demanding events, but now there was a host of emotionally draining ones.

However,

"Since I won't get hurt or die, this is much easier. You really only realize the importance of peaceful days after you lose them. Though for me, it's been 'everyday life love forever' from the start."

Anyway, they needed to return to the village, rendezvous with the subjugation force, and discuss their next moves. They would have to split into two groups to meet up with Ram and the others, who were heading to the Sanctuary, and Emilia and her group, who were heading to the Royal Capital. If they delayed, Emilia and her group would reach their destination.

Subaru worked his mind as he walked across the rocky ground. Suddenly, his steps halted as he noticed something. His gaze fell upon a trail of blood—the path Petelgeuse had crawled along from his tombstone, and at its starting point,

"—A Gospel."

Perhaps it had fallen from the hem of his robes, or perhaps he had dropped it in a last-ditch effort to cling to it. The Gospel lay there, its cover stained with blood and dirt.

Subaru walked over, picked it up, and quickly flipped through its pages. It looked no different from when he had examined its contents in his previous world. The characters forming the text inside were still in an unfamiliar script, and the latter half of the pages were still blank.

Now that Petelgeuse had been defeated, there was no longer any way to get information from a central figure like a Sin Archbishop.

“Conversely, this might be the only clue… For now, I’ll hold onto it and consult with Crusch-san or Ros-chi.”

By the way, Roswaal being mentioned after Crusch in his current statement was simply due to the difference in their trustworthiness. Roswaal’s absence during a time of crisis had severely impacted his popularity, lowering his approval ratings despite being in the same camp. Much is expected of his future contributions. Although, frankly, it would be best if a situation where Roswaal had to play a major role never arose.

Wiping off the dirt from the Gospel, Subaru dragged his feet back to where Julius and the others were. Although he had suffered almost no direct physical harm, the phantom pains from when he synchronized his senses with Julius still throbbed in various parts of his body.

Even if he received treatment, how long would it take for the pain from these invisible wounds, which weren’t actual injuries, to fade? The thought alone was somewhat frightening. Amidst these thoughts, Subaru suddenly saw Julius’s expression grow stern.

“I’d like to say we’ve finally reached a conclusion, but we must return to the village immediately, Subaru.”

Before Subaru could ask “What?”, Julius looked up.

His expression tightened with seriousness. In his hand, Julius held a communication mirror, just like Subaru had picked up moments ago. If the connection hadn't been cut, he should still be in contact with Ferris.

Subaru furrowed his brows at the unsettling atmosphere and silently urged him to continue. The knight nodded and said,

"Ferris's interrogation revealed something concerning from the Witch Cultist. The evacuated people might be in danger."

His words threatened to shake the very foundation of Subaru's intentions.

2

"Welcome back! Glad to hear you successfully took down the Sin Archbishop, nya!"

Ferris greeted the four, who had returned to the village at full speed on their ground dragon, speaking of dangerous things with genuine delight. Subaru sighed, feeling the tension suddenly dissipate at his unconcerned attitude. But then again, Ferris was always like that, so there was no point in commenting on it now.

Subaru looked around, surveying the members of the subjugation force gathered in the center of the village.

This assault was a surprise attack where they held an overwhelming advantage. Yet, the sight of more than a few injured individuals hinted at the unfathomable depths of the Witch Cult. The only saving grace for Subaru was that there were no fatalities.

"Everyone made it back, right?"

"I gave the 'tra-tra-tra' signal, nya! I made sure to crush all the other 'fingers' besides the main one. We even took some prisoners, and thanks to them, we learned some things, you know?"

Narrowing his cat-like eyes, Ferris glanced toward the edge of the village. Four figures in black robes were bound there, including one of the merchants they had captured earlier.

The prisoners were all looking down, seemingly dazed and disoriented, likely having already lost their mental balance at Ferris's hands.

Feeling both reassurance and a touch of horror at his skill, Subaru frowned and silently questioned him with his eyes about the details of the summons. Ferris, still with narrowed eyes, lowered his chin.

"What I heard from the captured person is that there seems to be a separate unit, nya. Not hiding all over this area, but more like monitoring the highway?"

"Hey, hey! Don't tell me you're talking about more of Petelgeuse's 'fingers,' are you?! The forest, the cliff, and the merchant group make ten spots! Ten fingers should be the end of it, right?! You're not going to start saying childish things like including his feet, are you?"

"The place he himself was isn't a 'finger' but the main body, so haven't we only crushed nine 'fingers,' nya?"

Ferris pressed him with that retort. Subaru choked on his words, realizing it was a logical argument that, despite sounding like sophistry, he couldn't deny. His gaze darted around as he racked his brain for countermeasures if that were the case. What if the corpse buried beneath that tombstone wasn't the last one—

"Wow, you have such an unyielding gaze, nya."

"—Huh?"

"Just now, Ferris intended to tell you something that would turn your world upside down, but… instead of giving up, you immediately tried to figure something out, didn't you? Yes, yes, I think that attitude is good."

Winking and smiling at Subaru, Ferris erased his previous demeanor. Subaru blinked once at the change, then a flush spread across his face.

"Don't tell me you were messing with me?!"

"No, that's not it, nya. You're expecting too much. If what I just said was just Ferris's mischief, then you wouldn't have to worry anymore, so I can understand wanting to cling to that, nya. But I don't think that part's good."

Stung by the teasing tone, Subaru once again fell silent, annoyed at being cornered. But he held back his desire to retort and shook his head.

"Anyway, what you just said is true, right?"

"It's true, nya. Oh, but it's not related to the 'fingers' talk, nya. It seems like the 'Sloth' Witch Cultists are done for. —The ones guarding the highway aren't related to 'Sloth.'"

Subaru frowned at Ferris's words, understanding their meaning in just a few seconds. If there had been contact with Witch Cultists other than 'Sloth' in this battle, there was only one possibility.

"Witch Cultists of 'Gluttony'—!"

"If the White Whale is 'Gluttony,' then it would be strange for it to be alone, nya~."

Subaru clenched his fist in understanding at Ferris's answer, his eyes narrowed.

This was from a previous loop. When the White Whale appeared and Subaru passed through the fog, he had a close call with Witch Cultists. At that time, it was Otto who was attacked, and the fact that their location didn't match Petelgeuse's 'fingers' had bothered him.

—In other words,

"There are Witch Cultists hiding somewhere on the Lifaus Highway?"

"Yep. What are you gonna do?"

Ferris tilted his head and asked. Subaru put a hand to his mouth in response. If his current assumption was correct, the situation wasn't completely out of the woods yet. However, he couldn't let that panic him into making poor judgments. Although,

“I should have anticipated this to some extent. That’s what the insurance is for, right?”

“You’re making a scary face, nya. Where did the cute, weak Subaru-kyun go?”

Raising both hands in a cheer, Ferris closed his eyes at Subaru’s answer. Ferris’s reaction was proof that he felt the same sense of security about that ‘insurance’ as Subaru did. The insurance Subaru had placed was—

“Why do you think I knew the difficulty of dealing with ‘Sloth’ would increase and still allocated our strongest forces to Emilia-tan and the others? I dedicated resources for this kind of situation.”

As he spoke, Subaru’s gaze swept over the group that had returned to the village.

Among them, the most reliable fighter in the subjugation force was missing. —The Sword Demon, Wilhelm van Astrea, was nowhere to be seen.

Before the decisive battle with ‘Sloth’ Petelgeuse Romanee-Conti, Subaru had asked the Sword Demon not for his help as a sword in battle, but for his role as a shield to protect important people.

He had originally been wary of the possibility of Witch Cultists hiding due to factors like highway surveillance. Therefore, he had taken the utmost care to ensure that Emilia and the villagers, who had been evacuated to the Royal Capital, would not suffer any harm.

In the battle against Petelgeuse, aside from Julius, who was a spirit user, anyone who “couldn’t counter spiritual contamination” was equally susceptible to being possessed. Beings afflicted by spiritual contamination were outside Petelgeuse’s possession targets; they couldn’t fight, but they also wouldn’t turn against them, making them safe allies.

Conversely, individuals like Wilhelm, who had resistance to Petelgeuse's spiritual contamination, could potentially invite Petelgeuse's possession. Therefore, Subaru chose to keep those susceptible to possession "other than himself" away from the battlefield, and he faced the battle only with himself, who had a countermeasure against possession, and Julius, who was Petelgeuse's natural enemy.

"Do you know how many Witch Cultists are hiding on the highway? There were nearly a hundred 'Sloth' cultists around here alone. Even Wilhelm-san would be outnumbered if there were too many…"

"I said they were 'monitoring,' didn't I? The numbers aren't that big, nya. If it's twenty or thirty, Old Man Wilhelm and his aides can handle it, so I don't think there's a problem."

Subaru's concern was the case where a large group of Witch Cultists was waiting, but Ferris's words negated that. Originally, the White Whale, a single entity responsible for 'Gluttony,' was more than enough of a threat on that foggy highway. It was plausible that the number of cultists with such a role, even if they weren't directly under it, wouldn't be very large.

"—If the matter could be resolved with just that, I wouldn't have rushed our return like this. Ferris, you shouldn't be so roundabout."

However, Julius, who had been attending to Mimi and Tivey behind them, seemed to have noticed Subaru's moment of relaxed relief. He walked over, clapped Subaru on the shoulder, and reproached Ferris. As Subaru frowned, wondering what Julius meant, Ferris's lips curved into a small smile and he said,

"I trust Old Man Wilhelm's abilities, and an attack by a small number of Witch Cultists isn't something to worry about, nya. If push comes to shove, even Lady Emilia can fight, so there's no anxiety in terms of combat power. However, there's just a tiny little thing that's bothering me, nya."

"What is it, what's bothering you?"

Ferris formed a small circle with his fingers, expressing his tiny concern. He nodded at Subaru's urging, then quickly moved aside as if yielding the floor.

"From here on, let's hear from the person who noticed the crucial part himself. So, here's Otto, who gave us valuable insight!"

As Ferris clapped and cheered, an uncomfortable-looking Otto appeared from behind him. As Subaru's eyes widened in surprise at the unexpected arrival, Otto bowed his head to Subaru and said, "I'm sorry."

"I apologize for surprising you. First of all, I'm glad you returned safely. If you all were defeated, my own safety wouldn't be guaranteed."

"It's good that you're honest with yourself, but… what did you notice? To be honest, I have a bad feeling about this from the start."

Scratching his ear, Subaru felt a growing sense of unease. Otto nodded, keeping his voice subdued so as not to agitate Subaru's anxiety.

"Just now, I noticed that a merchant I know —Mr. Elgrid— was taken prisoner there, and he was… a Witch Cultist, wasn't he?"

"His name sounds really cool, that old man… Well, your question is correct. If someone you know says he's one, then that Ketty person was too."

"It's about that Ketty person."

Subaru felt sympathy for Otto, imagining how heavy his heart must be to hear that an acquaintance was deeply involved in a malicious cult. However Otto showed little interest in Subaru's concern; instead, he stepped forward.

"I'm surprised and regretful that Mr Ketty was a Witch Cultist, but that's not the problem. —Ketty's dragon carriage was used for evacuation, wasn't it?"

"—? Oh, yes, it was. Regardless of the owner, there shouldn't be a problem with the belongings. We were really cutting it close with the number of dragon carriages, so we couldn't afford to leave it unused."

"The luggage that the merchants had in their dragon carriages was unloaded in the village, and instead, the residents were put on board for evacuation… Is that correct?"

Subaru replied, still puzzled, to Otto's insistence on details. Otto then put a hand to his chin and, with a gesture of certainty, closed his eyes, saying, "Just as I thought." A short silence followed, and as Subaru grew impatient, wondering what it was,

"Among the luggage that was supposed to have been unloaded from the dragon carriage, something that should be there is missing."

"Something that should be there… meaning?"

Subaru's eyes scanned the scene as he recalled the merchants' various loads stored in the village warehouse. Many of them had originally intended to deal in iron products in the capital, so most of their goods were swords, armor, and other weapons and protective gear. The only oddity was Otto's oil, which they had protected last.

"What about it?"

"I told you I rushed here to get ahead of everyone, didn't I? That means I heard about the profitable deal in the Mathers territory at the same place everyone else did. Of course, I also had contact with Mr Ketty the day before yesterday. At that time, something that Mr Ketty was supposed to have loaded in his dragon carriage isn't among the luggage."

"Luggage that was supposed to be loaded…?"

Subaru realized, from Otto's tone, that the situation was taking an ominous turn. To confirm Subaru's apprehension, Otto slightly lowered his chin and said,

"—A large quantity of fire magic stones. Enough to blow up seven or eight dragon carriages without a trace, those are missing."

“Ketty’s dragon carriage, the one belonging to the deceased, is being used for Emilia’s evacuation group.”

Subaru’s brain cells, after hearing Otto’s story and searching his memory, came to that conclusion. For the dragon carriages that had lost their original drivers, one person from the subjugation force was chosen to take on the role of driver for each. He didn’t remember which specific carriage it was, but Wilhelm had also been assigned that role, and the Sword Demon was certainly riding in one of those carriages.

“Is it true that it was loaded with magic stones? Could they have been unloaded along the way?”

“Would cultists, who intended to ambush the villagers and Lady Emilia during their evacuation in an emergency, do such a thing? Subaru, optimism and wishful thinking are different things.”

“You’re making a perfectly valid point at this moment… No, I get it. It’s my fault.”

Julius, narrowing his eyes, admonished Subaru, whose lips trembled with impatience. Subaru, running a hand through his hair, apologized honestly and then asked Otto for more details.

“There are no magic stones in the warehouse. I checked, and that’s for sure. Did you see the actual items in the dragon carriage before you came here, Otto?”

“Unfortunately, yes, clearly. They were cheap ones, not even fist-sized, but there was a full sack of them. I think it’s enough to achieve their objective if they were all crushed at once.”

However, the existence of such a sack had not been confirmed. Subaru and Julius had only decided to reuse the suspicious dragon carriages that the Witch Cultists had been using precisely because they had ensured their safety.

“We confirmed that no magic formulas were embedded… but we never considered the possibility of simply placing magic stones directly in the carriage itself. It's my oversight, I apologize."

"It's not your fault. I should have noticed."

Shaking his head at Julius's apology, Subaru bit his lip at his own lapse. In a world where magic was commonplace, if Julius, a spirit user, focused on magical methods, then Subaru should have been the one to suspect physical methods. As a result of his oversight, Subaru was forced to realize that the situation he thought he had overcome had once again run aground.

"The Witch Cultists' attack won't be a problem if Wilhelm-san is there. In terms of sheer power, there shouldn't be anyone who can get past him. But a booby trap is a different story. With something like this, there's nothing you can do if you don't notice it."

"Of course, it's also possible it's a wild goose chase. We're just suspecting it, and in reality, the magic stones were distributed among the cultists. There are no explosives rigged in the dragon carriages… That's also a possibility."

Otto's words were probably not meant to console Subaru's impatience. He was presenting a possibility for Subaru to deny. Playing into that expectation, Subaru shook his head and said, "No."

"We've body-checked the prisoners and the confirmed dead. We haven't found any magic stones, or even a Gospel… The magic stones are definitely in the dragon carriages."

Such a level of malicious obsession, Petelgeuse would certainly pull it off. In fact, Subaru knew that Petelgeuse had once blown up a dragon carriage with his own body. At that time, he had assumed the explosives were rigged to Petelgeuse's body, but…

"It's not impossible for him to have rigged similar devices on the cultists, or the dragon carriages…! Ferris! Can you fly a dragon carriage now and catch up to the evacuation group heading toward the Royal Capital?!"

"It's pretty tough, nya? The Royal Capital group left about an hour and a half ago… and their goal is to evacuate without being found, so they probably won't be flying at top speed."

Originally, the 'Sanctuary Group', whose base couldn't be exposed, and the 'Royal Capital Group', who didn't know that the threat of the fog had disappeared, had different levels of stealth requirements. The Sanctuary Group prioritized not being found, but the Royal Capital Group focused on getting through the highway quickly. There were considerable problems even with just catching up to them.

"Again… Is it happening again? After all this, I'm going to…!"

Would he have to face his loved ones' fates being decided in a place beyond his control once more? Subaru was about to be overwhelmed again by the feeling of his own powerlessness, which he had experienced before. But as he gritted his teeth against the approaching despair,

"May I say something, Mr Natsuki?"

Otto, interjecting in the conversation with a raised hand, had a serious look in his normally gentle eyes. Subaru recognized the change in his demeanor. It wasn't in this world, but in his previous one, during their true first meeting—Otto, who was in a drunken stupor from heavy drinking, had made the same face during their conversation, right before a negotiation.

In other words, he now…

"You're saying you have something you can trade with me right now, Otto?"

"I don't dislike someone who catches on quickly. —Mr Natsuki, I'm currently on the verge of ruin. The cargo I was carrying, I don't know if I'll be able to sell it for next to nothing after missing the timing. I gambled on this profitable venture for a big comeback, but because of my greed, I missed the crucial moment, a huge disaster. They say being alive is a profit, but I'm not in a position to laugh about it."

Otto's situation sounded miserable, more comical than tragic, but Subaru had no time to dwell on it now. He nodded, silently urging him to continue. Otto took a small breath, blinked once, and then looked up again.

"Let's make a deal. If you agree to it, I promise to use my utmost effort to get you to your destination—to catch up with the dragon carriage that went ahead."

"You can catch up… right? How, if we leave now?!"

"I'd like you to give me your assurance before I explain that. That you'll agree to the deal. What I'm offering is something quite significant to me, too. I can't cooperate easily. Even if I were threatened."

"I won't resort to violence. If there's a way, tell me. Whatever conditions you set, if I can do it, I'll do anything."

Grabbing Otto's shoulders, Subaru pressed him for the conditions he was about to state. He had already repeated this five times, and now, Subaru was confident that he had achieved the most complete results ever. Compared to throwing all those results away, how much happier would it be to kick aside despair and make one last push?

At Subaru's plea, Otto stopped breathing for a moment. For him, too, the conditions he was about to offer were a make-or-break moment that could determine the course of his future. He could see a flood of complex emotions passing through his eyes with immense speed in an instant. Overcoming those conflicts, Otto stated his conditions. They were:

"I want Mr Natsuki, as someone affiliated with the Margrave Mathers, to arrange an opportunity for me to meet with Lord Mathers. If possible, I'd also appreciate it if you'd purchase the oil from my cargo as a reward for my efforts this time. …At my asking price, how about it?"

Narrowing his eyes, Otto put on a merchant's face and spoke as if testing Subaru. It was a basic negotiation tactic: to state the maximum demand first and then try to extract concessions from there. Otto himself probably didn't believe for a moment that Subaru would accept such an exorbitant price. However, he also saw that it was possible to extract significant concessions from Subaru given the urgent situation. There was no need for guilt or remorse in exploiting the situation. A merchant on the brink of ruin would be foolish to miss a once-in-a-lifetime opportunity.

With that resolve, Otto waited for Subaru's next words. And in front of him, Subaru swallowed and said,

"Are you serious, that's all you want again?! Alright, I'll buy anything, and if you want to meet that weirdo, I'll let you meet him as much as you want. The deal's done!"

"Huh? What's that? Scary."

A reflection of his previous iteration—in a way Otto himself couldn't possibly know, the negotiation between Subaru and him once again resulted in Otto's victory. Whether he would be happy about this "win by default" was another story.

"I'm sending Ia with you. If it turns out there are magic stones hidden in the dragon carriage, Ia should be able to sense them. Make good use of her."

With those words, Julius entrusted one of the semi-spirits he had contracted with to Subaru. The spirit, glowing with a faint red light, circled above Subaru's head, following Julius's instructions. Eventually, as if satisfied, it landed on top of Subaru's head. It settled there as if it had found its permanent spot. Subaru's scalp felt gradually warm.

"Hey, isn't there a risk of me going bald with this? My biggest life goal is to absolutely avoid being bald and fat."

"Ia won't materialize for very long. If she senses your mana flow, she'll meld in quietly… See, she's already invisible."

Julius laughed off Subaru's concern and pointed, and indeed, the warmth on his head was gone. However, even though she was invisible, he could still feel her presence nearby. Subaru nodded in understanding, wondering if this was what it felt like to be accompanied by a spirit.

“Seriously, are you sure about entrusting a spirit to me?”

“I don’t want to regret letting you go when you have no knowledge of spirits. Ideally, I’d want to go with you, but…”

Julius trailed off, a look of frustration on his handsome face. Subaru understood the source of his vexation. It was the person sitting forcibly on the ground next to him, placing a hand glowing with blue light on his body.

“Don’t say unreasonable things when you’re covered in so many injuries. I can tell even if you’re trying to act tough. Besides, your mana is almost completely depleted. You used too many powerful spells, didn’t you?”

“I had assistance from the Buds. I used very little of my own magical power. Though, seeing my state like this, I truly feel I have no talent.”

“That’s just you being sarcastic. Ugh, anyway, are you sure about this?”

Feeling the spirit’s presence beside him, Subaru made one last confirmation with Julius, who was focused on healing. Julius lowered his chin and replied simply, “Yes.”

“I’m lending my beloved child to a friend. I’d like you to treat her with appropriate care, too.”

“Can you please stop calling me ‘friend’ so casually to my face? I let it slide earlier because of the situation, but I’d like to properly discuss that later.”

Subaru replied brusquely to the irksome address. Julius simply met his words with a smile, and an uncomfortable Subaru, trying to deflect, looked at Ferris.

“I’m leaving the others’ treatment to you. Both Julius and those little cat siblings.”

“Aye, aye, Subaru-kyun, be careful, nya. If Subaru-kyun dies, Lady Crusch will surely be disappointed… you know.”

The lowered tone at the end of his remark was a slight concern, but in Ferris’s case, he always had that pleasure-seeking side that enjoyed unsettling Subaru. Ignoring it for the most part and gratefully accepting the important part of his message, Subaru waved to the two and headed for the village entrance. Patrasche and Otto, who was connecting his ground dragon to a dragon carriage, were waiting there.

“Well then, shall we go, Mr Natsuki?”

“Yeah, I’m counting on you for directions and everything else, Otto.”

Climbing into the driver’s seat and sitting next to Otto, Subaru looked forward. Beside Otto’s imposing ground dragon, which was his pride, stood Patrasche with her jet-black body. There was a considerable size difference between them, and Subaru felt some apprehension about them pulling the carriage together, but…

“The Divine Protection of Wind Protection works on ground dragons, so there’s no problem even with two creatures of different sizes pulling together. Both are females, and from what I ‘heard,’ their relationship doesn’t seem to be bad.”

Perhaps sensing Subaru’s question from his expression, Otto, who was now in the driver’s seat, said that as he gripped the reins. Subaru tilted his head, finding the word “heard” that Otto used rather odd.

“What’s wrong?”

“No, I was just thinking that the Divine Protections in this world are incredible. I guess I should think of them as a kind of talent, but there’s just too much that’s beyond my common sense.”

“You talk about the Divine Protections in this world as if they’re someone else's problem, Mr Natsuki. Those with Divine Protections have their own struggles, you know. Especially my Divine Protection of the Soul of Language; I couldn't control it when I was little."

Otto chuckled in response to Subaru's admiration and spoke of his own Divine Protection.

Otto's Divine Protection of the Soul of Language. Its disclosure and use were the terms of the deal Otto offered in exchange for his cooperation with Subaru. The effect of the Divine Protection of the Soul of Language was simple and clear: it allowed one to exchange "spirit words" with any opponent.

"Even being able to converse with animals, including ground dragons. That's why you could rush here by the shortest route to the Mathers territory."

"I pushed my ground dragon… Frufoo quite hard. I asked birds and insects about shortcuts and bad roads, anything, and I really went all out."

Apparently, he had traveled through what couldn't even be called roads and was the first to arrive in the Mathers territory. The result was being captured by the Witch Cult, as if to say, "Congratulations on winning first place"—it was hardly laughable.

Anyway, according to his Divine Protection,

"Catching up to Emilia-tan and the others who went ahead won't be difficult."

"No, it will be difficult, actually! It's just that there's a good possibility, and besides, cooperating was a condition of our deal just now, so whether it leads to a result or not, and whether the magic stones that might be rigged will explode, are all unknown…"

"Catching up to Emilia-tan and the others who went ahead won't be difficult—!"

"It's annoying when you say it with such a determined face!"

Otto shouted at Subaru’s repeated, overwhelming trust, but there was truly no time to dwell on it. Subaru erased the emotion from his face, took a small, long breath, and said,

“I’m counting on you, Otto. You’re my only hope.”

“…Seriously, that’s a killer line, damn it.”

As if moved by Subaru’s solemn words, Otto sighed with a resigned expression. Then he firmly gripped the reins and commanded the two ground dragons to start running. The carriage was pulled, and Patrasche and Frufoo powerfully pushed off the ground, beginning their pursuit of Emilia and the others.

“Oh, come on, I’ll do it! I’ll do it and make you owe me, and I’ll suck you dry to the bone—!”

Otto’s desperate shout, mixed with the Divine Protection of Wind Protection, echoed into the sky, audible only to Subaru.

5

Following the aforementioned events, Subaru and the others were now racing down the highway, chasing after Emilia’s group. The continuous stretches of rough terrain had been a nightmare, a parade of environments so challenging that, if he were to start recounting them, half a day would be filled with his grievances against Otto.

There were actively suicidal descents down near-vertical cliffs, and navigating dilapidated suspension bridges that looked like they’d collapse any second (and actually did, right after Subaru’s group crossed). He’d braced himself for Return by Death countless times during these life-threatening maneuvers.

However, all that hardship had paid off. Subaru and the others, having entered the halfway point of the Lifaus Highway, were making excellent time. This situation was a miracle, something they probably couldn’t replicate even if asked to perform the same insane sprint again.

“If I don’t convince myself of that, I’ll be too scared to touch

Patrasche ever again!”

Otto was one thing for making the dragon carriage go through such terrible roads, but it was Patrasche and the other dragon that had actually run through those deadly paths, obeying his commands through the reins. If this level of activity was possible depending on the handler, then it was understandable that Subaru felt anxious about how he’d interact with Patrasche in the future.

Anyway,

“Let’s cut through the woods on the left! It’s the shortest way to the Royal Capital!”

“Woods?! That doesn’t even look like a game trail! Are you really sure?!”

“…”

“Why are you silent, you?!”

Ignoring Subaru’s angry shouts, Otto maneuvered the dragon carriage toward the woods. Subaru, resigned to his fate, clasped his hands together, praying he wouldn’t hit any trees directly, and ducked his head in a defensive posture in the back of the carriage. The carriage bounced as it hit a tree root, and the sudden green in his vision confirmed they were in the woods. Entering a heavily obstructed area at top speed seemed like a suicide mission, but to Otto, who could literally communicate with the ground dragons, it seemed to be a routine maneuver. If he was the standard for merchants, then perhaps it was a profession that required more courage than one might think.

“—Mr. Natsuki!!”

As Subaru was lost in thought, Otto’s voice suddenly rang out. Startled by the urgency in his voice, Subaru scrambled toward the driver’s seat. When Subaru poked his head into the driver’s seat, Otto had his hand to his ear, looking around.

“What’s wrong? What happened?”

“The trees are noisy, or rather… the birds and insects are making a huge fuss, then they’re gone. And Fulfuu is getting scared too… Something, something’s coming!”

At Otto’s urgent warning, Subaru also held his breath and looked around. However, in a forest where trees covered his entire field of vision, his vigilance was useless. Otto, reading Subaru’s thoughts, nodded and said, “Understood.”

“I’ll veer sideways and get out of the forest immediately. Mr Natsuki, keep an eye on the rear—”

“…No, we don’t need to anymore.”

Subaru stopped Otto with a hand as he tried to change course and give instructions to the ground dragons. His face was turned backward, just as he had been about to guard the rear as Otto instructed, looking at the scenery being left behind by the carriage.

Trees were snapped and sent flying, and the forest died in succession from the brutal force. Destruction surged, the ground directly behind them ripped up, and “it” was heading straight for them, ignoring the surrounding damage.

“Drive faster, Otto. —Don’t let it catch us, no matter what!!”

“Mr Natsuki?!”

Stopping Otto as he turned to look back, Subaru rushed to the back of the carriage and roared at the approaching entity, his face contorted in undisguised fury.

“You—how persistent can you be, you bastard!!”

In Subaru’s line of sight, a vast, pitch-black shadow was writhing.

Extending black demonic hands as if oozing from a corpse, a mass of delusion that had long lost its human form —Petelgeuse’s remnant— was closing in on Subaru from behind.

Chapter 82:
The Gospel Called Love

1

—Horrific, ghastly, ominous.

As Subaru saw the presence looming behind him, these negative emotions flashed through his mind. That's how abnormal Petelgeuse's current form was.

The body, crushed under the rockfall, was half-destroyed. Its right half was mangled, bones exposed, and the scalp peeled back from its head, revealing alternating patches of red and white. Its right leg was missing below the shin, and its dangling limbs showed not the slightest hint of life.

It was a dead person. It was a corpse. The desperate struggle of a cadaver. It was the distorted spirit's final, desperate attempt to cling to life, forcefully possessing another's body and bringing it under its control.

Because—

"—My body! My flesh and my bodyyyy!"

"Don't you remember what a horrible time you had inside me…!"

As he spoke, "inside me" struck Subaru as an awfully worded phrase, even for himself. However Petelgeuse's stubborn persistence was, by far, even more astonishing.

The surrogate body, now a corpse, had ceased all vital functions. Petelgeuse—or rather, the spirit itself inhabiting the body—was using its 'Unseen Hands' on its own flesh, binding its limbs and forcing them to move. It couldn't even control the force precisely; with every movement, the bones of its limbs creaked, and its flesh was squeezed and torn apart.

If this self-destructive act continued, he risked losing the body he possessed and dissipating. But—

“Waiting for a time limit is too tough, isn’t it… Damn it!”

Subaru slammed his fist against the swaying edge of the carriage, grinding his teeth and spitting out his frustration.

To escape the forest, to flee the presence behind them, Patrasche and the others pulling the dragon carriage increased their speed further. With the divine protection of ‘Wind Evasion,’ their speed was truly like the wind itself. However, Petelgeuse, destroying the forest in pursuit, outpaced them.

It was like the last glimmer of life; just as a candle flame burns brightest before flickering out, a malevolent black flame swayed violently.

Pitch-black demonic hands bound its limbs, and a hand plunged into its chest likely served as a substitute for its stopped heart. As an extension of its collapsing body, it stretched along the ground, now merely a mass of shadows—a monster born of obsession and twisted life force.

“Is this a spirit…? Where’s the spirit…? Shouldn’t it be something more sacred?”

The image of a spirit in Subaru’s mind should be brighter, grander, adorned with a fleeting beauty that made one hesitate to touch it.

Yet, what was this? This dim, obsessive, distorted, and ugly existence that filled him with unbearable revulsion just by looking at it, utterly devoid of any grace.

“I really get now how gentle Puck and the quasi-spirits look in comparison.”

“—Mr Natsuki! What’s behind us?!”

Subaru’s annoyed click of his tongue coincided with Otto’s shout. Unable to see directly behind him from the driver’s seat, the nightmare closing in remained out of his sight.

Perhaps, for him, that was a blessing. Waving his hand to stop Otto from leaning out to look back, Subaru raised his voice, determined not to let him see what was behind them.

“Just a big, black beast chasing us. You probably stepped on its tail somewhere you don’t know about. It’s screaming really loud and its face is scary, so it’s best not to look.”

“Are you really trying not to show me?! You’re just saying things that make me obviously curious, though?!”

“Just drive! If I get bitten, you’re next!!”

“Whoa—that’s scary!”

Subaru spurred on Otto, who was gripping the reins, urging him to hasten their pace. But even with Otto’s newfound motivation, it was the two ground dragons at the end of his reins that were running. They were already at full speed and couldn’t be pushed any faster.

Which meant—

“Stopping you, that’s my role, then. My big moment in the final act… How many ‘final acts’ are you gonna make me do?! What part of you is ‘Sloth,’ you useless busybody!!”

“Witch… Satella…! Lo-Lo-Lo-Love me, love, love, love… love me, love, give me love, with love, be loved, I love, love, lo-lo-lo-lo-lo-lo-lo-lo-lo-lo-lo-lo-lo-lo-love, LOOOOOOOOOOOOVVVVVVVEEEEEEEEEEEE!!”

“You and I aren’t loved by anyone! What kind of rom-com tries to crush the heart of the one they love?! I’m done with this!”

Petelgeuse lifted his face, his shriek echoing within a visage that was nothing but a death mask.

He was a dying man, truly betrayed, yet still screaming his unwavering ‘love’ for the Witch. For the first time, Subaru found himself pitying him.

V!c.ll20

His cries for a body, his screams for the Witch's 'love'—behind them lay the yearning to be loved, the insatiable thirst of a spirit rarely perceived due to its bodiless nature, endlessly gnawing at his existence.

—Of course, that doesn't excuse his actions.

"I don't have special moves or super magic. But I'm your opponent. I won't let you get past me, and I'll absolutely not let you meet the person ahead of me…!"

"Mr Natsuki, you really think that of me…!"

"Can you just shut up for a bit?! I'm trying to look cool right now!"

Subaru snapped back at Otto, who seemed to be either teasing or serious, then turned to face Petelgeuse, who was closing in.

Thanks to Julius's interception, the total number of usable 'Unseen Hands' had decreased. Also, since some were being used for his own life support, the number of demonic hands he could use to attack, at a glance, was—seven, the same as at the beginning.

Slowly, Petelgeuse dragged his body forward, clawing at the ground. The raised demonic hand snapped a branch and slammed down from above, cracking the ground. Its fingertips grazed the back of the cargo bed, gouging out the edge regardless of its strength.

If the next strike landed squarely in the middle of the cargo bed, the dragon carriage would surely overturn. Subaru would be thrown off, swallowed by Petelgeuse, and this time, devoured headfirst.

"If he realizes he can't possess my body, then a mutual destruction plan is definitely what he'll go for."

"Mr Natsuki, we're clearing the forest—!"

Simultaneously with Otto's voice, the green of the forest abruptly cleared.

Bursting out of the trees, the carriage accelerated down a grassy slope, sliding as it fell. Petelgeuse, tearing at the earth in pursuit, absorbed fallen trees and rocks into his shadowy mass, becoming a distorted embodiment of evil as he ascended the slope.

—They were out of the forest and onto the main road. Soon, they would catch up with Emilia and the others.

He couldn't let Petelgeuse reach them, or Emilia. Even without knowing the specifics of the Archbishops' 'trials', a tragedy was inevitable.

Therefore, for that reason, then—

"We're out of the forest. —No holding back now!"

"Love! Loving! Only love is everything—!!"

Petelgeuse laughed, shedding tears of blood, his mouth open with missing teeth.

Listening to that piercing voice, Subaru opened a part of the cargo from the back of the carriage. He pulled out something heavy, and the pungent smell that poured out stung his nose.

Then, hugging it, he pointed a finger at the blood-stained face.

"—Burn to ashes, Petelgeuse."

"—!!"

The 'Unseen Hand' stretched upwards, drawing back as if to unleash a destructive waterfall from the sky. However Subaru's movements were faster than its descent.

Raising the pot with both arms, he flashed a wicked grin—and hurled the oil pot.

The black demonic hand descended.

To crush the dragon carriage along with the cargo bed and blow Subaru to pieces.

He straightened his arm and held his index finger like a gun.

A red glow appeared at its tip—a ‘Red’ quasi-spirit, borrowed from Julius, dwelled there.

“Lend me your strength, Julius Juukulius.”

“Yooouuuu—!”

Petelgeuse screamed, an arm descending from directly above. Its appearance was horrendous, like an unspeakable evil god.

His fingertips tingled, burning. The spirit lending him power was named ‘Ia’. So,

“Ia! Ia! Hastur—!!”

An imperfect incantation, an imperfect caster, and an uncontracted quasi-spirit.

A combination of imperfections, yet an act unified by a single will.

To interfere with the world, a single spark was all that was needed.

Mana, on the verge of depletion, interfered with the atmosphere through the spirit’s power, and bursting sparks burned the air, rushing towards Petelgeuse. The gruesome face, smeared with blood and oil, opened wide—

“—Aaaaaaaah!!”

—In that instant, Subaru’s vision was enveloped by a brilliant, expanding red.

Petelgeuse’s entire body, fueled by the oil he’d been doused in, burst into a furious blaze. His body scorched by the undulating flames, Petelgeuse’s inarticulate scream tore through the air.

For Subaru, who had only bare-handed physical attacks and no effective means against a spirit like Petelgeuse, this was the biggest and last blow he could deliver.

At worst, he had considered the possibility that magic-less flames would be ineffective against a spirit, but judging from Petelgeuse's statements about needing a body, he concluded that attacking his near-dead physical form wouldn't be useless.

Seeing him writhe in agony and heat, his dying screams erupting, it seemed his judgment wasn't mistaken.

Without telling Otto, who thought he had unloaded the cargo in the village, one of the oil pots he had brought for some unknown purpose proved useful here. If it was this effective, he thought he should have pilfered two or three more, but he didn't have time for such regrets.

Petelgeuse's raised the 'Unseen Hand', shaking with excruciating pain, swung down like a reaper's scythe.

Petelgeuse, shaking his head as his vision was burned by the flames, wasn't aiming precisely.

Subaru instinctively rolled sideways, making an emergency dodge to the unstable edge of the cargo bed—immediately after, the arm slammed down terrifyingly close, grazing the sole of Subaru's foot.

The wooden cargo bed warped under the impact, the section where the demonic hand struck buckling easily like paper. With half his body showered in splintered wood from the C-shaped gouge in the cargo bed, Subaru gritted his teeth and dragged his right foot deeper into the cargo bed.

"—Ow! Ah, gah!"

His calf was deeply gouged by the grazing fingertips, and profuse bleeding made him break out in a cold sweat. His vision flickered with the pain of flesh being torn and the sensation of blood draining away. He instinctively pressed his palm against it to staunch the bleeding, but without a tourniquet, it was futile.

And above all,

"Give it to me, hand it over, offer it up…"

Burning black fingertips reached for the widely swaying edge of the dragon carriage.

Then, slowly, he raised his upper body, forcibly dragged his torn lower half, and with a sickening squelching sound, the jet-black mass fell onto the cargo bed.

Squirming demonic hands shaped his flabby flesh, and the slender, bone-protruding body of his original host had lost its form. 'Unseen Hands' erupted from his back and sides, and aside from his severed right arm, he now sported four additional demonic hands alongside his original left, giving him a malicious appearance.

He dragged his pulpy lower body, dead from the knees down, with arms protruding from mid-thigh acting as substitutes for his lost legs.

His face, hanging limply, showed only whites of his eyes, and even his tears of blood were half-carbonized by the flames. His entire body was still being licked by tongues of flame, and only the tattered remains of his priestly robes were barely discernible, which only highlighted his ugliness.

A gruesome monster, openly proclaiming its human skin disguise.

"You're in a terrible state, you bastard… Though I'm not one to talk."

Subaru, wincing with pain that threatened to contort his face, stood up, feigning toughness. His leg was still bleeding, so he didn't have much time. However, the same was true for his opponent.

Petelgeuse was already rotting away, and now, drenched in flames, he was on the verge of burning to ashes. He didn't want a prolonged battle either. The confrontation should be over in an instant.

He didn't have many cards left to play. In fact, he had very few.

All Subaru could do was the incomplete magic Shamak, and low-level fire magic borrowed from a quasi-spirit. Beyond that, it was just fighting bare-handed, ignoring the pain.

The options were so few it was almost laughable, but he had to use one of them to break through this situation. He had exhausted all his strategies. All that was left was cunning.

“Myyy, bodyyy, won’t disappear… I cannot, cannot disappear…”

“That’s why! I told you you’d just get hurt if you entered my body! What about the Witch? You and I are just being tossed around!”

Dragging himself forward, Petelgeuse stumbled over his words, still seeking Subaru’s body. Subaru roared back at his persistent figure, trying to break the madman’s spirit.

However, Petelgeuse’s reaction to the roar was different this time:

“—Witch, Satella.”

He suddenly muttered in a clear voice, and Petelgeuse raised his face.

Half-collapsed, his face missing a cheek and revealing its interior, it closely resembled an anatomical model he had seen in school. With the inside of his skin exposed, Petelgeuse’s inverted eyes returned.

His unfocused eyes wavered, gradually forming an image of Subaru.

“You are, dangerous… Dan-Dangerous, dan-dangerous, dan-dan-danger-danger-danger-danger-danger-danger-danger-dan-dangerous!”

“Huh—?!”

“Receiving favor, receiving, having received it. Denying love, and me, me me me, pushing me, pushing me to this extent, death death death death death death death death death death death death hee —”

“—!”

Petelgeuse’s head bobbed erratically, spouting incoherent words. Suddenly, an arm shot out from his body towards Subaru, grazing his shoulder and side and piercing the wall behind him. —It wasn’t so fast that it was invisible. He just couldn't react because there was no wind-up.

The current Petelgeuse's thoughts were so chaotic that his movements could no longer be gauged by normal senses. He always had the danger of doing something unpredictable the next moment, but when his movements reached a dimension where they couldn't be anticipated, Subaru was helpless.

The 'Unseen Hands' were still stretched out, sandwiching Subaru, forming a straight path between the two facing each other at the front and back of the cargo bed.

If he just slowly closed the distance, Subaru would be swallowed without being able to resist.

Before, when his instincts —his desire for a body— were rushing ahead, he probably would have attacked Subaru more primally. This situation, born from regaining some intellect after hearing the Witch's name, was simply worse.

"To the Witch, the Witch, Satella, Satella, loved, love, love! I love her! I am loved! Satella, you, you made me, me me me me! I haven't forgotten for a moment, I haven't forgotten… Even if you forget, I, haven't forgotten!"

Tears flowed. Not tears of blood, but real tears.

Truly, for the first time at this point, Petelgeuse screamed words of sanity.

Words, will, dragged Petelgeuse from the insane darkness back to reality. Petelgeuse's murky eyes held a clear will as he glared at Subaru,

"You are dangerous! Eventually, you will be a threat to the Witch Cult! Before that! Before you, before you lay a hand on Satella! Here! Right here! By my hand! With my diligence! To break away from my 'Sloth' and make my love true… you will die!!"

His upper body swayed violently back and forth, and copious blood gushed from Petelgeuse's entire body. It was rupturing his flesh from within, a sign that the accumulated energy of his ‘Unseen Hands’ was about to burst out. Petelgeuse was now less interested in seizing Subaru’s body than in killing Subaru to leave no worries for the Witch he worshipped.

It was a deliberate, intelligent thought, separating him from a beast.

“If you had stayed a monster, I would’ve lost.”

Subaru drew his hand from his pocket, and Petelgeuse’s eyes widened at what he held.

Subaru felt a pang in his heart at his reaction. He turned away, refusing to acknowledge the fleeting sentiment, and swung his arm wide.

From the end of his arm, swung straight up, a black-bound book — the Gospel— was thrown.

“Ah… Satella.”

The word that escaped Petelgeuse’s lips was a low, quiet sound, exactly like someone calling a deeply beloved person in comfort.

Looking up at the sky, Petelgeuse raised his fleshy arms heavenward, and the jet-black demonic hands followed, shooting up to aim for the Gospel suspended in mid-air. His fingertips grazed the cover, and the moment he grasped it, it happened.

The book, thrown high above the cargo bed, fluttered in the wind, on the verge of being blown away by its momentum. That meant it was directly experiencing the resistance of the wind and momentum, and the act of reaching for the Gospel in that state was —

“—?!”

Petelgeuse’s body, which had been looking up, was violently buffeted by the strong wind and tilted sharply backward. His dragging feet shattered the gouged floorboards, and half his body sank as if thrown out.

This phenomenon occurred because his fingertips escaped the effective range of the ‘Windbreak’ divine protection, a natural ability of ground dragons that even affects the running dragon carriage.

Once, in a dragon carriage heading to the royal capital, Subaru had experienced the same situation after a prank.

In the cargo bed of a dragon carriage without a windbreak, without the divine protection, one would directly experience the full force of the wind pressure and shaking at top speed, making it impossible to maintain one’s posture.

“—Oh, ohhhhh!!”

The moment Petelgeuse tilted sharply, Subaru roared and lunged forward.

He forgot the pain in his gouged foot and torn shoulder, springing out as if catapulted. He had no grand techniques to determine victory or defeat. Therefore, he couldn’t afford to miss the decisive moment.

This was the only instinct Subaru had gained from repeatedly traversing the boundary between life and death.

Running, Petelgeuse raised his face towards the approaching Subaru and opened his mouth, shouting something. Subaru heard nothing. He just frantically lowered his stance, plunging headfirst towards Petelgeuse’s chest.

An ‘Unseen Hand’ was launched. The speed of the outstretched palm was slow, even appearing to stagnate due to his extreme concentration.

He tilted his head. His body wouldn’t move as he wished. The palm would avoid a direct hit, but it was in a position that would surely graze his cheek and neck. He knew the pain was coming. There was a pressure that made him want to close his eyes.

In such a situation, he couldn’t help but remember something. A memory of constant, excruciating pain. It was a bygone era, and he had always thought of it as a meaningless time, but—

"—Wilhelm-san taught me two things."

The palm arrived. The surface of his tilted neck, and parts of his cheek and ear, exploded with a pain like being pressed by burning iron. His thoughts ignited with pain, and his vision began to flash white.

He dodged it. He took a breath. It wasn't over yet.

"That I have absolutely no talent for swordsmanship, and…"

His thoughts burned with pain, then relaxed with relief. As these two sensations fought to seize his consciousness, Subaru looked straight ahead.

Beyond the dodged palm, another palm aimed directly for Subaru's face this time—

"—To have the guts not to close my eyes when I get punched!!"

He shouted, lowering his head and ducking. The pain of the palm grazing the back of his neck, yet he gritted his teeth. Ahead, Petelgeuse's eyes widened in astonishment. Inside his no-longer-human body, only his face, with its exposed bones and muscle fibers, seemed to retain a hint of humanity.

"—!"

A full-swing punch slammed into his face, delivering a fatal blow to Petelgeuse's already tilting body—the impact caused his receding body to stumble heavily on the broken floor, and he was thrown out of the dragon carriage. And then,

"Ohhhhhhhhhhhhhhhhhhh—"

Hanging upside down, Petelgeuse was dragged by the dragon carriage. A part of his priestly robe snagged on the damaged edge of the cargo bed, keeping his body tethered to the carriage while being scraped along the ground.

Blood scattered, flesh burst, and even the ‘Unseen Hands’ that formed his body peeled away, as Petelgeuse’s existence disintegrated. Still, Petelgeuse, upside down, lifted his collapsing face and glared at Subaru on the cargo bed,

“End, end, unending, not ending, not ended, is, it, not?!”

“—No, it’s over now.”

Looking down at the incredibly tenacious Petelgeuse, Subaru suddenly noticed something in the corner of the cargo bed—the Gospel, which Petelgeuse had reached for and surely grasped, had fallen there.

He picked it up and flipped through the pages. In the latter half, he encountered blank pages.

“Gospel, that, that is… it shows me the future, affirms my actions, tells me how to repay my love, my love is… ah!”

“So you were acting according to this? —Then,”

Petelgeuse moved his shoulder as if reaching for the Gospel. But his right arm was already gone, and his left arm, which had been about to fall off, had lost everything from the upper arm down due to friction with the ground. Losing all his limbs, even his ‘Unseen Hands’, Petelgeuse, on the verge of fading away, clung to the Gospel one last time.

Subaru held open the blank page for him to see, scooped up the blood flowing from his own neck with a finger, and then forcefully pressed it onto the Gospel, marking it with crimson.

“Here, you ‘end’—!”

The word “End” was boldly etched in red characters on the blank, open page.

Seeing it, Petelgeuse’s eyes widened and his lips trembled. The wave of emotions spreading through his eyes was too complex for Subaru to decipher anymore.

Before that surge of passion could be put into words, the end arrived.

The dragon carriage bounced, and the hem of Petelgeuse's robe, caught on the cargo bed, came loose. This caused Petelgeuse's body to fall to the ground, and his torn, extended robe, before hitting the earth—got caught in the spinning wheel of the dragon carriage.

Dragged by the entangled robe, Petelgeuse's light body, devoid of blood and limbs, was pulled closer to the wheel. The end was in sight. The sound of tearing fabric mingled with the splattering of blood, and in his final moments, Petelgeuse looked up at Subaru and screamed.

"—Natsuki Subaru—!!"

A shriek echoed, transforming directly into a death throe.

Still screaming Subaru's name, Petelgeuse's body, along with his scream, was swallowed by the wheel, caught and crushed, blood and fragments of flesh scattering as his life ended.

His physical body disappeared, and his existence as a spirit, which had resided within it, also dispersed, swept away in that spectacular demise.

At the very last, one of the 'Unseen Hands' stretched out before Subaru.

Its palm stopped just short of gripping Subaru's face, then vanished, crumbling away from its fingertips. This truly signified the complete disappearance of Petelgeuse Romanee-Conti.

This time, just sleep, for good… Petelgeuse.

Convinced it was over, Subaru collapsed onto the cargo bed.

Immediately, the pain he had ignored until now resurfaced, and Subaru was half-crying from the pain—no, he was rolling around in tears.

"It hurts, this is bad, I'm gonna die, I'm really gonna die, this hurts, this is bad, this is bad…!”

The tears wouldn’t stop. The pain wouldn’t stop either. His bleeding wounds throbbed, and that pain stimulated his entire body without mercy. So, the pain in his chest was just an extension of the pain from his wounds.

There was nothing to pity. The madman, the mad spirit Petelgeuse, had no redeeming qualities worthy of sympathy. He rampaged in his self-righteousness and then met his end.

Screaming of blind love, acting selfishly, and then rotting away alone.

No one needed to pity Petelgeuse’s fate.

—No one but Subaru had to feel that way.

“Nobody’s gonna understand you. You deserved to die. You deserved to kick the bucket. Nobody, nobody will ever forgive you. —So, I pity you, that’s all.”

A lonely monster, understood by no one, unable to give love to the one he sought it from.

Petelgeuse Romanee-Conti had truly vanished this time.

Leaving nothing behind in anyone’s heart or mind.

Only in Subaru’s chest, he drove a wedge of pity, truly, this time.

“Mr Natsuki, you’re covered in an insane amount of injuries, are you alright?”

“Of course I’m not alright! I cried my eyes out, I tell ya! It was the biggest bawl-fest since the anesthetic wore off while I was getting a cavity drilled. Right now, every single one of my wounds is singing a chorus of ‘It hurts! It hurts!’”

Subaru moved from the half-destroyed cargo bed to the driver’s seat, nervously stemming the bleeding from his wounds with the first-aid supplies Otto offered. Merchant journeys apparently come with their share of dangers, so it seems these medicines and tools are always kept on hand. He was certainly saved by Otto's thoroughness.

"I don't know how well otherworldly medicine will suit my body, though. This ointment, is it okay for sensitive skin? My skin is actually pretty delicate."

"It's medicine that activates mana in your body to speed up wound healing. You're so battered that it hurts just looking at you, so treat it quickly. Chop chop."

"Alright, alright. What's the deal, just a little joke… Ow! What is this?! Oh, this is bad! It hurts! It stings! Hey, it stings, I'm gonna dieeeeee!"

"Effective medicine is usually incredibly stingy. The pain will disappear soon. —Until then, you'll experience hellish agony."

Otto grinned, a look on his face like he'd finally gotten his revenge, as Subaru writhed in pain from the wound medicine. Subaru, wiping away fresh tears with his fingers, saw a devil in Otto's profile.

"So, how far behind are we?"

"We're not behind at all. In fact, thanks to both ground dragons doing their best in the face of an extraordinary crisis, we're doing quite well… Seriously, what was chasing us?"

"A sloth. Don't you know them? They hang upside down from tree branches, long arms and all."

Otto let out a small sigh at Subaru's playful answer, then seemed to give up on further questioning and glared ahead. Following his gaze, Subaru also looked forward, staring intently at the grasslands of the Lifaus Highway. The road stretched as far as the horizon, and he still couldn't see the shadow he sought, but—

"I'll definitely catch up. This time, I'll save you."

He mumbled, then slapped his cheek to renew his resolve. A sharp pain shot through his wound, but thanks to the medicine, the bleeding had already stopped, and he only ended up half-crying.

“Do you think we’ll make it?”

“We will make it!”

Otto’s words weren’t born of weakness, but rather a test of Subaru’s determination. It was likely meant to gauge Subaru’s resolve and, in turn, affirm his own course of action.

Subaru sniffled, twisted the corner of his mouth, and revealed a toothy grin.

“It’s about time Rem got tired of waiting for good news. A man’s gotta live up to expectations, right?”

“Is that the name of the girl you’re in love with?”

“That’s the name of the girl who’s in love with me!”

Otto looked momentarily dumbfounded, hearing Subaru say it so boldly, without self-consciousness or embarrassment. Then, a wide grin broke out on his face.

“Ah, well, you certainly can’t help but try to look cool for her, can you!”

Otto exclaimed cheerfully, and the reins were given a strong vertical shake, making a dry sound.

The two ground dragons neighed, and the speed of the dragon carriage, cutting through the wind, increased even further.

They raced, and raced, flying down the road as the dragon carriage sped on.

To find that precious thing, now far off in the distance beyond the horizon.

Time passed moment by moment. However Natsuki Subaru looked forward.

Natsuki Subaru simply, wholeheartedly, looked forward.

Chapter 83:
Comparing Answers

1

The dragon carriage picked up speed, the violent shaking and the roar of the wind filling the cargo hold.

“Whoa—!”

Emilia offered a brave smile, huddling with the children and enduring the jolts. Seeing her smile, Petra, whose eyes were clouded with anxiety, bit her lip and nodded. “Mm-hm.”

She’s a strong child, Emilia thought, feeling a surge of strength from the girl’s attitude. The other children, too, seemed to follow the elder girl’s lead, huddling together and biting back their fear.

Every one of these children was strong. Despite being on the verge of tears from anxiety and fear, not one succumbed to weakness; they stifled their cries, maintaining their composure. It was precisely the children’s strength before her that allowed Emilia to maintain her own composure, unwilling to show a pathetic display.

Normally, a moving dragon carriage should be protected by the ground dragon’s “Windbreak” divine protection. This divine protection also applies to carriages accompanied by ground dragons, designed to protect those under its care from external forces—such as wind resistance and vibrations. However, this particular dragon carriage was currently outside the “Windbreak” divine protection, and Emilia and the children inside were directly bearing the full brunt of its movement.

The reason the divine protection had ceased was simply because the dragon carriage had stopped once. The ground dragon’s “Windbreak” divine protection is contingent on the ground dragon’s continuous movement; it’s a divine protection that remains active as long as the dragon is running. However, once movement stops, the divine protection's effect ceases, and there's a drawback: it takes a while for it to reactivate.

Given this, it was common sense for a dragon carriage that had stopped to wait until the divine protection could reactivate before setting off again.

"—!"

However this dragon carriage, rushing ahead, couldn't afford even that brief stop. Emilia squeezed the warmth of the hand she held, confirming its presence, then lifted her face, listening intently to the situation outside the carriage, beyond the canopy.

The dragon carriage Emilia and the others were riding in was originally used for peddling, so naturally, the cargo area, excluding the driver's seat, wasn't designed for comfort. The cargo hold, protected by a canopy to prevent damage to its contents, had no small windows, and the only light source in the sunless interior was the faint glow of the brought-in lagmite ore. They had layered blankets on the floor to create makeshift seats, and everyone sat huddled together on them. Besides Emilia, there were seven children, and the driver was a young man from the village's youth association.

Their dragon carriage led a line of about four others carrying villagers and merchants, all escorted by knights riding ground dragons individually. Two hours had passed since they left the village under the guise of evacuation to protect themselves from bandits in the territory. The previously calm situation had drastically changed just about ten minutes ago.

To avoid provoking the group hiding in the forest, the convoy of dragon carriages prioritized stealth as much as possible when leaving the mansion and village. The total of twelve evacuation carriages eventually split into two groups: the Royal Capital group and the Sanctuary group, diverging paths with Ram and the others leading the Sanctuary group in just over an hour. For the next hour, even though they couldn't see outside, the carriages' journey along the road should have been relatively peaceful, but then,

"—Lady Emilia, may I have a moment?"

A light touch on her back informed Emilia that the dragon carriage had stopped. Before she could even question what that meant, a white-haired old man peered in, pulling back the rear canopy of the carriage.

The old man, who introduced himself as Wilhelm van Astrea, was a knight from the Crusch faction. Even though she was inexperienced, Emilia, as someone who knew battle, could instinctively feel the exceptional skill of this man, who wore a gentle smile. Because of this, Emilia couldn't help but feel an unnecessary tension when interacting with him. Even now, her response was a beat late when she saw the person who had called out to her.

Emilia took a moment to utter a short "Yes." The old gentleman, however, simply nodded slightly without dwelling on it.

"A slight concern has arisen. Therefore, I would like to take a few knights to 'survey' the area. If I may have your permission?"

"Survey…?"

"Yes, a 'survey.' It won't take much time. We intend to catch up and rejoin you immediately. Is that acceptable?"

Wilhelm's deferential tone, accompanied by a bow, made Emilia thoughtful. She sensed an oddness in the old man's word "survey" and quickly realized it was out of consideration for the children around her. Wilhelm chose to let Emilia and the others, his protection targets, go on ahead without using direct words. If he were to take forces to deal with this "concern," it meant…

"Am I… not needed?"

She couldn't help but voice the question, even though she knew it was rude given his consideration. Hearing Emilia's words, Wilhelm narrowed his eyes. It was the kind of reaction he had anticipated. However,

"Lady Emilia, please continue evacuating by carriage. I entrust the children to you."

A faint smile touched Wilhelm's lips, and in his eyes, as he looked at Emilia, there was none of the negative emotion Emilia had expected. There was only a broad, loving glow, like that of an adult watching over a difficult child, which confused Emilia.

Without allowing her to pursue the reason for her confusion, Wilhelm withdrew his hand from the canopy and turned his back to her.

"Since we've stopped, the journey ahead will likely be quite bumpy. Please, do not let go of the children's hands."

"Oh…"

"It must be a master-servant bond, indeed. Your eyes are so much like his."

With that last, reflective murmur, Wilhelm's figure was obscured by the canopy and vanished. Emilia furrowed her brows, not understanding the meaning of his murmur, but the sensation of the dragon carriage starting up again quickly distracted her.

And so, the story returns to the present situation: thrown into a violent shaking and the roar of the wind, huddled together with the children.

Wilhelm had left the carriage convoy with several knights, leaving only two knights to guard the evacuation group. Emilia could tell that the villagers in the following carriages were experiencing the same jolts—that is, the same anxiety—as those in this leading carriage. She couldn't see outside, but she had a way of knowing:

"Hey, someone bumped into the old men and someone else in the back. It's a fight."

"Can you tell how many?"

"There are eight of us, and sixteen enemies… exactly double. But I don't think it'll be a problem, will it? That old man was seriously amazing."

Emilia responded to Puck, who was sending her jocular thoughts, with a nod of her chin. This was a telepathic conversation with Puck, who wasn't materialized, and Puck could grasp the situation outside to some extent through the mana filling the atmosphere. Through him, Emilia was learning about the external situation and trying to understand what was happening.

The presence of Puck, a high-ranking spirit, consumes a considerable amount of mana just by materializing. In combat, his mana consumption doubles, making it extremely difficult for Emilia to maintain his presence for extended periods. Therefore, given the pressing situation, Puck's form was currently sealed within the crystal stone, his vessel. This was to preserve enough power for him to act at full strength in an emergency.

"Well, it's also to prevent me from innocently appearing in front of the kids and being used as a toy, you know."

"You do have a look children would like, Puck, so if it could ease the minds of anxious children, that might not be a bad thing."

"You're thinking scary thoughts, my daughter. Anyway, that's what it's like outside."

Puck responded to Emilia's lighthearted remark—or rather, her lighthearted thought—and Emilia inwardly nodded, biting her lip at her own powerlessness. To Emilia, who had offered her assistance, Wilhelm had chosen to refuse, even though he understood her intentions. This didn't indicate her lack of ability, but rather, more accurately, a lack of trust. Even if Wilhelm was acting favorably, considering Emilia's position, he couldn't simply accept her proposal. Though they were allies, Emilia and their master would ultimately become political rivals. The difficulty of forming a purely friendly relationship between them had been, unexpectedly, made clear to her.

Now, that shackles of her position were utterly frustrating. She didn't possess the abilities befitting that position, nor could she wield authority. Both inside and out, she was known to be a mere ornament, and frankly, she didn't even flatter herself into thinking she was suitable. Because of such hindrances, her freedom of action was restricted, and even now, she couldn't help the children reaching out with trembling hands. In such a state, for what purpose was she even…

"—Subaru."

The moment she whispered the boy's name, Emilia realized her own incorrigibility. The shame of calling that name in this situation, and the foolishness of having thrown away her right to do so, made her feel as if her world had gone dark.

Her weakness and baseness: in a dire situation, she was clinging again to the boy she had abandoned. After having hurt him so terribly with her words, leaving an indelible wound, tearing at his heart, and pushing him away, how could she possibly call his name? If she had any right to call his name now, if there was any situation where she was permitted to call his name, it would be—

"Everyone's okay, don't worry! No matter what happens, miss will protect you all!"

—Only when she could move, having resolved to protect someone, just like that boy. At Emilia's call, the children, who had huddled close and held hands, looked up. Their eyes were filled with tears, and their lips, which had trembled with anxiety, were bitten tight. But upon seeing Emilia's violet eyes, those expressions vanished, and they nodded to each other, speaking in unison:

"We're, we're okay—!" "Miss, you shouldn't worry about us!" "W-We promised, so we're fine, and we'll never let go!"

The children clung to Emilia, their voices clearly a bluff. Emilia stiffened in surprise, never having experienced so many people clinging to her fingers, wrists, shoulders, and waist, feeling so much body heat. Yet, it wasn't an unpleasant sensation. Only, for some reason, their words had an indescribable oddness to them.

"Promise…? You promised someone? What did you promise?"

"Not to let go of the missus." "That if we don't stay with her, she'll do something reckless." "That someone needs to watch her, because they're worried about her."

Emilia was startled, and her face turned pale at the successive answers. While feeling a strange defiance towards those words, she bit her tongue, realizing she genuinely didn't know what she would have done without the children. Was this also Ram's instruction, perhaps? But she wondered if Ram even had that much time. Besides, the way they phrased it was like…

"…"

At that point, a strange premonition caused a faint pang in Emilia's chest. Once she noticed it, the pang accelerated its insistence, chipping away at Emilia's patience, making her eyes waver with confusion. Closing her lips as if in deep thought, Emilia then moistened them with her tongue. Her lips, drier than she'd realized, relaxed with the moisture, and with a sigh, she posed her question.

"Who said they were worried about me…?"

"Oh, no, that's…!"

Petra's expression changed, and she instantly tried to cut off the words. Her reddish-brown hair, shoulder-length, swayed as she clung to Emilia, trying to stop her, but it was too late.

"Subaru—!" "Subaru said it—!" "That the missus gets lonely, so he's worried—!" "Subaru… oh, was that not supposed to be said…?"

The children blurted out the name, vying for first, and when the last child realized her slip and covered her mouth, all of them had a knowing look. Petra covered her face with her palm, muttering "Oops," and Emilia blinked at the name that had been uttered so many times.

"Suba…ru…?"

She had a premonition. From the children's words, Emilia recalled his image. But a feeling of denial had rushed ahead; that couldn't be right. After all, Emilia had hurt him with terrible words and left him behind at the royal castle. There, where he most certainly wanted Emilia to reach out her hand, Emilia had withdrawn hers and turned her back. At the most crucial moment, she had rejected him, the one who most sought someone to cling to.

Why would his name come up now, at this moment when she resented her own powerlessness the most? That shouldn't be happening. That couldn't be happening.

Emilia's life had been devoid of expectations. If she hoped, she was betrayed; hopes quickly wore thin and lost their shine. Through numerous experiences, Emilia had come to accept this sad reality as inevitable. Thus, she instinctively feared holding expectations for those around her. Even when she wished to, fear took precedence, and she couldn't open her hands.

Being distanced, being abandoned—these were commonplace for her. Being approached, being needed—these were unthinkable for her. That's why she rejected Subaru, who acted so familiarly and seemed willing to abandon everything for her. She couldn't believe it. Not his actions, attitudes, or words, but her own heart's capacity to accept them. If she expected, and expected, and expected, and then what she had built up crumbled, Emilia would be overcome with a pain more severe than being cut.

It was this fear that made her refuse to continue facing Subaru. If she were to be pushed away eventually, it was better to push herself away first. Before anything decisive could accumulate between them and then collapse. Yet, why—

"Subaru, was he in the village? Did he come back?"

As the children fell into an awkward silence, only Emilia's stunned murmur escaped. The dragon carriage still hadn't stopped its furious dash, and the reason for it hadn't been shaken off either. She couldn't free the children from their anxiety, yet she couldn't move from her spot.

In the midst of such a situation, her heart was severely shaken by the name she had overheard. The children's silence, by itself, confirmed her current question.

If he —Subaru— had returned to the village and was involved in this evacuation, then everything made sense. Ram, who shouldn't have been able to leave the village, had strangely managed to communicate with the suppression force. The villagers, who should have been growing increasingly anxious and dissatisfied during those troubling days, had followed this evacuation plan without showing reluctance. Even the members of the suppression force, in a land they were visiting for the first time, couldn't have easily created such a situation without conflict with the local residents.

All these difficulties were now resolved by fitting in that one piece: the boy.

If Subaru had led the suppression force back, Ram would have approached negotiations with them without preconceptions. The villagers, who owed Subaru a great debt, would likely be willing to accept his proposal, and they wouldn't treat the suppression force he brought carelessly. More than anything, the stance of remaining in the village with the suppression force, drawing the threat to themselves to allow the villagers and Emilia to escape, was, upon reflection, so utterly him. Too much like him.

It was too much like the Natsuki Subaru Emilia knew.

"Why—"

The murmured words were tinged with pathos, and her violet eyes trembled faintly with emotional upheaval. If these actions were Subaru's, then they were far too consistent with his past actions. Even after she had hurt him so much, caused him so much pain, and made him so sad, why would Subaru still…

She didn't understand why he would try to save her. It was the question she had thrown at Subaru when he was at his lowest, both in mind and body, on the royal selection grounds, on the training ground. At that time, Subaru hadn't given Emilia an answer. The answer he gave made no sense, and the words he tried to rephrase were swallowed, never spoken, leading to their separation.

She posed the question, but no answer returned. So, even now, she remained without that answer. She had believed that ending without knowing was the right path for both of them.

"Why…!"

"That's not…!"

Emilia's choked words made Petra's face flush, and her lips twisted. Emilia gazed at the girl with a pleading look, as if the girl somehow knew the answer to her question. But before either of them could speak,

"—?!"

The dragon carriage swerved violently, throwing Emilia and the others inside around dramatically. Emilia instinctively grabbed the wall, and with her free hand, she hugged Petra beside her. Petra, in turn, hugged the boy next to her, and this chain continued, barely keeping everyone connected. However, before they could feel relief, the carriage continued to swerve. It was as if it was trying to escape something.

"Lia, someone's coming up behind us, really fast—!"

"—!!"

At Puck's warning, Emilia looked up and turned her face towards the rear. Beyond the canopy, which fluttered in the wind, offering glimpses of the outside—there was the cause of this swerving, the figure of something in pursuit.

Emilia instinctively tried to move, to counterattack. But her body, as she tried to stand, was held back by a light weight and couldn't move. She lowered her gaze and saw them: the children huddled close, looking up at her with earnest faces, determined not to let go of her clothes or hands.

"Don't let go!" "Don't leave—!" "Keep your promise!"

The children held Emilia tightly, refusing to let go. Faced with a restraint she could easily shake off, Emilia couldn't move. Petra looked up at her face, her tearful eyes wide.

"Are you going to make Subaru cry this time?!"

"—?!"

A shock ran through Emilia at that cry, and this time, she was truly frozen. The moment she stopped moving, the dragon carriage skidded sideways to a violent halt, and centrifugal force slammed into them. The sudden braking caused the weight to shift, and the light bodies of the children, still clinging to her, lifted and were thrown around. However, being violently thrown to the floor was avoided thanks to the blankets they had spread out. Swallowed by the impact, Emilia shook her head and looked up.

"What in the world…?"

"Lia! They're right behind us!"

Puck, who had materialized in the emergency, floated in the air, pointing behind them in the tilting carriage. Following his voice and movement, Emilia turned her head and instinctively shielded the children behind her, looking at the canopy. A vortex of magic began to rise around her, slowly chilling the small space within the dragon carriage. Then, a presence approached, and the canopy was pulled back. Emilia, about to begin an incantation, was stunned.

"How…?"

Breathing heavily, a boy climbed into the dragon carriage, his shoulders heaving. At his sight, in her confusion, Emilia's violet eyes trembled violently. Her lips quivered, and forgetting the situation, Emilia called out his name in a faint, weak voice.

"—Subaru."

She had called his name.

2

Looking back, Subaru thought, it was a terrible first meeting.

An hour after being summoned to another world, thrown into a situation where he literally didn't know left from right, or even right again, he was completely at a loss. He'd stumbled into an alley, encountered thugs who preyed on the weak like him, and was almost beaten to death, barely hours into his otherworldly trip.

Beaten black and blue, covered in dust and mud, on the verge of death, that's when Subaru encountered that silver gleam.

He remembered every single one of her words, her actions, her nobility from that moment.

And because he could never, ever, ever, ever forget it, Natsuki Subaru was still standing on two feet, alive in this world.

"Mr Natsuki, look—!"

The dragon carriage, carrying Subaru and speeding along the Lifaus Highway, cutting through Petelgeuse's relentless onslaught—Otto, who had been scanning the endless grassland, called out to Subaru in a high voice. Following his cry and gaze, Subaru saw a faint, shimmering shadow barely discernible on the distant horizon. Confirming its definite presence, clearly not an optical illusion, Subaru clenched his fist.

"There! Otto! Full speed ahead!"

"You don't have to tell me, I'm already going all out!"

The reins cracked, a dry sound echoing as the two ground dragons neighed. The black ground dragons stared straight ahead, and Subaru knew they were giving their all to fulfill his intention, standing on the pulling carriage.

Saved by that first encounter, then accompanying her on her search for a while. Even though Subaru was useless, she didn't abandon him, and though she must have been overwhelmed with her own troubles, she didn't give up on herself or Subaru. Subaru learned that she was stubborn, tried to act tough, was obstinate, and yet, kind.

He remembered walking beside her, feeling an uncharacteristic shyness and a pounding in his chest. And he remembered how those sweet feelings were ruined by his own unforgivable actions.

His belly ripped open, sinking into a pool of blood, the sensation of consciousness being snatched away by the burning heat of intense pain and the coldness of blood loss. Yet, her voice, and the moment her body was torn apart, were etched so strongly into his heart that he could never forget them, no matter what.

It was then that he swore. Subaru had indeed sworn.

“I will definitely—save you.”

He had worked tirelessly to keep that vow. Piling up deaths, carving open fate, somehow overcoming the suffering, Subaru had met her, saved her, and gained her smile. Subaru would never forget the deep emotions that moved him in that moment.

Ahead, the scene blurred by the ground dragons’ sprint began to take shape. It was a battlefield: a group in black fighting knights on ground dragons. Several corpses already lay on the ground, and darting around them with incredible speed was—

“—Wilhelm-san!!”

“Subaru-dono?!”

Wilhelm, who had just cut down a single Witch Cultist, cried out in surprise at Subaru’s call from the rushing dragon carriage. He shook the blood from his sword and looked at Subaru’s sudden appearance with a questioning face, but—

“Where’s Emilia?!”

Understanding the urgency in Subaru’s subsequent shout and expression, he immediately cast aside his doubts, pointing his sword further ahead in their direction of travel.

“Straight ahead! Towards the Great Tree!”

Subaru looked up, gazing further beyond the horizon. He realized the Lifaus Highway was already more than halfway to the Royal Capital side—they had reached the vicinity of Flugel’s Great Tree, where the decisive battle with the White Whale took place. Nodding, Subaru sped past Wilhelm and the struggling battleground without slowing down. He didn’t stop to ask about their safety. That would be an insult to their valiant efforts, and above all, Subaru had exchanged the necessary words at their parting.

Subaru had entrusted Emilia and the others to Wilhelm, and Wilhelm had responded, Leave it to me.

Therefore, there was no need for Subaru to stop here, nor for Wilhelm to ask Subaru many questions. Their gazes met for only an instant, and then Subaru's dragon carriage left Wilhelm behind.

The sudden appearance of the dragon carriage made the Witch Cultists pause, and several of them prepared to kick off the ground to pursue it. —However,

"Your opponent is me."

Two black-clad figures, who had carelessly shown an opening, were cut down by the Sword Demon's blade, which had pressed close from directly behind them. The Sword Demon, his body half-stained with blood, looked on with satisfaction as the dragon carriage sped away.

"A perfect opportunity to repay a debt to a benefactor. Fortunately, the person who made the request understands, even without words. —What an honor this is."

Wilhelm held the treasured sword entrusted by his master in his right hand and received a knight's sword, thrown by his subordinate, in his left. He crossed both swords in front of him, and his gaze, beneath the gleam of the blades, pierced through his enemies.

"Who dares interfere with a man going to meet his woman? You, and I, are too bloody to be present at a reunion. —All of you, lay down your corpses and be done with it."

At that death sentence, the Witch Cultists, who should have been emotionless, stiffened. Within the tense atmosphere, the Sword Demon, a smile on his lips, charged forward in a forward-leaning posture. That smile was a complex one, like that of a demon reveling in blood, and also like an old man wryly smiling at his own youthful mistakes.

—The day he truly came to believe he'd live in another world.

Reunited with her, and meeting new faces, Subaru found his place to live. By her side, becoming her strength, doing something for her, even if he couldn't see the future, he was content.

Then those days suddenly fractured, and crushing despair repeated itself. There were people he wanted to believe in, and he pushed himself to protect them, yet there was the pain of not being trusted, almost throwing everything away. And then, there was the acceptance of his weak self. Saved, protected, showing countless uncool sides, and finally standing up. Standing up, running around, getting hurt and starting over, summoning resolve, hoping for the ideal, Subaru once again found daily happiness and spent that time blessed by her side.

"Mr Natsuki, I see them! The evacuation carriages, those must be them!"

"Yeah—no doubt about it!"

Finding the cluster of carriages speeding away from the battlefield, Subaru felt his heart pounding faster. Even before Subaru could put his surging feelings into words, Otto, reading his intention, and Patrasche accelerated the carriage. As the distance rapidly closed, he saw confusion spreading through the group ahead, who had noticed their approach.

The sight of the carriages beginning to swerve filled him with impatience, even though he knew it couldn't be helped. Subaru strained his voice, desperately calling out to the drivers to stop.

"Stop! It's me! I'm not the enemy! Stop, please stop—!!"

It was a desperate plea, but those fleeing were equally desperate. Their intentions remained at cross-purposes, but as they drew almost parallel, the driver finally noticed Subaru.

"Master Subaru—?!"

"Stop! It's an emergency! I need to check inside!"

Sensing something extraordinary in Subaru's urgent face, the driver steered the reins, instructing the ground dragon to stop. Instantly, unable to completely kill its momentum, the dragon carriage swerved violently, bouncing with a tremendous sound, almost flipping over.

"Ia, come out! Otto, unhitch Patrasche!"

Then, impatient to even stop, Subaru leaped from the carriage, which had just begun to slow down. There was no way he could land gracefully; he fell awkwardly, flung by the momentum of inertia—he rolled to absorb the impact, immediately stood up, and rushed to the side of the carriage. He ran to the front carriage, a canopied cart tilted heavily from the impact. Ia, who had flown out from his hair, landed on his fingertip, asserting her presence with a faint, tingling heat.

Feeling reassured by that warmth, Subaru rushed to the carriage, pulled back its canopy, and thrust his head inside. As sunlight pierced the darkness and his vision cleared,

"—Subaru."

When he realized that silver bell-like voice had called his name, Subaru was struck by a shock so profound he felt as though he might collapse right there. In his line of sight, gazing at him with bewildered eyes, was a beautiful girl with silver hair and violet eyes. A single girl whose figure he had chased countless times, for whom he had wished endlessly, and who had broken him again and again, yet he could never give up on her.

Overwhelming emotions pounded in his chest, and Subaru desperately held back the uncontrollable surge of passion that threatened to spill from his lips and the corners of his eyes. He shook his head, instantly casting aside those doubts.

"Ia! Can you tell?!"

The faint glow on his fingertip danced in the air, floating around inside the dragon carriage as if responding to Subaru's call. That fantastical scene of exploration quickly came to an end. Ia's trajectory, as she floated searching for her objective, suddenly became erratic, and the spirit moved closer to the edge of the carriage, rocking up and down as if to indicate something was there.

He rushed over, straining his eyes to find the anomaly at the spot indicated by the quasi-spirit. He saw that one of the floorboards was slightly discolored, and it was a new board, distinct from the others.

"Puck! Can you peel off just this part without damaging the surroundings?!"

"You appear suddenly and then… oh, I see."

Despite the abruptness of Subaru's voice after such a long time, Puck's displeased expression lasted only an instant. The Great Spirit must have sensed the same thing the quasi-spirit felt beneath the floorboard Subaru pointed to. Waving his small hand, a converging torrent of mana froze one of the floorboards. Subaru then stepped on it, breaking it open, and reached his hand into the created hole. And then,

"—Found it!"

Pulling a burlap sack from the bottom of the hole, Subaru hastily peered inside. Just as Otto had described, it was packed tightly with magic ore. The faint, glowing ore seemed to be gradually increasing in temperature even now—no, in fact, it was clearly beginning to emit intense heat.

—Perhaps it was time-limited, or finding and taking it out was the cause, or maybe the current impact to the carriage triggered it.

Whatever the reason, the magic ore in his hand had become hot—meaning it had undeniably entered the sequence of imminent detonation.

"Puck, stopping this explosion is…"

"Stopping it is probably impossible. But I could protect everyone completely.”

Puck shook his head at the plea, but hinted at a trump card, guaranteeing Emilia’s safety. This likely meant Puck would manifest in his true form and, with his colossal power, forcefully protect everyone from the explosion—a desperate measure. Subaru understood the principle, and indeed, he knew Puck could do it. But,

“No, that won’t work!”

Shaking his head, Subaru rejected Puck’s proposal. He believed that plan could indeed protect everyone. However, if he allowed it, everyone present would witness Puck in his Great Spirit form, and that monstrous appearance would be etched into everyone’s memory. The immense power, and the existence of Emilia, the contractor who commanded it. For her, who still carried a deep rift in her relationship with the villagers, how profoundly would that impression affect her?

He pressed a hand to his forehead, his thoughts racing. Think of a way. The total amount of magic ore is considerable; if mishandled, this entire area could become a scorched wasteland. In a situation on the verge of explosion, it’s doubtful whether the idea of throwing it far away is even feasible. On the other hand, if I leave everything to Puck, it will cast a shadow of anxiety over Emilia’s path. Even if I accept that lives are irreplaceable, it’s too soon to give up before even thinking. Subaru has no right to judge whether something is irreplaceable or not. So he would think. For her sake, for Emilia’s sake, this time, truly, in the deepest sense, what he could do for her.

“—I see.”

A murmur escaped him. Only one thought had flashed into his mind. Whether it could be put into practice was ambiguous; it was a conclusion that could only be called absurd. But if there was a possibility, this was the only method he could think of, and by some miracle, a chance of success remained.

The moment the idea struck him, Subaru’s body moved as if propelled. He picked up the heavy burlap sack, difficult to lift with both hands, and prepared to leap out of the carriage with it. Then, from behind him,

“Wait…!”

Emilia called out, her voice trembling, stopping him. His feet, which shouldn’t stop, did. His body, which shouldn’t turn, did. His eyes, which shouldn’t meet hers, looked directly into them. In a moment when there was no time for words, they were about to exchange them.

“Subaru… why…!”

That “why” contained not just the immediate “why” of this moment, but every “why”—why he had rushed in this instant, why he had created this situation, and surely, reaching back even further, a re-examination of the exchange they’d had in that room in the royal castle.

At that time, Subaru couldn’t give her an answer. All the disorganized emotions from that time resurfaced. Each and every one of them wasn’t entirely wrong, but they weren’t entirely right either. It was a chance he’d gained only once, then lost again, a scene he’d postponed. Meeting Emilia again, having the chance to speak, there were mountains of feelings and words he wanted to convey. Like stars. So many that even if he poured them all out, they would never run dry.

Countless words came to mind, rising to his lips only to vanish. All his profound emotions, the feelings he had accumulated, his whole being had longed for this moment. What should he say, what should he convey? What words should he choose, what attitude should he take?

“Why…?”

The question again. He took a small breath, and then Subaru uttered just a few words.

"—I love you, Emilia."

—That was the one and only meaning for Subaru to live, bruised and broken as he was.

3

With one breath, he dove through the canopy, tearing it, and leaped from the dragon carriage.

The moment the sunlight seared his eyes, causing him to wince, a dark body stood before Subaru, shielding him from the light. It was Patrasche. His companion, even before hearing Subaru's voice, had turned her back as if sensing everything.

He reached out, scrambling onto Patrasche's back as if flying. He hugged the hot burlap sack, sandwiching it between his chest and Patrasche's back, then gripped the reins and pulled them tight. The ground dragon neighed, and after a beat, Patrasche began to run, heading straight for the sun.

Behind him, Otto looked surprised by Subaru's actions. The young man with the buzz cut, who had been driving, stood dumbfounded. Then, bursting through the canopy, the children and Emilia leaped out. He could hear voices, calling his name. He didn't look back; he couldn't.

He had left behind all the feelings he needed to convey, all the words he wanted to say. There was nothing more for Subaru to do there. Now, there was only what he had to do.

Patrasche became the wind. Due to the earlier stop, the "Windbreak" blessing wasn't active, and the jolts and wind relentlessly assailed Subaru, threatening to throw him off. But the jet-black ground dragon skillfully protected her master, and Subaru, placing all his trust in her, surrendered himself to her movements.

Swirling with the jolts and wind, Subaru gazed intently forward. It must be there. His certainty quickly turned into fact, and Subaru urged Patrasche toward the object that had entered his sight.

The heat radiated by the magic ore; the ore, glowing red through the burlap sack, began to scorch Subaru's stomach and Patrasche's back. He gritted his teeth, wrapping his arms tightly to ensure he wouldn't drop it. Amidst the encroaching pain, Subaru saw it through his tearing eyes.

—It was the legendary Great Tree, which had lain broken from its roots for countless years, and at its base lay the corpse of a massive witchbeast, its head missing.

They must have put all their effort into transporting the head. The remaining colossal body was frozen solid with an astonishing density to prevent decay, and the chilling air around it was so intense that his breath turned white just by getting close. Subaru urged Patrasche towards the side of that giant mass of flesh, aiming for the center of the lying White Whale's carcass—where a deep wound, caused by the Sword Demon's strike, existed.

"—!"

Leaping from Patrasche's body, Subaru shoved the burlap sack into the wound. Despite the frozen body, the opening was large, enough to completely engulf the sack. Instantly turning, Subaru grabbed Patrasche's reins and swiftly turned her around. They circled the carcass and plunged to the other side of the fallen Great Tree.

Dragging Subaru, who was half-hanging, Patrasche galloped across the grassland. The convergence of mana could be felt behind them, and both Subaru's and the ground dragon's throats let out roars. Only the violent tremors and the sound of the wind enveloped the world. His body was swept along by the movement, and he knew he had reached his destination with the sensation of impact.

His body pressed hard against the tree trunk, and Patrasche, curled up, covered Subaru's body from above. —The next moment,

"—!!"

A violent impact and blast, a deafening explosion, roared across the road, and a wave of heat leaped over the carcass and the great tree, scorching Subaru's and Patrasche's skin. Through his closed eyelids, a red glow threatened to pierce his deep-set eyeballs, but Subaru held fast to the crushing weight, gritting his teeth and enduring the pain. His entire body felt as if it would be torn away by the shockwave, experiencing the sensation of even this immense tree being greatly moved by the explosive force, and then, gradually, the shock and heat wave subsided—.

"—?"

Realizing that all sensation had vanished, Subaru raised his head in a daze. He tried to speak, but the ringing in his ears was so intense he heard nothing. Nothing appeared in his open eyelids; his optic nerves must have suffered severe damage. His outstretched hand touched the ground dragon's skin beside him, and the mere fact that its body had indeed moved registered in his palm, allowing his shoulders to relax in relief.

He couldn't see anything, couldn't hear anything. But he was alive. Patrasche, apparently, was also alive.

He felt something wet repeatedly stroking his sooty face. He couldn't see, but it might have been Patrasche's tongue. A feeling of finding it adorable, like a dog, mixed with the terror of his skin being sandpapered, welled up simultaneously. However, his voice and fingers couldn't move to stop it.

He was truly exhausted. So many things, too many things, had piled up. Maybe he could rest for a little while now. He felt his consciousness slowly drifting away, surrendering himself to the approaching darkness. His vision wouldn't clear. His body wouldn't move. His ears still heard nothing.

"—!"

Only a faint vibration of the atmosphere brushed his skin, and his head, somehow moving, turned towards it. He heard nothing. He shouldn't have heard anything, yet for some reason, he felt incredibly good. He heard nothing. Now, nothing—

"—Subaru!!"

Ah, what was that? —He did hear it, didn’t he?

With that final sigh of relief, Subaru’s consciousness plunged into a deep, deep sleep.

Chapter 84:
A Story That's Just That

1

—Before Subaru knew it, his consciousness was once again drawn into a world of darkness.

A consciousness adrift, vague and wandering. Stripped of every organ—hands, feet, eyes, ears—the existence known as Natsuki Subaru floated in the void, a mere name-bound awareness.

In this world, there was never a ground, nor an end in sight. Only an endless expanse of darkness, stained in jet black, with shadows consuming everything.

However, though Subaru had been summoned here unconsciously as before, there was one clear difference this time.

Previously, his memories would be vague, and even possessing his own will was difficult within that eternal night. Yet now, Subaru could clearly perceive his own existence.

With no hands, feet, or body, he couldn't translate his will into action.

Still, he was permitted to guide his will toward thought, to ponder with reason.

A ephemeral dream world, forgotten upon waking.

The garden of shadows, always bringing a constricting nostalgia to Subaru.

The beloved 'someone' he encountered every time he came here, whose face and voice remained unknown.

He watched as the darkness before him shimmered, and shadows slowly began to form a human shape.

A slender body was born from the jet black, with a right hand and a left hand distinctly connected to the body, forming it. The being that was once only a single hand had regained both arms, and the palms that emerged stretched out toward him, seeking Subaru's presence.

Subaru's heart was instinctively captivated, wanting to touch, wanting to seek.

However he had no hands to respond, no mouth to speak his words, and thus, he could do nothing.

Subaru couldn't touch her, and she couldn't touch Subaru.

How much time had she spent creating her body, just to seek Subaru? How much time, and what sacrifices, did those extended arms represent?

Unconsciously grasping a fragment of this, Subaru was crushed by his own powerlessness.

"—I love you."

The shadow, surely twisting its unseen face in anguish, whispered words of love to Subaru.

He wanted to answer those words, he had to answer. To reciprocate with his voice, with action, with love.

He could only face the love offered to him with love in return. Yet —,

"—Subaru."

Someone's voice called Subaru's name.

His formless consciousness realized that the voice wasn't from the girl before him, but from behind. His non-existent eyes looked back. In the depths of the darkness, a point of light emerged.

The voice was indeed coming from there.

“I love you.”

“Subaru.”

Words were cast simultaneously. He wanted to reciprocate the love. He had to answer the call.

The voice of the girl standing before him, the voice of someone reaching from the light behind him—as if guided, as if pulled, Subaru’s consciousness slowly, gradually, moved away from the garden of shadows.

Drawn towards the light.

At this inclination of Subaru’s heart, the voice before him took on a painful tremor.

“I love you, I love you, I love you, I love you, I love you, I love you, I love you—”

“—Please, Subaru.”

The repeated whispers of love. The name called, filled with only pure emotion.

He remembered his own name. He remembered the person who called him by it.

He remembered what he had to do. He remembered where he had to go. —That’s why he couldn’t stay here.

“Love me…”

“Next time, I’ll surely come to you.”

His non-existent mouth, a will that shouldn’t have been able to communicate, interrupted the words and declared his decision.

The silenced voice. The increasing distance. His consciousness was swallowed by the world of light from the world of shadows, enveloped in a pure white radiance and vanishing.

"—I'll be waiting."

Leaving only that final murmur, Subaru's consciousness melted within the light—

2

His consciousness surfaced from the sea of sleep, breaking through the surface of awakening, and his eyelids opened.

The sunlight harshly stung Subaru's waking eyes, making them tear up, and through his blurry vision, he saw faintly glowing amethyst eyes. They were so close, close enough to feel breath, captivatingly beautiful, and breath truly reached him from those pink lips—making him panic to death.

"Your face is too close?!"

"Whoa, oh, Subaru, you're awake! Ah, good. Really."

He realized that the close proximity was Emilia's eyes and that her face was close enough to feel her breath, instantly snapping his consciousness from vague to fully awake. Emilia looked at the flustered Subaru, calmly exhaling with a relieved look, oblivious to the pounding in his heart.

Damn, she's cute. As he watched her gesture, Subaru noticed that his and Emilia's positions were oddly angled.

"I'm lying down, and Emilia-tan is sitting seiza style. And, considering there's a heavenly feeling under my head at this distance…"

"You don't need to do such a weird check, it's a lap pillow. Is it uncomfortable?"

"How peacefully do you think I was sleeping? Of course it's not uncomfortable. It's the best reward I could ask for after all that effort."

Without hesitation, Subaru kept the weight of his head on her lap and chuckled. Emilia, seeing Subaru's smile, subtly tightened her mouth, which had been relaxed in relief.

The atmosphere shifted. Having confirmed each other's safety, they needed to talk about more.

"Um, can I ask what happened with everything?"

"I'm the one who wants to ask what happened with everything… It's about what happened after the magic stone you took from the dragon carriage exploded, right? It was really a lot."

Still in the same posture, Emilia lowered her gaze and slowly began to recount the events.

How Subaru had suddenly jumped out of the dragon carriage without explanation, and ridden off on a ground dragon much faster than anyone could pursue. How she tried to chase him but was held back by Pack and Otto, and nearly fainted when she saw the explosion rising in the distance. How she frantically searched for Subaru and found him and Patrasche collapsed under the fallen Flugel's Tree. And how Patrasche had apparently covered Subaru, protecting him.

"What happened to Patrasche? I remember feeling like she was licking my face all over before I lost consciousness."

"She kept licking you even after you passed out. When I tried to pull her away to treat you, she growled so angrily. If that merchant… Otto hadn't talked to her, I might not have been able to start treatment."

"Damn you, Patrasche. How rude to Emilia-tan… No, it means she was trying to protect me no matter who came. How incredibly loyal is that dragon? I'm falling for her."

His acquaintance with Patrasche had only been about a day and a half, but the number of life-or-death situations they'd faced together already topped anything since he arrived in this world. This loop, in particular, had been one grueling ordeal after another. In fact, he wouldn't have made it this far without Patrasche's cooperation. She was merely a ground dragon borrowed from Crusch, but if Crusch was offering a reward—

“I’ll take Patrasche. Yeah, I’ll do that. Let’s be partners for a long, long time… So, where is Patrasche?”

“Her burns were severe, but it seems her life isn’t in danger. I did the first aid, but now Ferris is looking after her, including Wilhelm too.”

“Ah… Ferris joined up too.”

Ferris’s name came up in the conversation about treatment, and Subaru relaxed his shoulders in relief. Apart from his teasing remarks towards Subaru, there was no doubt about his skill as a healer. Patrasche’s treatment would surely proceed without any issues.

At the same time, the fact that Ferris, who should have been significantly delayed in leaving the village, had already joined them meant—

“By any chance, have I been sleeping for quite a while?”

“I think about four or five hours. If we didn’t have the dialogue mirror, we might have been rushing to the capital to find a healer by now.”

As she spoke, Emilia held one of the dialogue mirrors that Petelgeuse and his group had used. Julius had one, Ferris had one, and Subaru had another, which she had apparently borrowed from his pocket after he lost consciousness. She likely noticed Ferris’s call. Thanks to being able to contact him, Subaru’s treatment was also able to happen.

“So, everyone’s reunited, then?”

“Ferris, yes… and Julius, too. I was really, really surprised. I never imagined you and Julius together.”

“There’s a reason for that, Emilia-tan, bluer than mountains and deeper than oceans. Explaining it from scratch is, frankly, kind of depressing, you know…”

Emilia’s surprise at the relationship between Julius and Subaru was difficult to put into words. In fact, even Subaru himself wasn’t sure what their relationship was anymore.

He was an irritatingly detestable rival, a pretentious and disagreeable but undeniably skilled collaborator, and a comrade-in-arms they relied on each other in situations where their mistakes could cost them their lives.

In short, if he had to describe him in one word—

“I hate that guy.”

“Why the sudden broken speech?”

“I tried to express my feelings for that indescribable guy with as few words as possible, in my own way. You can guess the result… Where is everyone now?”

It felt itchy to continue that topic, so he changed it. Emilia gave Subaru a helpless smile and continued, “Right,”

“They’re resting until Ferris finishes all the treatments. But I think they’ll be done soon, so we’ll probably head back to the capital… I guess I need to talk with Crusch, thanks to all your hard work, Subaru.”

“Oh, I worked super hard. I bluffed and cheated my way through a lot of crazy situations. Just thinking about it still gives me a stomachache!”

“Yeah, really… Thank you.”

When Emilia thanked him so directly, Subaru instantly felt embarrassed for his overly boastful remark. Still, it was true that his actions had a positive outcome for her. There was no need to hide it anymore.

Realizing that fact anew, a pure feeling of joy overflowed within Subaru.

He felt as though he had accumulated so many memories since those days, since the time of their separation. With each repetition, Subaru had lived through time Emilia didn't know.

Using everything he had gained during that time to the fullest, Subaru had reached this moment. The results were truly worthy of praise, and he had the confidence to prove it.

He had done so much. He had accumulated so much. Finally, he had reached this point.

And so, this time, Subaru felt he had earned the right to give proper meaning to that moment, to that foolish word he uttered during that time.

Looking around, they seemed to be in the back of a dragon carriage with the hood open. There was no one else around; only Subaru and Emilia were present. He didn't know what the others were doing, but in the silence, only the rustling of the wind could be heard, and the world was cut off, belonging only to the two of them.

Strangely enough, the situation was the same as that time.

Waking up from an unconscious, injured state, in a place just for the two of them.

"It feels like I've been dreaming for a long time…"

In fact, the countless events that had occurred from that moment of separation until this loop —this final loop— felt unreal, as if they were a dream or something similar. So many extreme situations had occurred, and Subaru had been repeatedly thrown into the abyss of despair.

Indeed, they could only be described as a continuous string of nightmares—

"A bad dream… no, that's not right."

"Was it a good dream?"

Emilia tilted her head, picking up on Subaru's words and posing a question.

Closing his eyes at her words, Subaru recalled the days he had been on the verge of declaring a ‘nightmare.’ They were certainly a string of desperate situations, never to be looked back upon with a smile, and indeed a series of moments he wished he could erase from his memory.

He had acted foolishly, behaved selfishly, imposed his will, had his expectations brutally betrayed, was struck by disappointment and despair, fell into mental collapse, gave a part of himself to madness, was dominated by resignation and nearly threw everything away—and from there, he was saved.

It couldn’t be undone. If it hadn’t happened, the Subaru he was now wouldn’t be here.

So, though those days were like a dream, a time filled with only hardships.

“It was a good, real dream.”

That long, long, nightmarish time remained only within Subaru.

He could make it the past. But he couldn’t make it a dream. He would embrace all the tragic results of his actions, all the calamities he brought about.

That was the cross Subaru had to bear, trapped by the out-of-the-ordinary power of ‘Return by Death,’ and with that power, he had carved out a future.

“How much have you heard?”

“I haven’t heard almost anything. Julius said to hear it from you.”

“That bastard, seriously so meddlesome.”

Did he think he was being considerate? His ‘nice assist’ was so perfect it made him want to puke.

Subaru cursed Julius’s arrangement with a mischievous grin and sighed.

He held his breath for a moment, looked at Emilia, and said,

“That day, you asked me ‘why,’ didn’t you? Why I would help you. Why I worked so hard for so many things. Why, you asked.”

“Yes, I did. Then you said it was because I helped you… But I didn’t do anything like that. I couldn’t do anything at all. I was always being helped by Subaru, and I couldn’t do anything for you. And yet, Subaru got hurt because of me…”

“No, back then, I was out of my mind…”

He started to say he was out of his mind but couldn’t quite finish.

He wasn’t out of his mind. The Natsuki Subaru at that point, that weak, foolish man who only thought of himself, believed that what he was doing was right.

He just thought his pushy, self-serving emotions would be simply accepted.

Subaru knew the end of the man who loudly proclaimed such a selfish love. He experienced it firsthand and crushed that love with his own hands.

He also burned into his eyes the figure of the person who truly demonstrated the existence of dedicated love.

“Back then, I was only thinking about myself. I admit it. Even while saying it was for you, I was just drunk on the idea of ‘myself working hard for you.’ I just selfishly thought if I acted like a drunken fool, you’d accept it.”

“Subaru…”

“I’m sorry. I used you to feel good about myself. All those words back then, they were right. I was wrong… But there was something that wasn’t wrong too.”

He used Emilia for his own sake. Subaru affirmed her tearful cries. But looking back at the part of himself that was rejected in that moment, there was still one thing he couldn’t concede.

"I want to help you. I want to be your strength. That's sincere and true, no lie."

"…Yeah, I know."

Emilia nodded at Subaru's words.

Then her amethyst eyes widened, and she blinked once, gazing at Subaru.

And then,

"Why do you help me?"

The words spoken to him then. The words asked again just hours ago.

Now, once more, the words offered, seeking an answer. Subaru's answer was singular.

"—Because I love you, Emilia. I want to be your strength."

Looking straight into her eyes, Subaru clearly stated it.

—In the end, the origin of Subaru's actions converged on that simple truth.

Wanting to be her strength, wanting to be by her side, wanting to help her, wanting to see her smile, wanting to be next to her, wanting to live a future with her.

All of it, from the top of his head to the tips of his toes, down to his very soul, with his entire being, he loved Emilia.

That's why even when Subaru faced death, even when he literally died multiple times, even when he was hurt, hated, and suffered, he would crawl back, cling on, and return like this.

How much of a detour did he take just to arrive at such a simple answer? He was amazed at his own foolishness.

"…"

Hearing Subaru’s answer, Emilia closed her lips and chose silence.

Looking up at her with a strangely calm feeling, Subaru, suddenly filled with a sense of accomplishment, realized something immense.

—Wait, am I, like, seriously confessing and waiting for a reply here?

For Subaru, who had never confessed or been confessed to in his life, this was an incredibly monumental event. No, wait, he had been confessed to. In this world, by the lovely, adorable Rem. However that was a separate matter. His feelings for Rem and his feelings for Emilia were different issues, even if the vector was the same.

As Subaru silently agonized internally without changing his expression, Emilia’s face suddenly crumpled. She bit her closed lips, and her widely open violet eyes narrowed slightly, looking as if she was about to burst into tears.

“I, I’m… a half-elf.”

“I know.”

Emilia reconfirmed something too obvious with a trembling voice.

Subaru’s immediate answer made her gasp, and then she shook her head,

“With silver hair, and being a half-elf… because I look like the Witch, many people shun and hate me. Really, truly, they hate me.
”

“I saw it. I know it. They’re fools with no discernment.”

To be swayed just by appearance, and even more ridiculously, because she resembled a great sinner of the past. Who could say they hated her without seeing anything of her true nature?

“I don’t have many friends because I have little experience socializing. I’m naive, so I sometimes say strange things… And, because of a contract, my hairstyle is different almost every day, and the reason I have to become queen… it's really, really selfish…"

She tried to list her flaws, and the parts where she said unnecessary things showed her nervousness. Even her weakness in trying to verbalize and affirm her lack of self-confidence was endearing now. So,

"No matter what anyone says about you, Emilia, and no matter what you think of yourself, I like you. I love you. I super love you. I want to be next to you forever. I want to hold your hand forever."

"Ah…"

"If you tell me ten things you dislike about yourself, I'll tell you two thousand things I like about you."

He lifted his head from Emilia's lap, met her eyes, and spoke.

Emilia's eyes, looking at Subaru with her mouth slightly open, quickly filled with tears. Large drops flowed out with a blink, tracing clear paths down her white cheeks.

"That's how I want to treat you, my 'special treatment.'"

"…This is the first time I've ever been happy about special treatment."

He reached out a hand and gently wiped away those flowing tears. As his hand touched her cheek, Emilia's palm covered his, exchanging their intensely warm body heat.

She closed her eyes, feeling Subaru's fingertips on her cheek, and asked,

"Why two thousand?"

"Because a hundred times isn't enough to express my feelings."

When Subaru grinned, Emilia also showed a tearful smile.

Her smile was so dazzling, and even the falling tears were like jewels. He laughed at how easily satisfied he was, getting such contentment from a single smile.

As he laughed, Emilia rubbed her cheek against Subaru's fingertips, saying,

"I'm happy. Really, truly happy. I never thought there'd be a day someone would tell me they loved me."

In her life until now, 'special' had directly meant discrimination.

That's why she was so afraid of being 'specially treated' by anyone. Even knowing her feelings, Subaru would 'specially treat' her.

Even if no one else did, only Subaru in this world would.

"What… what should I do? Subaru, you're telling me how you feel… but I don't know what to do."

"No need to rush. I'm not looking for an immediate answer anyway. It's already a decided matter in my mind that I'll get a proper 'yes' from you eventually."

She had little experience being liked by anyone, and that part of her was as cute as a child. He wouldn't rush her or demand an answer.

He wanted to be the person she turned to with her feelings when she truly understood what it meant to be liked by someone, and when she realized she could love someone in return.

He strongly wished to be a man worthy of receiving that affection.

"Is it… okay? For me… for someone like me, to receive so much happiness. To feel such joyful, extravagant feelings…"

"It's fine, let's be extravagant. You can never have too much happiness, and if it overflows and you have extra, you can just share it."

—Therefore.

“Take your time, Emilia. Slowly, carefully, leisurely, let yourself fall in love with me. As I walk beside you, I’ll do my best to make you absolutely smitten.”

A small sound, “Hee,” escaped Emilia’s throat.

She then put her hands to her cheeks and began to shed uncontrollable tears.

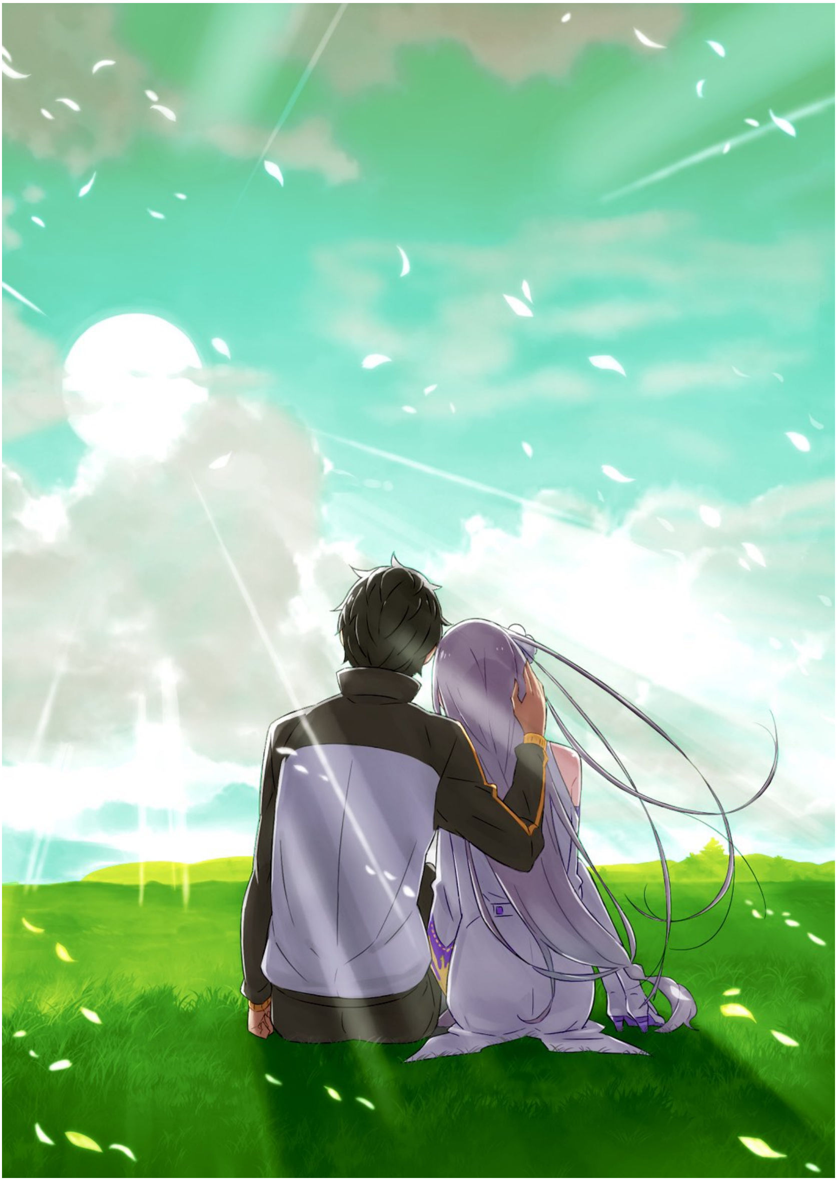
Reaching out, Subaru gently stroked her long, beautiful silver hair, as if combing it.

Softly, softly, gently.

All the while, Emilia kept crying and crying.

Subaru kept gently stroking his beloved, precious Emilia.

—Beneath the approaching evening sky, the foreigner and the silver-haired half-elf huddled together, exchanging their feelings.



A long, long succession of hardships and despair.

Overcoming them, they finally found this calm, quiet time.

This was simply a story just to attain this moment.

A story of detours, continuous misunderstandings, and persistent wandering, just for that.

A boy lacking confidence conveyed his feelings to a girl lacking confidence.

He worked hard just for that— That’s all this story is about.

Interlude I: The Dragon Carriage

The dragon carriage rattles along quietly as it continues down the highway.

Protected by its Divine Protection, those inside the carriage felt barely any effect from the wind. Leaning back and leaving himself to the silence, Subaru thought of how this marked the first time he had ever ridden a carriage in a calm manner.

The first time, when heading from Roswaal's mansion to the Royal Capital, was supposed to be the most at ease. But that one turned into something horrible halfway through thanks to Subaru's own screwup, and in the end there was no room to feel any ease at all. But there's several things he only managed to pull off because he had that experience, so he can't exactly call it a bad one.

And all the ones from the second time on were heading from the Royal Capital to Roswaal's. Since those trips all happened due to the Witch Cult, there's really no way he could've felt relaxed and calm during any of them. Thus, this is Subaru's first time riding a carriage without any sense of panic or haste.

Subaru: "Say… Petra, isn't this kinda close?"

Petra: "No? Is there some problem, Subaru?"

Looking up at Subaru, with her reddish-brown hair swaying, is Petra. She has been holding Subaru's hand ever since the carriage took off, sitting on his left, huddled up close against him. Subaru had first thought it was because she was scared what with all that had happened, but with how she's persistently been smiling so brightly and holding his hand, it's almost as if…

Subaru: "Feel like a dad. My supposedly-absent paternal instincts, now, are bubbling up from within me…!"

Petra: "It's not fair how you've been all about the lady. Shouldn't it be okay? You said there's still time until we reach the city."

Emilia: "Petra. What we were doing before was, erm, something a lot different. Look, me and Subaru were having a talk that we needed to have, which was sooo important. I wasn't trying to keep him to myself."

Petra: "Hmmph. I'm never ever gonna lose to you, Miss."

Says Emilia timidly, and says Petra back intimidatingly. Subaru can't quite get a grasp on the situation but going off what she's saying and how she's acting, it doesn't seem like Petra dislikes Emilia or anything. It's probably just a result of his playful relationship with Petra. But being that Emilia is not used to children, her concern is nothing to laugh about.

Subaru: "Don't take what she says too seriously, Emilia-tan. Things kids say, y'know? You gotta smile, grin, sourire back and ignore most of it."

Emilia: "I couldn't be such a charlatan, just because I'm talking with someone young."

Subaru: "Who says charlatan anymore?"

Emilia: "Mmpf, you're teasing me like that again."

Emilia pouts, dissatisfied, and Subaru gives an easy apology while his face breaks into a smile. Petra tugs Subaru's sleeve disapprovingly, indicating that she also must get her attention.

Seated between two beautiful girls, Subaru has been blessed with an uncommon happening for Subaru. With one girl being in love confession standby mode, and the other one being worth having some expectations for in three years' time—but really.

—Right now, Subaru's carriage is headed from Lifaus Highway to the Royal Capital.

This carriage, which is not the one that had been installed with the bomb, is being driven by one of the youths of Arlam Village's young men's brigade. Inside are Subaru and Emilia, and the children as well.

At first the everybody had given their quiet consideration by leaving Subaru and Emilia to themselves, but then Petra happily shoved herself in and now here we are.

Complaining to children for intruding on together time was of course something Subaru would not quite do, but that said Petra's incursion did have its benefits.

After all, he only just got done saying a bunch of embarrassing stuff to Emilia. He gave the on-confession-response-standby-mode Emilia that smooth "I'll wait", but the flame of love is still blazing in his chest with combustive ferocity. Couple that with the achievement he felt about getting here, and all breaks are off.

Worst case, he'd end up pre-emptively demanding something more than a lap pillow.

Subaru: "Ah man, that really was pretty risky there. Acting that cool about things and then that, hell that'd be mortifying."

Petra: "What would?"

Subaru: "Just talking about how you saved me, Petra. Ah, that's right, you kept your promise not to leave Emilia-tan alone. You're amazing, amazing."

Petra: "Ehehehee."

Subaru gently pats Petra's hair as he gives his double thanks. If Petra and the other kids had let go of Emilia's hands, she might have pushed herself again and gotten hurt. That that hadn't happened, and that all of Subaru's toiling had procured the results he wanted, was unmistakably thanks to everybody, including Petra's, help. Seriously, blessed. Too blessed.

Subaru: "There's so many people I have to thank once this's calmed down…"

Crusch, Ferris, and Wilhelm from Crusch's faction. Loathe to admit it but Julius, and the members of Iron Fang from Anastasia's faction. Must speak to barely memorable Russel too, and make good on that promise to give him the cellphone.

Kinda inexcusable that that exchange would end in Russel being duped, but considering the happiness Subaru had gained as a result, it was better to ignore that and put it aside as something trivial. Sorry Russel.

Subaru: “There’s a mountain of things I gotta think over, too…”

First, he absolutely has to look into what Roswaal was doing this whole time. And he probably needs to discuss with Crusch and Anastasia as to how to divvy things up from the White While and Sloth fights. Especially regarding the White Whale. If what Crusch said can be believed, Subaru was in position to claim a fraction of the glory.

It wasn’t that he was lusting for prestige, but if he—being part of Emilia’s faction—could get even some slight fame, that would surely help Emilia. You could call it shameless, but Subaru would rather be proactive here.

And then after sorting out the immediate affairs, there’s securing Arlam Village and getting things in order there. The future looks laden with difficulties.

—And, before addressing any of that, there is still one mountain that Subaru has to scale.

Subaru: “Uhm, err, Emilia-tan… I have something, extremely important to tell you.”

Emilia: “Mmhm, whaaat is it?”

Emilia twines her fingers in her silver hair as she turns to face Subaru properly, her amethyst eyes full of trust. Every time Subaru sees that light in her eyes, he can feel the success that his own actions have brought. Can feel it, but just how will Emilia respond to what he is about to tell her? Just thinking about it is honestly terrifying.

Subaru is going to tell Emilia about an unavoidable issue—That is, of course, about Rem.

If we're going back to the topic of who Subaru's giving his thanks to, there is unmistakably no one who saved Subaru as much as Rem. Her intense love and devotion mended Subaru's broken spirit and restored his will to stand up and challenge fate.

If she hadn't been there then, Subaru would not be standing here now. Without her presence, he never would have escaped from the hell called surrender. When Subaru was most in suffering, in pain, and hopeless, Rem was the one who stood with him and supported him. Was it truly so strange that Subaru felt intense love for this girl?

Until now, Subaru had wholeheartedly believed that his feelings would only be devoted to one single person. And in truth, there was only one sweetheart in the world out there for Subaru, and that was Emilia.

However, without any change in his feelings towards Emilia, Rem's presence had evoked something of identical size inside Subaru's heart. So, Subaru had decided. It might be tasteless but being that he can't abandon his love for either of them…

— He will take both Rem and Emilia.

Rem had already permitted him to have such an unseemly idea. The remaining problem is persuading Emilia, and although Rem proposed that they convince her together…

Subaru: "If I keep relying on Rem even for that, I'm really crossing the limit for awful."

Even if opportunity comes to bring Rem in so that she can contribute to the talk, Subaru's the one with the responsibility to first broach the topic. He is trying to get two girls to love him, so this is the minimum tier of hurdle he needs to cross.

Subaru takes a breath, his heartbeat slamming in his chest, as he considers what to say. He looks at Emilia. She's staring at him. Mega cute.

Subaru: “This’s something incredibly hard to say, but I want you to listen. Of course, I’m sure we’ll have to tell her sister at some point too, but… first, to Emilia-tan.”

Emilia: “…Mhm?”

Emilia looks perplexed at Subaru’s unneeded and stumbling preface. Anguishing over his own weakness for prolonging issue, Subaru frantically forces the wheels in his head to turn. In never before-seen, full brainpower. Forcing his synapses to fire so hot they might spark, finding the absolute best answer—!

Subaru: “Honestly, it’s about Rem. Rem kinda, told me she l… you, you can get what I’m saying, right? So, with that confession there, where this’s going’s I guess sorta selfish but…”

Subaru feels sweat rise on his brow as he frantically gets to cutting the ice. He’s already entered some kind of excuse-scented direction on this, but he figures that Emilia, being not bad at conjecture, will understand what he’s saying. Emilia raises her hands.

Emilia: “Hold on,”

Emilia: “Subaru, calm down. I’m starting to lose what you’re trying to say, but I can tell that you’re trying sooo hard. You’re a good boy, take it slowly.”

Subaru: “«You’re a good boy» is a crazy depressing thing to hear! Or no, I really wasn’t being a man. Yeah, let’s just go straight for it. Alright, so, well, actually, Rem told me she loves me, and once you love me too it’s sorta… like, you’ll both be mine, or something?!”

A momentum-propelled confession of two-timing. Even Subaru is repulsed by what he just said. Emilia’s reaction would surely be something similar, or maybe she’d look at Subaru with eyes hosting disappointment and scorn. Under those pessimistic abstractions, Subaru timidly looks at Emilia, and…

Emilia: “…”

Her reaction is nothing that Subaru envisioned. Her brows scrunch up as she silently puts her finger to her lip, in thought. Perhaps she’s meditating over Subaru’s comment, thinking up a suitable punishment for him—and, with an atmosphere that leaves no room for jokes—

Emilia: “Subaru.”

Subaru: “Yes.”

Hearing his name, Subaru looks Emilia straight-on. Emilia, too, faces Subaru’s resolved gaze straight-on. However, there’s some confusion in her eyes, and with Subaru unable to comprehend what would make her react like that, her next words, which in the truest of meanings, transcend Subaru’s comprehension, are—

Emilia: “—Rem… Who is that?

—Beneath a pristine sky of blue, Subaru squints up at the downpour of daylight.

He hears someone crying.

A girl crying. Crying with all her might, using all the strength in her little body. Seeing her pour all her soul into showcasing her emotions, Subaru idly wonders how it is that kids have so much energy. And after thinking it, he's stunned at himself for how geriatric it is to think such a thing.

Subaru: "I already knew that I'd gotten old, but noticing it being an unconscious instead of conscious thing sucks. And when I was trying be still full of youth and boundless energy."

???: "The hell is that about youth and boundless energy. You ever take a damn objective look at yourself?"

Thus, some insults coming from Subaru's side were heard. The familiar, crude voice makes Subaru sigh as he lazily turns to look at the speaker. Subaru is seated on a chair, and a boy stands next to him at even eye level. The boy frowns in response to Subaru's silent staring.

Boy: "But anyway—"

Boy: "Do something about Spica's crying already! Seriously can't handle it."

Subaru: "But I'm done for. Your heartless words have torn my tender soul to shreds. I've reverted to the mind of a child like Spica and I'm gonna start bawling. Forgive me and all that."

Boy: "There's nothing forgivable about a grown man doing that in public!”

The boy gesticulates vigorously as he retorts to Subaru’s immature manner of sulking. The action prompts the baby cradled in Subaru’s arms, Spica, to take a deep breath. The two guys give useless statements of “ah” and “ouh” and—there comes the emotional explosion.

Spica: “Aaaa— hk!”

Subaru: “Aaaaugh! She’s crying! Spica’s crying! Look here Rigel, you better do something ‘bout this, you’re her brother!”

Rigel: “If you’re gonna say that then isn’t it you’re the one who’s gotta do something if you don’t wanna be terrible!”

In a corner of a main street of a lively townscape, two guys pass the responsibility around as they cradle a baby.

Passersby look over at the noisy three, wondering what’s going on. But after seeing the two of them running about in circles, they look away like “What, just the same as always”, and ignore it.

So the two’s pattern of running around continues undisturbed. Could call it charming, or just as easily call it riotous and unpleasant.

Subaru: “We’ve got a little girl bawling her whole soul out over here, and not a single person’s giving us a hand… Shit, what’s wrong with society?! Have people’s souls become so barren?”

Rigel: “This isn’t the time to winge about the world! If we don’t stop Spica’s crying, what’ll she say when she gets back—”

???: “When who gets back?”

Rigel: “Well, who else—”

Rigel crosses his arms, nodding, and glances behind him. When his face stiffens and he falls stupefied, his mouth gaping open in dumb shock. Following Rigel’s gaze, Subaru also catches sight of this new character, and his eyebrows spring up.

Subaru: “Oh,”

Subaru: “Done shopping?”

???: “Yes, without problems… It seems you two have had some trouble.”

Subaru: “Nope, Spica’s just super energetic. I’m raising her so once she’s running circles like this, she’ll be running circles around guys. She’s got a future as a bad girl, heart’s pounding here!”

Spica’s eyes open slightly as she notices the woman, and opens her hands before reaching out to her. Her uncomfortable posture dictates her demand for swapsies, the alienation wounding Subaru’s poor paternal heart.

Subaru: “That said, I ignore what she wants and make her cry again then this’s just winding up where we started. Oui, all yours.”

Woman: “She’s all mine.”

Subaru’s tone is pretty reckless, but he is awfully gentle as he hands Spica over. A smile rises on the woman’s face as she sees his fingers, cradling the babe like something ephemeral and precious. The woman accepts Spica and cradles her securely to her chest, before gently rocking her.

Woman: “No, your father and brother are just no good. It’s essential for you to swiftly grow larger and scold them as well.”

Subaru: “Hey now, don’t go implanting things in her head while she’s still an infant.”

Subaru imagines himself, having just done or said something stupid, stuck between the two angry girls with their arms akimbo. And then adding Rigel to that picture,

Subaru: “What, that’s not as bad as I thought. Actually, that’s such a happy fantasy that I might start crying maybe.”

Rigel: “No damn thanks. Getting yelled at by my little sister would completely crush my dignity as a brother.”

Subaru: “There’s no dignity out there that stays uncrushed after running in circles with me. I see, I see it… Loving your sister and constantly spoiling her, your future is one of being whipped.”

Rigel: “Don’t push this on me just ‘cause you’re whipped yourself! I’m never gonna be like that.”

Subaru twiddles his fingers in a mysterious fashion as Rigel gives his objection. The one to furrow their brows at Rigel’s refutation isn’t Subaru—But the blue-haired woman who had been watching happily over the two’s back-and-forth. In a calm, but firm tone, the woman calls Rigel’s name.

Woman: “Rigel.”

Woman: “Is that any way for you to have been speaking in public? It is not tolerable.”

Rigel: “Ugh, but I mean…”

Woman: “Your mother hates «but I means». And, your previous statement was incorrect.”

The woman gives the calmed Spica, cradled in her arms, a tender smile.

Woman: “Your mother does not have your father whipped. Because your mother, always puts your father in number one.”

Spoken with her cheeks flush, a statement more embarrassing than bawling like a baby in public.

Rigel throws his arms up in surrender. Feeling something akin to an itch, Subaru smiles. The woman softly brushes her hair back as she blissfully watches over the family scene.

Rem’s long hair, blue as the sky and caressed by the wind, sways in the breeze.

2

They’re in a corner of a city in Kararagi—A spot that you could maybe or maybe not call a park. Subaru spaces out as he sits on one of the benches there.

He watches the blue-, short-, spiky-haired Rigel run about back and forth with his somewhat brattish friends. The way he talks with his dad is impermissible but watching him playing like this makes him seem like something cute.

Subaru: “If only we could do something about those nasty serial killer eyes of his.”

Rem: “We mustn’t. Those nasty eyes are who Rigel is. Even if he is enjoying himself, no matter how gleeful he is, strangers seeing him for the first time will think him nefarious and displeased because of his face. That is who Rigel is.”

Rigel: “I can hear you, and mom, your support actually really hurts!”

Screams Rigel, who has been caught by the oni and is in a state of being frozen, in this game that Subaru popularized called Freeze Oni2.

Subaru gives him a casual wave and so does Rem, hers small and careful so as not to disturb a sleeping Spica. Rigel pouts with his sharp sanpaku3 gaze dissatisfied. He looks like Subaru did in his childhood photo albums, and unbearably so.

Subaru: “Which means it’s already decided that his future will end up like this. I’d shudder if I were him… Being told that I’d tun into me in twenty years.”

Rem: “Skilled at cooking and incredible at housework. Will acquire an ideal, wonderful wife who is respectful and devoted to her valiant husband… Would be what you meant?”

Subaru: “What’s with that normie outburst? Wait, I’m the normie!”

Subaru puts his hand to his head and pokes out his tongue. Rem gives a small laugh and puts her hand to her mouth, before clicking her throat and glancing at Subaru.

Rem: “If you don’t deny that and adorn me so in compliments, do you realize I will get carried away?”

Subaru: “Where did I adorn you with compliments, in that exchange? All I did was purposefully not deny you praising yourself. Eh, that said it’s unmistakable truth and there’s nothing deniable about it.”

Actually, if you let Subaru get away with unrestrainedly, unabashedly talking about Rem, things turn into something horrible with all the compliments flying around. Being that it’s midday with kids scuffling in the park, lots of their family members and neighbors are around. If Subaru starts with the lovey-dovey talk even once, the entire thing will escalate and inadvertently be the main topic of all the neighborhood gossip tomorrow.

That doesn’t sound so bad, is a tempting poison in Subaru’s thoughts, but he consciously ignores it and immerses himself in peace and harmony.

He closes his eyes while basking in sunlight, creating the illusion that he is floating upon the light’s warmth. Something begins to drag his consciousness away, his exhaustion after consecutive late nights overpowering his attention. His head grows heavy, wavers. And,

Subaru: “Wha—”

Rem: “If you are tired, take my shoulder. As Spica is currently monopolizing my arms.”

Subaru opens his eye to find Rem, who has scooched over to his side and is propping him up. With their height difference, his head will fit perfectly in the crook of her shoulder if he leans over.

Feeling some embarrassment, he looks down at Spica as she sleeps in Rem’s arms—with her father’s black hair, and her mother’s adorable face. A sweet, innocent life yet ignorant of the world.

Subaru: “Ohhh, that damn Spica. You might be my darling daughter, but you’re a bad girl for monopolizing my sanctuary.

You're sentenced to tickle torture later."

Rem: "You will have to wait until nighttime to monopolize my breasts."

Subaru: "We're in a park in the middle of the day right now so could you please watch what you say?!"

Hearing that incredible line prompts Subaru to jerk far, far back. He glances over, to find that Rem is blushing beet red. How to put it,

Subaru: "My wife is mega cute."

Rem: "Only because I am so loved."

The two share a smile. Rem's being beaming, Subaru's being kind of weird—but it's still a smile.

Getting embarrassed at their prolonged mutual gazing, Subaru scratches his cheek to collect himself. "Then, I'll oblige" he says as he boldly rests his head on Rem's shoulder.

Her long hair feels strangely nice as it tickles his cheeks in the wind. While sniffing its scent, Subaru rubs his cheek against Rem's shoulder.

Rem: "That tickles, darling."

Subaru: "Ah, sorry. Did something and it felt good and I got super excited. Now I'm following Spica's example and'm all settled down. I'll leave the being unsettled up to Rigel. Ewww, Rigel's suuuch a kiiiiid!"

Rigel: "I can hear you, stupid dad! Stop bringing me up all the time!"

Rem: "Rigel. Your sister is sleeping, please be more considerate."

Rigel: "This isn't goddamn right!"

Screams the frozen Rigel, but no one in the family's gonna back him up. Actually, nobody is going to help Rigel. His role is one of being teased.

Subaru finds that Rigel's personality, speech and behavior coincides a lot with his own, but Rigel's peers' neglect to shun him might be the only point where his luck outstrips Subaru's. That said, Subaru also felt that he was part of the community when he was a child. Rigel's future isn't looking so bright.

Subaru: "Gotta make sure Spica doesn't turn out like that. Rigel's unfortunate, but you take after Mom and have a bright future awaiting you. I'm just praying you don't get caught in the grips of a useless guy like me."

Rem: "There is not anybody who could substitute for you. You are the only copy of my darling in the world."

Subaru gives a small smile, and the two fall into silence. With the gentle wind tickling him, and Rem's body heat on his skin, this world of innocence could about swallow him.

Days of manual labor have built up some physical strain in Subaru. These occasional instances of family time are where he delights in the happiness of daily living. Basking in sunbeams, watching his son get teased by his friends, napping while cuddling up to his wife, while she cradles his daughter.

—Was this not sweet happiness?

Rem: "Subaru—"

Subaru opens his eyes at the sudden address. He glances over to see Rem, her head tilted slightly towards him. Her pale blue eyes reflect Subaru, her lips trembling, suggesting that she has something to say.

Subaru: "That name…"

Rem goes silent.

Subaru: "Been a while. You've only been calling me «darling» or «your father» lately."

Subaru closes his eye, his mouth relaxed, but Rem's tense. Her attitude makes Subaru think of several years ago, back when they had just run away, where this kind of thing was incredibly common. She'd been trying to keep Subaru from noticing, but Subaru paid more attention to Rem than she thought.

Subaru closes his eyes. Feels the breeze. Rem was the one who proposed they all go shopping today. Subaru has a bit of a guess as to why.

Subaru: "It's been eight years since that day, now."

Rem: "So you noticed…"

Subaru: "Well, it's a huge turning point for me… No, for us. I noticed, remembered, didn't forget… Would never forget."

The day he knelt before fate. Abandoned everything… and ran away.

He had meant to give up on everything. But there was one thing he couldn't surrender that day. Their decision that day, and her love— Because that was there, Subaru was now here.

Rem: "Subaru, do you…"

It's a nostalgic form of address, and one that Rem consciously phased out of using shortly after they fled to Kararagi. Partly to indicate their status as a couple to those around them, but also to make a change from the past.

Subaru had purposefully never referenced this fact until today, and Rem had never told him her reason for it either.

A whirlpool of complex emotion churns in Rem's eyes.

Rem: "…Have any regrets?"

Subaru: "Regrets?"

Rem: "Yes. About running away. About giving up. About throwing so much away. About, me being what you…"

Subaru: “If you say «settled for» I’ll get super mad. I get to come home hand-in-hand with Rigel and Spica! Oh, nah, don’t really need Rigel. Just leave him behind.”

Subaru sees Rigel’s face turn sour, but he feigns ignorance while shooting him the “I’m having an important discussion right now” look to send him hurtling down into the abyss. He turns back to Rem.

Subaru: “Y’know,”

Subaru: “This is seriously super late to mention, eight years down the line and all, and I really have no idea how much effect this’ll have after saying it tens or hundreds or thousands of times, but…”

Rem: “Yes.”

Subaru: “I love you more than anything in the world. You’re my only wife, and I’m your only man. You’re not the kinda cheap woman a guy like me could get by making compromises.”

He gets himself upright and bounces his finger off Rem’s forehead. Rem looks surprised as Subaru brings his face closer to hers.

Subaru: “Just as I pledged that day, everything I am belongs to you. I devote myself to you, give myself to you, live only for you. — Though now, also for our children.”

Subaru brings his face closer and steals a kiss, nothing more than fleeting contact.

While close enough to feel the other’s breath, Subaru makes a mischievous face, the one that never changes no matter how much he ages.

Subaru: “So, that ease you?”

Rem: “…I’m sorry. I am always uneasy. Because I continuously fall more deeply in love with you, Subaru. I believe that there could be nothing happier than this, and then it happens that I experience even greater, further happiness. Happiness, and love, and so unease.”

Tears well up in Rem's eyes while she speaks of happiness, simultaneously shaking her head. She puts her forehead to Subaru's, each sharing the other's warmth.

Rem: "It feels as though one day, my darling who I touch like this, will disappear."

Subaru: "Relax. I'm not leaving you, and I'm never gonna disappear. So long as your love for me hasn't exhausted, we'll never be separated."

Rem: "Subaru, my love for you would never be exhausted—"

Subaru: "Well then, together forever. I love you, Rem."

Again, Subaru kisses Rem. Teeth meet soft lips, her face frozen in surprise as Subaru plunges in deeper. Their tongues intertwine, her saliva hot on his tastebuds.

There is where he separates. Rem takes a little breath, her breathing now longer and heavier. Subaru raises his finger.

Subaru: "And besides,"

Subaru: "Don't say stupid things about it being a compromise or whatever. What's a compromise? You mean we had Rigel and Spica out of sympathy, not love? Spica's the embodiment of our planned love, and Rigel's a kid born from the recklessness and flaring passions of the love in our youth."

Rem: "…It certainly was a time when Rigel was born."

Says Subaru with hand on hip in lecturing posture. Rem smiles and counting the memories off on her fingers…

Rem: "We had moved to Kararagi and finally found jobs and a residence, and what we needed to do was slowly, carefully prepare our foundations to live, and yet…"

Subaru: "No well look, I was young and impatient."

Rem: "You were supposed to be exhausted after work, Subaru, and yet bedtime certainly saw you lively."

Subaru: "No, well, look, I was young and had stamina."

Rem: "The time that we acquired formal employment and the time I became pregnant were almost simultaneous. How paled my face turned then."

Subaru: "Sure are hard to accept, those follies of your youth."

Rigel's face sours at getting treated like a mistake, but he appears to read the mood and manages to control himself. Pretty good son. Subaru gives him a nod, and Rem also turns her gaze to him.

Rem: "But,"

Rem: "Honestly, I was happy when I was pregnant with Rigel."

Subaru: "And I was too. When I first found out, my nose leaked and I pissed myself a little, and after I got you to punch me to make sure I wasn't dreaming man it got bloody."

This probably happened because she had been inches from exploding in rage, but she punched him hard enough that when he slammed against the wall, the whole of their temporary residence slanted.

If Subaru hadn't managed to brace himself, he feasibly could have died. That one aside, Subaru remembers everything from when Rem told him she was pregnant, and all the warm feelings that surged through his chest back then.

But Rem shakes her head. Subaru tilts his head, not getting it. A slight shadow comes over Rem's smile.

Rem: "My happiness was surely different from your pure one, Subaru. What made me happy… was my delight that I would never lose you."

Subaru goes silent.

Rem: "Rigel is the bond between you and me in tangible form. The phrasing is not nice, but with a baby being born between us, we would be bound together by something that could never be severed… That is why I was happy.”

Maybe this was what was making her so anxious back then. They had abandoned everything and fled to a new land together, with only each other to cling to. Meaning that Rem was constantly terrified that she may lose Subaru.

Rem’s self-esteem is low enough to put up a good fight with Subaru’s. Considering how Rem undervalues herself, life with Subaru meant constant exhaustion between the extremes of happiness and the extremes of terror.

What ended those extremes was the new life born between them.

Subaru: “You didn’t believe?”

Rem: “No, I did. I believe in you more than anyone in the world, Subaru.”

Subaru: “Not that. I don’t mean not believing in me… You didn’t believe in yourself?”

Rem’s breath catches, and she gives a small nod. Her mental image of Subaru is inordinately grand. Her own presence, in opposition to that, must feel unnervingly minuscule.

—She must not have noticed that Subaru had always held the exact same unease. Even though Subaru had always considered Rem a girl far, far too good for himself.

It makes Subaru smile. Seeing that, Rem puffs out her cheeks.

Rem: “Fine. I was stupid. Of course you would laugh.”

Subaru: “No no no. I just had that thought again. That you and I have the exact same character, but despite that my wife truly is the cutest in the world.”

Subaru’s sneak attack makes Rem freeze for a moment in surprise, and she blushes. Seeing her reaction makes Subaru feel vividly that yes, he loved her. He loved Rem more than anyone in the world. Was in love with her. He could scream it from the top of lungs. And in reality, he occasionally did. They're a pretty famous, fiery couple in the neighborhood.

Rem: "—Rigel, Spica."

Subaru: "Hm?"

Subaru tilts his head. Rem looks up at him.

Rem: "They are both the names of stars. The names of stars from the place where you lived."

Subaru: "Yup. My dad was fundamentally a crazy, unfortunate kind of man who'd spell «common sense» as «common cents», but I think him naming me Subaru was a good decision. I really like it, my name. Subaru's a star name too, see.4"

An assignment in primary school required that the students investigate the origins of their names, which was how Subaru came to learn the history behind his own. Upon learning that he was named after a cluster of the stars that painted the night sky, he felt uncharacteristic glee.

Ever since, despite his tendency to drop hobbies quickly, perusal of manuals and indexes about stars alone remained a long, long-standing custom. He knew the names of most stars, and whenever he had the opportunity to name something, his selection would of course be,

Subaru: "A star name, basically. My online usernames were star names, and if I ever needed an alias or a fake name it'd probably be from a star. In some sense, aren't these sparkle names?!"

Rem: "I would not know in what sense you mean, but I think it's wonderful to take names from stars. When we have our third, let's do the same."

Subaru: "Talking about a third right now's kinda pretty hasty. Like, Spica's still an infant."

Rem: “I believe it would be fine to entrust her to Rigel once she’s no longer breastfeeding. Why do you think I cautioned you that we couldn’t have another child until Rigel was larger?”

Subaru: “It doesn’t really stand out since I’m around, but you’re pretty damn harsh on Rigel too, Rem!”

Subaru stands up, brushing off his behind. He turns his back toward Rem, revolves his hips,

Subaru: “Wanna put our shopping down, so say it’s ‘bout time to go home. Outside we have the public eye bothering us and we can’t get as lovey-dovey as we want.”

Rem: “Indeed. I am in the mood for full-strength full-power lovey-dovey for the first time in a while.”

Subaru: “C-Can my libido really keep up with an oni’s stamina…?”

Subaru mutters to himself in terror, then holds his hand out to Rem, still seated on the bench. Rem leisurely takes his hand and pulls herself up, simultaneously pulling Subaru into her arms. Subaru takes his time relishing the warmth of hugging both Rem and Spica, then…

Subaru: “Right, off we go then. To our home.”

Rem: “Yes, darling.”

Subaru holds the shopping bag in one hand, Rem’s hand in the other. Subaru walks a half-step ahead of Rem, who huddles up close behind him as she follows. They go over to their son, still frozen in the middle of the square.

Subaru: “Hey, my son who is presently enjoying the Sapporo Snow Festival. This game of Freeze Oni isn’t going anywhere and watching it is the peak of boring, so me, mom, and your sister are going home. You go stay at a friend’s overnight.”

Rigel: “Aren’t you just plain goddamn throwing me out?! Or no, actually, let’s talk about how my parents were there in the middle of a park in broad daylight, kissing.”

Subaru: “That’s what you get, Mr. Jealous. Too bad, Rigel. This Rem’s for my use only.”

Rigel: “Shut up!!”

Rigel screams in anger, setting his sharp sanpaku gaze on the chortling Subaru. But Rigel sees that Subaru seems to enjoy all this, and gives a long, deep sigh. Rigel shakes his head.

Rigel: “Cool it, cool it, me. Don’t get caught up in dad’s pace. Cool it, cooool it. Right, cooled it. So, what were you talking about with mom?”

Subaru: “Hmm? Stuff like how your name’s a star name. Actually, the first candidate for your name was Vega, but…”

Rigel: “That’s badass! Why didn’t you?!”

Subaru: “Uh, because it’s badass? Felt like you’d be hard to deal with in your rebellious age, so we stopped on that one. I knew that age would pass eventually, but this father’s heart of mine didn’t wanna get bested by its son.”

Rigel: “That’s how far you imagined the future of a just-born infant?!”

Rigel jumps up as he retorts to Subaru’s clever joking. And…

???: “Ahh, Rigel moved! Rigel broke the rules of Freeze Oni!”

Rigel: “Ah!”

The Oni verbally assaults Rigel at this critical juncture. Rigel’s throat freezes. Subaru gives Rigel’s shoulders a slap.

Subaru: “Guys who break the rules of Freeze Oni play a penalty game. Oni’s gonna get tickled ‘till he can’t laugh or cry anymore. — Good luck.”

Rigel: “Don’t say something so stupid with such a serious expr… Hey, what, you guys! Sto— Wait! Don’t take this man’s words seriously! Wa, wuahaaaaaaaaaaa—!”

Children appear one-after-another to chase Rigel around. Rigel flees. But they capture him. They push him to the ground, his limbs restrained, and assault his body with their merciless fingers.

Subaru: “Farewell, my son. You were a good boy. Your father was the one at fault.”

Rem: “Rigel. Your mother and father have important things to discuss, so stay overnight at a friend’s house for today. Also, you are forbidden to use your horn. So as not to tear your clothes.”

Rigel: “I, I’ll remember this, you heartless parents—!!”

Spica sees her big bro getting tortured by scores of tickly hands and makes a happy-sounding noise. Seems like she’s got a promising kind of personality to her. She’ll probably become a bigger star in the Natsuki household than Rigel.

With his somewhat twisted exhibition of love for his darling Rigel conveyed, Subaru takes Rem’s hand and starts walking. Towards the tranquility and happiness-filled abode in which his precious family live.

Rem: “Subaru.”

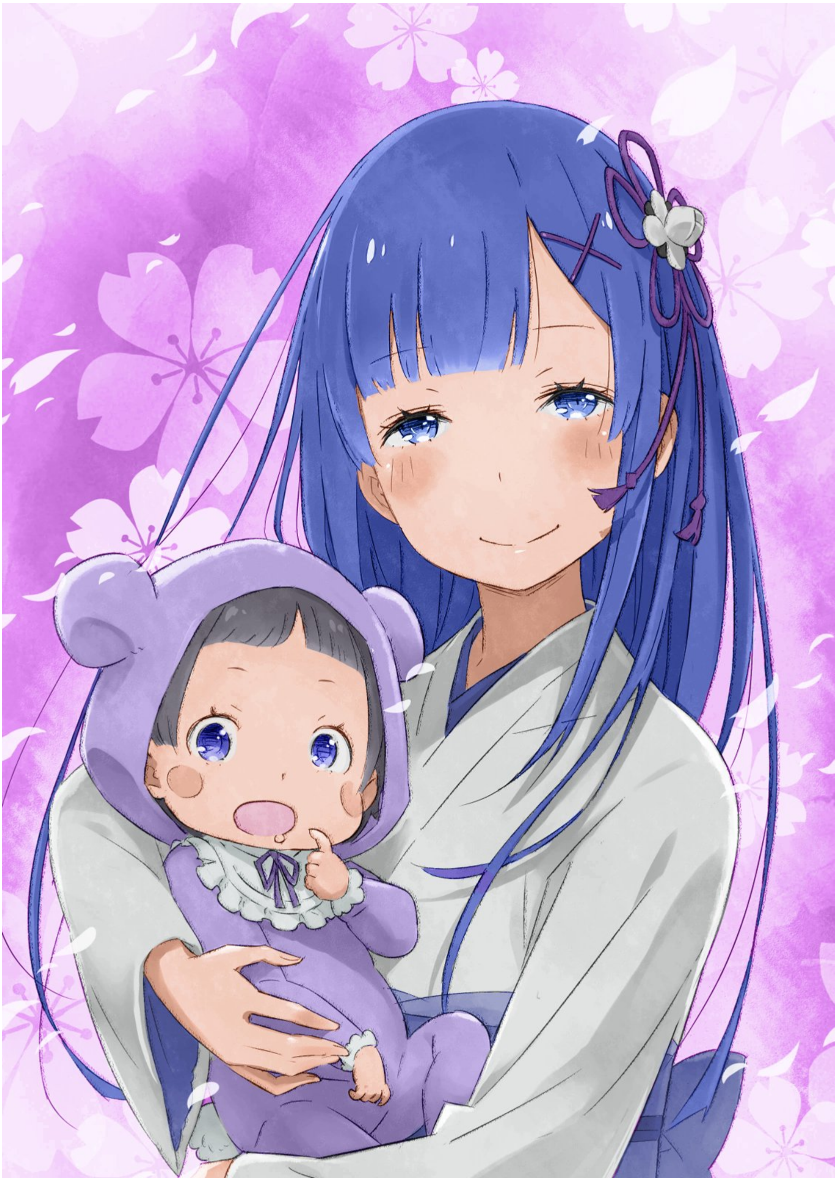
Subaru: “Hm?”

Rem tugs on his hand, prompting Subaru to stop walking. He glances back. The moment he does, a strong wind blows past the two. Subaru unwittingly closes his eyes, slowly opening them again once the wind’s noise subsides.

The wind caresses Rem’s long, blue hair, which glimmers so much as if to melt into the sunlight. Rem, with her hair grown long. Subaru more or less knows in counter to whom she had done that. When Subaru now thought of long-haired girls, the first image to arise in his mind was that of the most precious woman in the world, right here in front of him.

Cradling their beloved daughter, her long blue hair gently tousled in wind, Rem smiles at Subaru. For Subaru, that was the smile of his most beloved, which evoked adoration in him paralleled by no other.

Rem: “I, right now, am happier than any in the world.”



Interlude II:
Let's Eat

1

—In the swaying dragon carriage, Rem was only thinking of him.

Suddenly hearing someone calling her name, Rem softly lifted her face and narrowed her eyes against the bright radiance of the sun.

She gazed at the entourage of dragon carriages ahead. Inside them, were the wounded soldiers of the battle with the White Whale.

All in all, only their most urgent wounds had been treated and more than a few of them were still seriously injured. Yet, despite their pain, the corners of their lips revealed only the sense of accomplishment for having fulfilled a long-cherished dream. After carrying this dream for so many years, to see it finally realized meant more to them than injury or death. Having achieved what they set out to do, they now ride towards the Royal Capital on their triumphant return.

Taking all this into her sight, Rem hated herself for not being able to hold back the pain inside her heart.

Crusch: "You look anxious, Rem. Are you still worrying about him?"

Rem: "…Crusch-sama."

Glancing towards the voice, it was Crusch sitting beside her.

Wrapped in light bandages, it was commendable how Rem revealed no signs of the seriousness of her injuries, but it was impossible to conceal her depleted stamina. The fact that they rode in a carriage was also because Crusch didn't feel comfortable letting Rem ride a ground dragon alone in this condition. So she resolved to accompany her, at least until the Royal Capital is within their sights.

Sensing Rem's unsettled look, Crusch casually shrugged.

Crusch: "Compared to this…"

She shook her head,

Crusch: "He has Wilhelm, Ferris, the elites of the expedition, and Ricardo's mercenary company, all there to assist him. Besides, Anastasia must have predicted this turn of events. Even if the adversary's strength is a concern, I don't think there is any reason they would lose."

Rem: "Even so, I still can't help but selfishly worry."

Crusch: "Still can't remove the source of anxiety, huh… When the obstacle is within you, it would be possible to improve yourself until it is overcome. But when it's about other people, it does become quite difficult… Ah, I am quite terrible at comforting people after all, my apologies."

Seeing Rem sink deeper into her worries, Crusch realized she had misspoken and lowered her eyes. But seeing the always cold and formal Crusch suddenly so out of character, Rem couldn't help but curl the corners of her lips into a smile.

Crusch: "Mn, that's good."

Seeing this, Crusch nodded contently,

Crusch: "Natsuki Subaru said it before, «a smile suits Rem better, doesn't it?». Even though it sounded like it came out of nowhere, it wasn't an entirely stupid thing to say."

Rem: "Crusch-sama… You know when you smile, you give off a completely different impression. You're usually stern, yet once you smile you become…"

Crusch: "People do say that. I can't say I'm not angry about it. I guess just because I don't smile for no reason in front of people, I'm becoming rather unlovable…"

Rem wasn't sure whether to take that as a joke, but seeing Crusch's gentle smile, her lips opened into a smile as well. Courageous and proud, to Rem, who had always been lacking confidence, Crusch was an ideal woman. But of course, in Rem's heart, the highest honor was reserved for none other than her older sister, Ram.

Crusch: "Ahead of their path is the Witch Cult… Even though it was more or less to be expected considering Emilia's identity, until we know more about them, caution is necessary. Natsuki Subaru realizes this, but surely Lord Mathers has a plan as well?"

Rem: "The depths of my master's mind, Rem couldn't possibly know. Even if you ask me, I wouldn't be able to say."

Crusch: "That's harsh. Now that we're allies after all, a little information slipping around wouldn't be too bad."

Perhaps it was meant to distract Rem from sinking into negative thoughts again. Indeed, it was thanks to Crusch that Rem wasn't left alone with her worries.

Besides, Crusch made a good point. A man such as Roswaal L. Mathers must have had a grand plan for all this. Surely Subaru's actions were all furthering his master's goals, while also at the same time recovering his lost reputation.

Or, actually, with the slaying of the White Whale, his reputation had already far surpassed what it was before.

—Hero, Natsuki Subaru.

To Rem, whose heart and future he had saved, this assessment is only a matter of course, and considering the bright future he has yet to create, it is also more than justified.

And then, to be at the side of that radiant hero, a place he could occasionally turn to and make sure that she was there: if only that place could hold her existence, then there is nothing else in the world Rem would wish for. With this alone, she would be content.

When Subaru appears in her mind, Rem's heart is always full of turmoil. It becomes warm, and perhaps calm. Yet somehow it also becomes full of pain, of anxiety, of longing and worry. To give her heart at once so much happiness and so much suffering, only Subaru could do this to her.

With a smile carved upon her lips, Rem's thoughts turned to her future: her and Subaru's future.

Stealing a glance at the side of Rem's face, Crusch exhaled a sigh of relief. Caressing the scabbard of her Knight's sword with her fingers, her eyes stared in silence into the road ahead—Her thoughts were of the long path to the Royal Capital.

Crusch: "—h?"

Rem: "—?"

Crusch squinted her eyes, the same instant Rem heard a noise and raised her head.

What Crusch's eyes captured was something off about the dragon carriage up ahead. The noise Rem heard came from the same direction. In fact, both clues were leading to the same conclusion.

In Crusch's eyes, the dragon carriage disintegrated. In Rem's ears, the prelude to collapse echoed like the sound of raindrops.

A mist of blood sprayed out. The image of the dragon carriage in front of them suddenly transformed into a pitiful blur.

The ground dragon, the carriage, and all the wounded inside were completely uprooted, and then shattered mercilessly by overwhelming devastation.

Crusch: "—! Enemy attack!"

Her astonished throat delayed only an instant, before Crusch bellowed out the rally call. With Crusch at the helm, the surrounding dragon carriages sensed the crisis and prepared for battle.

Rem, pushing away all sensations of injury and exhaustion and with her morning star in hand, stood up at once— On the other side of the blood mist was the upright shadow of a man.

Who is that man, now burning into her sight, standing in the middle of the road?

Without weapon, without armor, without fear. Without compassion or malice or intent—!

Crusch: "—Run him over!!"

Crusch's command came roaring from atop the driver's platform. Hearing the command, the Knight-driver snapped the reins in acknowledgment. With a cry, the ground dragon led the carriage charging— with surging momentum capable of shredding any victim coming into contact.

Without deviation from the mark, it was a head-on collision into the upright figure. The man showed no intention of moving. And just like that, the two objects touched, the slender body about to be ripped to shreds by the—

Rem: "Crusch-sama—!"

With this cry, Rem picked up Crusch by the waist and flew off the side of the carriage. There was no time to reach for the driver, Rem landed biting her lip, thinking this.

And then, right after—

Man: "Agh, really? Don't do that. I didn't even do anything, and someone wants to crush me to death. Really, that isn't what people should be doing. I don't think so."

He spoke with the relaxed demeanor of a man leisurely walking in a park or basking in the sun or some such situation.

If it weren't for the shattered debris of what used to be the dragon carriage, Rem would not have found this scene to be so bizarrely horrifying.

No matter how you look at it, the man doesn't seem anything out of the ordinary.

His body was slender, and his neat white hair was neither long nor short, nor particularly odd. His black clothes were neither flamboyant nor shabby, and his face was not eye-catching at all. He looked so very ordinary that perhaps no matter where you put him, he would not seem out of place, and if you met him on the street, you'd forget him within ten seconds.

But the fact is, upon encountering this man, the ground dragon was ripped in two, its feet still in mid-stride, and then, along with the driver and carriage, shattered into countless indiscernible pieces.

The most frightening part is, though Rem never looked away, all she saw was this man merely standing there.

Not doing anything, just by standing there the man survived collision with a charging dragon carriage, and still stood there as if it were nothing.

Crusch: "Thank you, Rem, for saving me. But… it seems the situation hasn't improved."

Still being carried in Rem's arms, Crusch thanked her, stood back up, and in the same instant drew her Knight's sword from its sheath. For the driver who followed her order and was shattered into a thousand pieces as a result, Crusch grieved his death in her heart and narrowed her eyes,

Crusch: "To so cruelly murder my subjects, do not think this will end so easily… Who are you?"

With her naked blade gleaming with the intent to kill, she threw these words at the man. Taking in these words, the man touched his chin and began nodding as if he understood.

Man: "Ah I see I see right right, you don't know about me. But I know about you. The whole Royal Capital… actually, the whole country is talking about you. You are a candidate to be the next Monarch, after all. Even I, so out of touch with the world, can imagine what a great burden…"

Crusch: "Idle talk ends now— Answer my question, or the next time I shall slay you."

Man: “That’s really extreme! But then you wouldn’t be able to run a country otherwise. Yet this sentiment, I really don’t understand it one bit… This desire to wear the crown, and take up all those responsibilities, how can anyone understand it? Ah, ah, even though I don’t understand, I won’t disagree with you. I’m not so arrogant as that, not one bit. Unlike you…”

Not paying any attention to Crusch’s demand, the man just kept on and on. And then,

Crusch: “—As I said, that was the last chance.”

As Crusch coldly pronounced these words, her arm swung out a blade-of-wind.

Crusch’s wind-magic combined with swordsmanship unleashes an invisible slash— Renowned as “One Blow, One-Hundred Felled”5, it is a powerful ultra-long-range slash that can sever a man’s body without him even knowing where, or who, it came from.

Back then, when the Witchbeast Great Rabbit appeared in the plains of the Karsten Duchy, she slew all the Witchbeasts under the Great Rabbit’s command in her first ever battle, and it was that time onward Duchess Crusch Karsten earned the name “One Blow, One-Hundred Felled”.

Even the White Whale’s adamant skin was opened by this blade, as it played no small part in bringing down that colossal Witchbeast. Compared to the White Whale, this small, frail body could not possibly withstand… Yet,

Man: “…Attacking someone while they’re talking, just where are your manners?”

Head tilted, as if flaunting how his body took no damage, the man just stood there.

His existence was utterly unaffected by a slash that could rend even the White Whale’s armor. The man’s body— No, even his clothes were unscathed.

He did not defend the attack. Rather, it was something wholly different and unknown.

Crusch could not help but hold her breath, and Rem froze in place, after witnessing something so far outside the realm of understanding. In front of them, the man sighed for the first time.

Man: “You know…”

He went on with a tone lowered by displeasure,

Man: “I was talking. Wasn’t I talking just now? And then you interrupted me. Isn’t that a bit impolite? Don’t you think that was wrong? I have the right to speak… even though I don’t really want to have to point this out, but to not interrupt people when they’re speaking… isn’t that just common social decency? You’re free to listen or not listen I won’t bother you about that, but just what are you trying to do by not letting me talk?”

As he ranted, the man occasionally stomped the ground with a displeased expression on his face. And just like this, he pointed his finger at the two in front of him, both now eerily speechless.

Man: “And now you’re quiet, what is this? You’re listening. You were listening, right? Wasn’t I asking you something? Then give me some kind of reply, it should be like that, right? You won’t even do that, don’t even want to do that. Ah, ah, freedom. That’s your freedom. You see me ranting and you want to kill me, then when I ask you a question, you ignore me like I’m the wind. So, it’s like that, is it? Well you’re free to do that. Alright, let’s just say it’s like that. But then, what is that supposed to mean?”

Seeing the two standing silently in front of him bracing for an attack, he tilted his head and stared at them with his sharp eyes, and then, with a smothered voice,

Man: “You’re disregarding my rights— One of my only few possessions, right?”

Just as a chill ran up Rem’s back, the man took a step forward. His drooping arm lifted, sweeping up a small gust of wind.

Then, on the same line as the motion of his arm— The earth, the air, and the world parted in two.

Round and round and round, Crusch's severed left shoulder flew into the air.

Still grasping onto the sheath of a Knight's sword, the arm dropped down in a spray of blood. Crusch, blown off her feet by the impact, fell to the ground, convulsing in pain and mass loss of blood.

Rem: "Crusch-sama—"

Stunned for few seconds, Rem rushed to the side of the fallen Crusch. She placed her hands on Crusch's wound and with the small final remnant of her Mana, applied all her power to stop the bleeding.

Crusch's shoulder flowed bright crimson, the flesh, bones, nerves and arteries were all perfectly severed. A clean and masterful attack, Rem sighed with a rather inappropriate admiration.

Crusch: "Ferris… Oh… You?"

Under Rem's healing hands, Crusch looked on with unfocused eyes, muttering indiscernibly, and, with her remaining right arm, grasped tightly onto Rem's knee. Proof that she still possessed the strength to live. Crusch clenched her teeth, enduring her pain.

Rem kept her eyes on the man's every movement.

She has no means of defending against his strikes. At the first sign of an attack, to leap away with Crusch is the only thing she could do.

In a moment of eerie realization—for some reason Crusch and Rem are all alone—why hasn't anyone come to their aid? In this critical juncture, with their lord gravely wounded, those Knights who did not cower even in the face of the White Whale, why—

???: "Ahh, seriously… No matter how much we eat, it's not enough! This is why we can never stop living. Eating, feeding, chewing, biting, eating down, eating up, chewing up, chewing down, licking, lapping, sucking, inhaling, devouring, gluttonous drinking!

Gluttony! Ahh— Thanks for the meal!”

All of a sudden from behind came the shrill, ear-splitting voice of a teenager.

Like the first man, the youth’s voice sent chills running up Rem’s spine. Her body stiff, she turned to look at him. The youth stood among several empty carriages, from head to toe he was covered in blood.

His long, dark-brown hair extending all the way down to his knees, his body was short, about the same height as Rem, and perhaps two or three years younger—perhaps not much older than the kids in the village near the mansion.

Under his hair, only a thin, blood-soaked rag covers his slender body. Every inch of his skin is coated with blood.

Of course, none of the blood was his. It was from the Knights lying at his feet.

While Crusch and Rem were in a standoff with the man in front, the Knights had engaged the enemy behind them. In the end, before Rem even sensed any combat, it was already over.

Rem: “You people, are…”

Her voice quivering, Rem, with Crusch in her arms, backed up until both enemies were within her field of vision. Blood from Crusch’s shoulder had dyed the road red. Now the air turned cold, as if mocking their weakness, their fear.

Hearing the question, the man and the youth looked at each other.

SETOWI

As if it had all been arranged, they nodded to each other. Then with the same deranged smile of violent delight, they announced their name.

Man: “Sin Archbishop of the Witch Cult, representing Greed, Regulus Corneas!”

Youth: “Sin Archbishop of the Witch Cult, representing Gluttony, Ley Batenkaitos!”

2

Ley: “We sensed our pet got killed, so we came to have a look. But then, ahh— What a delightful harvest! So great, how great, pretty great, sure’s great, maybe great, surely great, isn’t it great, definitely sure is great! Tenacity! Love! Hatred! Chivalry! So many joys and sorrows interspersed! Which’s exactly why, which’s exactly why, eating them is filling![6]”

Witch Cult— and Sin Archbishops, to boot.

When those words reached Rem’s ears, she stood frozen in place.

With an exhilarated expression the youth stomped on the ground while howling in strange noises. Spinning, as if dancing, his arms pointed to the fallen Knights, and then looked at them as if with overwhelming compassion.

Ley: “Sure’s great, to come over in person to do the eating. We haven’t really gotten a chance to meet anyone so full of grit like these guys lately. Our starvation feels sated for once in ages!”

Regulus: “That’s what I don’t understand about you, Batenkaitos, your hunger isn’t real hunger, and the one being filled isn’t even you. Why can’t you be satisfied with just the way you are? We only truly possess what we hold in our own two hands and can carry with our own two arms. If you realize that, you will be able to control your desires, no?”

Ley: “We don’t need, and we don’t like, lectures. We’re not going to deny what you're saying or say it's incorrect, but we also don't care. Ahh— Seriously, we and us coooouldn't care less about anything but satiating this hunger!"

Batenkaitos of Gluttony descended into a fit of deranged laughter, and Regulus of Greed shrugged disinterestedly.

Two Sin Archbishops appearing in the same place at the same time, Rem sank into thought.

In terms of strength, defeating these two is impossible.

Even though Crusch's bleeding had been stopped, she is still in critical condition. Whether the Knights are dead or comatose, they can no longer fight.

To heal Crusch, Rem had already overspent her mana, though if she were to transform into demon mode, she will be able to absorb mana from the atmosphere and put up a fight. But against these two, victory is inconceivable.

On the one hand is the flawless offense and defense of Greed. Known to be able to capture a city single-handedly, it is impossible to measure the full extent of his power. On the other hand, Gluttony is no less formidable. Though his abilities are as-of-yet unknown, he has managed to wipe out an entire battle tested army within seconds. No matter what, Rem could not see victory waiting for her in the near future.

She quickly scanned the battlefield; the Liger carriages are nowhere to be seen. The demi-human mercenaries were tasked with transporting wounded soldiers—and the head of the White Whale. They might have escaped in the chaos and be retreating full speed toward the Royal Capital right now. Commanding them must be the Fang of Iron Vice Captain—Hetaro—bright and resourceful, and possessing great common sense and judgement…

If given enough time, perhaps he will return with reinforcements.

But, even so—it will probably not arrive in time for Rem.

Rem: "White Whale…"

Regulus: “Eh?”

Ley: “Huh?”

She muttered quietly, and both Sin Archbishops tilted their head.

She held her breath for an instant, having found a clue to stall for time. Before they lost interest, she continued.

Rem: “Did you want the Whale back? Because we are transporting the severed head to the Royal Capital right now.”

Ley: “Head? Ahh, so that’s what was stinking funny. Well, we don’t really need the head or anything, and not like there’s any point taking the dead one back, so it’s fine. We can just make another one if we want… Well, it’d take the same amount of time to raise it though.”

Saying this, Batenkaitos snapped his neck and ground his teeth,

Ley: “Compared to this…”

He said forcefully, and continued,

Ley: “What we’re more interested in than the White Whale’s death is whoever it was who killed it. Maybe the thing wasn’t perfect, but they still killed something built up over four-hundred years of making. We were certainly anticipating a uniformly ripe, in-season bunch… Ahh, this was more than we could’ve imagined!”

His head shaking up and down, his long hair wildly swinging, the youth laughed with saliva flying from his mouth, clacking his teeth as he did so.

Ley: “Love! Chivalry! Hatred! Tenacity! Accomplishment! The utter satisfaction of feeling that which was, for so long, so long, hoarded, piled, simmered and boiled, passing down our throat! Does a gourmet banquet greater than this truly exist?! Maybe not, likely not, surely not, plainly not, not a chance, not any chance, not any chance it could be! Gluttonous drinking! Gluttony! Any and everything! Our heart, our stomach, trembles in delight and fullness!”

Nothing he was saying made any sense.

As if losing control, Batenkaitos broke into shrill, convulsive laughter. Silently, Rem turned her eyes to Regulus, and Regulus waved hello.

Regulus: “Unfortunately, unlike him… I’m here purely, purely by accident… Not my intention at all… Of course, do I have hunger and desires like his? To hold such selfish, meaningless desires… Unlike his unsatisfied stomach torturing him, I, on the other hand, am completely, utterly, content with myself!”

Spreading his arms wide like a cross, Regulus stood in front of Rem with an utterly refreshing expression.

Crusch’s left arm was severed, yet his two arms are still free to bend and turn, it was like an act to flaunt his very existence.

Regulus: “Conflict, I hate that… For me, just merely enjoying the calm and safety of regular life is enough, I have no more need than that. Static, unchanging time and myself, that’s the best. Because my hands are small and powerless, for me, just for myself, just to protect my meager possessions I must use up all my strength. That’s my kind of fragile existence.”

Regulus emphasized it by clenching his hand into a fist. The hand that claimed countless lives, and the arm of a woman. Such an explanation is just taking it too far.

Be it Batenkaitos, a madman in a trance of deranged laughter, or Regulus, a self-righteous, self-satisfied and self-indulged blabbermouth, they certainly are Witch Cultists.

A storm of boiling rage was rising in her heart.

Rem laid Crusch, still faintly breathing, down on the grassy plain. She forced her quivering legs to stand. In her hand, she held her morningstar, and squeezing out the final drop of her depleted mana, spears of ice formed in the air around her.

Seeing this, Batenkaitos and Regulus’s expressions changed.

Regulus: "Was anybody listening? I believe I said I don't want to fight? If you're going take an attitude like that, then, then that's ignoring my wishes… That's violating my rights. One of the few meager possessions I was permitted to have… My property. Taken from me. —To me, already so few in my desires, this is… unforgivable!"

Rem: "Enough is enough, Witch Cultist."

Raising her head toward Regulus, Rem pronounced these words firm and resolute. Toward the disappointed-looking Regulus, Rem rattled her iron chains.

Rem: "Sooner or later, a hero will appear. The amount of pain and suffering your self-indulgence and conceit had caused in the world, will be known to that hero. Rem's deeply beloved, one and only, hero."

Ley: "Ehh, a hero. Well then, we'll be looking forward to them too. If you believe in them so much, that guy must be delicious for sure!"

Clapping his hands, body angled forward, Batenkaitos stuck his tongue out at Rem. His eyes were not the eyes of a man looking at an enemy, much less at a woman. They were the eyes of a starving beast looking at his food.

The fallen Knights behind Batenkaitos began to blur, and became indistinguishable.

Their existence, their position, none of it is now comprehensible to Rem. Why are they lying there, who are they, and what relation do they have to herself?

Just like the nightmare of one's existence being erased by the White Whale's mist. So, the Whale's master, Gluttony, possessed the same Authority.

Rem: "…Head Maid of the Household of Margrave Roswaal L. Mathers, Rem—"

Intending to proclaim her identity, Rem shook her head. In this moment, the name she really wanted to say was,

Rem: "—Right now, I am only someone who is beloved by the person she loves. Companion of the hero, the one I love the most in all the world, no matter what. Natsuki Subaru's companion, Rem."

A pristine white horn emerged from her forehead; an immense surge of mana flew into her body from the atmosphere.

Her body drinking in new strength, the chain of her morning star writhing, rattling, the ice spears around her ringing in anticipation.

She opened her eyes, taking in the world and the feeling of the atmosphere. In her mind, she was seeing his face.

Rem: "Prepare yourselves, Sin Archbishops. Rem's hero shall bring punishment upon you!"

Raising her morning star, the same instant the ice spears flew, Rem's body shot forth. As if in reply, Batenkaitos' mouth stretched wide open, full of fangs.

Ley: "Ahh, nice backbone— Well, let's eat!"

Clash met clash, and in that instant, she thought—

“I wish, when he realizes I am gone, it would cause a small ripple in his heart.”

—This alone, was what Rem wished for in her final moment.

Interlude III:
To Each, Their Oaths

1

—Lying on the bed, her expression was serene. To Subaru she looked like she was sleeping.

Her lashes are so long… He thought in a daze, gazing at her closed eyes. She'd usually make an effort to keep her face expressionless, but in her sleep, a softness befitting her age was showing on her cheeks. Come to think of it, Subaru had never seen her asleep.

She always woke before him and went to sleep after he did. Subaru knew, to keep herself resolute, she had always tried to bury the childish side of her, but that stubborn facade had collapsed so many times before Subaru's eyes.

Be it surprised, or embarrassed, pouting or about to cry, or after opening their hearts her smile gleaming under her tears, there should be so many, so many chances to see them again—

Subaru: "—Rem."

Even calling her name, caressing her soft, white cheeks, she made no response.

On the bed, deep in her slumber, the maid's dress so familiar on her shoulders, the white headband that adorned her hair so blue and beautiful as the sky, were all gone.

The attire she wore in her work, and in battle—She had no need for them now.

???: "There you are."

In the room silent and stagnant as though time had stopped, someone called to Subaru.

Slowly turning, as though reluctantly, he looked behind him. It was a young woman with long, softly swaying hair. She wore a simple yet elegant dark blue evening dress, and even as she walked toward him, she seemed overflowing with grace.

But all her movements had a slightly muddled hesitation about them, which combined with the elegance of her person gave out a rather odd impression. Subaru cannot help but feel a sense of awkwardness when he is near her.

Long Haired Girl: “She…”

Subaru: “Still hasn’t changed. Even though I can’t do anything… I thought I could at least stay here with her. But that’s such a cowardly thing to say.”

Long Haired Girl: “Still, this… would make her happy, wouldn’t it?”

Seeing Subaru’s downcast expression, the woman timidly tried to console him. But hearing this, Subaru shot back a stare at once fierce, bitter, and cruel. His senses sharpened at her words; his eyes locked onto hers. Without meaning to, it was already far beyond his control. Noticing his reaction, the young woman placed her hands over her lips, “I’m sorry”, she apologized.

Long Haired Girl: “I said something I shouldn’t have, and hurt you, didn’t I?”

Subaru: “No… No, I am the one who should apologize. I was only venting my anger all pent up inside… If I behave like this, Rem will be really, really angry with me, won’t she? «You shouldn’t be hurting people’s feelings like that, Subaru», or something like that.”

He shrugged and said that softly in Rem’s voice. In his mind, he heard her voice saying those words. A voice only he could hear. His impression sounded nothing like her, but there is not a person left in the world who could point that out.

Against Subaru’s empty words and gestures, the woman sadly lowered her eyes, and held her left wrist with her right hand.

As if a shadow had descended between them, the room returned to silence.

This familiar feeling… Natsuki Subaru shouldn't stay like this, should he? Subaru shook his head internally.

To sink into the depths of an ocean of despair, is easy, even if only so the piercing anguish would go away. But it doesn't suit him—as the man she believes in, as the man Rem loves above all the world, this is not what Natsuki Subaru should do.

Never.

Subaru: "…You were looking for me, then?"

Long Haired Girl: "Yes, I want to hold a meeting with everyone present, so I've asked everyone to gather in the lounge, if it's alright with…"

Nodding with an expression like she's just been saved, the woman got right to the point. But then she stopped halfway through and furrowed her brows rather awkwardly. It took a while before Subaru noticed this.

Subaru: "My name is Natsuki Subaru."

Long Haired Girl: "…I'm sorry, Natsuki Subaru-sama. I will be sure to remember. Even though I've been told how much I am indebted to you… Please excuse me, my apologies!"

Subaru: "It can't be helped, can it? There must a lot of things you need to remember right now, don't worry about it."

As if to say she was very, very sorry, the young woman lowered her head.

Then, seeing her recover again with perfect grace, even femininity, Subaru cannot help but feel a sense of surreal incongruity stabbing at his chest. But even Subaru wasn't brash enough to say this out loud.

Shaking his head, Subaru decided to put that aside for now, and stood up.

Turning to the girl on the bed, he gently touched the hair on her forehead.

Subaru: “I’ll be back, Rem.”

Breathing softly, she really exists.

—Having been forgotten by all the world, this was her only remaining existence.

With Rem behind his back, Subaru turned to face the young woman.

Subaru: “The lounge is it? Let’s not make them wait, let’s go.”

Long Haired Girl: “Yes, let’s go, Natsuki Subaru-sama.”

Her head slightly inclining forward, softly smiling, she seemed at that moment like something out of a dream—her long, green hair, flowing with her every movement.

Hating having to admit this, Subaru turned away, hiding a genuine smile emerging on his face.

Subaru: “Thank you for coming to fetch me, Miss Crusch.”

With this name, Subaru thanked the long-haired girl—who seem to have become a different person entirely.

2

—By the time Subaru arrived in the Royal Capital, it was already over.

His conversation with Emilia on the road were all gone from his mind.

The girl sitting safely next to him, Subaru should feel content, and relieved, having finally, finally saved her. But in the relentlessly galloping dragon carriage, the only thing on Subaru’s mind was the other girl.

Emilia: “Rem… Who is that?”

Looking confused, she tilted her head as she said this.

He scrambled to look for the smallest hint of a joke, something in her voice, in her expression, hoping against hope the words “Just kidding~” would come out of her mouth…

Whether it’s Petra, or the other kids, no one remembered her.

Having confirmed this fact with everyone on the carriage, Subaru commanded the driver to rush to the Royal Capital with all haste, on his face was the desperate expression of someone riding into death itself.

Impossible. There must be a mistake.

It was all going so well. Everyone was saved, the objective was completed. Despite enduring so much pain and sorrow, taking so many scars within his heart that will never, ever heal, everything worked out in the end.

And still—

???: “Aha! It’s Subaru-kyun! Impressive, Crusch-sama, you managed to find that capricious little stray!”

On the way to the lounge, seeing the two in the hallway, someone called out to them.

Shaking around in a short dress, liberated from the Knight’s garments, a pair of catlike ears twitched. Ferris walked over to them and gently picked up Crusch’s hands.

Crusch: “Ferris-san…”

Ferris: “I’m just Ferris! Ferris and Crusch-sama have known each other for a very long time-nyan. If you still add a -san to my name I’m going to die of loneliness and despair-nyan.”

Holding up Crusch’s hands in one hand, Ferris used the other to nudge Crusch in the shoulder. At such affectionate interaction, Crusch looked like she wasn’t sure what to do with herself, but essentially accepted it as it is, and with a “Sorry”, she lowered her head.

Crusch: “To become just like before… Even though it’s not easy, I will try my best, Ferris… Yes. Just Ferris.”

Ferris: “It’s alright-nyan, because Ferris is always Crusch-sama’s companion, and will always stay by your side. And to be together with such a cute version of Crusch-sama, Ferris will find even more reasons to fall for Crusch-sama-nyan, just the thought of that makes Ferris happy-nyan!”

Playfully swinging Crusch’s captured hands up and down, Ferris blew her a kiss.

Watching them, the unease growing inside Subaru’s heart became unbearable.

Even though Crusch had changed so drastically, Ferris treated her the same as always, and accepted her as always, it was something beyond what Subaru could understand.

Inside that smile of Ferris’, how much inner struggle must be lying within? Subaru doesn’t know, nonetheless, the thought of it alone filled him with sentiment.

Ferris: “Subaru-kyun, get in the lounge-nyan. Emilia-sama and old man Wilhelm are waiting for us.”

Subaru: “—A… Ah.”

His thoughts must have added something into his voice, but Ferris didn’t seem to notice. Saying “This way, Crusch-sama”, Ferris led her by the hand.

In the subtle atmosphere between Subaru and Ferris, Crusch tried to hide the uncertainty looming between her brows. She looked at them, one and then the other, and in the end not saying a thing, silently followed behind Ferris’ steps.

Taking a deep breath, Subaru bit his lips, and closed his eyes.

His mind was on edge. His heart felt desolate. In that state he didn’t want to see anyone at all. But it can’t be helped. He will not make excuses to comfort himself.

Because the last thing he’d want to do, is to blame her for his pain.

This way, they made their long-overdue entry into the lounge.

Noticing all eyes were on him, Subaru looked around the room. Other than himself, there were four people present, Emilia, Wilhelm, and one step before him, Crusch and Ferris. Seeing he must be the last one, Subaru closed the door behind him, and ever-so-naturally sat down next to Emilia.

Emilia: “Subaru…”

Subaru: “No problem. I’ve calmed down now, Emilia-tan —I, am, alright.”

To Emilia’s worried call, Subaru lightheartedly retorted. Only his eyes weren’t looking at her. Rather, he couldn’t see her at all.

If he met Emilia’s eyes now, he would have revealed a despised part of himself. The very thought of it filled him with uncontrollable dread.

Ferris: “Now that everyone is here, let’s begin!”

With the sound of a clap, everyone’s attention landed on Ferris.

It would be impossible for Crusch to direct a meeting in her condition, so that task fell to Ferris.

Roughly surveying everyone present, Ferris walked to the front of the room with an arm in the air.

Ferris: “Since there are no objections-nyan, let’s assess our situation.”

Thus, with a smile, a meeting from which everyone wanted something completely different, began.

3

—After the battle with the White Whale, on their way back to the Royal Capital, Rem, Crusch, and the punitive expedition, bringing with them wounded soldiers and the Whale's severed head, were ambushed by two Sin Archbishops.

Half of the expedition perished. The demi-human mercenaries accompanying them retreated immediately and avoided annihilation.

Ferris: "When the Vice-Captain Hetaro brought the Royal Capital's Knights back to the scene, the Sin Archbishops were already gone-nyan. Only our Knights' bodies and…"

Crusch: "People who were like me… right?"

Crusch furrowed her brows at Ferris' last few words, biting her lip. With a dejected expression, she must have felt it was all her fault.

To her, the Crusch in Ferris' story might as well be referring to another person.

Because—

Crusch: "My memory was erased… By a Sin Archbishop?"

Ferris: "Probably-nyan. I've attended to the other patients with the same condition as Crusch-sama. Their memories are completely gone, there is nothing Ferris' healing magic can do-nyan. Even now Ferris has no idea what the cause is…"

Wilhelm: "Sin Archbishop, Gluttony. This Authority— it must be him."

Wilhelm nodded gravely, and with a stern gaze he looked to Crusch. But, seeing Crusch shrivel under his gaze, Wilhelm closed his eyes in apology.

Wilhelm: "I was inconsiderate of Crusch-sama's condition and frightened you. I am deeply sorry. I still have much to learn."

Crusch: "No… I should apologize for being such a useless master… Even though I am trying my hardest to remember everything about Wilhelm-sama…”

Hearing Crusch call him Wilhelm-sama, the old swordsman cringed.

Seeing his sworn master suffering so, the guilt and shame of having failed to protect her brought pain onto Wilhelm’s face. Glancing toward Subaru, who at this moment must be carrying the very same feeling in his heart, Wilhelm seemed to understand him.

On the other hand, Ferris, whose attitude toward Crusch would not waver in spite of everything… seemed to disregard Subaru’s feeling completely.

Ferris: “Sin Archbishop of Sloth has been dealt with. And then there’s Gluttony and Greed. There is a limit to what can be done-nyan. Something so rare as two Sin Archbishops moving together, I’d be surprised if Emilia-sama’s rise has nothing to do with it.”

Emilia: “…Me?”

Her name suddenly mentioned, Emilia looked at Ferris with a surprised expression. Nodding to her, Ferris continued.

Ferris: “The Witch Cult will never tolerate the existence of a half-elf such as Emilia-sama. They are usually quiet and creep in the shadows, but now they’re all suddenly making such a ruckus, there is obviously a connection here.”

Listening to Ferris’ speculations, Subaru crossed his arms, and pondered on a conversation they had before.

The night before the battle with the White Whale, when Subaru discussed with Ferris and Crusch the possibility of a Witch Cultist attack, they had accepted his suspicions readily. That means there must have been precedents…

Emilia: “But um… Even though I don’t know much about the Witch Cult… The Witch refers to the Witch of Envy, right?”

Raising her hand nervously, Emilia uttered this entirely unexpected question.

Subaru doubted his hearing, Wilhelm and Ferris' expressions froze. The only people who weren't astonished by those words were Crusch, and Emilia herself.

Seeing their reactions, Emilia became even more nervous.

Emilia: "Sorry! I can tell from your reactions that that's something I should know, really, really, should."

Subaru: "But… Emilia-tan… you know about the Witch, you were the one who told me…"

The first time they met, she had given him the name Satella, and then after he had died, he tried to call her by that name again. His memory of her anger… meant that she knew that name was forbidden.

But Emilia shook her head at Subaru's words,

Emilia: "Near the forest where I lived there was a small village… they hated me because of my likeness to the Witch of Envy… So, I know how the Witch is regarded in the world, but things like the Witch Cult…"

Ferris: "How Emilia-sama lived in the past let's just put that aside for-nyan! But to say that you don't even know about the Witch Cult at this point is just too outrageous-nyan!!"

Shoulders raised, as if mocking, Ferris' hands flung up with a sigh.

Seeing this attitude from Ferris, Subaru's anger rose, and staring into Ferris' eyes he retorted.

Subaru: "How can you say this? To admit you don't know something, do you realize how much courage that takes? To ask what is necessary, what is wrong with that?"

Ferris: "Subaru-kyun is really persuasive-nyan! You really are master and servant-nyan!"

Ferris relentlessly mocking Subaru's unhidden displeasure, Subaru was about to stand up in anger— But, Crusch: “Ferris. I cannot overlook what you just said. Apologize at once.”

The moment before Subaru’s strength injected into his legs, the words of reproach rang out in the room.

In her dark blue evening dress, up to now frail and timid, she transformed all of a sudden—majestic and fierce, her gaze was that of a Knight.

Crusch: “As Natsuki Subaru-sama said, to ask what you do not know, is nothing deserving of mockery. Even you do not have that right. Understood?”

Ferris: “…Understood, Crusch-sama.”

Her forceful words subsiding, Crusch seemed to return to the soft-spoken girl of a moment before. But as if having heard something from the awe-inspiring Crusch of the past, from this now frail and feminine girl, Subaru could not hold in his astonishment. Ferris too, could not contain the shock within his eyes.

Ferris: “Emilia-sama, please accept my apology for my rudeness. Subaru-kyun too.”

Subaru: “You… N-No, it’s fine. Then, let’s talk about the Witch Cult now. Emilia-tan wants to hear it. And to be honest, I don’t know the details either…”

Seeing Subaru back down, half giving up, Ferris lightheartedly replied with an “Understood-nyan”. A finger lightly touching the lower lip, Ferris shook around in the short dress.

Ferris: “Firstly, as Emilia-sama said, the Witch Cult is an organization that worships the Witch of Envy. Ever since the unstoppable rise of the Witch four-hundred years ago, these fanatics have been active. To the Knights’ order, all affiliates of this organization are to be killed-on-sight.”

Emilia: “Killed-on-sight… How could you carry out such extreme orders?”

Ferris: “The Witch Cultists will not hesitate to burn a village or an entire city just to accomplish their goals. In fact, the village near Lord Roswaal’s mansion came close to falling victim to these Cultists, and one of the Sin Archbishops that took part in the ambush had once managed to single handedly capture a city in the Vollachian Empire in the south.”

Emilia kept on blinking her eyes, as if unable to take in these facts. Subaru understands her reaction, because the horrors of the Witch Cult had already been carved deep into his heart.

He now uses Petelgeuse as the standard unit of measurement for insanity.

But in terms of strength, Greed sounds like something on a completely different level than Petelgeuse.

Ferris: “Wait, wait, I’m getting sidetracked-nyan… The Witch Cult Sin Archbishops, each named after one of the six Sins, other than Envy, are the executives of the organization.”

Emilia: “The six witches… were Sloth, Greed, Gluttony, Lust, Wrath and Pride, right?”

Ferris: “Yes, and especially well known among them are Sloth and Greed. Greed, as previously mentioned, is known for annihilating entire cities. Sloth, on the other hand, seemed to be behind every little disturbance caused by the Witch Cult. But Sloth has already been beautifully eliminated by our punitive expedition-nyan… Right, Subaru-kyun?”

Subaru: “Yes… Sloth is dead. I saw him disintegrate with my own eyes, there is no mistaking it.”

Subaru confirmed Ferris’ words, his mind playing back the final moments of the abominable Petelgeuse. Screaming Subaru’s name, full of hatred… Even long afterward, the sound would not leave his ears. Like a curse, it kept on howling…

—Was that the reason behind Subaru’s cruel fate?

Ferris: “There are now five remaining Sin Archbishops. Two of them were responsible for the ambush on Crusch-sama. Their movements are always mysterious, and so even after four-hundred years the efforts to eradicate them barely made any progress. As to their objective… It is said that they want to revive the Witch of Envy-nyan."

Subaru: "Revive… the Witch?"

Unable to disregard these words, Subaru jumped up, tipping over his chair. Noticing this gave the girls a fright, Subaru waved his hands up and down.

Subaru: "To revive her… Is that even possible? The Witch has been dead for four-hundred years, right? To make something like that come back to life…"

Wilhelm: "Subaru-dono, the Witch of Envy is not dead. Her life is still preserved at the edge of this world. Unfortunately."

To the agitated Subaru, Wilhelm quietly revealed this fact.

Speechless, Subaru looked to Wilhelm, and met his eyes, serious and severe.

Wilhelm: "Near the Great Waterfall, the Sealing Stone Shrine is located. The Witch is there, her indestructible existence sealed inside. For even with the power of the Dragon and the Sword Saint combined, she cannot be destroyed."

Subaru: "Sealed… I might have heard that before… but to revive her, why don't they just destroy the seal?"

Where did Subaru hear that before? But more importantly is the question…

…If the witch was sealed, they merely need to break the seal, but instead, every time a half-elf appears, they wreak havoc in the world with senseless murder and destruction. Just what is the Witch Cult trying to do? But at this question, Wilhelm shook his head.

Wilhelm: "To approach the temple is almost impossible. First, there is very little mana near the Great Fall, under those circumstances, no one can withstand the Witch's Miasma. Secondly, they cannot bypass the Sage."

Subaru: "Sage…?"

Wilhelm: "The Sage Shaula. Along with the first-generation Sword Saint, and the Divine Dragon Volcanica, these were the heroes who sealed the Witch. Then he/she retired to the Pleiades Watchtower near the Great Waterfall. But retired in name only, even now, for he/she is constantly watching, for those who would revive the Witch. —That is, as the story goes."

Subaru: "They must be… quite old…"

Four hundred years is quite a long breath, even for Sages. But that is beside the point. Subaru decided to set that aside so Ferris could continue.

Subaru: "Well now we know why the Witch can't be unsealed, but then how do they revive her?"

Ferris: "Even if you ask-nyan, Ferris isn't a Witch Cultist and doesn't know either. All we can do is torture a Witch Cultist and have them spit it out-nyan."

Brushing off Subaru's question, Ferris took on an "I give up" expression. Even though Subaru wasn't satisfied, there was no point pursuing the question further. In any case, Emilia nodded.

Emilia: "So that's… why I'm treated like this… But why didn't Puck…"

Subaru: "Did Puck say something just now? There is a mountain of things I need to ask him!"

Emilia: "Puck didn't respond… Even though he seems to have materialized… I only know he's nearby…"

Seeing Emilia shriveling in her seat, it did not even occur to Subaru to say "there, there". In fact, to talk to Puck is something he absolutely must do.

Besides, there is no way to predict where or when the Sin Archbishop of Greed will appear. Puck's input will also be crucial.

Ferris: "That's all there is to say about the Witch Cult-nyan. So, on top of that, let's move the discussion to the future."

Subaru: "The future…?"

Turning to Subaru with a clap, Ferris, with a jubilant smile, said

Ferris: "To put it simply, this Alliance… let's dissolve it-nyan."

4

The atmosphere in the lounge froze. Only Subaru's mind was heating up.

Taking in those words, he pondered a moment, quietly licking his lips.

Subaru: "Dissolve the Alliance? What are you trying to say?"

Ferris: "Exactly what it sounds like-nyan. As things are right now, our Alliance will not be mutually beneficial-nyan."

Perhaps because Subaru kept his composure, Ferris' expression revealed a touch of admiration.

Rather annoyed by Ferris' expression, Subaru wondered if Ferris was setting up the Alliance as a bargaining chip to gain an advantage in the negotiation. The more he thought, the more he commanded himself to keep calm. But even so, his head was nearly boiling.

Subaru: "Mining rights aside, we coordinated our efforts to defeat the White Whale, and after everything is done, now you want to back out after reaping the benefits? That's a bit scandalous no matter how you look at it."

Ferris: "More detriment than benefits, Subaru-kyun."

Subaru: "Ah?"

Compared to Subaru's aggressive attitude, Ferris went on casually, wagging a finger.

Ferris: "Nyan? Gluttony and Greed appearing together, for starters. After killing Sloth, an Alliance with Emilia-sama's camp will only make us targeted by the Witch Cult… Considering what happened to Crusch-sama… Do you still believe it's in our interest to form an Alliance right now?"

Subaru: "That is…"

Glancing toward the completely different Crusch, Subaru hesitated to counter Ferris' argument. Because deep in his heart, he was carrying the same wounds.

This time, it wasn't Subaru who refuted Ferris' words.

Wilhelm: "I disagree, Ferris."

Leaning forward in his seat, Wilhelm's stern gaze stared into Ferris' eyes. Ferris, eyelids narrowed, let out an "Eh-?" with a thin smile.

Ferris: "What do you mean-nyan? After what Gluttony did to Crusch-sama, what do you think is the benefit of an Alliance that will draw the Witch Cult to us?"

Wilhelm: "To kill Gluttony… An opportunity to avenge our master."

Ferris: "Vengeance? Is that more important to you than Crusch-sama's life?!"

Against Wilhelm, Ferris refused to give ground.

Weighing heavily on both their minds, were thoughts of their master.

Ferris: "If we continue to deal with the Witch Cult this disaster will only repeat again! Crusch-sama right now can't even protect herself! When that day comes… If it's physical wound or emotional wound, Ferris can heal you… But if you die it's all over isn't it?!"

Wilhelm: "But we cannot remain idle while the offender roams free.

Crusch-sama's memories, when we defeat the Sin Archbishop, there is a chance they will return. To give up this early, is far too rash."

Ferris: "Defeating that bastard will bring the memories back? I say, Wilhelm, to think lost memories can be brought back by killing the thing that ate it… Are you daydreaming or do you think this is some kind of fairy tale w—"

Wilhelm: "—Felix!!"

With an ear-splitting roar, the swordsman's aura resounded in the room. As if a gust of wind had swept in—was the sensation felt by everyone present.

All wincing from the shock, only Wilhelm's keen gaze remained intact.

Wilhelm: "Felix… What you said just now. Never utter it again in front of Subaru-dono."

Ferris: "…I'm sorry."

Called by his true name, twice, Ferris closed his eyes with grief and remorse.

The others turned their eyes to Subaru, who was already sitting once more. His hands clenched tightly, faintly trembling, blood seeped through the gaps between his fingers, as if about to cover them whole.

Subaru: "…Emilia-tan."

Emilia: "Don't worry… I won't say anything like «I understand» or «it's alright»… Even though I want to understand how you feel… that forgotten child… because I don't understand anything, no matter what I say, it won't be fair to you…"

Subaru looked up, into Emilia's violet pupils that flickered with sadness. In her eyes he saw a reflection of himself, in all his weakness… is that the Natsuki Subaru she sees?

As if saved by that tender regard, Subaru shook his head.

Subaru: “To say something like «it’s alright»… even if I rip my mouth apart right now I won’t be able say it. But I am fine. Ferris, don’t worry about it. I… will not give up, as long as there is the tiniest fragment of hope left.”

Ferris: “Really-nyan… Subaru-kyun sure doesn’t like to give up…”

Watching Subaru trying to act like he was fine, Ferris’ countenance broke down into a smile. But his position remained unchanged.

Ferris: “As for Ferris-nyan, I don’t agree that we should continue the Alliance. I will return Crusch-sama to herself, just watch. So something like vengeance against Gluttony should just be set aside for nyow.”

Wilhelm: “What we should do, and how… Crusch-sama, you must decide. It is not in our position to do it.”

In the end, it all falls on her. Both their eyes focused upon her, and Crusch, as if understanding, nodded.

Crusch: “There is still plenty that I do not know. And what I was before, I cannot remember. I want to tell you now, that it will be disorienting, being around me… But even so, I thank you for placing in me your esteem, and trust. And if I could, I want to live up to that expectation. For that, I shall try my best.”

Despite losing her memory, it seemed her strength of character remained.

Just what is the essence of a person? Seeing Crusch like this once more, even after forgetting everything she knew, Subaru could not help but ask himself that question.

But as to the Alliance, there is no better choice than to put the negotiations on hold for now.

Ferris: “In any case, if the one who holds all the key information concerning Emilia-sama’s faction… Margrave Roswaal isn’t present, then there is nothing we can do-nyan. So for our next negotiation, let’s hold it on the condition that the Margrave be in attendance.”

Crusch: “Yes, that is for the best. Then this meeting…”

Ferris: “Will be a secret—So pretend it was about something other than an Alliance-nyan.”

Ferris shot a sharp glance at Subaru, saying this in an unusually low voice.

Subaru swallowed, but seeing no reason to disagree, he nodded. From their perspective, this decision made sense. If Crusch’s current condition is known to the public, her status as the most competent candidate will vanish.

In fact, the repercussions of Crusch’s amnesia becoming public knowledge is of the same magnitude as the prestige of slaying the White Whale. It is for precisely this reason that Anastasia wasn’t invited to this meeting.

Ferris: “Regardless of Julius, Anastasia will certainly use this information to her advantage. Good thing Crusch-sama’s condition hasn’t been seen by those kids of hers.”

Subaru: “…She will be present at the meeting these achievements will be discussed, what do we do about that?”

Ferris: “We can make an excuse and say she is unwell. Ferris will think of something. As for Subaru-kyun, your side just need to keep this secret, understood?”

Requesting only silence, Ferris would not allow any further entanglement between their two factions. Subaru, noticing this, only nodded.

In the end, the meeting concluded without any progress whatsoever.

Acknowledging the desperation of their situations, more than anything else, the two factions are aligned in the uncertainty of their futures.

Subaru: “Thank you for back there, Wilhelm-san.”

After the meeting in the lounge, Subaru called out to Wilhelm outside the Karsten Mansion. Stopping in his steps, Wilhelm turned to Subaru.

Wilhelm: “Not at all. I was of no help, I’m ashamed of how deficient I am. Above all, I was unable to assist you today.”

Subaru: “Don’t say that, without Wilhelm-san, we wouldn’t have defeated the White Whale. And afterward I was able to entrust Emilia and the villagers to you. I am really really grateful!”

These were unpackaged, genuine words of gratitude. But even this could not lift the gloom from Wilhelm’s face.

Never forgetting a past kindness, always carrying the pain of others within himself. This man… isn’t he too good-natured for his own good? Subaru smiled at the thought.

Subaru: “Even though the situation hasn’t settled yet, have you had a chance to visit your wife’s grave? Even though it’s no consolation, but at least you avenged…”

Wilhelm: “—!”

At Subaru’s words, Wilhelm’s face suddenly collapsed with deep emotion.

Seeing those intertwined waves of grief and sentiment, Subaru didn’t know what to do. Noticing Subaru’s hesitation, Wilhelm bowed deeply.

Wilhelm: “Subaru-dono, I must apologize!”

Subaru: “Wait, don’t be like this, you have nothing to be sorry about, I should be thanking you right now…”

Wilhelm: “No, that is not true. The words I spoke in the meeting were not out of genuine desire to be your ally. It was my vain, selfish sentiment that made me support the Alliance. For concealing my guilt, I am deeply ashamed.”

Not understanding Wilhelm's words, Subaru furrowed his brows.

Seeing this, Wilhelm took off his overcoat, and rolled up his left sleeve—revealing a bandaged wound around his left shoulder. Through the outer cloth one could see that the inner layers are wet with blood.

Subaru: "Does it hurt? You should get Ferris to look at that."

Wilhelm: "This wound cannot be healed. It was dealt by an opponent who possessed the Divine Protection of the Death God.

Subaru: "Can't be healed? …Then, Wilhelm-san!"

Even Subaru knows the outcome of an unhealable wound. Normally, if bleeding can't be stopped, it's like a timer being set on one's life. But unlike Subaru, who looked full of apprehension, Wilhelm shook his head calmly.

Wilhelm: "My life is not in danger right now."

Subaru: "How can that be? That wound… What kind of attack…"

Wilhelm: "I did not receive this wound today or yesterday. It was from a long time ago, and it recently reopened. But, for me right now, the wound is too large."

Listening to Wilhelm's quiet words, Subaru's small body quivered and contracted. Not knowing the reason behind that reaction, even the roots of his teeth felt like they didn't fit in his jaw. All this came from the Sword Demon in front of him, an incredible aura that could freeze one's liver solid. Continuing in his calm, gentle voice—

Wilhelm: "The effects of a Divine Protection becomes stronger, when the owner of the Divine Protection is near. When the owner of the Divine Protection of the Death God approaches, the wounds they inflicted will open."

Subaru: "Then that means… the person who inflicted your wound long ago… is near…"

Wilhelm: "The one who wounded my left shoulder… Is the Sword

Saint of the previous generation.”

Listening to Wilhelm, Subaru’s breathing stopped. Gazing into Wilhelm’s eyes, he saw the frozen glitters of emotion.

Wilhelm: “Theresia van Astrea. The wound dealt by my wife has reopened. In order to find out why, I must continue to pursue the Witch Cult…”

6

Lost in a daze, Subaru stepped into the room where Rem was sleeping.

Ever since returning to Crusch’s mansion, whenever there is a chance, he would come to stay with her.

Even though he knew it would not happen, somewhere in his heart, in his weakness, he hoped she could just wake up.

In this state, he no longer had the courage or the will to face Emilia. Being Emilia, perhaps she would understand after all. If she was by his side now, it will only bring her pain. Unless Subaru looked for her, she would give him time to himself, even though she couldn’t stop worrying.

If Emilia was here, he’d probably cry, if only to comfort that weakness within his heart. Though he hated that weakness, he could not cut it from himself.

Subaru: “Rem… Even though you told me I’m strong, I… without you with me, I can’t find it Rem… I can’t…”

Nothing changed from when he left for the lounge.

Softly breathing. Her heart was beating. But other than this, there was not a single sign of life. Right now, only Subaru’s heart still carries her existence. But,

Subaru: “—It’s you… which wind blew you here?”

Puck: “Me being here, is that so strange? Even I had some kind of relationship with this girl before, right? Then occasionally coming here, what's wrong with that?"

Subaru: "Where do you get the nerve…"

Gently touching Rem's sleeping forehead, Subaru glanced to his side —Floating in the air, was a small grey cat wagging his long tail, looking at him.

At the meeting he was nowhere to be found, yet he showed up here. Noticing Subaru's severe glance, Puck seemed taken aback.

Puck: "Why're you looking at me like that? Did I do something?"

Subaru: "…Right now, you didn't do anything… Go find Emilia, as long as you go float around somewhere else."

Puck: "Is that so? That's a curious thing to say. Even though my freedom isn't restricted, if that child gets in trouble while I'm not there…"

Flicking his whisker, Puck murmured leisurely. Then, floating up to Subaru's face,

Puck: "But I think it's better that I talk to Subaru right now."

Subaru: "…Acting like you know everything, it's really pissing me off."

Subaru turned his gaze away. Even so, Puck silently waited for him. Subaru sighed, even though meekly following along annoyed him.

Subaru: "You didn't tell Emilia about the Witch Cult… What are your intentions?"

Puck: "No intention at all, if you can live without knowing some things, then not knowing is fine too. If Lia asked me, I would have told her, but she didn't ask… People like that, if you just avoid them then it doesn't matter, right?"

Subaru: "Yes, there are times when it's fine to not know some things. But this is totally not the case for Emilia is it?! That girl came out of the forest, to become the Monarch, she is fighting to win the Royal Selection! There is no way to avoid the Witch Cult like that. —You know this, of course you know this."

Pressing low his voice, Subaru pursued Puck's intentions. But Puck, wobbling in the air, easily dodged Subaru's vigorous questions.

Puck: "The Witch Cult appearing… I suspected it too. But whether I would convey that to Lia is a completely different matter."

Subaru: "Even if it meant endangering her, and everyone else around her?! I don't know what you're thinking, but if things went the way they were Emilia would have—!!"

Puck: "I see… You did all this to save Lia. This child too… She sacrificed herself to help her. In that case I really need to thank this child…"

Subaru: "—!"

In that instant, disregarding all the world, Subaru threw his punch.

At the Spirit in front of his eyes, without a trace of hesitation, he swung with all his might. The Spirit, easily avoiding his strike, washed its face with astonishment.

Puck: "What are you doing, all of a sudden?"

Subaru: "Don't you dare touch Rem. Not with your hands, or your words…"

Surprised himself, his voice broke quietly. The emotions brewing in his heart, perhaps they became too impossible to bear.

With his round eyes, Puck gazed deep into Subaru, and with an "I understand", he stretched his little body.

Puck: "I said something inconsiderate, sorry, I shouldn't have said it. Instead of this… Let's talk a bit about Gluttony."

Subaru: "…Talk? What will that do now?"

Puck: “If you learn the nature of the thing that ate this girl’s name and memories, perhaps there is hope of fulfilling your wish, after all.”

Jumping at those words, Subaru’s face flung up. Seeing this reaction, Puck nodded, then he turned up his small pink nose as if searching for a memory.

Puck: “The Authority of Gluttony, to put it simply, is eating. When he eats a person’s name, all memories about this person is taken, and when he eats a person’s memories, that person’s own memories are taken. If both are taken, then the person becomes an empty shell. An empty shell won’t do anything and could not do anything. This girl’s condition, is just that.”

Subaru: “Name… Memory…”

Crusch’s memory. Rem’s memory and name.

Such is the effect of Gluttony’s Authority.

Subaru: “After killing the Sin Archbishop of Gluttony… Will the memories return…?”

Puck: “Ah, what would happen? Throw up everything that’s been eaten… even though I don’t like to think about it, is that something that can be done? You’ll need to ask the man himself…”

Subaru: “But the possibility exists, doesn’t it?! Rem’s memories, the possibility of retrieving Rem’s memories…!”

Turning back… Rem is still deep in her slumber.

Still softly breathing. Her heart was beating. Her body is still alive, only her memory, and her name, were eaten by that fiend.

Subaru: “Sin Archbishop of Gluttony— I will absolutely annihilate you.”

Puck: “Even though I still think it’s not that simple…”

Puck’s last few words didn’t enter Subaru’s mind.

Subaru, right now, is defending that final fragment of hope like the very last bastion in his heart.

—When he arrived in the Royal Capital, he found Rem after the attack, and when he knew all was lost, without a shred of hesitation, Subaru stabbed a dagger into his own throat. What he felt at that moment, he could no longer remember. Everything had turned out so perfectly, so perfect beyond everyone's expectations—But the truth is, throwing it all away in that instant, none of it mattered to him.

If he lost Rem, if it meant walking into a future without her, no matter how many times he must endure that pain, he will—Only this, Subaru clearly remembers.

Penetrating his throat, in blood, pain, searing heat, and loss, he lost all consciousness.

When he woke, what he saw was Rem lying in a bed.

The save point had moved forward. The place of return had changed. Subaru saw hell, and only hell.

Again! It must be some mistake; he must kill himself again… But Subaru hesitated. He was not afraid of pain or death. But he realized…

…Even if he returned to the previous save point, he could not save her.

At the save point before the battle with Petelgeuse, after the battle with the White Whale, Subaru and Rem had already went in separate directions for several hours. It is too late to catch them before the ambush. But even if he could, Emilia will be abandoned. And even if he sent the expedition to Emilia with the plan and rushed to the ambush, how will he defeat two Sin Archbishops?

To defeat Petelgeuse, Subaru's presence is indispensable, and Emilia's escape cannot be managed without Wilhelm's protection.

To sacrifice Emilia to save Rem, or to sacrifice Rem to save Emilia—Without sacrificing one or the other he couldn't save anyone at all.

Faced with this impossible choice, Subaru lowered the dagger from his throat.

Unlike being erased by the White Whale's mist, though forgotten by all the world, Rem's body remains here. Beside her, unable to do anything, he merely sat there in a daze…

But that time spent in cruel futility ends here. It ends now.

Holding Rem's sleeping hand, Subaru confirmed his resolve. Of one thing he is certain, he will—

Subaru: "Retrieve… Rem, I promise… I will retrieve your memories."

It was a promise. That right in front of your eyes, the man you fell in love with, will become the greatest hero the world has ever seen. We are still half-way on that path, aren't we?

Subaru: "I promise… Your hero will come for you. Wait just a little longer."

Lifting his face, teeth bared. It was a declaration of war.

The fiends shall regret the day they laid hands on what is sacred and inviolable.

For I, Natsuki Subaru, shall bring punishment upon you.

Subaru: "I will —I promise I will!"

In the days starting from zero, I can no longer endure a single one without the thought of you by my side.

So I must retrieve…

The days that are lost, the days I have walked with you, and all the days I will walk with you again… With my own hands, I swear I will take it back once more!

Extra Chapter: King's Game

1

—One fateful day, Subaru's ideas brought forth a miracle.

"Hey Emilia-tan, you're studying to become the king, right?"

Subaru's after-meal small talk cuts through the silence. The manor's chief resident, sitting squarely at the center of the dining hall, turns toward him. Unable to resist, everyone's ears prick up to listen in on their conversation.

—This coincidence would be the first of many twists of fate.

Sitting next to Subaru, a girl casually curls her long, silver hair about her finger, her other hand affectionately poking a cat-like spirit. Hearing his question, Emilia gently turns her head.

"Yeah, that's right, but why ask all of a sudden?"

"Well, it's not really 'all of a sudden.' It's always been kinda hanging out in the corner of my mind. The thought that, the girl sitting right next to me, the one glaring at a plate of peppers, if things work out, she'll actually be the king someday."

"Don't talk to me about the Green Devil, peppir."

Returning Subaru's banter with her own, an unamused Emilia pokes at his forehead. The lightness of her touch, the thought that beyond this solid nail lies her abundant softness, enraptures him. Ram observes Subaru with a side glance as she passes by, carrying a small tray with a single teacup, steam rising from its lip.

"What a slovenly face."

she utters, flatly expressing her disgust. Subaru grimaces back, baring his teeth like a child.

“Popping out of nowhere with such weird timing. Don’t go around staring at people’s faces then. Also, only bringing out tea for Roschi, isn’t that just a bit too much favoritism?”

“Favoritism? This is simply a matter of Ram’s priorities. At the top is Master Roswaal, then Lady Emilia and the Great Spirit, and behind an unscalable wall, in the deepest pits of the mustiest cave… I suppose Barusu might be there.”

“I don’t remember such a wide popularity gap?!”

Puffing her chest out, Ram boldly ignores Subaru’s protests. With a near gliding motion, she makes her way toward her master. At the head of the table, his eyes on a book, Roswaal notices Ram. He takes the cup of black tea with a steady motion and brings it to his lips, savoring the taste,

“Hmhmmm—Ram’s after-meal tea reaaaally helps with settling down. You could saaaaay I live just for this one cup, no?”

“Your words are far too kind.”

When dealing with Roswaal, Ram’s attitude is comparatively graceful and obedient. Witnessing the staggering difference in treatment right before his eyes, Subaru strangely loses his will to fight back. Instead, a depressive feeling begins to possess Subaru.

“Please don’t be too upset, Subaru. My sister is just doing Rem a favor.”

A voice rebukes the sulking Subaru. Its owner, a young girl garbed in maid dress, steps out from the galley. —With a large tray in each hand, Rem carries teacups for the remaining residents.

Seeing Subaru’s head turn toward her, Rem’s face brightens, her hands lifting the trays with incredible ease.

“Subaru’s tea, Rem absolutely wanted to make it for him. Rem even had her sister reteach her the basics.”

“Hohoo—what an admirable server’s spirit, Rem. Alright, that determination of yours, I’ll personally taste it!”

“Yes, please do. Under my sister’s watch, this tea was brewed with Rem’s bone-breaking, blood-spewing resolution. Rem brewed as if betting anything and everything on this single cup. Now, please enjoy.”

“You’re whittling down your soul over a casual tea break?!”

Nodding back at a shocked Subaru, Rem places her all-or-nothing tea onto the table. A gentle trail of steam rises from its surface. At a glance, it looks like perfectly normal tea, but Rem poured her blood and soul into it. The iron content must be amazing.

“Well, no use getting worked up. Lemme see,—ohh, delicious! Compared to normal tea, I can’t disagree that it seems to bring about this totally different impression that it doesn’t necessarily not give off this faintly pleasant feeling probably!”

“Wait, so does that mean it’s good? Does it?”

Emilia tilts her head at Subaru’s overly-spirited impression. In all honesty, Subaru thought the tea was delicious. Delicious, but how it differs from regular tea, he has no clue. In the first place, Subaru rarely ever had stylish drinks like black tea and coffee. In his own world, with his childish taste, he mainly drank soda or, on a good day, some hot chocolate.

“Now that I think about it, it’s been a while since I’ve had Cola. Carbonated water, I think it came from carbon dioxide, so maybe we can make it here too.”

“Subaru, Subaru, how was the tea?”

“Hm? Oh, delicious! Wow, I can really taste your passion in this!”

“Really! …By the way, does your body feel hot, Subaru?”

“Hot…? Nah, I don’t think I feel anything like that.”

His head cocked, Subaru frowns at Rem’s strange observation.

While somewhat strong, the tea didn't noticeably affect his body. All he feels is its gentle warmth pleasantly spreading through his stomach.

With Subaru's dismissive reply, Rem briefly gazes at him. With a slight disappointment in her eyes, she hides her mouth behind a tray,

"If Subaru enjoyed it, then Rem is happy."

"Your face and your words and the color of your eyes and that last question don't seem to match up though?"

"That's not true. More importantly, if Subaru is satisfied with the tea, Rem doesn't mind being praised, yes?"

"You're pretty needy, y'know! Well, I guess it's alright. C'mere."

Seeing Rem flutter her eyes in anticipation, Subaru waves to beckon her over. With Rem's body drawn close, the palm of his hand caresses her blue hair. An invisible tail wags happily behind her as she blissfully closes her eyes. The faint sound of her gentle sniffing, the way she snuggles up to him, Subaru's heart is in a panic.

Having completely forgotten his original goal, Subaru is suddenly struck with a piercing stare from behind.

"sta—are"

"It's amazing how, even when glaring with such scornful eyes, a beauty stays a beauty… What's up?"

"Don't 'what's up' me. Our talk, if you cut off part-way, I'll get reaaally bothered about it."

"'Our talk?'" replies Subaru, a genuine confusion in his voice. He wrinkles his face and puts a finger to his lips. Emilia's eyes begin to flare, panicking Subaru as he raises up his arms,

"Sorry, lo siento, I overdid it, please forgive me!"

"I'll forgive you, and I'll even hear you out, so just say what's on your mind. Come on, one, two."

Emilia's waving hands urging him on, a clueless Subaru smiles bitterly as he scratches his head. At the brink of death, he suddenly mutters an "Ah,"

"Emilia-tan, you're aiming to become the king, right?"

"That question, I'm pretty sure you asked me something like that already…"

"The route splits here. Anyway, to become a king, you obviously need to be very skilled. But don't you think 'preparedness' is just as important?"

"'Preparedness…'"

Emilia mutters back with a rather shocked face, her eyes blinking at Subaru's statement. Most likely, she thought his idea would be completely unrelated. While Subaru would have liked to meet her expectations, he thought her surprised face wasn't bad either.

Luckily, after the initial shock, a look of agreement appears in her eyes, as if to say "You've got a point."

Seeing this, Subaru snaps his fingers with a boastful "Right?"

"The resolution to stand above all, the strength to withstand the pressures of people's expectations. And above all else, the indomitable will to pursue one's convictions—! To call yourself a king, one must wield these essential traits!"

Clenching his fist tightly, Subaru stands to deliver a loud and impassioned speech. Naturally, the stares of everyone converge on him. Joy, disgust, astonishment, loving affection, Subaru bathes in a mix of feelings as he looks about the room.

In the midst of this, Emilia timidly raises her hand,

"Subaru, I can see where you're coming from, but… what do you actually plan on doing?"

"Simple. As a king candidate, these traits are necessary to Emilia-tan. So I was thinking, how about we help you practice?"

"Umm…?"

He brings his face in close and snaps his fingers. Emilia, unable to follow along, blinks in confusion. Snickering at her puzzlement, Subaru decides to push through with spirit alone.

With a wicked smile, Subaru boldly stamps his foot on a chair, raising himself up. From his new height, he looks about the room, his finger pointed straight to the heavens as he pulls his signature pose. And he yells,

"The first ever Roswaal Manor King's Game begins now!"

2

"The rules are simple! First, we prepare lots for everyone. One lot has the king's stamp while the rest are duds with numbers on them. We all draw, and the king uses the numbers to make commands. The commands are absolute, the king's orders must be obeyed. —That's it!"

At the center of the dining hall, Subaru explains the rules of the [King's Game]. Roswaal nods at the game's simplicity, his hand cradling his chin. Satisfied with Subaru's brief rundown, he heartily laughs,

"I seeeee. What simple yet maaaaarvelous rules."

"Simple, but with a sense of tension… you could say that's the essence of this game."

Subaru flashes Roswaal back a thumbs up. He then turns toward Rem who is excitedly preparing the lots. While he trusts her, fairness was essential to the King's Game.

In this game, victory came down to sheer luck,—On the other hand, real kings are decided by blood and lineage. Yet, if the King's Game fell into such a pattern, cynicism would quickly bring its end.

"The lots are finished."

"'Kay, lemme see… Yup, no problems. Let's do this!"

Subaru quickly inspects Rem's lots.

A number is written on the end of each wooden stick. The only exception is Subaru's chibi drawing of Puck, serving as the king's stamp.

Even under careful scrutiny, Subaru can't find any trick or feature to distinguish it from the duds. This game should proceed without a hitch.

"So the person who draws Puck becomes king?"

"Exactly. Also, the king makes commands using the numbers. Everyone else should make sure to keep their own number hidden. The randomness is part of the thrill afterall."

"Oh my. But that means it won't be possible to bombard Barusu with hard labor."

"We have this rule because of people like you! No calling out names either!"

After lecturing Ram, Subaru sighs as he looks around the table. Since it's immediately after a meal, everyone would be present.

Emilia, Rem, Ram, Roswaal, then there's Puck and Subaru and—

"Huh, hey, where'd Bea-ko go? Pretty sure she was in the corner, frantically pulling the green peas from her omelet rice."

"Miss Beatrice rushed out the dining hall when Subaru tried to stand on the chair."

"That damn drill loli… messing with my plans. Alright, wait here for a bit."

With that, Subaru flies out the dining hall in a full-on sprint.

And then, exactly two minutes later,

“Heeey, I’m baack—”

“Honestly, what in the world is that sixth sense of yours?! Betty won’t be getting tangled up in your nonsense!”

“Yeah yeah, attention seekers sure like to bad-mouth. Okay, that should be everyone.”

Forcibly slinging Beatrice over his shoulder, Subaru plops her onto a chair. With his hands on her shoulders to block off her escape, Beatrice surrenders with a defeated sigh. She moves next to Puck, glaring daggers back at Subaru.

Dodging her razor-sharp stare, Subaru decides everything is set.

“Do it.”

“Yes.”

Rem, seeing Subaru’s outstretched hand, places the lots without hesitation. Seeing exactly one lot added for Beatrice, Subaru desperately holds back a grin. However, a distinctly wicked sharpness was already emerging on his face.

Puck shuffles the wooden sticks in a chaotic flurry. With the numbers hidden, everyone reaches for a lot.

“Okay, everyone got one? Then let’s go with the traditional phrase here,—Whooo’s the king?”

Subaru yells with a wide grin as everyone pulls their lot. Dropping his gaze down, an extremely disappointed Subaru finds his lot marked with the number [2].

Once one discovers they’re not the king, all that’s left is to wait and see who is. —And then, timidly raising her hand,

“Hey, mine’s got Puck on it.”

And so, the first draw goes to Emilia.

In her hand lies Chibi Puck's stamp, and on her face, a blend of surprise and modest embarrassment,

"Umm, so what do I do now?"

"Emilia-tan, you're the king now, so just go all out with the commands. Like making [2] pet the king's head, or making [2] hold the king's hand, or making [2] nap in the king's lap pillow, or making [2] lovingly feed the king, or making [2] promise to take the king on a hot date…"

"Then [2] takes all the peppirs from the king's dinner and eats them—!"

"Nuooooo! Inception FAILED! I'm number [2]!"

As Subaru screams, hands shaking his head, a genuinely surprised Emilia remarks "Oh, so Subaru was [2]!"

That said, orders are orders. Only by complying can Subaru protect the sanctity of the King's Game.

"Anyway, if there aren't any peppers in tonight's dinner, then I'm off the hook!"

"Rem. I'll be counting on you for a menu buuursting with peppirs. A dinner table simply paaaainted green, I hope to see it tonight."

"Damn Roswaal… You sure catch on fast don'cha!"

Having lost his escape route, Subaru turns to Rem. Stuck between a rock and a hard place, this girl must suddenly make one of the hardest decisions of her life,

"Rem wants to prioritize Subaru. But, Master Roswaal is Rem's employer. That's why, ignoring his request is… Rem is sorry."

"What's the real reason?"

"When eating peppirs, Lady Emilia stands out, so it's hard to notice, but Subaru makes a face at them too. Rem thought to use this chance to correct him."

“You watch me pretty carefully, huh?!”

In terms of looks, texture, and taste, peppers and peppirs are virtually identical. With his childish taste, Subaru hates them. While he pretends to tolerate them in front of Emilia, he secretly wants to avoid peppirs at all costs. Subaru actually hates quite a few vegetables, including tomatoes, eggplants, and turnips. —Rem undoubtedly knows this as well.

“Anyway, let’s just start the second round. Alright, whooo’s the king?”

“Oh hey, it’s me.”

Despite his desperate yells, Subaru once again draws a dud. Following Emilia, the next bearer of fortune is the grey-furred cat spirit—Puck uses both hands to carry a lot as large as him. Tilting his head to the side,

“Calling out names is against the rules right? Then… how about [5] finger-flicks [1]’s forehead, or something like that?”

“Oohh, calling out two numbers at once… Puck, you’re not an amateur, are you?”

“Can this game even have pros and amateurs? …anyway, who’s [5] and [1]?”

As Puck’s black eyes restlessly search the room, two raised lots meet his sight. Ram holds a lot with [5] marked on its end while a [1] is marked on Emilia’s.

“This means Ram must flick Lady Emilia’s forehead. Oh my, how disrespectful, how irreverent. To be forced to finger flick Lady Emilia… What a terrifying game this is…!”

“Ram, you say that, but you actually seem reaaally into this… Umm, you’re just acting right? Right? But… don’t make it hurt too much, okay?”

“It wouldn’t be a finger flick if it didn’t hurt. Hya.”

“Kyaaa—! Owowow! That reaaally hurt!”

As a red mark emerges on Emilia’s lovely forehead, Ram relaxes with a satisfied look on her face. While Emilia looks about ready to cry, such lighthearted shenanigans are the very essence of the King’s Game. Considering the rules and spirit of the game, Ram’s attitude was actually more appropriate.

“From here on, nobody should target Ram for revenge. Don’t try to get back at each other either. —Okay, let’s start round three! Whooo’s the king?”

With this game’s chaotic, random nature, a person could never have the chance to order or be ordered. The desire to avoid leaving anyone out, as the organizer of this game, Subaru holds this modest thought in his heart,

“—DESTINY, DRAAAAAAW!”

But with the King’s lot in hand, Subaru no longer cares for such a petty cause. Fists clenched as he makes a guts pose, Subaru chants “YES, YES, YES”, thanking the Dragon.

“Are, are you really that happy? You’ve only become king once though.”

“Playing the King’s Game without achieving kinghood is pointless, Emilia-tan! Alright, let’s do this… Then again, suddenly going full throttle and ruining the atmosphere wouldn’t be good. Yeah, no good.”

While he sounds unambitious, it’s often said that impatient beggars don’t prosper. The best strategy, Subaru decides, is to calm down and take his time. First, he should focus on crafty opening moves to bolster his endgame. Eventually, after lulling everyone into a false sense of security, when their guard is at its lowest, a decisive strike —

“—Number [3], take off just your underwear.”

“—huh?”

A decisive strike. Catching a glimpse of Emilia, Subaru's patience suddenly runs thin. As the command escapes his mouth, the air seems to freeze dry, everyone's dumbfounded stares on his face. However, once made, a command cannot be taken back.

As the others stare on in disbelief, wondering if they misheard him, Subaru nods back affirmatively,

"Number [3], takes off, their underwear. HURRY!"

"Eh, wait, what? You can make commands like that?!"

"Of course you can! Aren't the king's orders absolute?! If the king told you to die for him, then isn't it an underling's duty to follow that order and stake their very life?! Even if just for now, aren't I the king, and everyone here my underling?! Then if I say 'strip,' then you must strip! So strip!"

Pounding the table, Subaru begins his fevered tirade.

Emilia opens and closes her mouth, speechless, while to her side, Roswaal bursts into laughter. Ram stares at Subaru with the deepest, harshest disdain. Nobody notices the glint in Rem's eyes as she looks down to check her lot. And beside the flustered Emilia, an unconcerned Puck. And finally, in the process of sneakily escaping the room, Beatrice—

"Hey Betty, what number are ya?"

"I was hoping you'd keep quiet, Bubby?!"

Caught by Puck, Beatrice turns around with a panicked face. Seeing her reaction, Puck grabs the lot laid in front of her chair,

"Oh hey, it's [3]. Looks like Betty's gotta strip. But hey, if I was [3], what would I even do? I'm basically naked afterall."

"In that case, I'll make you some clothes, so just put them on and strip them off. Seems kinda pointless but… Anyway, Bea-ko, huh."

Subaru glimpses at Beatrice. She stands near the dining hall entrance, her noble face turned bright red, her small hands clenched and quivering,

“God… read the atmosphere a little.”

“You’re the last person who deserves to say that! What kind of ridiculous command are you spewing! Why would Betty even bother obeying such an order…”

“Hmm, ohhh, I see, I see. So you’re just going to callously ignore the game’s biggest rule. Uh huh, I get it.”

“Wh-, what’s with that scornful tone of yours…”

Shaken by the clear disappointment in Subaru’s words, Beatrice nervously turns away. Side glancing at her, Subaru gives a trite “Nothing really” as he sighs wearily,

“You know, in games like this, there’s sort of this implicit pact of trust between players. At least, that’s what I think. Like, no matter what the command, we should challenge it with sincerity and effort. The resolution to take on the task given to you… you could think of it like your dignity as a person.”

“Dignity, you saaaay.”

An amused Roswaal can’t contain himself as he interrupts. Subaru replies with a firm “Yup, dignity” as he nods boldly. Suddenly, he points a finger at Beatrice.

Intimidated by his forcefulness, the drill-haired girl faintly draws back.

“It’s not about results! What’s important is the will to protect our oath! You, who took part in this game, have received an order from the king. You could say that this order represents the king’s implicit trust. The effort you make to meet this trust halfway… that is the proof of the precious bond between you and I.”

“…”

“It might just be a one-sided sentiment. After all, this is solely my opinion, and you have every right to disagree. But y’know… here’s what I think. By playing the King's Game like this, what we're really doing is confirming the bonds between us. These threads of fate that our eyes can never truly see,—and yet, I definitely feel them binding us together."

With a hand crossed over his chest, Subaru relentlessly pits his heart against hers. The weight of his rhetoric, the violent torrent that is his emotions, Beatrice can only drop her head against them, her lips quivering. But with a look of genuine kindness, Subaru reaches his hand out toward hers,

"That's why… just strip already."

"…"

"It's kinda gotten annoying, so how about you just read the atmosphere and take off your underwear. It's not like I'm really anticipating it. I probably won't even react all that much. So?"

"—You should just die, I suppose."

Suddenly, an invisible shockwave of tremendous force blasts against Subaru.

3

"I have confirmed Miss Beatrice removing and putting back on her underwear in the neighboring room. There should be no problem regarding the rules. Satisfied, Barusu?"

"…Yeah, I'm good."

As Ram scornfully reports back, a red-faced Beatrice trails behind her. With a defeated look, Subaru wearily answers.

For pushing Beatrice past her limit, Subaru was violently sent flying. Left, right, up, down, direction itself feels utterly meaningless after taking the blow. As his eyes spin in their sockets, Rem gallantly rushes over to tend to him,

"Are you alright, Subaru? It's still too early to be moving about… If Subaru wants, he can lie on Rem's lap, yes?"

“A situation even a king would envy. And during the King’s Game, no less. Really tempting, but the game must go on. Thanks though.”

Declining the devoted Rem’s offer, Subaru somehow gets up, and the two rejoin the group. Despite everything, no one seems to have dropped out.

“You guys… when all’s said and done, you’re all pretty sadistic, huh.”

“Wouldn’t it be quite saaad for that to be the final act? Besides, I haven’t eeeven had a chance to be the king nor a victim yet.”

“Calling them kings and victims, you really do catch on fast… Well Bea-ko’s a tsundere, so of course she’s back for more, but what about you, Emilia-tan?”

Insulted, Beatrice glares back harshly, but Subaru casually ignores her. In front of him, a flustered Emilia waves her hands erratically as she replies,

“That’s, I, you know I just… umm-”

“Yeah, what’s up? If you’ve got something to say, I’m all ears.”

“Y-, you won’t laugh… right?”

“Me? Laughing at Emilia-tan? That’s ridiculous. Even if you acted like a clown, I still wouldn’t laugh at you, Emilia-tan.”

Though Beatrice continues to glare hatefully, Subaru pays her no mind, a refreshing expression on his face. Emilia seems to be internally debating—in her head, a small council agrees to trust him as she makes a little nod,

“You know I, I’ve never really done this before, playing together with so many people… It was, really fun and… If we stopped here, I feel like it’d be a waste.”

“What the heck, this kid’s so cute.”

Subaru can’t resist as Emilia, cheeks flushed red, bashfully explains herself. Feeling teased, she puffs her cheeks,

“See, you always poke fun at me like that. This is reaaally embarrassing, you know.”

“No, it’s not like I’m poking fun… damn, am I going to die explaining myself like this? …Please forgive me!”

Subaru falls to Emilia’s overwhelming strength. The others gaze at her gently, empathetically. While they now feel willing to continue, the harsh glares piercing Subaru still seem to linger.

That said, with Emilia’s feelings in mind, the game starts anew.

“Whooo’s the king!”

Grabbing their lots, everyone hastily drops their gaze. A lot marked [4] lies in Subaru’s hand. While somewhat frustrated, he decides that consecutive kinghoods would dullen the game. Thinking this, and yet still treading his feet angrily, even after Emilia’s innocent remarks, is the man named Natsuki Subaru.

Next to Subaru, hoisting up the lot marked with chibi Puck, is Rem. While she bears her usual cool demeanor, her eyes are fiery and bright,

“Rem is the king. His Majesty, the King. Rem did it, Subaru. Rem became king.”

“Well, I’m happy for you, but you’re way too excited! We gotta keep dishing out orders so everyone gets a turn… Well, Your Majesty, what is your command?”

“Oh yes, that’s right. How careless of Rem.”

Rem’s furiously wagging tail droops for a moment, but she just as quickly brightens up again. Then, gazing intensely at Subaru,

“Well then, Suba-… number [1], please hug the king in a loving embrace, yes?”

“It’s SUPER obvious who you’re targeting here! And sorry to break it to you, but I'm NOT number [1]!"

Subaru flashes his lot, and a shocked Rem falls to her feet. From her morbid expression, you would think the world was ending. While rare to see such great despair in the King's Game, Subaru, recalling her target, feels uneasy.

In any case, whoever is number [1] must now hug Rem,

"Rem, come here."

"Sister…!"

Rem raises her head to see her sister raising the lot marked [1]. With a small dash, she jumps into her Ram's open arms.

A beautiful sisterly love—is how you could describe it, if not for what she whispers into Rem's ear,

"Look closely, Rem. In the end, this is all Barusu amounts to. A fickle, intolerant man who can't grant Rem even a single wish… This king selection game has made that painfully clear."

"Would you not slander me in front of one of my only allies! Also, this game's about the king selecting, not being selected. You make it sound like a completely different game!"

"Sister… Sister… Rem, won't give up."

As Ram comforts her, Rem rubs her cheeks against older sister. Seeing these beautiful twins so intimate, Subaru fights desperately to keep his delusions under control. Clearing his throat nervously, he pushes on to the next game.

"Alright, let's get back into the spirit of things here… Whooo's the king!"

"Oh my, it appears I've fiiinally done it. But now that I'm king… I unexpectedly can't deciiide on a command."

A smiling Roswaal waves the king's lot in his hand. Hearing his announcement, Subaru breaks into a cold sweat. —Out of everyone here, this unpredictable man is the game's biggest wildcard.

Since long ago, those who enjoy the King's Game could be separated into different archetypes.

Subaru, earnestly greedy for anything and everything within reach, is an [Omnivore].

Rem, who singlemindedly pursues a certain individual, is a [Carnivore].

Puck, who casually dishes out commands with little care or thought, is an [Herbivore].

Emilia, who enjoys the King's Game for the game itself, is a [Dinner Guest].

And finally, Roswaal, who clearly sees the suffering of his victims as the very point of the game, is a [Glutton].

Unafraid of becoming a victim himself, a threatening existence who seeks only to be entertained—that is the man who now reigns as king.

With a deep breath, Subaru prays that the [3] in his hand escapes being called. And then Roswaal, after glancing at the nervous Subaru,

"Well then, hooow about Number [3] chugs some milk mixed with tabasco sauce!"

"Damn you Roswaal! Like you're aiming for me!!"

"Here, Barusu—. Show us something nice—."

As if colluding with him, Ram responds to Roswaal's ruthless command at lightning speed.

In her hand, she cradles a cup of milk with an uneven, reddish hue. Laden with tabasco (other-worldly tabasco), this substance reeks of an ungodly stench.

"…really?"

"The King's Game, a confirmation of the bonds between us. These threads of fate that our eyes can never truly see…"

"When you put it that way… damnnit! Here goes Natsuki Subaru!—gah, ough, my throat… burning… Abdul!"

Clutching his scorched throat, Subaru crumbles to the floor. On the verge of tears, he slams his emptied cup onto the table.

"How's that, HUH! Pulled through, HUH! Any complaints, HUH!"

"No, no, that should be quiiite enough for now. Also, let's put a ban on cleansing your palate. Well then, on to the next game, shaaall we."

"Damn you, next time I'll definitely… Whooo's the—DESTINYYYYY, DRAAAAAAW!!"

Overjoyed at drawing the king's lot, Subaru completely forgets his anger toward Roswaal.

Raising Puck's stamp up into air, Subaru's eyes gleam brightly.

"Okay! Number [2]! Number [2] has to let the king stick his face in their breasts! At least until the next game! How's that!"

Staring at Emilia, Subaru yells his command.

With seven participants total, by not including himself, four out of six are women. Emilia is his top pick, but Rem wouldn't be bad either. Ram would be, well okay. And the one holding the lot marked [2] is,

"Hey, you got some sort of grudge against me—?!"

"That line is entirely Betty's, I suppose?! You, what are you even thinking?!"

Facing Beatrice yet again, Subaru screams, and Beatrice screams back. However, the commands are absolute, the king's orders must be obeyed. In any case, after overcoming the underwear command, this order hardly phases Beatrice.

“Come on, hurry on over then. Quickly, so Betty can finally play with Bubby.”

“Damn, this is just disappointing… Whoa, they’re seriously flat! You damn loli, this is practically a crime scene… what’s the matter? Did someone cast the [Flat Chest] status abnormality on yo-OWOWOWOWW!!”

“The next time such nonsense dribbles out your mouth, I’ll accelerate time for your scalp and leave you a skinhead, I suppose. Come on now, whooo is the king!”

With the disinterested Beatrice finally onboard, the ensuing games progressed smoothly and much less violently.

Skipping through a digest of events,

“This time for sure…! Subaru, will you… No, Number [5], please kiss the king’s forehead…!”

“I’m not even number [5]! Also, would you stop blindly demanding these things?!”

“Oh, that’s me. Okay Rem, lemme just give you a quick peck…”

“You don’t see too many forehead kisses nowadays!”

“Number [6], go around the manor garden… no, it’s faaar too cramped. Hooow about going to the back mountains and checking on the barrier. Just a quick, eeeasy ten rounds or so.”

“That would kill me! And just after getting blasted and… wait, are you targeting me?!”

“Then, Number [4], clean Lady Ram’s room. If there’s even a speck of dust left, it’ll be the whip for you.”

“Lady Ram’s so queen-like it’s refreshing, damnnit! But seriously, it’s like both you and Roswaal are hounding me… You, you better not be using your [Clairvoyance]?!"

"…hmph, and if I was, what of it, Barusu."

"Don't spin this like I'm the one in the wrong here! I knew something was off!"

"DESTINYYY AGAAAIIIN! Alright, Number [4] serves the king a homecooked meal filled to the brim with love… YOU AGAIN?!"

"You can have this thing I burned and boiled and dried, I suppose."

"You guys sure are friendly. I'd like to spend some time with Lia too."

"Oh hey, it's me. Well, how about Number [2] feeds me that mayonnaise thing I've been craving lately."

"Oh my, oh myyy, quiiite a pampered attitude for a great spirit. I would be hooonored to carry out this request."

"Nobody cares! Do it in the corner or something!"

"Yes, finally it's Betty's turn, I suppose. Bubby… err, Number [4] lets Betty rub their belly. Until I'm satisfied!"

"Despite how I look, I'm actually quite ripped!"

"You, do you have some sort of grudge against Betty?!"

"I'm the one ready to flip my shit! What are you, my soul mate?!"

And so, a slew of bittersweet events come one after the other.

With the game reaching its twentieth round, feelings of weariness and accomplishment push the King's Game towards its climax.

"Oh, it's me, I'm the king. Let's see, let's seeee… What should I dooo?"

After drawing the king's lot, Emilia ponders cheerfully with a finger to her lips. Cheeks faintly red, she seems unusually energetic today. As Subaru looks on, he feels a mix of attraction and unease.

Finally, the spirited girl in front of him nods with a cheerful “Okay,”

“Then, Number [6]… how about they compare the opposite gender to animals?”

“I’m [6], but… why?”

“Boo. Just do it. C’mon, Subaru. Hurry, hurry!”

Subaru can’t help but tilt his head as Emilia lightly drums against the table, urging him on. Surprised by her unwomanly behavior, he nevertheless strokes his chin and thinks,

“Well, Ram’s a cat and Rem’s like a puppy. Bea-ko’s a bear… and Emilia-tan’s a bunny, I guess.”

“How so?”

“I was thinking what kind of animal cosplay would suit everyone. Cat ears for the fickle, moody Ram, and dog ears for the gentle, obedient Rem. Emilia-tan is kind of lonely and cute so she gets bunny ears, and… well, ‘Bea-ko’ sounds kinda like ‘bear’ so she can have bear ears, I guess.”

“Compared to the rest, Betty’s reasoning sounded very lacking, I suppose!”

“Who would worry so seriously about this… Huh? Emilia-tan, what are you-”

With a goofy smile emerging on her face, Emilia raises her hands up. Waving them around, she giggles with a cute “Ehe—”

“Fine detail isn’t really my specialty, but hoow’s this!”

“How’s what… oooohhh!”

The brilliant light emanating from her hands begins to fade. And what suddenly appears on top of Emilia’s silvery hair is—a transparent bunny-ear headband.

With a glance, Subaru recognizes it as her ice. He marvels at how perfectly this bunny-eared heroine matches the charming image in his head.

“Is this, what Subaru was imagining…?”

“Honestly, I can’t agree with this…”

Alongside the bunny-eared Emilia, as if playing out Subaru’s delusions, the other girls don their respective animal ears.

Sharp, pointed cat ears exhibit Ram’s wild boldness while Rem’s drooping puppy ears show off her piddling yet loveable nature.

The round bear ears on Beatrice probably reflect her sweet side, or something to that effect.

Overwhelmed by this beautiful scene, Subaru falls to his knees as if in prayer,

“If only my phone battery didn’t die, all the pictures I could’ve taken. At least let me burn this scene into my mind… now, on to the other matter…”

As Subaru burns the girls’ brilliance into his eyes, he can’t help but worry about Emilia’s transformation.

Such a marvelous command, it wouldn’t be an exaggeration to say it was the game’s crowning achievement—but for Emilia, this should be far beyond her limits.

If anything, she was the type to aggressively prevent scenes like this.

“Subaru, Subaru.”

“What’s up, Rem?”

Seeing Rem beckoning him over, Subaru lends her an ear. With the dog ears on her head, she cutely tilts her head, "Is Rem cute? If Subaru wants, he can pet Rem's head and spoil her…"

"Yeah, really cute, but right now, my favorite Rem is the one who explains what's going on!"

"Is that so, how disappointing. But Rem still wants to be praised, so she'll explain. Lady Emilia's strange behavior is probably due to the effects of the [Fannel fruit]."

"Fannel fruit?"

At Subaru's question, Rem nods with a trite "Yes." Reaching into the pocket of her maid dress, she picks out a small berry,

"This is the Fannel fruit. By grinding it into a powder and ingesting it… suddenly, one becomes completely honest with themselves. Quite surprising, yes?"

"I see, yeah, surprising… So then, how did Emilia-tan ingest this thing?"

"Probably, when Rem tried to give Subaru some Fannel fruit-laced tea, she made a mistake and gave it to Lady Emilia instead… Ah, Subaru, don't rub my head so hard, it hurts, it hurts!"

"Bad kids need to be punished! Wait, so that's what you were asking about!"

Subaru finally realized the reason she asked him "if his body felt hot." By mistake, the medicine meant for Subaru went to Emilia instead, and she became cheerful like this as a result. But that would mean,

"If it's supposed to make you honest, doesn't that mean Emilia-tan's actually pretty childish…?"

"Booo, you two are always so close… Nooo faaiiirrr—"

As Subaru's fists rub fiercely against Rem's head, the now childish Emilia boos, shaking in protest. Sulking, she turns her head away, “Just when I thought you were treating me nicely. Aaalways bringing my hopes up like this… meanie. Meanie. Me—aa—niiie—.”

“She’s getting seriously upset for some reason, what do I do?!”

Childishly throwing a tantrum, Emilia recklessly rocks the table back and forth. At a loss for what to do, Subaru begs for help but,

“Well, Barusu… since this situation is Barusu’s fault, we’ll leave you to take care of it.”

“That sounds good, I suppose. Bubby, come here and drink some tea with Betty.”

“Lia’s pretty cute like this, but it’s probably safer to keep my distance. So, we’ll leave it to you, Subaru.”

“Weeell then, I have quiiite a bit of paperwork to attend to. I’ll be heading back to my office now.”

“You traitors! I’ll never trust you guys again!”

With the residents abandoning him one after the other, besides Subaru, only Emilia and Rem are left.

With just three people, continuing the King’s Game is no longer possible.

“Can’t be helped, let’s call it quits here… More importantly, what should we do about Emilia-tan?”

“No stopping! Don’t wanna—! Let’s keep playing—! Let’s play—!”

“Rather than becoming honest, this looks more like age regression… If being honest means becoming a spoiled kid, it’s kind of sombering.”

Stubbornly shaking her head, Emilia desperately tries to continue the game. Subaru reaches out his hand to calm her, but in her state, she absolutely won’t listen to reason.

Eventually, ignoring the baffled Subaru, Emilia grabs for one of the lots,

“Okay, it’s me, I’m the king! Umm, Number [1]! Number [1] has to obey the king!”

“Emilia-tan, you can’t play the King’s Game by yourself…”

“Rem drew [2], so that logically makes Subaru Number [1].”

“Rem?!”

An unexpected betrayal, Rem listlessly waves the lot marked [2] with her hand. Bringing it to her lips, she quietly whispers “Just for now” over to Subaru.

“Lady Emilia, I am at your command. Heeding the king’s orders is an underling’s duty afterall.”

“Okay so, Number [1] has to, Subaru has to…”

“…Please go easy on me though. My legs are buckling from all that running, and my throat still burns a bit from the tabasco, and that home-cooked meal was just awful.”

But despite his fears, Subaru presses on.

With Emilia like this, he decides to take on whatever may come. Though he’d prefer not to stress his body or deal with crippling after-effects.

“Could you, pet my head?”

“Huh?”

At her unexpected request, Subaru accidentally raises his voice.

When he opens his eyes, Emilia is staring back at him.

“My head, will you pet it? Do it like how you pet Rem, gently.”

“Huh, wait, that’s all you want?”

“Come on, hurry. Huu-rryy—”

Emilia’s feet flail wildly. Pushed by her childishness, Subaru takes to her side and reaches for her long, silvery hair,

“Is-, is this okay?”

“A little softer… yeah, like that.”

As Subaru pets her head, he feels the delicate sensation of Emilia’s smooth, silvery hair sifting between his fingers. Reminding himself it’s just a command, he somehow manages to keep his nervous hand from shaking.

Like this, Subaru closes the gap between them, his heart beating furiously as he caresses her soft hair—

—Despite making such indecent commands, in the end, he was actually quite a timid boy.

And then… “…Huh, Emilia-tan?”

“…”

Realizing Emilia had gone quiet, Subaru turns to find her sleeping peacefully, her upper body slumped carelessly over the table.

On her tranquil sleeping face, he spies a hint of satisfaction,

“It appears she’s fallen asleep. The Fannel fruit has a strong drowsiness effect, after all.”

“I’m not even going to ask what you planned to do after making me honest and putting me to sleep… Well, at least now I see why you kept the game going.”

“Rem thinks that even Lady Emilia needs some time to feel at ease. Afterall, the weight on her shoulders is no ordinary burden.”

As if she was feigning ignorance all along, Rem quickly reassumes her aura as an omnipotent maid. Gently stroking Emilia’s hair, she turns toward Subaru, “Rem will be escorting Lady Emilia back to her room, but… would Subaru like to carry her?”

“Well, it’s a legitimate reason to hold her. Plus, I’d be the worst if I had you carry her back yourself. Do I even have an option?”

With a strained laugh, he quietly takes Emilia into his arms.

Being even lighter than she looks, her daintiness surprises Subaru. He suddenly remembers to head upstairs, toward Emilia’s room.

“You know, it’s nice to relax like this once in a while. It was pretty fun too.”

“Yes, it’d be nice to play again sometime. Though the cleanup will be tough.”

Opening the dining hall door, Rem leads while Subaru, carrying Emilia, follows from behind. Cocking his head at Rem’s words, Subaru turns around. Behind them lies a disastrous scene, vestiges of the proud dining hall that once stood there.

After this, he and Rem will have to combine their utmost powers to straighten up whatever remains. Afterall, Ram certainly won’t help them.

“I wonder if these dog ears’ll ever melt. How long’re you gonna keep them on anyway?”

“Its composition doesn’t seem to be the kind that melts… If Subaru wishes, Rem doesn’t mind wearing them forever.”

“They’re cute, but not something to wear everyday. How about letting me see them again the next time we play?”

“—Yes. Let’s do that then. It’s a promise.”

Seeing Rem’s blissful smile, Subaru can’t help but smile back.

In his arms, Emilia stirs slightly, a peaceful expression on her face. It was as if their own smiles somehow put her at ease, a truly heartwarming scene.

—This story takes place a mere five days before Subaru and Emilia separate at the capital.

Subaru, Emilia, and even Rem. Not one of them could anticipate the harrowing future before them.

But if only one thing could be said for their uncertain future…

—They failed to keep the promise.

The seven residents of the Roswaal Manor being together and enjoying the King’s Game, would never happen again.

Emilia and Ram's Very Bumpy Master-Servant Relationship

1

That night, in a room at the Roswaal manor, a clear singing voice echoed.

It was already several hours after sunset; an hour where healthy people would normally be in their beds. Something like singing loudly in the middle of the night was normally an action that would lead unavoidably to a reprimand. Even the mansion of Margrave Roswaal L. Mathers was no exception to this.

However, if noise was the only reason for the reprimand, then in this one room only, it wouldn't be a problem. That's because this room was the west wing's music room, with soundproofing installed.

Hence, reprimands towards that singing voice would not be due to it having disrupted sleep…

"…Emilia-sama, you're not putting your full effort into singing this evening."

The reprimand instead was due to the singer's heart not being put into her voice.

Seated in a chair, with her light red eyes narrowed, the one who had spoken out was a girl in a maid uniform. Her pink hair was styled short, and her adorable features held a cold, clever expression.

One of the mansion's servants, she was the the elder of the twin sisters, and the haughty, disrespectful one—Ram.

The one Ram's cold words and gaze were directed to—the owner of the singing voice—let her song fade with a "Mmm…" and turned around slowly with an unhappy look.

She was a girl with long, beautiful silver hair, and features so well-arranged they might make one tremble. Her clear white skin was flushed faintly in embarrassment, and her amethyst eyes glowed with an anxious light. Her form, covered with thin nightclothes, had a bewitching elegance, but the biggest impression was made by the bucket she was holding in her hands for some reason.

The girl—Emilia—turned, held the bucket to her chest, and looked down.

“You can tell, then?”

“Yes, Ram can tell. Her eyes and ears are first-class, after all. Also, you’ve carelessly dropped the bucket several times now.”

“Mmm, that’s right. I’ve been rude to Professor Bucket too…”

With an apologetic face, Emilia stroked the bucket several times with graceful fingertips. It was an odd situation, both in terms of the picture it made, and the way things were turning out, but Ram refrained from any response except a sigh.

Emilia, with bucket in hand, and Ram were together in the music room late at night for secret training to improve Emilia’s tone deafness. A travelling minstrel’s stay at the mansion had brought Emilia’s tone deafness to light, and Ram had promised to help her improve.

The current situation was that once every second day, that scene of training was repeated in the night, but…

“Emilia-sama, time is limited and precious. Training that cuts into sleeping time is bad for your appearance as well… Don’t forget that this sacrifices Ram and Emilia-sama’s beauty for tomorrow.”

“I feel veeery badly about that, but… is it really that terrible?”

“Indeed, it wouldn’t be an exaggeration to call it one of the greatest losses in the world. Rem is worried about it as well.”

“Mmm, that is bad, isn’t it. I’m very sorry.”

Disheartened, Emilia’s shoulders sagged. Perhaps it was just one’s imagination, but it seemed that her unusually long ears—evidence of the elven lineage of her blood—those long ears also drooped, showing proof of her self-reflection.

Just as it looked like, Emilia had an honest, serious personality. Her character was unquestioned, so the state she was in tonight was all the more disturbing. She was a girl who, for better or worse, always focused on what was in front of her; for her to be so obviously distracted was not a common thing.

“Aah, very well then. …Emilia-sama, if there’s something you’re worried about, please tell me.”

“You don’t mind?”

“Roswaal-sama has instructed me to attend to your every need, after all.”

She had offered her loyalty to Roswaal, and to earn his reward she set aside any annoying, troublesome feelings. Also, Emilia’s growth and mental health were of vital importance to their camp.

If she could be of assistance for that purpose, it was really no trouble at all…

“Actually, I wanted to talk with you a little about Subaru…”

“Gah.”

That helpful posture crumbled away with the next word.

2

“Lately, Subaru has been helping out with various things around the mansion, right? So, I was thinking I’d like to thank him somehow, but…”

“Aha.”

“But, there’s nothing Subaru wants, and when I try to thank him, he tries to pass it off with a joke like ‘I don’t need a thing. Your smile is enough!’.”

“Mhmm.”

“So, instead of trying to ask him, I decided I’d try to think of something myself.”

“Huh.”

“…Ram, are you actually listening?”

Emilia, burning with motivation, frowned with dissatisfaction at Ram’s listless replies. However, the one who wanted to swell with dissatisfaction and explode was Ram. On the topic of Subaru—in regards to Natsuki Subaru, Ram’s impressions had become extremely complex and troublesome.

He’d saved Emilia at the capital, and after being hired as a servant at the mansion, put all his effort into becoming the key to resolving the witchbeast incident. He’d worked his way into the heart of Ram’s beloved little sister, Rem, and was a troublesome young man noisily passing life day by day—it wasn’t that she wasn’t thankful to him. She had absolutely no intention of tell him that directly, however.

“So you see, Ram is listening properly, but her will to give a proper answer is diminishing.”

“Hmph, you’re saying that sort of thing again… you’re sort of like Subaru in that way.”

“Emilia-sama, there are things it’s fine to say and things you shouldn’t say. Apologize.”

“Aww… Even though Ram said the same thing to me earlier…”

When Ram lowered her voice after that humiliating assessment, Emilia apologized with a face that showed she didn’t agree with it. Ram accepted that apology, and continued “And so”,

“In the end, Emilia-sama, what is it you’d actually like to do?”

“Umm, actually I’m not sure… Say, a while ago Subaru made a big fuss over trying to make mayonnaise, right? Do you remember?”

"How could Ram forget? Storing and replenishing it somehow became Ram's job."

Mayonnaise was a curious seasoning, apparently famous in Subaru's hometown. It's main ingredients were eggs, oil, and vinegar, and after various twists and turns, it had been reproduced at the Roswaal estate. Ram wasn't very fond of its distinct flavor, but not only Subaru, but also Emilia and Beatrice liked it, so regularly replenishing the stock had somehow become part of Ram's daily work.

"Remembering that, Ram's blood starts to boil… Why does she have to do this extra work?"

"Subaru was really excited over that mayonnaise, and if we could make him that happy again, I think that would be a way to thank him. So, isn't there something you can think of?"

"Something Ram can think of?"

"If we knew something about Subaru's hometown, or something like that, I thought it might give us an idea."

As Emilia clenched her fists in front of herself, her face full of motivation, Ram folded her arms.

Honestly, much about Natsuki Subaru's identity was unknown—speaking more concretely, many things about him were suspicious. Of course there was the timing of his joining the Roswaal estate, and information about him before he met with Emilia at the capital was could be called vague, at best.

However, even at the critical period of the Royal Selection, Roswaal had carried on a hands-off policy in regards to Subaru. Well, that was Roswaal. Naturally, Ram obeyed him, believing he had something in mind.

"Well, from his appearance, Ram would guess that Barusu is from somewhere outside Lugunica… a rich kid from a wealthy family in some appropriate country."

It wasn't as common lately, but Subaru lacked common knowledge in odd places. However, Ram felt that this wasn't due to a poor standard of living in his past, but rather the opposite.

His fingers, teeth, and skin were pretty. His speech was improper in many ways, but he had a rich vocabulary. That was the gift of an excellent education, and showed he'd been treated very well by those he lived with.

"Mmm, that's what I think too. Secretly, I was trying my best to figure out where he comes from, and I read lots of books, but…"

"From your expression, Ram takes it the result wasn't favorable."

"I wondered a little if he wasn't from the Kararagi city-state… Subaru sometimes uses odd expressions, but it's not really the Kararagi accent, is it."

Even out of the four major nations, the culture that had taken root in the Kararagi city-state was distinctive. Emilia's guess wasn't bad, but Ram, too, felt that it wasn't Subaru's country of origin.

Regardless, Ram was not in possession of the answer to the question occupying Emilia's thoughts. Honestly, she thought that the fastest way to find the answer would be simply to try asking Subaru directly.

"If we did that, the whole point of this plan would be ruined. It's important to get ready secretly, so that Subaru doesn't find out. I talked with Puck about it, too."

"Blast, you didn't have to go that far…"

"Ram, you made a reeeally scary face just now…"

Thanks to the advice of the Great Spirit, Emilia's will to complete her goal had become abnormally troublesome. Despite that, Ram didn't have any means of finding the right answer without any clues, either.

So, the help she extended to Emilia as she continued to mumble softly to herself, was not in the form she had hoped for.

“Since it’s Barusu, Ram thinks that he’d be very happy no matter what Emilia-sama was to give to him…”

“It wouldn’t do for Ram to be taking Subaru’s jokes seriously, too. He won’t answer me honestly, after all.”

“It’s your own fault, Barusu; after all your joking around, she won’t believe what you say now.”

As Emilia waved her hands with a blushing face, Ram shrugged at her in resignation.

“Emilia-sama, Ram doesn’t know the taste of Barusu’s hometown, but perhaps she can tell you a way to make him happy.”

“Really? How can we do that?”

“The mayonnaise that Barusu likes; there’s a way to make it taste even better.”

At Ram’s words, Emilia clasped her hands together and her eyes lit up.

As she did that, the bucket that had been held in her arms fell to the floor, and a shrill noise resounded through the music room.

3

“You know, nee-sama. I’m still not sure why I’ve been called here, and it’s scaring me.”

“Stay quiet and seated, Barusu. Nothing bad is going to happen.”

“When you say it like that, it’s even more scary…OK, OK, don’t glare at me!”

At Subaru’s unmanly muttering, Ram’s glance towards him exposed her scorn. Subaru wilted under the sharpness of that gaze, and Ram snorted in contempt.

The location was the dining room, and the date was the day after the night-time conversation. Subaru had no idea what was happening, but Ram had a goal in rushing him to the dining room, and forcing him to sit down.

The boy in the butler uniform was looking around uneasily, wondering what was going to happen. However, his expression suddenly changed due to a faint, warm aroma began to enter the room.

“Oh? That’s kind of a nice smell…”

Subaru sniffed the air, and then turned towards the dining room door as it opened noisily. As he did, he saw Emilia’s form, pushing a cart with a silver tray atop it.

“Emilia-tan?”

“…Sorry to keep you waiting, just kidding.”

As though she were trying to imitate Ram or Rem, Emilia spoke just a little humbly, before sticking out her tongue teasingly. Watching from the side of her eyes as Subaru was smitten by that gesture, Ram walked over to the cart Emilia had brought, and quickly set out it’s contents in front of Subaru.

“Um… Is it alright if I ask what the occasion is?”

“Hoho, a very good question indeed. This is, in fact, Ram’s and my everyday expression of thanks to Subaru.”

“Huh?!”

Emilia’s confident, proud declaration drew a simultaneous cry from both Subaru and Ram. The response showed amazement as well, but at it, Subaru turned around exaggeratedly.

“Wait wait wait! Why is Ram surprised too? What’s going on there?!”

“Yes, please explain this, Emilia-sama. Ram expressing thanks to Barusu? Ram can’t see what you mean at all. There’s simply no way…!”

"That's taking it a little far, isn't it?!"

"That's right. I know you're a little embarrassed, Ram, but still…"

As Ram trembled in humiliation, Subaru and Emilia's reactions were completely unexpected. Emilia touched a finger to her own lips, and continued with a face devoid of malice.

"Just recently, Subaru assisted Ram with gathering ingredients for tea, and he helped with cleaning up after the snow festival, didn't he. I understand that much, you know."

"That was…"

Faced with an uncomfortable truth, Ram was left open-mouthed by Emilia's rare on-target assessment. And, as she hesitated to make a counterargument, Emilia's attention shifted towards the puzzled Subaru.

"Anyways, this is proof of our thanks. So, hurry and open it up, Subaru."

"Oh, uh, got it. I gratefully accept Emilia-tan's kind feelings, and Ram's rare gratitude."

Ram wanted to tell him not to accept her gratitude without her permission, but she was yet again too slow getting a word in.

The plate atop the silver tray was covered by a silver lid. Grasping it's handle, Subaru fearfully checked the contents of the plate, and found…

"Steamed…potatoes?"

"Not just any steamed potatoes. These are steamed potatoes specially crafted by Ram and I!"

Bit by bit, Ram's cooperation and unlikely gratitude were revealed as an accomplished fact.

Setting aside Ram's chagrin, Subaru listened to Emilia's excited explanation, and took a steamed potato in hand. Holding the freshly-cooked potato that was still giving off steam, he looked back and forth at the two of them.

Emilia looked on expectantly, Ram frustratedly, with their eyes lit up.

“Nom… nom… munch munch…?! No way, this is…!”

“Yes! That’s right! You can tell? So, you can tell, right?”

“It has lots of mayonnaise worked into the middle…! B…baked potato! It’s a baked potato!” (note: Subaru said ‘baked potato’ in phonetic japanese, so the word is unfamiliar to Emilia and Ram.)

“That’s it! It’s a… ‘baked potato’! But that’s not all…”

As Subaru called out the name of a food she’d never heard, Emilia face broke into a happy smile. Then the two of them, speaking together turned towards Ram.

“The seasoning is just right!”

At those radiant faces and voices, Ram’s bad mood vanished completely.

“…Well of course. Ram’s steamed potatoes are the second most delicious in the world, after all.”

Repressing a sigh at the possibility of steamed potatoes and mayonnaise, Ram replied like that.

…And there’s just a little more to the story.

“Nee-sama, I heard from Emilia-sama. Together with Emilia-sama, you treated Subaru-kun to the greatest steamed potatoes or something.”

“…It’s not like that, Rem. That wasn’t my intention at all.”

“No, it’s fine. To know nee-sama is being kind to Subaru-kun makes Rem very happy, as well. …If she’s a little bit lonely about it, that’s just Rem being selfish.”

After hearing the story of the baked potato, Rem smiled like that and walked away.

Having been spoken to like that by her beloved little sister, Ram extended a hand that didn’t reach her sister’s back, and eventually clenched that hand into a fist. Her hand trembled, and she ground her teeth…

“…Barusu, this cannot be forgiven.”

For several days afterwards, Ram was determined to oppress Subaru, and Subaru himself wailing “Why is this happening to me?!” was the result.

Beatrice and Rem’s Cumbersome Service

1

Silence and solemness reigned in the forbidden archives, and a touch of tenseness pervaded it.

“…”

The person watching over the place was this girl sitting on the stepladder, quieting her breathing as she swallowed her saliva. She wore a magnificent dress, and she had a faint hint of tension on her face that was pretty like a doll’s. She spent a tremendous amount of time in making her faint colored hair into drills, and she played with them calmly with her hands.

The girl was Beatrice—she was a guard of the forbidden archives, and she was the owner of the room as a librarian.

“…”

The forbidden archives was more than just a place where Beatrice worked for most of the day.

This place was the best with a suitable temperature and the smell of old books in the atmosphere, even when she was sitting on a stepladder while immersing herself in books. This librarian girl who loved her books naturally felt at peace spending time in the forbidden archives, and she became satisfied with being able to spend everyday in ease.

That girl in the forbidden archives stiffened her face from the sense of tension, and it wasn’t all too early for her to cower with her small body.

The cause of her tension would be—

Rem: “—Beatrice-sama.”

Suddenly, there is a voice that interrupts her thoughts.

It was a voice that came from a room with a countless amount of bulky books in the forbidden archives with an infinite amount of bookshelves lined up. A single girl who called Beatrice's name was standing there.

Beatrice having her name called causes her to look up. In response to Beatrice's look, the girl gently slides her finger on the bookshelf and says

Rem: "What is this?"

Beatrice: "You make a big deal out of everything!"

She shows her the filth of the white dust on her finger, and Beatrice shouted at the girl who said those words. Beatrice's face became red and she yelled. Once again, she was disqualified from that certificate to clean.

2

Rem: "Beatrice-sama, I have told you many times. It is standard to start cleaning from the top."

Beatrice: "I did start from the top, I suppose! I dusted it! I did it just like you told me without complaining! It gets on the cleaning tools here and there so I couldn't do anything about it!"

Beatrice gets frustrated and continues to raise her voice at the unfair evaluation of her work. Then, the girl in front of her accepts Beatrice's insistence, and then she puts her hand on her face with a slightly surprised look.

Beatrice: "Why are you making that look?"

Rem: "Well, I was just thinking about how it's somehow really cute when Beatrice-sama talks like that."

Beatrice: "Whenever I hear you occasionally say those rash remarks, I feel like you've been influenced and it's all his fault. I'm fed up with this!"

Rem: "My…to say that Subaru-kun and I go well together, you're making me blush."

Beatrice: "That's a far-fetched interpretation, I suppose!"

Beatrice becomes exhausted from the girl who looks downward touching her blushed face.

It was the girl with eyes that had the same type of light blue color her short hair had. She had her eyes closed slightly and gently. She wore the Roswaal residence's honorable business maid clothes that were highly exposing, and it fit the cute girl nicely.

She was a maid of the mansion, the younger sister of the twins, and she had a hypocritical type of courtesy—it was Rem.

Rem: "Nevertheless, when it's this spacious, there's a lot of cleaning to do after all."

Rem replaces her embarrassment from before, and a maid's duty fills her eyes as she looks around the forbidden archives. Just like that girl said, cleaning the forbidden archives with an enormous amount of books was not a simple task.

Not to mention, that task was even more difficult when it was assigned to the short librarian.

Rem: "Beatrice-sama, maybe it is difficult for you to do it by yourself here after all…"

Beatrice: "Young sister, I let you in occasionally like this only out of consideration for your usual work. It's also just a duty of checking on the progress of the cleaning, I suppose."

Rem: "Stubborn aren't you."

Beatrice: "You're like your sister when you say that."

She says that she's similar to Ram, and Rem made a happy look after having a bit of a surprised face. That expression was different than what she was aiming for, so Beatrice gives a tired sigh again.

—It was the cleaning of the forbidden archives, and Rem's periodic supervising that came along with it.

It started as a result of the incident that happened a few days ago, and it was a trivial secret kept between the two of them. That being said, it wasn't really a big deal, although Rem did point out about how the management of the archives was very unacceptable, as someone who was fussy with her excessive seriousness.

Anyhow, progress couldn't be made with the cleaning of the archives because of the lag from Beatrice's lack of motivation. Rem dropping her shoulders as she thought about the lack of effect her periodic supervising had was also a given.

Rem: "Beatrice-sama, there's actually something serious I need to talk to you about."

Beatrice: "Something you need to talk to me about?"

She failed her cleaning inspection, and Beatrice raises her eyebrows making a look that said "Tonight, I am done for".

Rem: "Yes. I have a request unrelated to cleaning."

Beatrice: "Huhh…I'll have you know that I have no intentions to become friends with you guys, I suppose. These last few days were out of sudden impulse, or something."

Rem: "But, it's a request that I can only ask of Beatrice. It's very important."

Beatrice: "…Well, if it's something only I can do, then you can say what you have to say, I suppose."

The situation gets dealt with, and Beatrice's mood starts to somewhat recover. Rem nods at Beatrice, and then she pointed towards the mansion's entrance. A door was there. At first glance, it was a door, but that was the "Door Crossing" intermediary object that allowed her to connect to the Roswaal residence forbidden archives as she liked.

And now, in front of that door there was a single cart—it was something placed there that was often seen around the Roswaal residence, and it was used to carry food and tea.

Beatrice: “I’ve wondered about this since the beginning. Why did you bring a cart?”

Rem: “It’s because this cart is actually related to my request.”

Rem threw out her chest slightly with pride and stepped towards the cart’s side. After that, once she picked up the silver tray placed on the cart, she presented it to Beatrice, who sat on the stepladder with a look of suspicion on her face.

Then, she held all of it and told her this

Rem: “I’m requesting that you work with me to develop mayonnaise cuisine for Subaru-kun.”

When Rem opened the tray’s lid with a cheerful look, nasty, warm steam rose into the room. The thick smell of the mayonnaise forced back the smell of the books that she was used to.

Beatrice: “Yuck, I suppose.”

Beatrice says, and she frowned with a truly displeased face.

3

Mayonnaise was a special condiment that seemed to have been famous back at Subaru’s hometown. It was Subaru’s favorite, and ever since that flavor was reproduced in the mansion, they always paid careful attention for the stockpiles of it.

Of course, Rem used that mayonnaise and wanted to contribute to Subaru, but…

Rem: “That’s not all I have to ask.”

Rem wanting to devote herself to Subaru was already a normal thing, so there wasn’t really any deep reason behind her wanting to do something for him.

However, there was a chance for something to start with this type of motivation that even made her get Beatrice involved.

That was—

Rem: “Nee-sama and Emilia-sama actually treated Subaru-kun to mayonnaise cuisine the other day. They put in their usual gratitude and…they kept it a secret from me.”

Beatrice: “…”

Rem: “No well, I’m fine with it. I know that Subaru-kun is lovely, and it’s lovely seeing Nee-sama and Emilia-sama going as far as to cook to show their thanks. …But, I am a little…just a little…just slightly disappointed that I wasn’t there.”

Beatrice: “…”

Rem: “Because I’m thankful for Subaru-kun too. So, I realized that I have to try my best too so that I don’t lose to Nee-sama and Emilia-sama!”

Beatrice: “That doesn’t explain why you came to me!”

Beatrice shouts at Rem, the girl who intruded the forbidden archives and brought a cart.

Rem puzzles at that rage. She really was wondering if her explanation was insufficient, or if she caused a misunderstanding.

Rem: “Beatrice-sama, please calm down. My explanation wasn’t good enough. To put it in a way that doesn’t cause any misunderstandings…I want to do Subaru-kun a service.”

Beatrice: “You said that nobody else could accept this request, and yet it’s become even more indecent, I suppose!”

Rem made a fist in front of her chest as she said “Let’s do this!”, being full of motivation. That attitude causes Beatrice to look up at the ceiling as if she was grieving. Rem pushed the cart even closer to her and says

Rem: “I already see the path to a new meal. Next I just have to allot the mayonnaise. If I can just arrange that perfectly, then I can show it to even Subaru-kun."

Beatrice: "What are you telling me to do with you doing all that…"

Rem: "Yes. Beatrice-sama will taste the…see, don't you and Subaru-kun like mayonnaise? It seems like your guys' tastes are close too… that's unfair."

Beatrice: "I don't care, I suppose! That's a false accusation! Don't just get jealous at whatever you want, I suppose!"

Beatrice claims her innocence at Rem, who had a light in her eyes that looked just a little dangerous. Then, Rem returns to herself with a "I can't do that", and after clearing her throat with an "Ahem" she says

Rem: "Anyways, Subaru-kun and Beatrice-sama have similar tastes. Thus, if I make a dish that you like, then Subaru-kun will like it too."

Beatrice: "I get what you're trying to say. I guess it's fine to ignore your rash remark of you saying that him and I like similar things. But, that's as far as my kindness goes."

Rem: "Beatrice-sama…"

Beatrice folds her short arms and turns her face away as if brushing off Rem's proposal. She curves her lips, fully expressing her intent to refuse her proposal.

In response to Beatrice's firm declaration of her intent, Rem dropped her shoulders, thinking "It can't be helped", and—

Rem: "—Yes, open wide."

Beatrice: "Gulp, I suppose. —Huhh! Damn it!"

She scoops up the cooking, holds out the spoon, and Beatrice becomes shocked, as she ate it involuntarily. However, her surprise lasted only for a moment. She immediately changes to an entranced expression and says

Beatrice: “Mmmm…You put it in my mouth, I suppose. But, it doesn’t taste bad. Not bad.”

Rem: “That really makes me happy. It seems like Nee-sama and Emilia-sama invented a steamed “Baked Potato” by putting a cut in a yam potato and putting mayonnaise into it. So, I looked for some possibilities, and I worked on a mayonnaise cuisine that’s delicious even if it gets cold.”

Rem explains her new cuisine idea to Beatrice, whose mouth was dirty from the yam potato.

The source of the steam coming from the plate was the smashed vegetables dressed in mayonnaise inside the steamed potato. Furthermore, cutting up the fresh vegetables and putting them inside caused it to take in a new flavor.

Rem: “There are fitting and unfitting vegetables in there, but with this Beatrice-sama and Emilia-sama will eat it, even when you don’t like vegetables, and Subaru-kun should like it too!”

Beatrice: “I don’t like how it’s a byproduct of the objective to please that guy, but it didn’t taste bad, I suppose. I’ll praise you and say that it matched my tastes enough.”

Rem: “Thank you!”

Rem did a curtsey with a complete smile on her face while holding the tray in one hand in response to Beatrice’s praise.

She makes sure of her look of satisfaction, and Beatrice reached her hand out wanting another bite. However, she gets stopped quickly because of Rem’s hand.

Beatrice: “…”

She quickly reaches out her hand. She quickly gets stopped. She reaches out. She gets stopped. She reaches out. She gets stopped.

Beatrice: “Why are you interrupting me! Stop giving yourself airs!”

Rem: “No, I’m not giving myself airs. It’s just that, it would be a problem for you to eat this dish's mayonnaise cuisine."

Beatrice: "I don't understand, I suppose. Would it be wasteful or something because there isn't enough…?"

Rem: "—No, it's the opposite."

Rem steps to the back silently in front of Beatrice, who squinted with displeasure. Then, she points, and what awaited Beatrice was the countless number of dishes on top of the cart that had been remaining there.

If all of those were dishes waiting to be tasted by Beatrice, then—

Rem: "I told you. I want to make the best dish that matches Subaru-kun's tastes. Hence, I wanted Beatrice-sama to cooperate with me little by little."

Beatrice: "Little by little! You said little by little! You really are perverse…"

Rem: "Yes, open wide."

Beatrice: "Aan, I suppose…mmm, it's delicious. Don't mess with me, I suppose!"

Rem changes the little amount of mayonnaise and tries to figure out the best taste. She wasn't just paying attention to the mayonnaise, but the solt and vinagar that made up the mayonnaise too.

No matter how much time they had, it wasn't enough. The path of cooking was a very deep one.

Rem: "There's still another dish ready! There's no time to rest! Let's both do our best just like Nee-sama and Emilia-sama did!"

Beatrice: "Wa-Wait…in the end, this is just me doing my…"

Rem: "Don't just try the hot ones, but the cold ones too please! Ahh, please taste it thoroughly!"

Beatrice: "Gulp, I suppose—!"

Rem had a bad habit of starting to only see the things in front of her, while Beatrice had a personality of being helpful with this and that. Those things bit each other like devils, and a tragedy was born.

Then on another day, Beatrice's troubles paid off, and the new cuisine was offered to Subaru.

Subaru: "Potato salad! This is potato salad! Rem, you came up with this, huh!"

Rem: "Yes, I put in my devoted spirit. I won't mind it if you praise me."

Subaru: "Ahh, thank you. I'm really happy. …By the way, why is Beako's whole face shiny, and why is her cheeks chubby? Did you get fat?"

Beatrice: "Whose fault do you think this is—??!!"

Subaru didn't care about the hardships, while Rem didn't feel like talking about them. Then, the voice of Beatrice, the person who made put in the most effort and got the short end of the stick, resounded throughout the Roswaal residence's dining hall.

Short Story Compendium 1

Emilia's Capital Touring Chronicle (Volume 1; Animate)

1

"—The capital really is suuuuper huge after all."

With her hands joined in front of her chest, the girl said this in a lively voice as her eyes sparkled at the scenery before her.

She was a beautiful girl. She possessed long, silky silver hair that reached her hips. Her braided silver hair was accentuated by a white flower accessory, quite literally giving her a flower-like loveliness.

Her skin was as fair as virgin snow, her slender, well-proportioned limbs were draped in a dress with a white theme, and her amethyst eyes that were admiring the townscape sparkled so beautifully it was if there were jewels embedded in them.

Her beauty was such that one would not hesitate in the slightest to call her the loveliest girl in the world. However, the way the girl was looking around her surroundings full of excitement was just a little too childish to fit that description.

Her eyes followed the sea of people passing to the left and to the right. Once glance at her eyes that were full of curiosity as if looking at something novel would be enough to tell that what she was feeling was somewhat akin to someone from the country visiting the big city for the first time.

"You're very cute when you're having fun like this, but perhaps it's about time you returned to reality—"

Raining on her parade was a voice whispering so it would only reach her slightly longer than normal ears. However, there was no one around her. But the voice was quite literally right by her ear, so —

"—M, Come on, I already know that the situation has gotten a bit troublesome. You're being so mean even though I only stopped for a moment."

"Well, it's not like I want to earn my daughter's ire by endlessly scolding her either. But this is going to be quite a bother to the others as well, and you don't want that either, right?"

"That's true, but…"

The voice continued its sound argument and the girl despondently lowered her head in response. As she did this, a small figure nimbly pushed its way through her hair out to her shoulder. This was—

"Anyway, try looking around for a place that looks familiar. There's no point in getting dejected."

Offering this forward-thinking proposal while stroking its whiskers was a cat small enough to fit in one's palm.

It was coated in gray fur, with big, round eyes and a pink nose. Setting aside its size, that was all there was to say about its appearance, but where it differed most from an ordinary cat was in the fact that it was standing on two legs.

Waving its tail that was about as long as the rest of its body, the cat purred atop the girl's shoulder.

"I suppose your final option would be to build up your courage and ask someone. Can you do that, Lia?"

"Don't make fun of me. Of course I can do something that simple. Puck, you blockhead, you're always treating me like a kid."

"How else would you treat a kid that ended up losing their attendant because they were having too much fun?"

In response to his words that were both carefree and flippant, all the girl could do was pout.

The cat known as Puck smiled as the girl started behaving like a kid immediately after complaining about being treated like a kid.

“Alright, this is going to be a real problem if the sun goes down. You’d better find your way while I can still help you, Emilia.”

“I’m not some lost kid. I just ended up getting a little confused about the area!”

Becoming stubborn in response to his call, the girl—Emilia started walking with a prim expression.

Toward the endless sea of people before her, in order to find the servant girl she had lost.

2

The capital city of Lugunica, possessing a population exceeding 300,000, was the world’s foremost metropolis in terms of populace and was the core of the Dragon Kingdom,

At its center was the royal castle, and the city—The royal capital was a melting pot of all sorts of races, always bustling with activity and overflowing energy, one could spend their entire day watching the people walking on the streets without getting bored.

In particular, the commercial district, also known as the ‘trading street’, which was home to countless stalls and hawkers, and had any number of high quality goods or curios imported from other countries lined up due to which it was always dizzyingly busy.

“…Humans really are amazing.”

Somehow making it out of the wave of people, Emilia escaped to the side of the street and paused to take a breath. Smoothing down her ruffled silver hair, she once again examined the street once she was done with her short break.

The trading street was filled to the brim with people passing back and forth, conversing and negotiating endlessly. One street, just a single shopping street had this many people on it. Just the mere thought of how difficult it would be to find a single person in all of this depressed her.

“That girl was wearing a rather conspicuous outfit herself, but…

Even that doesn't really mean much in the capital, huh."

Puck who was slipping back into her hair spoke her thoughts out loud. Poking the cat as if she were touching her hair, Emilia lowered the ends of her eyebrows looking troubled.

"Yeah, that's going to be a problem… Also, you'd better be careful too, Puck. It'd cause a real panic if anyone were to see you, you could just go back into your crystal since you don't have anything to do."

"I do have something to do, though, I'm your conversation partner. It'd be a problem if you started crying because I left you alone. But anyway, what are you going to do? Wanna haphazardly wander around at random with no destination whatsoever?"

"The way you put it seems like I'd probably never ever find her. I'll have to use my head on this one."

Shaking her head at his proposal, Emilia tapped her head with her finger.

With this, Emilia fell deep in thought and Puck started grooming his fur as he patiently waited for her brilliant idea. But what emerged from her was not a brilliant idea—

"—Look, Puck. It looks like there's a bit of a quarrel going on over there."

"Liiiaaa."

"A little! Just a little bit! I'm curious, so I'll head over there for just one moment!"

On the other side of the street, she could see that some curious onlookers were gathering around a stall some distance away. In response to what Emilia said when she saw this, Puck sighed in a somewhat troubled manner.

"Hey, Lia, you're in trouble yourself, you know?"

"Y-You're wrong. It's not like I want to help them or anything…

Right, I just feel like taking a look.”

Looking as evil as she could and yet still quite cute, Emilia ran over to the disturbance. Making her way through the crowd, she made it to the front of the onlookers. And then—

“C’mon, Mimi keeps telling you—. Mimi doesn’t do things like dining and dashing. Mimi just ended up losing Hetaro who had the wallet, so Mimi’s in a lot of trouble!”

“You too, young lady, how many times are you going to make me repeat myself. I don’t know about this missing person, but you’ve already eaten my product, so I must receive the appropriate compensation. Aah, if your companion isn’t with you, you could use your possessions instead....”

“Mimi’s got this staff and stuff, but if Mimi hands it over the lady’s going to be super mad at Mimi!”

The sight of the two who were quarrelling in the middle of all of these rubberneckers caused Emilia’s eyes to widen.

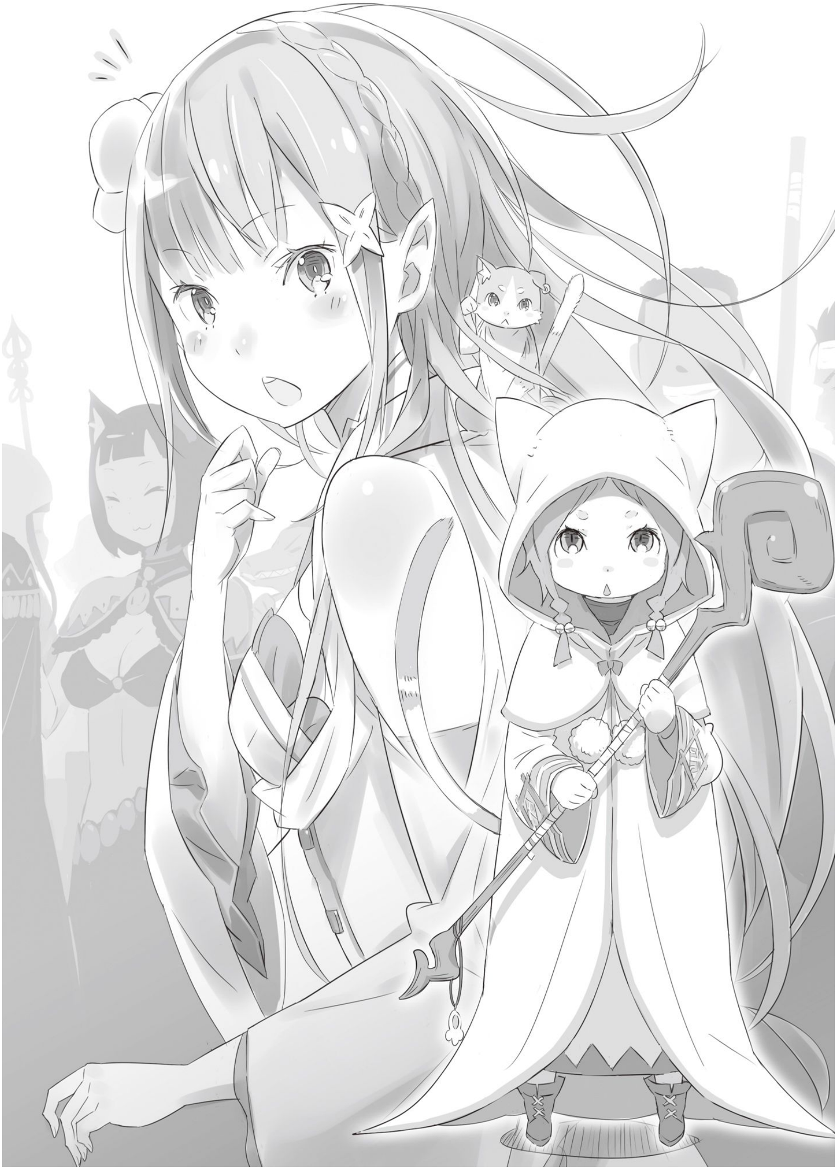
One of the two parties who were arguing was a tall, dark-skinned man, and judging by his appearance he was probably the owner of the stall in question. And facing him was the one who had been arguing with him all this time, a person with a small build who was much shorter than him.

They were a cat-like beastman bearing round ears and orange hair. They were probably of the catman race. In terms of height they barely even reached Emilia’s waist, and their large white robe covered their entire body. Possessing cute, round eyes and an adorable nose, she was a girl whose entire body seemed to exude loveliness.

Judging by the contents of their conversation it seemed as though she was unable to pay the bill she owed the stall, but,

“Mimi doesn’t want to be thought of as someone who dines and dashes either. You want this staff, old man?”

“I feel guilty after all! That’s quite a decent staff, isn’t it? How troublesome…”



"Gosh, that Hetaro, getting lost so easily! Mimi's mad at you as your older sister."

"Excuse me…"

As the concerned parties started wearing themselves out, someone raised their hand and interfered. The girl and the shopkeeper were both surprised, the one standing between them was none other than Emilia.

Emilia had timidly stepped in, and with the two of them staring at her she continued, "Umm,"

"I happened to overhear, but… Basically, you just need compensation for what this girl ate, is that right?"

"Ah, yeah, that's right, but… Young lady, are you this girl's acquaintance?"

"Eh, this lady's my acquaintance? First time I'm hearing of it! I don't know her at all!"

"No, I don't know her either. This is my first time seeing her."

"Ehh—?!"

Emilia and the kitten, caught between the airheadedness of these two the shopkeeper screamed in despair. But Emilia disregarded this and quietly reached into her pocket.

"But I'll pay for her. That should solve everything, right?"

"That would certainly be a great help, but… You don't even know this girl, right?"

"True enough, I don't know her, but… She does look reeeeally cute."

This felt sloppy even for an excuse made up on the spot, but the shopkeeper seemed to conclude that Emilia was being considerate in her own way.

The shopkeeper nodded as if giving up, and Emilia smiled at him as she pulled out her purse.

“…Eh, eh?”

The hand digging around in her pocket was unable to grasp what it was supposed to. Emilia carefully checked every nook and cranny of her bosom, hips and sleeves and then nodded deeply.

“—Looks like I dropped my purse somewhere.”

The heartrending murmur of the girl who had lost her attendant in the middle of the capital and was now completely penniless dominated the area.

3

Having announced that she would shoulder the girl’s debt, Emilia was now in quite the predicament now that it turned out that her purse was missing.

Her attempt at philanthropy, or rather, philcathropy had ended up like this. Feeling Puck sigh in exasperation from within her hair, Emilia was unable to say anything in response as she fretted.

She had to find some way to break through this situation. But just how in the world could she—And then, in that place that had fallen silent, her brain arrived at one hope. That was,

“—I’m going to perform. If you find it entertaining, please toss me some money.”

“Eh?”

This impromptu announcement of a street performance caused all the bystanders to tilt their heads.

Among all these faces of astonishment, only Emilia who started preparing with a face that looked as though she was intending to do this from the very start, and the catman girl who was delighted, “Ooh! A performance! How fun!” Were different.

Needless to say, not even Puck was able to follow this completely unexpected idea of hers. The cat rustled around in her hair as he changed position, and quietly whispered into Emilia’s ear.

“Lia, Lia, I’m afraid to ask this, but what’s this all of a sudden?”

“I just remembered, Puck. If you show off some unique performances in a place with lots of people around, you can get money, isn’t that right? I think this is the perfect solution for me and this girl since we’re both broke!”

“You’re definitely cute when you’re trying hard, but there are times when I wonder if I went wrong somewhere while raising you. For instance, now would be one of those times.”

It was already too late to turn back, and Emilia had no intention of turning back either, Puck’s lamentations had no effect on her.

Neglecting to even prepare the bystanders for what was to come, Emilia took a step forward and started breathing deeply. Standing before the stall, right in front of all of these onlookers, the area naturally ended up getting monopolized by Emilia.

“I shall now have an extremely rare animal perform for all of you.”

“I’ve suddenly got a bad feeling that I’m about to get wrapped up in this.”

“Let’s go.”

Emilia thrust her right hand out in front of the onlookers and declared this.

The spectators seemed baffled as she showed them her empty palm. Unfazed by their reactions, Emilia signaled to Puck who was taking quite a while to emerge from her hair.

“C’mon, please. Hey, Puck. Come out.”

“It’s not that I mistimed my appearance, it’s that I don’t want to appear at all. But I'd rather not humiliate you in front of everyone, so I suppose I'll have to come out."

Shrugging his shoulders as he sighed, Puck was dejected as he reluctantly forced himself to creep out of her hair. His appearance instantly caused a commotion, and even as this happened he continued to walk across her upper her arm and elbow until he finally reached her palm where he raised both paws and proclaimed, "Victory"

The crowd grew excited in an instant. Emilia thought this response meant she was doing well—

"This is an extremely rare animal. I shall now have it…"

"S-Spirit! It's a spirit! She's a spirit user!"

"Crap, run! Drop your weapons and all the money you have and run!"

Perhaps she should have him dance, as Emilia thought up a program the crowd in front of her dispersed and ran off. They dropped everything they had on them, and the panic started spreading to people who weren't even involved. Like this, the commotion continued to spread and when the dust finally settled, the street was completely deserted.

Emilia was dumbfounded by this, and Puck who was still on her palm started grooming his face with his palm as he spoke,

"Just about everyone would run away if they saw a spirit. It was just like you said."

"That's true, but… They didn't need to be that surprised, did they?"

Accepting Puck's words, Emilia sulked a bit as she looked around her surroundings. She was surrounding by all the things the onlookers had discarded. Going by the rules of street performances, all of these things now belonged to Emilia. Of course, she wouldn't actually take them.

"…Your dancing is so cute, it would have been nice if they saw it before they went home.”

“To call that reaction going home, I quite like your elegance.”

The two had this frivolous exchange. And then—

“Ohh! This cat’s really talking! How? How can you talk? Are you the same as Mimi? Are you a catman? You’re tiny! Super tiny! Ufuhahaha—”

“This kid’s pretty bold, huh. If you consider appearance alone we’re certainly rivals in terms of prettiness, but we’re entirely different beings.”

“Is that so? How do ya know that?”

“I’m Lia’s father, and you’re that Hetaro kid’s elder sister, isn’t that right?”

“It’s true—!”

For some reason, Puck’s joke caused the aforementioned girl to explode with laughter. Anyway, she was genuinely happy that this girl stayed with them.

If even she had run away, even Emilia would surely be hurt.

“Huh?”

Suddenly, Emilia’s eyes widened as she examined the fallen items. The reason for this was one of the items by her feet—A white purse placed on top of some somewhat dirty wrapping.

She crouched down and picked it up, and then nodded when she confirmed its feel.

“It really is the purse I lost… Why is it in a place like?”

“—Perhaps some kind hearted soul brought it here?”

Puck said this as if bored, and yawned as he slipped back into her silver hair.

He was basically declaring that he was done. This upset the catman girl, but she immediately returned to her usual self and started wagging her tail when Emilia stroked her head.

“Ufuhihihi, you’re super good at this, lady! You’re probably a match for the lady! You’re definitely far above the captain!”

“Yeah? Fufu, thank you.”

“Mimi can tell you’re a really good person, so Mimi’s gonna remember ya! If you ever have something troubling you or someone you wanna drop, just tell Mimi and it’ll all be fine!”

“Drop… I don’t really get it, but okay. I’ll be sure to remember you too.”

She didn’t really understand what this cute catman was saying, but Emilia magnanimously accepted her words.

Emilia then turned around as she continued to stroke the girl’s head. Behind her was the shopkeeper who even though the situation had completely left him behind, continued to man the stall because he could not abandon it.

Now that she had her purse back, Emilia approached the dumbfounded shopkeeper and opened it.

“Um, so, how much did she owe you?”

And she once again resumed her philanthropy under the guise of nosiness.

Emilia’s Starry Sky Classroom (Volume 2; Animate)

1

Emilia, who was walking down the corridor, stopped her steps when she was called from behind.

“Are you leaving at this hour, miss?”

The long silver hair swayed as the girl turned. Then, her amethyst eyes reflected the silhouette of the person who had asked the question.

“I’m just going to go to the garden. I still haven’t been able to talk to the spirits today because of the confusion this morning… And I can’t break the pact,” she replied with a gentle smile.

Hearing this, the other person, in this case Rem, closed her eyes slightly.

“Confusion… Do you say Subaru?”

“W-Well …Yes, but…”

Rem’s tone of voice was a little harsh, which made Emilia smile uncomfortably. Seeing this reaction, the maid added:

“Any problem you have, please don’t be shy to talk to us. Especially considering that Subaru became an employee of the mansion.”

“It’s not that I feel shy… It’s true that it all started because of Subaru, but I have a part of the blame for being so entertained with his conversation,” Emilia admitted with a small sigh.

As a spirit user, despite her main companion being the Pack, she had the help of several lower spirits. Therefore, keeping the promise made to them was an obligation that she could not neglect.

“I can’t be privileging only Pack, otherwise the others will be upset.

So I usually take the time to talk to them every morning, so they can help me when I need it most."

"I didn't know about these details of the technique of manipulating spirits. I know very little about it."

"It is normal, not least because there are very few spirit users. Did you learn to use magic with Roswaal?"

"Yes. I learned the basics from my sister when we were children, and since we came here, I have been instructed by Master Roswaal."

The Marquis de Mathers, despite all his eccentricity in terms of language, dress and other personality details, was also the magician in direct service to the royal family, known and recognized as the greatest magician in the kingdom. Thanks to that, both Rem and Ram, both under his instruction, had a high caliber in magic technique in their respective elements of preference, water and wind.

"I hope I don't get involved too much in situations that you both need to use magic…" Commented Emilia.

"I understand your concern, but it will be inevitable. What happened in the capital was only the beginning, I am sure that similar incidents will be repeated throughout your candidacy."

Instead of consoling, Rem chose to alert her master of the risks. And her strict stance was not only with others, but mainly with herself, which Emilia considered a great quality.

"I know. I can't be naive forever, let alone look down after receiving so much help from Roswaal and the two of you."

"My sister and I just obeyed the master's orders. Of course, it will be a great satisfaction to be able to help you, Miss."

Then, seeing the maid bow, Emilia also threatened to do the same, but gave up when she remembered the last time she was scolded for it. Even simple gestures like that, now, carried a greater meaning for the candidate to the throne and she needed to get used to it.

“So, I’m going to go to the garden. I promise not to stay long.”

“Yes ma’am. Ah, one last thing.”

Rem, before Emilia started walking again, asked: “What should I do if Subaru asks me where to find you?”

The maid’s concern was natural, since they had just talked about the boy having hindered Emilia in conversation with the spirits. Despite this, the silver-haired girl shook her head sideways and said:

“Don’t worry, you can tell him I’m in the garden.”

“Are you sure?”

“Yes. I don’t want to treat Subaru as a hindrance, and I just need to take my obligations more seriously. In addition… I’m a little curious to know the continuation of the conversation I had with him in the morning.”

“Miss Emilia, or you take obligations seriously, or listen to Subaru stories.”

“I-I know! But I will really do everything right.”

“By the way, if I may ask the question, what was the conversation you were having with Subaru about?”

“Hum… Do you usually look at the night sky Rem?”

“The night sky…? I don’t think much… At most, I am guided by the stars when I have to go out at night.”

“I know, and I was like that too. But that is not it.”

So, Emilia went to the hall window and looked up at the sky. The world had already lost the sunlight, and what lit the landscape in its place was the moonlight and the scattered brightness of countless stars.

“…”

Rem also did the same and went to the window, to which Emilia added: “When you have an opportunity, ask Subaru about the stars. I’m sure that, like me, you will also have fun looking at the sky at night.”

2

“Beatrice, can I get Puck back…?”

“…You can’t, right? But do what…”

The girl Emilia talked to did not hide her dissatisfaction as she hugged the gray kitten tightly in her arms.

“What is it, Lia? Are you hypnotized by my cuteness?”

“Pack, Just yourself. In fact, I kept thinking that Beatrice always makes a face at me.”

“Natural, isn’t it? For Betty, you are a bad girl that keeps the brother from me. Ideally, I would never see your face or that idiot’s face again, okay?”

If it was anyone else, those words would have hurt Emilia, but she knew Beatrice didn’t really have bad feelings about her, so she just laughed.

“I have a pact with Lia, and you know the importance of that, Beatrice. But I promise I’ll play with you again.”

“Do you really promise? Do you promise to come back to Betty as soon as you can, brother?”

After the dramatic farewell, the kitten jumped on Emilia’s shoulder and settled in his usual place, between the silver strands of hair, and said:

“For a change, I didn’t see time go by in the library. It’s already night, isn’t it? Because of your clothes, I imagine you’re going to talk to the spirits in the garden, am I right?”

“Right. I didn’t have time to talk to them in the morning and I can also see the stars that Subaru spoke… Hey, I know! Beatrice, are you busy now?”

“If Betty is busy…?”

Once again, the girl frowned at the question. Everyone at the mansion knew that the librarian never acted sympathetic to anyone, but Emilia was under the impression that Beatrice was especially harsh with her and Subaru. Even so, she suggested:

“If you have no appointment now, how about going for a walk with me? I want to be more friends with you, Beatrice. And today I have a very interesting subject to tell you!”

“Too bad it was Subaru who told you first…”

“Do not disturb, pack! And then? what do you say?”

She stared into the girl’s eyes, but without giving too much time, Beatrice turned her face and replied:

“A pity, but I’m very busy right now, understand? Not to mention that I have no interest in knowing about the stars.”

“Not even if it’s quick? Rem was so interested…”

“Don’t think you’ll be able to convince Betty with stories about that idiot, okay? I bet he stays giving random names to stars and is having fun like a fool.”

“Wow, incredible. How did you know?”

Emilia was truly surprised by Beatrice’s precise comment. According to Subaru, the dispositions of the stars were different in his homeland, and apparently he was suffering from knowing which was which.

“Subaru seemed to understand a lot about astronomy, only he said that the stars are not the same here, and there where he grew up. He spoke of Vega, Altair… B-Betelgeuse?”

“…Geuse…”

“Hi?”

“…It’s nothing. Now go quickly, do you hear?”

After popped the tongue, the librarian expelled visitors from her library. Before the Door Crossing was activated, however, she just said goodbye to Pack by waving her hand, and then immediately disappeared.

“I really wanted to be friends with Beatrice…”

“Believe it or not, but in the beginning, she and I fought every day. But look how intimate we are today. All thanks to the long time we spent together… Just like you, Lia.”

In other words, Pack was telling Emilia not to be in a hurry, which seemed to convince her. Then she headed back towards the garden and, when she left, she was greeted by a pleasant night breeze.

“…I think it’s good here…”

Saying, the girl sat on the grass in one corner of the garden. Then she looked unconsciously at the sky and laughed. As Rem told herself, she never paid much attention to the night sky. Of course, there were times when she looked up and was amazed by the beauty of the starry sky, but it was never something that would make her repeat every night.

“Subaru is so excited when he talks about the stars…”

At first, the boy was confused by the different disposition of the constellations, but that soon changed to curiosity. For Emilia, Subaru’s eyes that saw the starry sky shone more than any bright spot above.

“You are very happy today, Lia,” Commented Puck.

“You know, I really am. The sky remains the same as always, but just because I changed the way I saw it a little bit, it became much more beautiful.”

He also said that the name “Subaru” was taken from a group of stars, the “Pleiades” in the language of his homeland. And that is why he was always interested in astronomy and knew so many mythologies about it.

“That band full of stars is the Milky Way, if I’m not mistaken. In the legend, two lovers cross it once a year to meet, on a day called Tanabata.”

“Why do I get the impression that this story is more cruel than beautiful?” Wondered the kitten.

“How was the story? The lovers Hikoboshi and Orihime were separated as a form of punishment, but Hikoboshi is allowed by the star king to cross the Milky Way once a year and go to find his beloved.”

“Well, I guess it’s no use talking about it now…”

Emilia’s eyes sparkled as she told the supposedly romantic story, but Pack was still not convinced. Despite him, the girl was very fond of the myths about the stars, and looked forward to hearing stories from Subaru.

In any case, she could not lose focus on the initial objective:

“So, Puck, I’m going to call the guys.”

With that, the kitten moved away from her a little. The reason for this was so that the lower spirits would not be intimidated by the Pack, which was a Great Spirit.

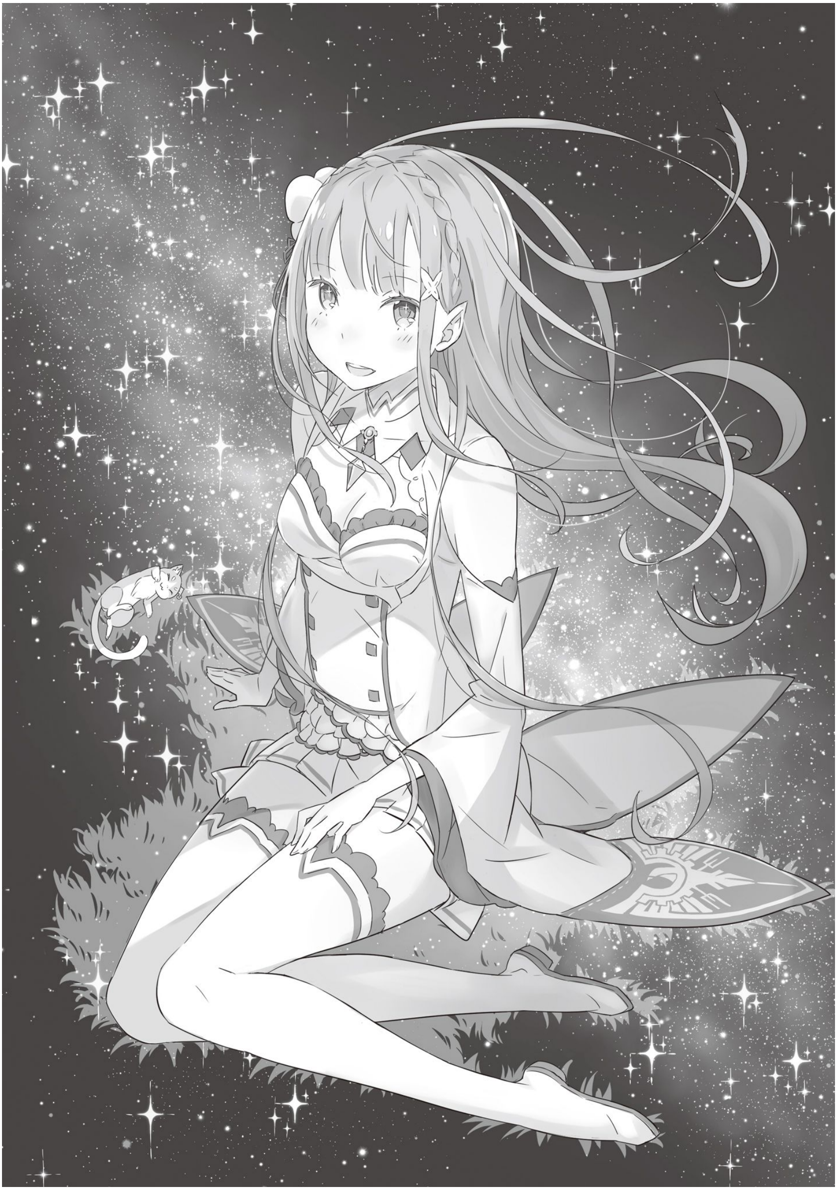
“I’m sorry for not being able to talk to you this morning. But now we have all the time in the world.”

Following her whisper, warm flashes began to emerge around her. Each was an inferior spirit who had answered the girl’s call, and the clarity of the lights showed that they were happy, making Emilia smile.

And so, the conversation between them began, serenely, only in their world. Until…

“H-Hey! Wh-Wh-What a coincidence we meet here, huh?”

…A boy in a butler’s uniform came up raising a hand. Another astronomy class was about to begin, under the tutelage of the blinding moon.



Emilia’s First Date
(Volume 3; Animate)

1

The day of their promised date began with a morning blessed with a clear, cloudless sky.

“I feel like a braid definitely looks best on you these days, but it’s regrettable that I have to show it to Subaru. As for your clothes, I suppose it would be best to stick with the white theme. We’ll add a highlight with your hair accessories, and then, after that…”

Floating around in a hurry before the silver-haired girl sitting on the bed—Before Emilia was the cat spirit she had formed a contract with, Puck.

As she watched the gray furball stress himself out, Emilia placed a finger on her cheek.

“I don’t think you have to worry about it that much, it’d probably be fine if we just went with the usual…”

“No way! Forget about your partner, this is your first date. You absolutely have to be the cutest in the world!”

“Gosh, you’re making such a big deal of it.”

Puck’s fighting spirit seemed to be blazing for some reason, Emilia stealthily sighed so he wouldn’t see it.

Acting as her foster parent, the cat spirit who was essentially her family had been in this state since last night. At this rate, the preparations alone would exhaust her before she even took a step outside. —Even though she was supposed to go on a ‘date’ with Subaru today.

“Listen closely, Lia. On today’s outing, Subaru might try to approach you to hold your hand or something of the sort, but you definitely must not allow that. Don't get caught up in the flow of things, no matter what. The most important traits in a woman are modesty, shyness, and just a little bit of submissiveness. I'm always telling you this, so I'm sure you understand."

"Okay, I get it already, jeez. If you're that worried, you might as well come along."

"I want to respect his courage as a man. There's no way I could do something so tactless."

"But then your words and actions are completely contradicting each other…"

"My feelings as a male wanting to support him and my feelings as a parent wanting to forbid this are battling it out within me… Hngh, Lia, you'd better go while I can still hold myself back…!"

"Right, right."

Puck's theatrics as he made his jokes were probably due to Subaru's bad influence.

She certainly felt like he was already this way to begin with, but she also thought he had gotten even worse about it now.

Quickly finishing up her personal grooming, Emilia beckoned Puck over to her with her hand. Puck readily responded to her call and perched on her shoulder, after which he started massaging her cheek with his paws in a fancy manner.

"Alright then, Lia. I'll be sleeping in my Yorishiro, but if Subaru tries to do anything that strays from the path of decency, be sure to call me out."

"Come on, you don't have to worry about that sort of thing. Alright, nighty night. Take it easy."

As Puck saw a giggling Emilia off, his body dissolved into particles of light. The faint light was then absorbed into the crystal on her chest, and the noisy cat watching over her fell silent.

Therefore, Emilia flicked the crystal with her finger after which she jauntily walked out of the room.

Even Emilia understood that her heart somehow felt stimulated as if it was expecting something.

2

“Did I keep you waiting?”

“No, I’ve only just gotten here myself.”

Standing before the tree they had decided to meet at, Subaru responded like so to Emilia who had just linked up with him.

Emilia nodded at his response, and then turned back to the mansion as she continued,

“You said you wanted to meet outside the mansion, and say that stuff we just said… Can I ask if there was any particular meaning to that?”

“They both seem rather fitting for a date, don’t you think! Leaving the mansion together wouldn’t feel very much like a date, and when you meet outside the sort of conversation we just had is an absolute necessity.”

It seemed like he had arrived much earlier than her, and used a twig or something to draw several pictures of Puck in order to kill time under this tree.

Seeing this, it seemed to her that at the very least his statement that he had only just gotten here himself was a complete lie.

“Hmm, so that’s how it is. I really don’t know anything about this sort of thing.”

“By the way, I would still reply ‘I’ve only just gotten here myself’ even if you were super late, it’s a sign of my noble manly heart.”

“But wouldn’t that mean you were reeeeally late too…”

“There’s certain things you shouldn’t point out even if you notice, aren’t there?!”

This seemed to be an obligatory exchange. Subaru lectured her about its importance as she accompanied him, and when he was done he placed his hand on his jaw and started staring at her intently.

“Eh, what’s wrong? Do I look weird somehow?”

“The characters for weird and romance look quite similar, huh, but setting that aside, there’s only a tiny bit that’s weird about you, and that tiny bit is also charming in itself so it’s all good. More importantly, you’re looking extraordinarily cute today as well! … Have you dressed up a little more than usual today?”

Subaru, alert as he was, noticed the subtle changes in her hair, accessories, and so on. He accurately guessed where Puck had spent his efforts, surprising Emilia.

“You noticed? Puck was a lot more enthusiastic than usual today.”

“Ooh, great job! Not bad, Puck. And here I thought for sure that his feelings as a father would make him put up some resistance when it came to his daughter’s first date.”

“Yeah, he was reeeeally conflicted about it, but he’s sleeping in my crystal right now so you can relax.”

Emilia showed him the crystal on her chest with a faint smile, causing Subaru to don an expression of relief, “I see.” He then cleared his throat, and humbly bowed before her.

“Well then, I suppose this is the beginning of our first date. I consider it a great honor that you would allow me to escort you.”

His butler outfit was completely flawless from head to toe. Subaru didn’t really have much choice since he did not possess any other formal clothing, but to Emilia it truly seemed to fit this gesture.

Consequently, she obediently stood next to Subaru who was holding his elbow out to her, intending to link arms with her.

“Umm, is this okay?”

Her fingers grasped his cuff ever so slightly as she looked to him with upturned eyes and asked this. Puck had told her not to take his hand, so she was rather anxious wondering if this was okay. But in response, Subaru,

“This isn’t what I was hoping for, but that’s a performance beyond my expectations! Your loveliness truly is demonically inspired…”

Subaru covered his face with his palms and writhed around, it didn’t look like he was angry. Relieved by this, Emilia pulled on his cuff as she started walking.

“So, what exactly do you do on a ‘date’?”

“First of all, we’ll head to the village. After that, we’ll pay our respects to the dead… And then, how about going to see some flowers. Slowly, calmly, there’s no rush.”

Bathed in the warmth of his gaze, Emilia looked at his profile as he said this with a smile, after which she responded “That sounds nice” with a smile so lovely it was enchanting.

3

“Thank goodness the children seem alright. You seemed reeeeeally popular too, Subaru.”

“I wonder if that’s something to be so happy about, it’s actually pretty problematic in its own way, Emilia-tan.”

Subaru who muttered this with a grave expression was currently dusting off his butler outfit which was covered in dust and dirt.

When they first arrived in the village, the two set went to receive some flowers for their visit to the grave. Subaru had already asked the children to prepare a bouquet in advance.

There were no problems thus far, their troubles started after they had obtained the flowers.

Even the fact that he was on an important date had no meaning to these innocent children. Regrettably, Subaru ended up getting surrounded just like he usually did and was ultimately reduced to this wretched state that he always ended up in.

“Even with this, they were probably holding back because you were there. If it weren’t for that, I’d be going through something even more horrible right about now.”

“Come on, you’re exaggerating. Those kids just like you, isn’t that right.”

“If this were any other day, I would have snot spread all over my back right now. Fortunately, I was able to avoid that fate today.”

“That’s what usually happens?!”

Emilia suddenly started to gaze upon him with pity.

Forming a complicated expression in response to her sympathetic gaze, Subaru turned around somewhat exhausted and, “Ah.”

This caused Emilia to turn around as well, and there she found the children from the village who had been following them.

“Come on, you guys can’t tag along this time. I told you that Emilia and I were going to be having a thrilling, lascivious tryst, didn’t I? Get outta here, scram!”

“Ehh, what a tyrant.”

“Ehh, what a rude guy.”

“Ehh, what an unruly kid.”

“I’m no unruly brat. Also, we’re getting close to the barrier which if you remember you were forbidden from approaching. Unless you want to hear Muraosa’s long, boring, droning lectures, you’d better head back right now. Head back, and have fun playing that frozen demon game I taught you or something.”

[T/N: Frozen Demon = Freeze Tag]

Subaru waved his hand as if shooing away insects, causing the children to mutter complaints as they retreated.

Emilia watched this exchange as if she found it charming, but she suddenly realized that among the children, there was a cute girl staring directly at her.

She was a lovely girl with reddish brown hair and red cheeks like an appa. When her eyes met Emilia's, she stuck her tongue out with a noise before she ran off.

"That Petra, what's with that attitude of hers. I'll be sure to give her a good talking to tomorrow. Are you alright, Emilia-tan? If the shock has rendered you unable to walk, I'm more than willing to princess carry you in my arms."

"No, I'm used to it, so it's fine. Something of that level isn't anything worth making a fuss over."

"Making a fuss, not something you hear very often these days… And I'm the one hurt by the statement that you're used to this…"

"It's fine. Come on, our 'date' isn't over just yet. Let's go."

Emilia said this to Subaru whose face looked like he wasn't telling her something, after which she immediately started walking. Subaru seemed a little troubled, but he ultimately ended up walking over to Emilia's side without saying anything.

Emilia felt somewhat disgusted at herself for relying on his consideration like this

"—Alright, we're here, we're here.".

After they walked a bit further, Subaru stopped and pointed at the trees.

At first glance they appeared to be a perfectly normal cluster of trees, but there were blue crystals embedded high up in their trunks, and the evenly spaced trees formed a barrier that responded to evil mana in the atmosphere—Miasma.

The witchbeasts known as Ulgarm which had been inhabiting the forest were all wiped out, but it was very likely that a different type of witchbeast would soon take over the now empty territory. The barrier had not yet outlived its usefulness, and thus it was once again restored.

“We can’t enter, so sorry, but this is as far as we go.”

Standing right before the barrier, Subaru found a spot people weren’t likely to frequent and placed the bouquet there. Having done this, Subaru joined his hands and closed his eyes while still on his knees, and then lowered his head as if in prayer.

It was an unusual method of praying, it was her first time seeing such a thing. Perhaps it was a custom from his home town which he would not speak to her in detail about. Seeing this from the side, Emilia too placed her hand on her chest and prayed for them to rest in peace

She had heard that all living things, even witchbeasts, would have their souls cleansed when they returned to the Od upon death. She hoped they could get along when they once again incarnated into this world in a new form.

That was a life lesson Emilia had picked up—Someone had probably taught it to her.

“Sorry to make you play along with my self-satisfaction. It’s alright now, everything’s OK.”

Dusting off his knees, Subaru stood up and smiled at Emilia. Coming to her senses, Emilia confirmed that Subaru wasn’t forcing himself to smile after which she nodded, “Yeah.”

“So, what we’re doing next is… Visiting a field of flowers, is that right?”

Drawing up their ‘date’s’ itinerary in her mind, Emilia asked about their next destination. To confirm this, Subaru snapped his fingers in satisfaction,

“That’s right, a flower field. This is a pretty big deal in itself, you know?”

Saying this, he smiled with a playful expression that fanned the flames of her expectations even further.

4

Having left the forest, with her bangs dancing in the wind, Emilia could not suppress her voice of admiration.

“W-W… Wow!”

She advanced through the forest with Subaru leading her, and the greenery that had been blocking her view thus far cleared away in an instant. The vivid scenery filled her vision with endless, beautiful colors.

“How about it?! I was rather surprised myself when I first saw this, but… It really is pretty grand after all, isn’t it?”

She couldn’t even respond to Subaru who was boasting right beside her, her gaze was fixed on the scenery before her.

Red and yellow, white and blue, flowers were blooming all over the place, and none of them overwhelmed the others, the field of flowers was in complete harmony. The fact that a flower garden like this was formed naturally could only be called a miracle.

“This seems to be some sort of secret garden to those brats, I really had to work hard to get them to talk about it.”

“A wonderful place like this… How did you get them to tell you about it?”

“Hehe, it was all for my date with you. I suppose you could say it was a bit of compensation for letting them violate my rights as a human being for days on end.”

The conditions of this exchange probably resulted in Subaru getting covered in unfathomable amounts of dirt and snot.

While she certainly found this pitiable, she definitely could not forget about how deeply the scene before her eyes moved her.

Perhaps she was once again being spoiled by him. To have her chest filled with such pleasant emotions.

"—Also, this too is a present from me to you, Emilia-tan."

And thus, Subaru said this to Emilia whose hand was against her chest as he extended his hands toward her. "Eh?", Emilia was late to react as Subaru touched her silver hair,

"This is… An ornament, made of flowers?"

"It's a crown of flowers, so to speak. Perhaps it's not much compared to the real thing, but you could think of it as a rehearsal for when you one day ascend the throne? I definitely want to give you one adorned with the finest jewels by my own hand some day, but… For now, this is the best I can do."

Subaru said this in a rather pompous tone as he winked at Emilia.

His actions caused Emilia to feel a slight throb in her chest. For some reason, her heart suddenly turned lively for a moment. She wondered what exactly that sensation was, strangely enough it did not occur again.

But she did know that it made her feel terribly warm, and it naturally brought a smile to her face.

"Thank you, Subaru."

On that day, Emilia gave him her finest smile, and Subaru was so entranced he could not even speak.

Emilia felt immense gratitude toward Subaru and continued.

"If possible, I'd like to go on another 'date' with you sometime."

This killer line of hers pierced his heart magnificently.

Rem Meets Subaru
(Volume 1; Toranoana)

1

…Feeling her chest tingle, the girl looked outside the window.

The girl looked at the path in front of the gate that lead to the main road, visible from the mansion window, then looked back.

Rem: “Roswaal-sama, it seems Nee-sama is coming back. It looks like she’s in a bit of a rush, though.”

Roswaal: “Hmmmm, she’s coming back earlier than plaaaned. Since she’s coming back soon, that must mean that she had left there at niiiiight.”

The man responded carefreely to the girl who gave a report based on her chest tingling, and he really sounded like he was feigning ignorance.

It was a person who was sitting in a leather chair and held a cup that gave out steam. He had long indigo blue hair. His different colored blue and yellow eyes were mesmerizing; you could say that at a glance he looked like a frail, handsome man.

However, the clown makeup applied on his face ruined these classy impressions.

Roswaal: “In a rush. I wonder if something happeneeeed. Do you know the details?”

Rem: “I’m sorry. I don’t know much about the situation. But, it seems Beatrice-sama has work to do.”

Roswaal: “Beatrice does? I see…But, that means a bone has been brooooken.”

When Roswaal looked up at the ceiling upon hearing her explanation, he pompously put down the cup onto the desk. After that, he fixed the posture of his long legs, and when he turned around to face the girl as he moved the chair, he said,

Roswaal: “At any rate, the things Ram does usually aren’t pointless…I think. Sorry, but can you go find Beatrice? I think she may be a little late, thooooough.”

Rem: “Yes, understood.”

After receiving her master’s orders, she lightly held onto the maid outfit she was wearing and answered with a perfect curtsy. On her lowered head, where she wore a white head dress, she had somewhat short blue hair.

After the servant bowed, Roswaal tugged on his chin approvingly and said,

Roswaal: “Well then, please take care of business. …Rem.”

The girl—Rem bowed formally again, and quietly left the office.

2

With her blue hair swaying, Rem walked briskly through the mansion’s spacious corridor.

It was Lugunica Margrave Roswaal L Mathers’ mansion. Rem was the head maid of this mansion. She was a maid that could do everything and did most of the mansion work.

Even though the Roswaal mansion was pretty big for a mansion, there were currently only two people who were permanent maids due to various reasons—there were only Rem and her twin sister Ram. So, Rem made up for lack of workers and took care of most of the mansion work by herself.

And then today, she had been contacted by her sister that had been away from the mansion for business, then the exchange from earlier happened.

Rem: “Judging from the range of synesthesia, I suppose Nee-sama will be back in about an hour.”

There did exist magic where they could communicate in real time that also cancelled far distances, but the sisters didn't need that.

The synesthesia the twins had—Rem and her sister Ram possessed a special ability that relayed strong emotions and small thoughts. She had felt her sister's return and her slight sense of impatience precisely as a result of synesthesia.

However, at this point in time it was uncertain whether she'd be able to do what her sister had asked of her.

Rem: "If only the Great Spirit was here, things would be much easier…Beatrice-sama?"

Rem boldly rose up to the difficult challenge, talking about how there was no use in asking for too much.

The challenge was very simple—open every single door that she sees. However, there was almost 100 doors in the mansion. This was, of course, no easy task.

Rem: "Beatrice-sama, which one are you in?"

She opens the door that had a "reference room" plate on it. She was met with a bunch of books and a pile of a countless number of books. It was normal, since it was a reference room.

Normally, there aren't any people who permanently stay in the reference room. Rem wasn't going to do that either.

Rem: "Beatrice-sama? Beatrice-sama?"

While calling out to her, Rem calmly opened doors one after another, though at an unusual pace. After doing that for five minutes…

Beatrice: "Augh! You're so annoying, loud, and noisy I can't stand it!"

A lone girl comes out of the next room with a loud but cute voice.

It was a little girl that had her hair put into drills, and she wore a magnificent dress. Seeing this girl that had dollish looks appear, Rem straightened herself and bowed deeply.

Beatrice: “You’ve been so loud, and you just don’t pipe down, I suppose! What in the world do you want from me at this time of night?!”

Rem: “I apologize, Beatrice-sama. But, thank goodness you’re still awake.”

Beatrice: “Hmph, even if I was sleeping, the noise would wake me up. You sure do have guts, little sister.”

The girl—Beatrice arrogantly snorted at Rem, who bowed, with a book held to her chest. She was acting all high and mighty, but Rem didn’t even care.

Beatrice was someone of a noble position. The way she interacts with Rem, a maid, is something to be expected.

Rem: “By the way, Beatrice-sama, Roswaal-sama needs you for something. I’ve been told that he really needs your help for it.”

Beatrice: “For him to summon me through a maid, he’s become quite an arrogant one, I suppose. It seems he’s forgotten that there is no hierarchical relationship between me and him, I suppose.”

Rem: “…”

Beatrice, who seemed to not like this selfish way of going about things, was becoming grumpy since she had been summoned late at night.

Beatrice: “Haah. You should hurry up and show me the way before my mood changes, I suppose.”

Rem: “…! Yes, thank you. I’ll show you the way.”

Beatrice broke the momentary silence, then expressed tolerance in a way that showed that she had gave in. Saved by her thoughtfulness, Rem started walking through the corridor as she guided Beatrice.

Beatrice: “Mm…I heard Nii-chan’s instructions. He said to prepare a bath, a clean towel, and the guest room, I suppose.”

Rem: “The guest room, you say?”

Beatrice: “Yes. …It seems that foolish girl is bringing someone back, I suppose.”

Murmured Beatrice in somewhat of a displeased manner while showing no emotion in her eyes. Rem thought about Beatrice’s instructions in her mind without mentioning what she’d said.

The guest room is always ready. All she has to do is prepare some sheets and let in some fresh air. Then heat up the bath, prepare a clean towel—she immediately realized that they were bringing in a wounded person.

With that, she also understood why Beatrice was needed.

…Beatrice is a great healer that Rem could never compare to. She hears the earth dragon growl from afar, and had a feeling that the dragon carriage was very close.

3

…The black haired boy laying down on the bed was breathing profoundly in his sleep as though he was dead.

Healing the boy in the boy that had been taken in took at dawn took a lot of time; outside the window, the sun was already setting westward in orange light. It wouldn’t be long before night approaches.

Emilia: “Now he should be relieved…yeah.”

Sitting on a chair next to the bed, breaking into a smile out of relief was a silver haired girl—it was Emilia.

Emilia was the one who took this boy back and asked for his injuries to be healed. Now that the commotion finally settled down for the time being, Rem threw a question at Emilia.

Rem: “Emilia-sama, now that things have settled down, I think it’s about time for you to tell me what’s the situation…”

Emilia: “Mm, you’re right. Umm, this boy’s name is Subaru. I had a lot of trouble at the capital…but that’s when he helped me out. I owe him my life, and a lot of other things.”

Rem: “Is that so?”

At her vague explanation, Rem shot a glance at the person next to her—she looked at her pink haired twin sister who looked identical to her.

Being looked at by her sister, the older sister—Ram kept her stone face, shook her head, and said,

Ram: “Even I don’t know the situation in detail. It’s something that happened while Emilia-sama and I were separated.”

Rem: “Separated…? I thought you were with Emilia-sama to escort her…”

Ram: “It was to encourage Emilia-sama to be independent and have a strong sense of responsibility.”

Rem: “As expected of Nee-sama…I’m very impressed.”

She spoke in a bit of an insolent way, but Rem unconditionally accepts what Ram says. Seeing those sisters interact like that, Emilia burst out laughing.

Emilia: “You two really do get along reeeeaally well. But, don’t make me laugh too much. I want to let this boy get some good rest.”

Rem: “This boy must be someone you met while being separated from Nee-sama.”

Emilia: “Nope, he’s not. Subaru is my…my, my what?”

Emilia put her finger to her chin and started to worry with a serious expression on her face. It didn’t seem like she was trying to put off

Rem. She saw that she really was at a loss for an answer.

If she wasn't trying to hide something, this must be someone whom she had too little information on in the first place since she was having trouble explaining.

…Then perhaps this was a kind of a person that mustn't get close to Emilia.

Ram: "…Rem. This person saved Emilia-sama's life. Roswaal-sama acknowledged that fact, too. No matter how stupid he looks, he's our guest. You do understand what that means, right?"

Rem: "But, Nee-sama—"

Ram: "Rem."

She calls her name once for a moment. Rem felt like her sister had looked deep into her heart, and after that she couldn't continue.

Emilia stared at the silent sisters in confusion, then slowly sat down.

Emilia: "I actually want to stay by his side until he wakes up…but apparently he won't wake up until morning."

Ram: "We were told that she used up most of his mana to heal, after all. I was surprised that Beatrice-sama helped heal someone she didn't even know."

Emilia: "Because of that, Puck will be Beatrice's for a day tomorrow. Also, Roswaal is…gone from the mansion for tonight, I think."

Rem: "He was called over suddenly, so he left the mansion before the afternoon. He plans on returning tomorrow night."

Emilia: "I see. Well, let's leave the room for now."

Emilia, who seemed to be satisfied with the sisters' replies as she had a quick stretch, prompted them to leave the room. Then, lastly Emilia ran her fingers through the bangs of the boy laying on the bed—through Subaru's bangs.

Emilia: "I have so many things I want to talk about with Subaru when he wakes up."

Rem felt like she was whispering, and it sounded like it had some sweet anticipation to it.

When they left the room, they separated in the corridor for each of their plans. Emilia's duty to report the trouble in the capital to Roswaal was one in particular.

Emilia: "Hmm, he's gonna get mad at me. How do I explain this…"

Emilia dropped her shoulder, and was trudging towards her private room in the mansion. Rem watched her go, said goodbye to Ram who had work left to do, and went to the kitchen to prepare dinner —

Rem: "…Before that"

Rem confirmed that they were gone and snuck into the room where the boy was sleeping in.

She silently closed the door with her back and walked up to the bed in the gloomy room that had the lights off.

Rem, who held breath, only heard the sleeping boy's soft breathing. The boy's innocent sleeping face reflected in Rem's light blue eyes.

…She didn't know who this suspicious boy was, or what he was after.

Emilia had explained that he was a lifesaver, but she just could not believe that he didn't have an ulterior motive. Emilia was beautiful, but she was so vulnerable that just watching her would make you uneasy, and there was no end to people with bad intentions going after her.

…Before problems arise—before peace is disturbed, maybe I should do something.

Dangerous thoughts rise up in Rem's head, and she silently reached for the boy's neck. Then…

Subaru: "Ehehe, you're cute even when you're mad…parallel worlds, fantasies…"

With a very sloven look on his face, the boy talked in his sleep like a slob while drooling.

Just as Rem heard that, she didn't know what to do with her hand, and

Subaru: "…Aagh"

Seeing the sleeping boy shriek after being flicked by her finger made her feel relieved.

Rem: "I don't think I'll ever get along well with this guest…Please leave as soon as possible."

Only Rem's superficially polite murmur was left in the guest room before she exited it.

Rem’s Latte Art
(Volume 2; Toranoana)

1

It was three days after a new servant had entered the Roswaal manor.

“…What are you doing, Subaru-kun?”

Holding open the door leading back to the dining hall from the kitchen, Rem tilted her head and asked that.

The current time was after lunch. Preparation of food was Rem’s job, but cleaning up afterwards was included in that as well. Having finished that, she’d just now come to check on how the newly-hired servant was handling cleaning up the dining hall.

“Oh, hey Rem. Don’t worry about the cleaning, it’s done. It’s break time now.”

Greeting Rem as she returned to the dining hall was a black-haired boy who was smiling casually at her.

He had black hair, a color that was rarely seen in the kingdom, and his features had a peculiar way of making him feel younger than the age he’d given. The eye color and the color of his skin were rare as well, and his point of origin was still unclear.

Regardless, there was no mistaking the way that his over-snug butler’s uniform didn’t suit him at all; this was the new servant that the Roswaal manor had welcomed, Natsuki Subaru.

For a moment, Rem was silent as her gaze judged him—Subaru didn’t show the least sign of being aware of it, and stood looking pleased with himself, without a care showing on his face. It looked like nothing more than the innocent face of a mischievous boy, and this only strengthened Rem’s suspicion about his age.

Could a boy with this sort of childlike face truly be the same seventeen years of age as herself and her sister?

“Well, that’s fine. So why are you in such a good mood? Because you piled up the plates nicely, or spread the tablecloth nicely?”

“No way?! Do you think of me as the kind of guy who would make a ‘Yeah, I did it!’ face from a little job like that?!”

“When I think back to how you worked on your first day, I don’t think such an opinion is that far off the mark.”

“Gaah, I can’t really deny that… but, just you wait. I’m a man with incredible potential for growth…The rebellious skyrocket that could one day threaten even your position is climbing now…!”

“What’s this now? What will happen one day? Please speak clearly.”

Leaving behind Subaru as he ground his teeth in frustration, Rem turned her eyes towards the dining hall’s table where Subaru had been playing up until now. It was a fairly wide table, and could be used for dining and discussions for ten people or more. Naturally, the recent lunch was taken here, so cleaning it up had been Subaru’s responsibility, but…

“…This is a cup you forgot to put away, is it not?”

Looking at the cup placed on the table, Rem raised an eyebrow a little. If there was nothing unusual about it, she might have taken it as something that hadn’t been cleaned up, or Subaru’s cup for his break. However, it was clearly different.

As Rem pointed it out, Subaru’s face broke out in a wide ‘You noticed?’ grin.

“Yeah, actually I’ve wanted to try that out ever since I noticed there’s something like coffee around here as well. It was really rough trying to get the milk close to what I remember, but sometimes ya just gotta try it.”

Subaru extended both his hands towards Rem, while dancing festively. Held in one hand was a cup poured full of a drink made from beans, originating from the Vollachian Empire, called coff. And, in the other hand was a container of milk.

And, as for what Subaru was doing with those two things…

“You’ve used the milk to draw a picture in the coff, then?”

In the black fluid in the cup, a white pattern had been used to draw a little picture of a cat.

Rem couldn’t help but let out a sigh of exasperation mixed with wonder at his playfulness.

2

“So you keep the coffee…er, the coff hot, and then the trick is to make the design a little at a time while keeping the milk at the bottom. There’s different ways to do it, but first, the basics are…”

Seemingly to have mistaken Rem’s first sigh for admiration, Subaru cheerfully began to explain, and poured another cup of piping hot coff so she could see.

The aroma of the steaming coff spread through the room, and Rem sniffed quietly. Struggling not to let her interest show on her face, for the moment she simply kept her attention on Subaru’s hands.

When the cup had been poured about half-full of coff, Subaru next switched to the container of milk and began to fill the cup the rest of the way. The foamy milk was something new to Rem, and she couldn’t help but open her eyes wide.

“What have you done to this milk?”

“This? This here is the end product of a lot of difficult work. Honestly, steaming it would be ideal, but I just don’t have that kind of equipment, so I used the magic crystals in the bathing room instead. There was a lot of trial and error involved, I’ll tell ya. I couldn’t get it quite right.”

The foamed milk wouldn’t turn out like that simply by heating it.

She was terribly interested in what sort of struggle Subaru, who she didn't think could use magic, had gone through with the magic crystals. However, Rem quickly remembered her own duties, and that she was in charge, and put away her curiosity.

She should make him put away the cup and coff right away; even on break, one should be cautious of playing around. She should, and yet…

"To make sure the milk doesn't spread too far, you keep it on the inside like this. Then, a layer of milk builds up a little at a time, so when you keep the unruly bit of it under control and redo it…"

"ah…"

"There you go, the first step of the first step! The completion of a heart design!"

Lifting up the container of milk, Subaru spun about and unveiled the finished product.

Making way for him, Rem blinked at yet another surprise as she viewed the result.

The white design drawn in the cup was a fanciful thing built up from countless layers of milk. Without thinking, she let a sigh of admiration escape her lips.

"Amazing…"

"Oh, oh oh? What's that, what's that, please speak up. Feel free to shower me with praise! Isn't it amazing?!"

"It's a skill you could never gain without being an amazingly idle person."

"Don't you think you should apologize to all the latte artists throughout the world?!"

As Subaru started getting full of himself, she abruptly gave him a back-handed compliment.

While it was simply out of the question to openly recognize his accomplishment, there was no escaping the fact that it was not only a rare ability, but a craft that required exceptional skill. Even this pattern that he had called the first step made that clear. The picture of a kitten that Subaru had first drawn in that cup—the Great Spirit that accompanied Emilia, how incredibly difficult would that be?

"This is called 'latte art'?"

"Yep yep. Latte is sort of the name of this drink, and you make art with it. Back where I'm from, it's an essential skill for a first-class waiter."

"Latte art and sewing as well; you're quite good with your hands at little skills, Subaru-kun."

"When you call them little skills, it really makes them sound like something that isn't an essential part of life! Besides that, I can do magic tricks and play the guitar and cat's cradle and ball-and-cup toys and yo-yo and lots of things, you know!"

Presented with a list of skills she'd never heard of, Rem doubted their existence. However, there was the precedent of the latte art. Perhaps all of them were from a world of little skills that Rem knew nothing of.

"And thinking about it now that I've said all that, what am I trying to do with nothing but skills that have no practical use?"

"Boasting all that and then becoming depressed about it… You must have lived a life free of boredom, Subaru-kun."

"That's a surprising evaluation of me when my goal in life was to live in seclusion and play with cats on the porch."

Subaru shivered. Seeing him looking like that, Rem felt even more certain.

Subaru was most likely a person who grew up in a very fortunate environment.

It was true of his work as a servant as well, but she felt that he mostly had no experience engaging in hard work before now. That’s why his fingers were pretty, and in some areas he was lacking knowledge and common sense needed for life. In exchange for that, being able to enjoy something like latte art was a sign of the frivolity of the upper class born from a life of ease.

That fact itself was neither a good thing nor a bad thing. Being unable to choose one’s birth was the same for everyone, regardless of whether one was poor or rich. Subaru was making an effort to learn his job. Regardless of the results.

So, even if one were to overlook that he was playing like this during his break time…

“Well, there’s a few things I’d like to say about your merciless poison tongue, Rem, but… fine, here.”

“…huh?”

Taking the offered container of milk, Rem let out a surprised voice without meaning to. She looked back and forth from the milk in her hand and Subaru’s face. Subaru scratched his head as she looked at him.

“Whadaya mean, ‘huh?’. Looking all anxious to try it like that, don’t give me that.”

“Saying that she looks anxious to try; Rem wouldn’t…”

“When your face looked like you were dying to try it like that? You don’t need to be embarrassed about it. You’re a cute girl too, Rem, so what’s wrong with playing a little now and then?”

Turning his attention away from Rem as she backpedaled, Subaru poured another cup of coff. Then, placing the cup before her, he offered it with a look that said ‘Go ahead’.

“Um, for you to have implied that Rem really wanted to try that. Well, it would be a lie if I said that I didn’t want to even a little tiny bit, not in the least, just a little, perhaps slightly…”

“I get it, I get it. I’m forcing you to try it even though you don’t want to. So, just once, please do."

"…Well, when you put it like that, it can't be helped. Honestly, Subaru-kun, you're so troublesome."

Pestered until she was left with no choice, Rem hid the glee she couldn't help but feel and turned towards the cup.

Recalling Subaru's process from earlier, the order of things seemed to be that one first poured milk into the slightly tilted cup, building a layer on the interior and drawing a pattern. Envisioning Subaru's movements that she'd been watching wide-eyed, she overlayed her own movement and imitated them…using the white pattern on the black liquid, she drew from her heart.

Rem looked back towards Subaru. And, he looked to her and nodded forcefully.

"Well, that's how it turns out on a novice's first try. Don't worry about it!"

"Rather than playing endlessly, Subaru-kun, please get back to work right away."

While holding the messy art in front of her, Rem stated that in the coldest voice she had used yet.

3

"…Rem, what are you doing?"

Surprised while she was concentrating by a voice from behind her, Rem's little shoulders jumped.

Looking behind her to the dining hall's entrance, standing in the entrance was a girl with sharp, pale red eyes—her older sister Ram.

Rem's eyes briefly lit up at the sight of her beloved sister, but she quickly remembered what she was doing, and her expression stiffened. Suddenly, she tried to hide what was on the table, but…

"…Isn't this what Barusu was playing at?"

It was impossible for her to deceive the sister who had always been better than her at everything, and Ram immediately saw through Rem's clumsy attempt to cover it up. As Rem shrank, Ram looked over the countless cups Rem had been working on, and the failed latte art, and narrowed her eyes.

…It would soon be nearly an hour since Rem had chased Subaru out of the dining hall, saying that she would clean up.

The state Rem now found herself in was that, until Ram arrived (after becoming frustrated with the work when Rem did not return), she had forgotten the time and been trying her best at latte art.

Glancing quickly, she could see that the magic crystal that showed the time had changed color, and she finally realized that break time had long since passed. It was shameful. On top of that, her sister had found out.

"It's rare for you to lose track of time playing at this sort of thing, Rem."

"I…I'm sorry, nee-sama. I'll clean it up right away. I'll catch up right away on my work, too. Oh, I should never have been doing something like this…"

"Don't be silly, Rem. I'm not upset about it. I just thought it was unusual."

As Rem shrank back, Ram's expression softened in a way that only someone close to her would recognize.

Then she poured coff into an empty cup, took hold of the milk placed nearby, and began to gently pour it into the cup.

"Doing her work with all of her might is one of Rem's good points, but occasionally it's good to do something with all your might even if you can't expect any results from it. If there's no leeway in your heart, nothing will ever go right for you."

"…Are those Roswaal-sama's words?"

"Yes, as expected of Roswaal-sama. They're wonderful words. I feel the same way, too.”

Thinking of her master with an enchanted look on her face, Ram’s eyes were gentle as she stared into the cup. Having finished pouring milk into it, inside the cup in her hands was…

“This is… a pattern I’ve never seen before. A pattern… no, a letter…?”

“It seems that this is how you write ‘older sister’ in the letters of Barusu’s homeland. He insisted I look at it while he was studying in the evening, so I learned it no matter how little I wanted to.”

Although she’d never seen the letter before, there was no mistaking that it had been drawn by a combination of reliable skills. Rem marvelled at her sister’s talent, and gazed shyly at her.

“Were you practicing latte art as well, nee-sama?”

“Not really. It’s called latte art, is it? I simply imitated what Barusu was doing earlier.”

As Ram spoke about it as though it were nothing, Rem couldn’t help but catch her breath. Cutting off the momentary hesitation before her sister would think it strange, Rem smiled softly.

“Impressive as always, nee-sama. Subaru-kun will be jealous, too, no doubt.”

“It might be entertaining to crush Barusu’s areas of expertise one by one like that. Regardless, that’s enough of this for now. I’ll clean this up and catch up with you.”

Saying that, Ram took the containers of coff and milk and headed off to the kitchen to clean up. Watching her go, Rem compared her own botched creations lined up on the table with the ‘older sister’ that Ram completed on her first try, without any practice, and sighed softly.

“…You truly are impressive, nee-sama.”

Herself, unable to create a single thing she was satisfied with, and her sister, who was able to complete it so easily and skillfully.

It was something she should have already understood, but when she had a chance to compare them like this, she was once again made painfully aware of how far she had to go. To Rem, it was a harsh prompting towards self-reflection and self-discipline.

“Well, all of this needs to be cleaned up, then.”

Speaking to no one in particular, Rem collected all of the used cups onto the tray.

And, at the end, she gathered up Ram’s ‘older sister’ artwork, avoiding damaging the pattern in the milk, and moistening her tongue with the slightly cooled coff,

“Mm…bitter.”

“First, I’ll have to teach Subaru-kun how to grind the beans.”

Deciding to teach him about her own area of expertise, she followed Ram’s path towards the kitchen.

Sigh...

The Best Day of Rem's Life (Volume 3; Toranoana)

1

Her body was hot, her face was red, her chest swelled with her excited breaths that wouldn't calm down.

Cooking, cleaning, laundering. Even though she found herself busy with all kinds of daily chores, she was long distracted from work. Her thoughts were already occupied by other things.

Hurrying through the corridor, half of her was wondering how to quickly finish the rest of her work, while the other half did nothing but think about the source of why her heart was pounding.

"…Ah."

Suddenly, because she saw something, the girl voiced a shy word.

Even she could hear how full of joy her inadvertent voice held. She felt her cheeks burning. Then the girl—Rem, increased her pace.

"Oh! You're almost done with your chores, Rem?"

Noticing Rem's presence as she neared him, the boy ahead turned around with a grin.

Short and black hair, sharp sanpaku eyes, a mischievous child's smile. Rather than being very manly, he's more on the cute side. No matter which trait, they all caused "The Horn" inside her to tremble excitedly. Bowing her head in front of the boy, Rem unconsciously smiled as she stopped.

"Yes… Would you like to have some tea together, Subaru-kun?"

She had the look of a girl in love that called out her beloved's name.

2

Rem, at this point, was aware of the incurable sickness that caused her flustered state.

She could not get the boy out of her mind. Rather, it would be easier to calculate how much time she spent a day without thinking about him. This was to be taken literally. Whether she was asleep or awake, she would be thinking about him.

“Rem, I didn’t know you were such a carefree person…”

Isn’t that far too much? Even she questioned how abnormal her love was.

The only other person Rem knows that is afflicted with this sickness is Ram nee-sama. Rem understood that, Ram’s admiration towards Roswaal was the same as Rem’s own feelings towards Subaru. But Rem can’t imagine being like nee-sama, where she won’t reveal those expressions uncontrollably.

…Nee-sama sure is amazing.

This was Rem’s unwavering love towards her sister. After losing her horn, many aspects of her abilities had become worse than Rem’s, but none of it has harmed Rem’s respect towards nee-sama.

Because of this, Rem wondered if her sickness was more severe than her sister’s.

“—Rem?”

A male’s voice entered her ears. It could be said to be a little childish, but it was also one that had gradually left boyhood. That was the impression the voice gave.

Her blue hair swayed as Rem tilted her head and looked at the person whose voice it came from.

“Yes, is something wrong, Subaru-kun?”

“No, there’s nothing wrong, but… aren’t you a little too close? Wouldn’t it be inconvenient when drinking tea?”

"Really? Rem doesn't find it at all inconvenient."

Close enough that they could feel each other's breath, Rem replied to Subaru's troubled smile with an endearing voice.

The two were in the living room of Roswaal's mansion, where they enjoyed their afternoon tea on the same couch.

Subaru's left arm was tightly stuck next to Rem's right arm.

Though the two had maintained some distance in the beginning, without him noticing, Rem had nestled closer bit by bit.

"Subaru-kun, would you like some more snacks?"

"Eh? There's more? This is really good, these things that Rem made are delicious!"

"Yes. That's because I was praised like this before by Subaru-kun… There's around a hundred of them, is this enough?"

"Are you planning on feeding me until I'm a pig?! Two or three is enough!"

After she received Subaru's praise on the baked cream pastry a few days ago, it was served countless times during their tea time.

Rem excitedly stood up.

"Then, I shall go prepare. If Subaru-kun disappears while I am preparing, then I'll be sad."

"I wouldn't do something that mean. How about we promise on it, a promise."

"…Okay."

Long-awaited by her, Rem stretched her pinky out, while Subaru extended his own with an "it can't be helped" smile. Their pinkies entwined each other, and shook up and down to seal the promise.

"—Hair… cut"

…Was it because of Rem's sickness that Rem was not thinking clearly? She felt as if they had made such an agreement before as she thought about what she blurted.

It was around a week ago, after the Witchbeast turmoil subsided. The morning the wounded Subaru opened his eyes, Rem apologized and requested to atone for the trouble. Instead, she received a gentle "punishment [curse]." That morning, Rem's heart was captured. Rem was captivated by the future he described in their promise.

But recently, she had become less satisfied. She wanted more precious promises about the future. Even though Subaru would give a wry smile while he agreed to the promises Rem made, he never refused her selfish desires. So, her love could only grow bigger and bigger.

"That's right, we did promise something like this."

With his warmth still left on her pinky, Rem was about to step out the room when she stopped. Subaru pointed at his hair when she turned around, and revealed his usual, mischievous smile.

"We made a promise about trimming my hair before. I think it's about time I need your help, right?"

The boy must not have known how much those words made Rem's heart beat like crazy.

3

…With Rem's skill, taking care of Subaru's hair would be straightforward.

Although it was a fairly simple promise, for Rem, it was more important than anything else. The reason why would be…

"Because this was the first promise with Subaru-kun."

"Just like you have questions about me, I have a lot to ask about you. That's why, let's take care of everything and then talk. We can talk until our throats are sore. Let's make a promise."

He firmly tugged Rem's hand, and hooked their pinkies together.

While Rem was confused by their intertwined pinkies, Subaru already shook on it.

"We made a pinky promise."

"Th-That was…?"

"It's the ceremony my hometown does when making a promise. If you break it, you're forced to swallow a thousand needles. It's a punishment of hell."

Subaru's monologue had already surpassed Rem's understanding.

Rem was confused and utterly speechless. To which Subaru snapped his finger, flashed a toothy grin, and said, "I trust Rem, so I want to do something to earn Rem's trust. That's why I made that kind of promise."

"…"

"I said it before, didn't I? I'm the kind of person that would keep his promise after making one. Plus, I have Emilia's blessing, so I'm not concerned at all when I say 'dun worry 'bout it.' "

"Hehe…"

Dumbfounded, Rem was unable to hold it in as she laughed. Seeing Rem smile, Subaru followed suit with a chuckle of his own.

"Then it's a promise. Rem really will ask a lot of things."

"Yeah. I also have things I must ask of you, like my hair."

"Hair…?"

"That's the reason why you keep staring at me all the time."

Hearing Subaru's words, Rem was speechless as her eyes widened.

With her blue eyes filled with guilt, she let slip, “Subaru-kun, Rem was–”

“It’s fine. You were concerned about the clumsy me, who had a pitiful haircut, so you kept looking at me… am I right?”

In his first loop, Subaru had made a promise with Rem. It was Ram’s words that started it, to help Subaru fix his shabby haircut.

Subaru finally understood Ram’s words at the time. The real meaning behind it.

It was evident in Rem’s stares that, at the time, she held a sense of distrust towards Subaru, so Ram immediately said his hair was messy to fool him.

Now he knew, the opportunity of that promise was borne from a lie.

That’s why… smiling inside, Subaru wanted to make the promise of a lie into something truthful.

“Once we safely return, I’ll leave it up to you for the style. Make it so that Emilia can’t help but snuggle up to me.”

“…But Rem can’t help when it comes to the character.”

“Please be more gentle about saying those things!”

It was a conversation of which the two did not know where it was going.

Noticing Subaru’s intentions, Rem followed with a joke, which made Subaru extremely happy.

“Once I leave the children to the villagers, I’ll regroup with you immediately. Don’t force yourself too hard.”

During the witchbeast turmoil, in order to save the children outside of the village, Subaru and Rem set foot into the forest and made this promise. And at the time, Rem’s love for Subaru had not yet blossomed.

Therefore, fulfilling this kind of promise to Rem had an extreme significance.

“It’s not that I forgot. It’s because I’ve been running around lately that I haven’t had the chance. Even if I mentioned it, once I remember there’s a guy who can’t read the mood, I could only postpone it.”

“It’s not like Subaru-kun to have worries at all. It would be better if you were more like your usual self, where you don’t think before you speak, cause a mess, then run around trying to fix it.”

“Eh?! Why do I feel nostalgic about this feeling of pain in my heart from Rem’s harsh words?!”

Pushing her chest on the back of the chair, Rem leaned forward slightly to look at Subaru, and laughed harder.

Although this kind of Rem is unbelievably cute, I definitely cannot say that out loud, Subaru secretly decided.

In order to fulfill the haircut promise, the two arrived at the mansion’s atrium. A chair was placed in the middle of the groomed lawn, and with a towel tied around Subaru’s neck, everything was ready.

“After changing hair styles, it’ll give the impression of a different person. It’s quite common in anime and manga, huh.”

“If it’s done indoors, it’ll be difficult to clean up. Whether it be preparations beforehand, or cleaning up afterwards. If it’s outside, then we just need to sweep the ground and wash your head. About how short should I cut it to?”

In Rem’s point of view, Subaru’s hair was still fairly short. There’s only a small portion that was messy, and gave a bad impression. Once that bit is trimmed, it’ll be perfect.

“Yeah… I’m not that good at specifying my hair length. Rem can just cut it to the length where it looks the coolest!”

"Subaru-kun is always at his coolest"

"The purpose of my haircut was denied?! It was over before it began?!"

The chair swayed as Subaru shook. Holding Subaru's shoulder with her hands to prevent him from struggling, Rem stared at Subaru's head carefully.

Though her answer was not a lie, she thought his hair certainly didn't look the best.

"This responsibility is quite heavy."

"Um… Rem-san? It's fine even if you don't think about it too much? Don't worry too much, just do as you said before and fix the hair ends, slightly groom it…"

While Subaru gingerly proposed a solution, that voice didn't reach Rem.

Moisturizing Subaru's hair slightly, Rem brought out a pair of silver-shining scissors and put on a determined pose.

"…"

Facing her immediate challenge, her hand stopped. Rather, it couldn't stop. Her right hand was trembling violently.

Clickity, Clackity. Rem was stunned by her own hand's trembling. Though she had kept calm, all her nervousness was redirected to her right hand.

"Subaru-kun, this is bad. My hand won't stop trembling."

"Hm? A little bit of trembling is fine… Oi, isn't this trembling too excessive?! Is this even ok?! This level of shaking would crack a skull! Don't tell me you're actually not accustomed to giving other people haircuts?!"

"Rem is responsible for nee-sama and Roswaal-sama's haircuts… but Subaru's is the first time…"

"There's no way a barber would be able to make a living if he said such a thing!"

A barber that refused to serve first-time customers would no doubt go bankrupt. But that matter wasn't important right now. Rem's hand was still trembling fiercely because she had to give Subaru a haircut.

"Well… even though I told you 'it's fine if you mess up, don't worry about it!' I guess it's hard to change your feelings so quickly. But to be this nervous… Even if the cut is slightly bad, after a week it'll recover."

"But, because of Rem, Subaru might have a endure a week of a bald state…"

"If I'm going to become hairless, then it's probably better to stop, right?!"

She extended her hand again to stop the chair that Subaru sat on from shaking. Rem proceeded to rack her brain to stop her trembling hands. All of a sudden, she inadvertently blurted out what she was thinking. It was…

"Does Subaru-kun have any uneasiness by entrusting Rem, this kind of person, with this?"

Those were the words she had unintentionally said. But after they were spoken, they left behind a depressing and heavy pressure on Rem's shoulders.

Yes, that must be it.

No matter how you look at it, the fact that Rem had tried to kill Subaru-kun does not change.

Rem almost executed Subaru twice at the witchbeast forest. And if one were to count Subaru's final act of becoming bait to die, then it was thrice.

“Twice inside the forest, Subaru-kun saw Rem’s nature. Rem’s Oni personality… even before that, Rem also…”

Subaru-kun’s presence at the mansion was an unsettling factor, and Rem had questioned whether to eliminate him.

That suspicion will surely wrap itself around the fragile heart that upholds Rem, and will someday explode.

If Rem doesn’t resolve this here and now, then Rem will surely cause Subaru-kun to die.

Up to this point, this sense of guilt has plagued Rem, the perpetrator. Then, as the victim, Subaru-kun must naturally be in even more pain. Then why? Why can he show Rem this kind of smile?

Why is he able to sit in front of Rem so carelessly?

“Rem.”

A calm voice. Subaru was calling out her name. She was suddenly at a loss, and could not form a response.

Towards that self-deprecating confession, what would he say?

Scared.

Don’t want to hear it.

Don’t want to destroy this illusion of intimacy. Her heart beat furiously from fear.

“In my hometown, there’s a fairy tale called ‘The King with Donkey Ears.’”

“Yes… Eh…?”

"Once upon a time, there was a king with very long donkey ears. When the king needed a haircut, he would call a barber into the palace. But, no matter who, they would laugh out loud when they saw the king's donkey ears. And as a result, would be beheaded by the king. Among them, there was a barber that finally managed to hold back and not laugh. But to withhold the king's secret, the barber eventually could not take it. He ran up a mountain, dug a hole, and shouted in it."

Subaru cupped his hands and shouted, "the king has donkey ears for ears!!! He shouted again and again. At last, even the trees around him recorded it. He then made a flute out of those trees, and blowing into it would make the sound 'the king has donkey ears for ears.' In the end, because all the citizens of that country used the flute, the secret now had become known to everyone."

"Eh…?"

Although it was an interesting story, Rem was unable to understand the underlying lesson and looked at Subaru, puzzled.

At Rem's expression, Subaru smiled.

"Rem's forehead has an Oni's horn!!!"

"!!!"

Subaru shouted once again, causing Rem to jump. Towards her reaction, Subaru patted his knees.

"The king was ashamed of his donkey ears, so he beheaded everyone who spilled his secret. Rem, are you ashamed of being an Oni?"

"N-No such thing. Rem being ashamed of her birth… something like that isn't too big of a concern."

"Would you find me telling your secret unforgivable?"

"No. Rem believes that Rem coming from the Oni tribe is something that doesn't need to be kept hidden."

Returning Subaru's gaze, she gave him a firm answer. Subaru sat back down.

"Then there's no problem! Since there's no possibility that Rem would harm me because of her origins, then I have no reason to be worried. Ahh… I'm relieved."

"B-But, the things Rem did to Subaru-kun—"

"If you anger a girl, you'll get an extremely scary stare. It's something that boys learn about from their fathers early on. Since it's my fault for forgetting such a thing, let's just call it even, ok?"

Such an outrageous sophistry left Rem speechless.

Subaru looked back to see Rem keeping silence, and continued, "Well… how's your trembling hand doing?"

"Ah…"

Her gaze fell on her hands after hearing those words. It was then Rem noticed her trembling had stopped. Even with the scissor's tip pointing at Subaru's head, her fingers did not have a trace of hesitation.

The kind of changes Subaru's words brought to Rem's heart were unknowable. After all, everything he'd said has had a major impact to Rem's feelings. Those unstoppable ripples stirred her heart.

But Rem knew without a doubt that her own timidness had been swallowed whole by the sickness of her heart and disappearing without a trace.

Knowing that Rem's trembling had stopped, Subaru relaxed and leaned his back on the chair, entrusting himself to Rem. He pointed at his head.

"Well, please give me a cool hairstyle. One that'll be handsome enough that Emilia-tan can't help but fawn over me."

The naive boy did not notice his words deeply stabbed into the girl's heart behind him. But even his innocence was something that she loved. Rem smiled.

“…Subaru-kun, no matter when, is always fascinating.”

Rem's Maiden Heart is Super Complex
(Volume 5, Manga Arc 1, Volume 1; Gamers)

—Sometimes, Rem seriously doubted that his mind was trying.

For example, when Rem saw him sleeping on the floor during a break.

Rem: "Subaru-kun, if you sleep in such a place, you'll catch a cold."

In the terrace dyed in warm sunlight, so as to not wake up the dozing Subaru, Rem whispered to him in a Really thin voice.

That she didn't wake him up, though it appeared as if she were about to, was because Rem possessed a great sense of morality.

Rem: "Geez, Subaru-kun really is no good."

Saying so in a happy tone, Rem decided to stay right beside Subaru as he basked in the sun. When it came down to it, preparation was key. From there, Rem's bustling was barely perceptible to the eye, so fast and diligent was her work.

She set the nearby chair right next to Subaru, and placed a lap blanket on the napping Subaru so he wouldn't catch a cold. Then, she layed out snacks and tea on the table in case he would crave some upon waking up. To make sure that her older sister Ram wouldn't encroach, she appointed her to a job in the basement.

To Emilia, she made sure to instruct her to take a break in her own room, by offering snacks and tea. She then collected and submitted all the documents to Roswaal in order to make sure that he would be shutting himself in his office. As a precaution for Beatrice making an appearance, she closed every door around. And, last but not least, Rem seated herself next to Natsuki Subaru.

Even at that time, Rem hadn't let her self-restricting rule of "To Never Leave Subaru-Kun's Shadow" slip from her mind. Even if it were the scent of Subaru's vomit, she would stand in it as much as she could.

But still, Rem, without holding back any of her passion, had requested to stay by Subaru's side until he had reached his limit. More specifically, Rem has been continually looking at Subaru, so much so that she could pierce a hole through him with her mere gaze.

Rem: "Ha~ah…Subaru-kun is cute…"

Rem who, in public, never showed a mushy expression, enjoyed Subaru's sleeping face.

Usually, his sharp eyes were unnecessarily intimidating, his mouth moved to the point of giving the impression that he may die if he didn't stop yapping, and his shoulders were bent unless he was conscious of putting up the correct posture for his spine—but as soon as he displayed his fragile sleeping form, those worries disappear from Rem's mind.

Subaru: "…R…em?"

When she took notice, Rem's face was extremely close to Subaru's face, to the point that her breaths could be felt on Subaru's eyes. Her heart about to explode, Rem masked those feelings behind a smile.

Rem: "Subaru-kun, if you sleep in such a place, you'll catch a cold."

Subaru: "Hm, Ah…ah, did I fall asleep? My bad my bad, I'll be careful…Yaaawn"

Watching Subaru's yawn, so large that he couldn't hide it with his hand, Rem reaffirmed the warm feeling on her chest,

Rem: "Geez, Subaru-kun truly is a helpless person."

Ram’s Flirting Refusal
(Volume 1; Melon Books)

“Really, Emilia-sama is such a pain.”

Looking at the crowd of people walking passed her, the young girl places her hand to her forehead. Despite showing such a tired expression and grumbling, the girl normally had an adorable face. With her sharp facial features and her left eye concealed by short peach pink colored hair. The typical impression would be that of a beautiful girl, but it might be better to say she gave an impression of strength in spite of her cuteness.

Her expression remains relaxed and cool, her lone visible eye not betraying the slightest hint of emotion.

Amidst the noisy crowd, the young girl looked around and sighed seeing no signs of her target. However, her gaze remained determined. her pale skin and petite frame like that of a dancer. An Oni, looking like a cute little animal but so much more. She walked the streets of the Capital City Lugnica, wearing a maid’s uniform, which on its own was eye catching.

Although the uniform was decided upon to suit the interests of her master, the girl had no objection to such an outfit. The design attracted many curious stares from people on the street, but the young girl had grown accustomed to them.

“—She said to just wait a while here, how annoying.”

She was unable to find the “master” of her own master, and gave a dissatisfied shrug.

The pink haired girl’s name was Ram. No family name, it’s just Ram.

She works as the maid of a nobleman of the Dragon Kingdom, Roswaal L. Mathers, an on this day she’s come to the Capital.

As capital of the Kingdom of Lugnica, The city is more lively than others in the country. For Ram, who has had numerous visits to the Capital, and become familiar with the city as a result of following her master's orders. Ram wasn't particularly interested in the city, but—

"It's always Emilia. He already said from the beginning Ram would lose such a target."

After making a slight judgment on the character of the target, Ram, who is still pacing back and forth, continues to search.

If you haven't

If you haven't looked for someone like a stupid person in such a wide place since you have separated with the person for less than 15 minutes, it is more appropriate to judge whether the other person has searched far enough away from the initial position. However, if the she is going to the left at the very beginning, it will be totally luck. If you choose the wrong one, it will be very difficult to find her. If she doesn't, then there is no way of returning.

"Even something as simple as sending a letter, she gets lost. Ram must blame Emilia-sama's curiosity. This was underestimated, Ram isn't in the wrong."

Ram evaluates her current master, who was nowhere to be seen, and the result is the current situation.

In spite of this, no matter how absurd it was, Ram is certainly displeased with the current events.

"If only she had chosen a place to meet, it's no good. Even with my Clairvoyance, Ram cannot handle so many people…"

"Hey Hey! You there in the maid uniform!."

"…As a result, you can only personally inquire about it. It's really troublesome."

"Hey Hey Hey!Don't ignore me so casually ! Here ! Look at me !"

Hearing an annoying voice that had been calling out from the beginning, the person began scolding the ignorance of Ram as she walked away. When she turned to face the person speaking, Her facial expression dramatically changed.

“Hey, that look disgusts me from the bottom my heart. Missy, are you sad?”

“Anybody who is not only dressed in suspicious clothing, but even talks in a manner that makes people feel that they have no way to come to know it, will always receive this expression.”

Although Ram was harsh in her first meeting with the person, this time no one would criticize her attitude.

This is because the man who is standing in front of Ram is really beyond common sense.

With a dark, angular helmet, his head is completely covered. If this is the case, he can be recognized as an suspicious man.While his head is concealed in armor, from the neck down instead, he is dressed like a villager with cheap and simple materials. He wears shoes consisting of straw ropes on his feet. Can he even become more suspicious?

“The law and order of the Royal Capital has also begun to be corrupted. Now it’s time to call the guards over. Please wait a moment.”

“If you think of me as a perverted old man, you should be more conscious of your own safety, right?! What’s the point of waiting in the same place?!”

The tough-looking man, responding to Ram’s harsh approach, stopped in desperation. He stopped and loudly called out after Ram, who was staring straight at him with a pointed gaze.

“That’s not really a friendly look. Wait a minute please, I’m just looking for someone, so I’d like to find out where that someone may be.”

“What a coincidence, I’m also very busy trying to find someone here. Well, you're free to keep searching."

"That's too cold for someone wearing a maid outfit which symbolises service, isn't it?!"

Extending his hand to try to stop Ram from leaving, Ram who sidesteps to avoid the other person suddenly notices—the man had no left arm.

"Oh, did you stop out of sympathy? Anyways, that's right, since I lost my arm, my life has seen and suffered all sorts of awesome fates ! I'm relying on the warmth and sympathy of others to live and survive. Quite unfortunate, aren't I? "

"If you don't have enough hands, just ask a cat. If you've enough feet, please find it on your own. That's all ."

"Isn't that too harsh?!"

Toward the helmeted man before her, Ram's face began to lose it's angry glare. The man waved his right hand in panic.

"Wait Wait!I just want to find her!May I ask, have you seen a young lady with orange hair who looked almost the same age as you but had very large boobs?"

"I have never seen her. apart from what I have done so far in order to send you away, this time it's a message from my heart."

"This confession is persuasive!! No way…Well, could you tell me please who you're looking for?"

"I haven't answered, because I don't intend to answer."

"This is nothing but coldness. We're both simply searching for our people!"

"There is no "we". This is pointless."

Ram isn't entirely sure, but out of dissatisfaction with the man's heart, she refuses his assistance. She does not doubt there is dissatisfaction, but the reason for rejection is another problem altogether.

Seeing the silent Ram. the man gave a sad and dejected look as a result.

“Ah…yeah I understand, I’ll stop here. It’s not getting either of us anywhere.”

“I already knew that this was meaningless from the very beginning, but you still wasted the time of mine. What do you really intend to do about myself leaving… Oh yeah, nothing. I didn’t expect anything out this conversation anyway.”

“I’m sorry to hear I’ve troubled you!”

Giving a glance to the man yelling after her, Ram lets out a”sigh…” toward him and then leaves. She doesn’t remark further or offer a goodbye. It’s completely disgusting. Then she hears behind her—

“Well then, Bye, Ram”

Said innocently as she was leaving, and Ram stopped after hearing it. However, the shadow of the man with a helmet has already disappeared.

“—Did Ram ever mention her name?”

Ram mutters this to herself brushing her hand against her pink hair.

Ram’s search still hasn’t progressed well thanks to the helmed man wasting too much of her time.

“Hey! It’ll be best if you keep quiet! Cause us any trouble and this won’t end happily.”

“Isn’t it too inconspicuous? walking down busy streets in that eye catching outfit?”

“We’re not in a patient mood, wouldn’t you say? Maybe we should get a little rough?”

Ram stares at the three sh*t faces with disappointment.

The three thugs, one tall , one brawny, and one short came out of nowhere to begin threatening Ram.

“It would seem the security of the Capital truly is no better than the wilderness.”

“huh? Wilderness? Where are you from? Doesn’t seem like you’re from The Capital.”

“I mean you’re no different from wild animals spending your day scrounging for food and behaving in this barbaric way.”

Listening to their idiotic chatter Ram gave a look of disgust, in that moment the men looked to each other blankly, then laughed.

“Hey wait! Don’t mess with us !”

Unable to read the girl’s attitude, the tall thug pulls two knives and points them toward Ram.

“Don’t make me laugh ! You can’t possibly escape, unless you brought the Sword Saint, you’re in trouble!”

“Aah, I guess her lucks run out.”

“Haha, even if we actually have to fight, victory is ours.”

Intimidating, berating, the hateful words continue. Ram frowns hearing this, and then for the first time it seemed like she let out a helpless sigh.

“Hey, Just don’t move lady—”

“Ram is still trying to show patience, because this is an important task ordered by Lord Roswaal. …But now, I am at my limit with this.”

Ram whispers these words annoyed and reaches for a small wand within her dress. She points it to the sky and light starts to shine, magic power bursts in the atmosphere to create a strong wind surrounding her.

“Hey! Don’t go trying any funny business—Wuah!”

The man with the knives was blown away against a wall and buried in debris from the impact. Seeing the brawny man try to make a run for it while his remaining companion froze in place, Ram had already reacted before the fleeing man could even notice.

“Ah, Aayy?!”

the large man waved his arms trying to cast aside her wand, but immediately he was thrown into the sky. Slamming into the ground on his back accompanied by a scream before finally the man fainted on the ground.

And then—

“Is there something else you want to say to Ram?”

“Wait…Wait ….Sorry?”

“It’s right of you to apologize. —But Ram won’t forgive you.”

The short man gave a nervous smile before being launched into the sky by the merciless Ram.

The three thugs were dumped into the alley like trash, and Ram patted her skirt looking up at the dimming sky.

“The sun has completely set… The target should have already gone back to the mansion.”

Ram’s conditions for finding her target have become more unfavorable. If she is not found quickly, the situation will become very bad. Looking up at the moonlight, Ram suddenly noticed.

“The light is—”

Ram looked up at the starry night sky of the Capital and notices Aurora Light waves in the sky.

The waves sweep around, and Ram emerges with a strong sense of intuition and rushes off toward the source of the Aurora Light without hesitation. The person she is searching for is this way, she doesn’t know why, but Ram is sure of it.

“Ram was just about to start thinking that Ram was finally done with being involved with trouble—Ram really is a troublesome person .”

Ram runs towards the lowest district of the capital—The Slums, and toward the deepest point of the slums.

She arrived, and in front of her, Ram finds her target holding a teenage boy’s hand. She realizes that the boy will come to the master’s mansion along with her target.

But that’s for another story…

Ram and the Night Study Group (Volume 2; Melon Books)

"…Barusu, you have good handwriting."

At Ram's commentary, the sounds of pen on paper that had continued up till that point suddenly stopped.

The boy right next to her sitting facing his desk, Subaru, looked up at her with surprise on his face.

"What?"

"Well, I mean, what's up with that all of a sudden? I mean, it's not like I want you to get upset with me, but having you praise me out of the blue is more unsettling than you might think."

"It's nothing. I was merely stating what I thought. As you're still in the middle of learning, now and then it's good to look away from everything you have left to do, and note that the way you write the letters is adequate. I'm only saying that you have good handwriting."

"The moment you add in an 'only' there, it kinda kills my gratitude for what you're saying!"

As Ram praised him in her own way, Subaru ended up looking up at the ceiling, dissatisfied. But, he quickly chuckled and smiled as though he'd regained his humor.

"Well, setting aside that you said 'only', heh, is that so. I'm honestly happy to hear that you think I have good handwriting. It means it was worth all the frustration when I was going to calligraphy class back when I was little."

"Also… no, it's nothing."

"What was that?! When you almost say something and then stop, it usually turns out to have been important, so don't swallow your words, spit ‘em out! If it’s words of praise, I’ll happily take all you’ve got!”

After giving a thumbs-up, Subaru indicated himself with the thumb while looking full of himself. Ram nodded deeply at him.

“Indeed, I’ll go ahead and say it, then. Good results must be properly praised. Poor behavior must be scolded, and one must take care with giving food as well. …I read that long ago in a book, and I’m putting it into practice.”

“That sounds a lot like how I’d raise a dog, y’know?!”

“It’s similar, in the sense that you still need to learn how to behave, isn’t it?”

“Ah, I walked right into that!”

As Subaru arched his spine backwards, the chair’s backrest let out a loud creak.

With a simple bed and an unpretentious desk, this was the private room of a servant, allocated to Natsuki Subaru for his own use. The extreme scarcity of personal possessions was due to it being only a few days since he had begun his employment.

In this room with nothing in it, evening after evening was filled, not with amorous moments, but the “Acquisition of Letters”.

“Barusu, you’ve gotten it wrong again. That should be more than enough of repeating the same mistakes.”

“Ow.”

With the tip of a wand held in her hand, she lightly smacked the hand that Subaru was holding his feather pen in. Losing his grip on the pen, he rubbed the reddening back of his hand while glaring accusingly at Ram.

“Hey, isn’t that a little too Spartan?! I’m the type that grows more from being praised than scolded!”

"If you want to be praised, then you must produce results. If you do, Ram will praise you in spite of herself."

"Don't praise me like you hate doing it! Actually, never mind that… can't you go a little easier on me with the studying? I still can't really tell the letters apart and all."

"A lack of effort."

Ram cut off Subaru's self-excusing words without mercy.

Subaru simply sighed and shrugged as though he'd been expecting a response like that.

"Well, you can say that, nee-sama. It's true that until you actually experience it, you can't understand how rough it is to encounter a foreign culture. I'm not just studying writing, I'm trying to learn my job too, after all."

"…Very well, go on."

"In other words! If you're going to say that I haven't studied hard enough, then I'm certain you must be more than familiar with, and exceptionally skilled at, this sort of thing, is what I'm saying."

While Subaru rushed his words out at high speed, Ram drew her eyebrows together, as if to ask what he was trying to say. Seeing that, Subaru smiled to himself as though he had achieved his aim, and retrieved something from one of the desk drawers. It was…

"Tada! Behold the hiragana alphabet!"

"…and this is?"

What Subaru had retrieved was a large paper that entirely covered the desk. From one side of it to the other, the paper was entirely filled with densely-packed symbols she had never seen before.

"These are letters we use back where I'm from, called 'hiragana'. Here you'd call them 'I-glyphs'."

"You mean this is the official language of the Kingdom of Barusu?"

“Will you please cut it out with things like country names that should only exist in my head?! Elaborating too much on the details and going so far as to produce a written language would be a pathetic black mark on my record!”

“Among the children’s tales we’re using for your instruction book, there’s a story called ‘The Lonely King’. It really is an exact match for your current state, Barusu. You’ll get a laugh out of it, so look forward to it.”

“And now you’ve needlessly spoiled it for me!”

Perhaps because he could imagine the grimness of the contents from the title alone, Subaru began making a pained face. Paying no mind to him as he did, Ram looked over the letters that Subaru had called hiragana.

There didn’t seem to be any pattern to them. Each one had its own particular shape, and to Ram’s eyes, it looked like nothing more than pictures of a snake or the like that a child had drawn as a prank.

“What of it? After showing Ram the alphabet of the Kingdom of Barusu, what did you want her to do?”

“Well, I mean, I was thinking that while I’m practicing writing like this, you’ve got a lot of spare time, too, right? So I thought you might like to try meeting a foreign culture, too, just to kill time. Along with that, you can learn how rough it is to learn letters, and maybe you’ll learn to be a bit more understanding towards me.”

As Subaru placed quite a bit of emphasis on his true intentions in the later half of that, Ram’s shoulders drooped in exasperation.

He could come up with such, hmm, elaborate vexations.

“For her own part, Ram can’t think of a reason that she should accept your proposal.”

“Well, how does proving the legitimacy of your assertions sound, then? If you can master that right away, then I’ll admit you were right when you said ‘a lack of effort’ earlier. From now on, I won’t contest your education policies, and I'll work like a horse at learning just the way you want. It's just, if it doesn't go like that, then…"

"If it doesn't go like that, then what?"

"Then try to be a little kinder to me! Along with Rem! It's a promise! This matters!"

As Subaru stated his claims while making the chair creak, Ram's expression was that of someone looking at a troublesome farm animal. Subaru faltered a bit under the glint in her eyes, but although he withdrew some of his attitude, he didn't withdraw his claims.

Growing tired of glaring, well, not really, but giving up on it for now, Ram sighed.

"Spending time with Barusu drives up the count of sighs day by day."

"I hear that a lot."

"Yes, it's the correct assessment. …Let me see that."

As Subaru regained his attitude and stuck out his chest, Ram took the paper with the 'hiragana' written on it. Looking it over briefly, it seemed to correspond somewhat to the 'i-glyphs' of the common tongue.

"The order of the letters is similar to the 'i-glyphs'?"

"More or less, yeah. But I'll give you a once-over explanation. I want to fight as fairly as I can."

It seemed that before she knew it, it was being treated as a contest, but if it was a contest, Ram didn't feel like losing. In contests, no matter who it was against, Ram's creed was total victory.

Ram lent her ear to Subaru as he explained the 'hiragana' while pointing them out, and more or less worked their placement and ordering into her head, and memorized their shape and stroke order while guessing at how they were formed based on their structure.

It didn't take long for Subaru to finish his explanation of what he called the fifty sounds. Then grinning at her, he noted "Now neither of us has a handicap".

"The allowed time is until today's study ends. There will be a little quiz at the end, so we'll see if you can answer it, Ram."

"Fine, let's do it. Having you work like a horse will make things easier for Ram as well."

"Hehehe, you look sure you'll win, but I'm gonna change that overconfident look into a teary one!"

While giving a response entirely suited to an insignificant person, Subaru dove headfirst into concentration. Looking at that from the corner of her eye, Ram sat down on the bed and embarked on her acquisition of 'hiragana'.

…Suddenly, she couldn't help but think that it had been a long time since she had spent time studying like this.

"Barusu, where did you study the alphabet?"

"Well that's out of the blue, here when I've gotten focused. If you're trying to throw me off, it's not…"

Glancing back at Ram, Subaru cut himself off mid-sentence.

Perhaps the reason he didn't continue his banter was that Ram's expression, illuminated by the room's dim light, was tinged with something that made him nostalgic for home.

Holding his silence briefly at the look on her face, he suddenly, roughly scratched at his head.

"When you ask 'Where?', it's kinda hard to say. My parents taught me at home… is the most accurate answer, I think. I honestly don't remember having studied at kindergarten."

"'Kindergarten'?"

"It's a school for little children, just really little children. It's basically a place to play, eat, and sleep, but, well, maybe it's a place where the importance of group activities is taught while they're kids?"

The height that Subaru was showing with his hand was roughly the same as the desk, or less. It seems it would be a school where children around the age of four or five would attend; Ram had gone to something similar back in her home village.

"A school, I see. Were you able to attend, Barusu?"

"Kinda, I guess. I attended properly during mandatory education… when I was free to choose for myself, I sort of stopped going. And then, as I was sliding along like that, I ended up here."

Subaru's eyes were downcast, and his manner suggested this was a difficult topic for him to speak of. Given how he looked, Ram judged that it would be cruel to press the matter further.

Even with what had just been said, it led her to guess that Subaru's station in life had been fairly high, at the least.

It was only conjecture, but it seemed likely that Subaru's place of birth had been in the upper class of a small kingdom, separate from the four great kingdoms.

The world was divided into four parts by the four great kingdoms, however it was also dotted with small kingdoms that were not attached to the great kingdoms, and Ram had heard that many of them cultivated their own unique cultures.

Subaru's unusual appearance, and his explanations of a culture Ram had never heard of, were a little too solid to dismiss as a made-up tale. He was likely a runaway or something similar.

The 'hiragana' she held in her hand spurred on this reasoning as well.

"What about you, Ram, how long have you been working at Roswaal's place?"

“Ram’s first meeting with Roswaal-sama was when she and Rem were around eight so… that would be nine years ago, then. By now, she’s been serving nearly ten years.”

“Heh, nine years… wait, nine years since you were eight, are you seventeen? The same age as me?”

“And what’s the meaning of you being surprised by that, I wonder?”

“You look young, in an older-sister sort of way. But seriously. If you’re seventeen, then Rem is too. That’s unexpected…I thought maybe you were younger than me.”

“Referring to someone younger than yourself like an older sister, you should keep your lusts in check, Barusu. And Ram was mistaken as well. From your lack of composure, Barusu, she wondered if you weren’t more of a child.”

This wasn’t teasing, rather it was her actual thoughts.

Many things about him, including his facial features if you set aside the evil look of his eyes, feel like a little child. In particular, the frivolity of his words and actions didn’t make one think of him as a seventeen year old, an age when one should have gained an appropriate amount of maturity.

Though if one were speaking of a mismatch between age and appearance, that would apply to many here at the mansion.

“But, eight years old? That’s pretty young to be depending on someone outside your family. You must have gotten consent from your parents… or is it just normal over here to start an apprenticeship around that age?”

“It’s not unusual to leave one’s parents while still a child. Although in Ram and Rem’s case, there was a different, special reason for it.”

“‘Special’ meaning…?”

“It’s simple. If she wasn’t together with Rem, Ram hated it and threw tantrums.”

"Ah, 'zat so."

They had only been around each other a short time, but Subaru nodded in understanding of the relationship between Ram and Rem.

Ram was well aware that her own ability with chores was placing a burden on Rem. And also that Rem made up for what her sister lacked, and just barely kept the mansion running day-to-day.

Hence, she had no intention of nit-picking at Subaru's understanding to correct it.

Aside from Roswaal, another co-worker who was now away from the mansion, and a few other close acquaintances, she didn't feel the need for anyone else to understand the relationship between herself and Rem.

That would be the case for as long as it remained unclear how Subaru would end up fitting in at the mansion.

"…The time for idle chatter is nearly past."

Above the room's doorway, the magic time crystal's color was changing to a deep yellow, showing that the time had reached the deepest part of the night. It was nearly time to bring the evening's studies to a close.

"Sure is. Well, thanks for all your help tonight. Let's do this again tomorrow…"

"You may be on the verge of regretting assuming that tomorrow will come, Barusu."

"My bad! Just joking around! Okay, it's time for the showdown. Here's the question; try reading it, and writing out your answer in 'hiragana'!"

As he said that, Subaru removed one sheet from the stack of paper he had for practicing on, with the word 'Question' written in it with i-glyphs, followed by a sentence in hiragana, and presented it to her. In exchange, he retrieved the hiragana chart she held.

“Now then, I’ve taken back the hiragana chart. You’re as helpless as a babe in the woods. Hehehehe, go ahead and answer if you can! And get it wrong, and from tomorrow on, both of you sisters can be kinder when you teach me i-glyphs!”

Working himself up with his crass reasoning, Subaru laughed mockingly as he imagined Ram looking distressed.

On the other hand, not deigning to pay any attention to Subaru’s small-time villian act, Ram looked over the ‘hiragana’ question. She observed the conglomeration of wriggling letters for a while, and then…

“Done.”

Taking a feather pen in hand, Ram smoothly wrote out her answer in the area labelled ‘Response’ in i-glyphs. When she finished writing, she took the answer sheet and smacked it into Subaru’s face.

“…”

“The question was ‘The names of the sisters that live in the mansion’, and the answer is ‘Ram and Rem’.”

“No way, you…?! You got it perfect?! Seriously, that quickly?!”

Checking Ram’s answer against the question, Subaru collapsed dumbfounded on the spot. His reaction confirmed to Ram that her guess had worked correctly.

Based on Subaru’s personality, she’d imagined that he would come up with a question about the mansion and matters related to it. After that, choosing Emilia, Beatrice, and the twins themselves as candidates, remembering a limited number of letters was simple.

“In other words, what matters is one’s grasp of the essentials. Barusu, you remember what you promised, yes?”

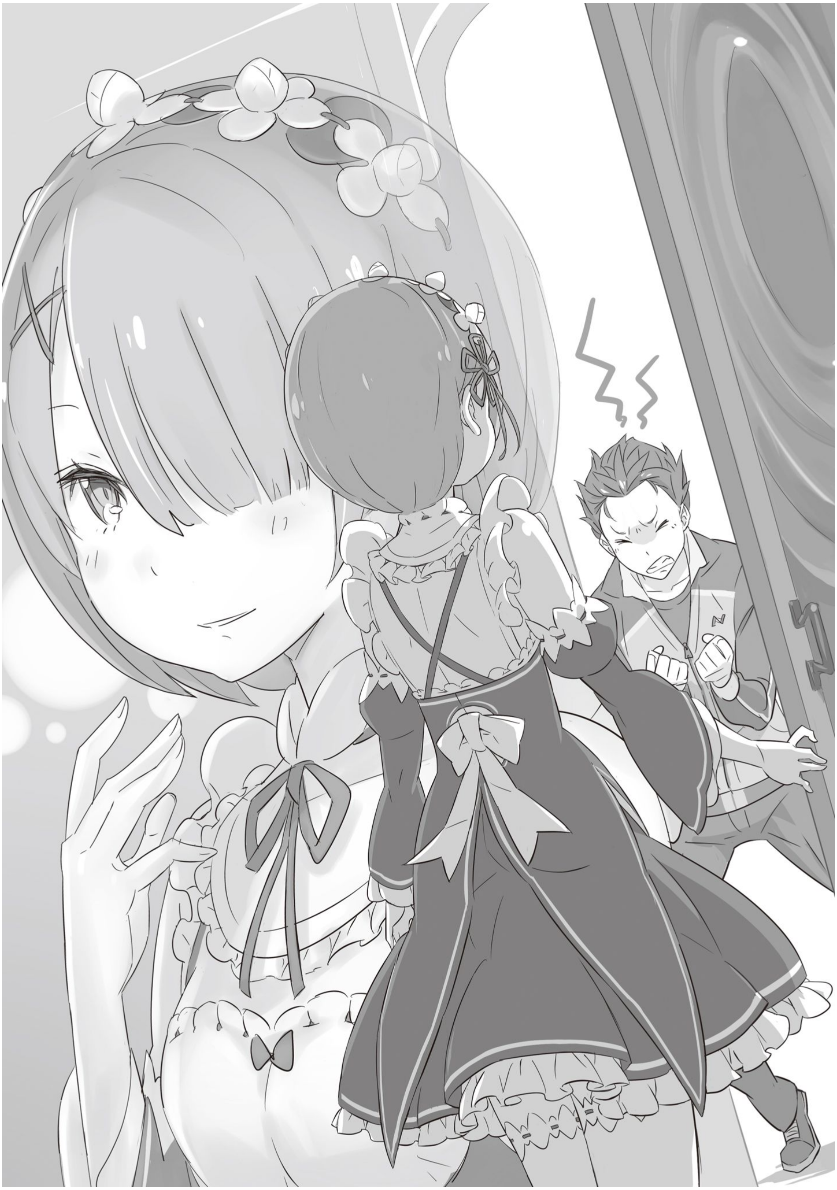
“W…wait. There must be some kind of trick to it. I’m too dumb to figure it out, but you must have done something sneaky… I think…!”

As Subaru stood there being a poor loser, Ram flicked him in the forehead with her finger, then headed for the doorway as she yawned. Then, turning back as she opened the door, she looked back at him rubbing his reddening forehead.

“Tomorrow should be fun. Have pleasant dreams, Barusu. Ram certainly will.”

“You demon…”

Subaru’s frustrated face disappeared behind the closing door. The timing of his last embittered remark was so good, Ram nearly laughed in spite of herself.



“With that, Barusu should learn to take things a little more seriously.”

Ram was very pleased with herself after having not only mercilessly toppled Subaru, but also provoked him to greater effort from tomorrow on.

Retreating away from the room before the whining became audible, she started looking forward to the look on Subaru’s face tomorrow.

“But still…”

A sudden thought occurred to her. It was about the ‘hiragana’ that Subaru had written.

“…It feels like I’ve seen it somewhere before.”

That whisper fell into the hallway, and faded away without reaching anyone; even from Ram’s own memory, it passed away as something largely unimportant.

Ram’s Older Sister Heart is Complicated (Volume 3; Melon Books)

1

“Nee-sama, nee-sama. Please listen to this. Today, Subaru-kun was able to get out of bed.”

“Hmm, yes.”

“Nee-sama, nee-sama. I’ve promised to cut Subaru-kun’s hair. What kind of haircut do you think would look good on him? He looks wonderful no matter what, but…”

“Ah, hmm, yes.”

“Nee-sama, nee-sama. Just now, Subaru-kun was able to go to the bathroom by himself. Please compliment him!”

“Hmm…?”

2

Sitting and holding her head in her hands, Ram let out a sigh with a weary expression on her face.

Day by day, her usual routine was one taking care of trifling odd jobs while following her younger sister around as she handled the heavy work. However, her drive had now withered to the point where even those odd jobs were bothersome.

“That, too, is entirely Barusu’s fault.”

“What kind of baseless rumors are you making up about me on my first day back on the job? More importantly, how bold do you have to be to let me do all the work when I’m just recovering my health?!”

Where Ram's gaze lingered woefully, Subaru wiped a shelf with a rag held in one hand, and howled.

Currently, Subaru and Ram were together in one of the guest rooms in the Roswaal manor's east wing. Visitors to the mansion were rare, but cleaning the guest rooms and maintaining the furnishings was nonetheless a required daily labor.

On this day, the two of them were seeing to the airing out of one of those guest rooms. As a work assignment, It was almost too light, but it was necessary to let Subaru get used to it gradually after returning from medical treatment.

There was no way for Subaru to know that Rem had spent her entire saved-up salary on the brand-new butler uniform he was wearing on his return to work.

His lack of awareness of that fact became yet another seed of dissatisfaction to Ram.

"It's likely pointless to expect that sort of thing from Barusu, though. Honestly, what does Rem see in a man like this? It hurts to think about it."

"Won't you please quit muttering to yourself and lend a hand, senpai? I'm doin' the best I can here!"

"You likely returned to work early to put a stop to Rem's worries. If you really have that sort of resolve, then you shouldn't be whining no matter what kind of difficulties you encounter. …It's not manly at all."

"Neither my resolve nor my manliness are excuses for you to be slacking off on the job!"

Subaru was going on about something or other, but Ram covered her ears and pretended not to hear. Having said that, it was obvious to see that while Subaru was making a fuss, he was moving stiffly and being cautious about spots here and there on his body.

Roughly a week since the witchbeast commotion – thanks to Rem's devoted nursing, and the healing spells that Beatrice regularly cast on him due to some whim, he was in more or less perfect condition.

It's just that, that was speaking of nothing more than surface appearances. Ram, who had heard Roswaal and Beatrice's assessments, knew how serious the remaining injuries on the inside were.

And despite that, how infuriating was the sight of him refusing to let the pain show on his face. Did he think that Rem would feel responsible if he kept on staying in bed?

In truth, that was correct if one considered Rem's feelings. Ram's cute little sister was clumsy with her own heart, and pushed herself to the breaking point shouldering this burden and that. She was a worrier down to her very core.

"So, although it's true that Ram had hoped that someone would bring that under control…"

"What's that?"

"Your face is dull. You get ahead of yourself easily. You have no learning or strength worth mentioning, and not only are you penniless, you're reckless… Finding someone who brings together so many unfortunate attributes is actually fairly difficult, indeed."

"Just so you know, even I can tell that you're making fun of me, y'know?"

For him not to express anger at that point made her think that he lacked spirit as a man. Truthfully, it was exactly because she was aware of this that she was willing to speak so impolitely.

Having thought that far, Ram was suddenly stunned.

…The way that thought just now made it seem as if she was depending on Subaru's good nature was quite disagreeable, wasn't it?

"…"

Standing up without allowing her irritation to show on her face, Ram casually ran a finger along the edge of the room's window frame. Seeing that there was white dust on her fingertip, Ram turned back to Subaru.

"Barusu, what's this?"

"You're supposed to be taking care of that part, you know?!"

She'd intended to point out poor results in his cleaning, but Ram was miffed to have her own deficiency pointed out instead. Her already-scarce drive to work diminished further, and Ram wanted to go lie down in her room soon.

"But really, you're even more listless than usual. I'm just guessing, but are you actually not feeling well?"

Resting his weight lightly on the table, Subaru said that while gazing in her direction.

At his glance and question, Ram drew her eyebrows together in displeasure.

His worry was off the mark. It was true that in the last few days, she'd exceeded her limits in utilizing mana due to the witchbeast commotion, and her gate's condition wasn't good. As part of settling matters afterwards, she'd travelled between the mansion and the village time after time, and she'd been tasked with a daily survey of the boundary in the forest to ensure there were no failings in it. As well, her nights were spent assisting Roswaal, who was as busy as ever, by handling paperwork in his place, and this morning, too, she'd slept little more than an hour.

Her body felt heavy, it was difficult to think, and just keeping her eyes open was tiring. Her limbs moved sluggishly as though filled with lead, and, perhaps due to her poor circulation, her entire body seemed to be creaking.

"But, that's entirely normal."

"I'm not sure what that 'but' is talking about; just don't push yourself, alright?"

As she rubbed between her eyes after realizing how heavy they were, Subaru walked right next to her and, with a ‘Let me see’, placed his palm against Ram’s forehead. Ram stiffened as she realized her carelessness.

“Fever…doesn’t seem quite right, maybe just a mild fever? If you’ve gotten worn down, it wouldn’t hurt to take a break just for today… owowow!”

“Who gave… you permission to… go ahead and touch Ram? One really can’t let down their guard around you. Filthy.”

Pinching the back of the hand that had touched her forehead, Ram sniffed dismissively as she made Subaru cry out. Rubbing his hand as he jumped back, Subaru glared at Ram as he went teary-eyed.

“You little… I’m trying to show some concern here, you could be nicer about it.”

“Ram doesn’t need your sympathy. More to the point, how can you be concerned about Ram’s problems on top of everything else? If you’ve got time to worry about her, worry more about Rem…”

While saying that, Ram moved away from the side of the resentful-looking Subaru. Continuing like that, as she went to move on to cleaning the next guest room…

“…ah”

Whether the hoarse, quiet voice belonged to Subaru or Ram, she couldn’t tell.

Only that, immediately after the soles of her feet lost sight of the feeling of carpet, her vision went dark like a curtain coming down with a whoosh, and her body could no longer support the heaviness of her head.

3

…When she awoke from a sleep so deep that she saw no dreams, she was met by the sensation of a cold cloth on her forehead.

“…This is… Ram’s… room?”

She slowly pushed her eyes open, and when her fuzzy vision cleared she was greeted by a view of a familiar private room.

It was a simple, undecorated and dreary bedroom. Only the pink curtains, along with the sheets and thick blanket on the bed, brought flowery colors to the room, to match it to Rem’s tastes.

Aside from that, leaving one with utterly no sense of her self was what made it the room of the girl known as Ram.

“Oh, you’re finally awake, are ya? Honestly, you really had me freaking out there, c’mon.”

When she raised her upper body on the bed, and turned her head to the side, Subaru appeared holding a pottery bowl filled with water. Looking over her memories of just before losing consciousness, and her current condition, Ram understood.

“Barusu, you pervert…”

“That’s the first thing you say after suddenly collapsing?!”

“Ram’s clothing has been changed. The sweat has been cleaned from her back as well; how meticulously you must have licked all over her body. Filthy.”

“You think up some really scary stuff, y’know?! It was Emilia-tan that changed your clothes and wiped the sweat off! There’s no way I could do that, and licking? What do you think I am, some kind of boogeyman?!”

From Subaru’s explanation as he claimed false accusations, it seemed that immediately after she’d gone unconscious in the guest room, Subaru had made sure it was nothing serious, and called for help right away. As Rem was away from the mansion for shopping, he’d called Emilia, and asked her to take care of Ram.

“Is that so. It’s not that you caused trouble for Emilia-sama without any thought at all, then.”

“No matter how much I’ll jump at any chance to have contact with Emilia-tan, when it’s time to do what matters, I’ll do it. So, how are you feeling, actually?”

“The first face Ram saw after waking up was so evil-looking, it really soured her mood.”

“Tell me about your health! I don’t care about your mood!”

“Don’t shout at a sick person. You really are a boy incapable of consideration for others, aren’t you.”

“Ghgizagigi”

As Subaru ground his teeth in chagrin, Ram let slip several weighty sighs.

…The truth behind that was that she was berating herself for what she honestly felt were her own blunders.

That she showed weakness to Subaru, and, through her own carelessness, mistreated a part of Rem's feelings that she should have taken consideration of. That she felt just a little serenity, too.

"Well, if you can run your mouth the same as always, then you're probably fine. Here, have some water. Emilia-tan said it was probably overwork, too, so you'll get better if you just take it easy for a while."

Not noticing Ram's internal conflict, Subaru offered her a pitcher of water. Taking it, Ram sipped at it to moisten her throat. At her side, Subaru retrieved the damp towel that had fallen from her forehead, and wet it again in the room's washbasin.

Given that it was Subaru, taking that kind of care was quite out of character.

"Mm, hk"

She had been thirstier than she'd thought, and after draining the pitcher, Ram slowly lay down on the bed. Right away, Subaru placed the damp towel on her forehead; it felt nice.

"That's unusually thoughtful of you, Barusu."

"Heheh, I'm so glad to meet your approval, nee-sama."

Speaking flippantly, Subaru dragged a chair to the side of the bed and plopped down on it. Facing the opposite of the usual direction, he sat with the backrest hugged into his stomach.

Ram frowned as his attitude suggested that instead of returning to work, he was thinking of staying to tend to her.

"If it's just a matter of sleeping, even Barusu could do it. Anything Barusu can do, Ram can do as well."

"Your repertoire of abuse never runs dry. …Don't worry about it. By now, there's no way I'd get today's jobs done anyway, so I'll just watch until you go to sleep. Want me to hold your hand?"

"Please don't say such creepy things. The thought of you watching me sleep gives me chills.”

“Hmf, is that so.”

Subaru frowned, and looked like he was pouting. Wondering if he was that upset simply because he’d been unable to hold her hand, Ram’s gaze towards him became increasingly stern.

It was just that, a situation where she was lying in bed like this, and someone was watching over her at her side was…

“This reminds me a little of long ago.”

“When you say long ago, Ram, you mean that you’ve experienced being tended like this? From how steady you normally are, it’s tough to imagine you being frail.”

“…Shortly after Ram lost her horn, it was common for her to fall ill like this. It was also partly due to being unable to control mana properly, and it ended up placing a burden on Rem.”

Perhaps because he’d intended to tease her, Subaru’s face fell when he realized the topic was her horn. Mildly pleased that she’d put Subaru to silence, Ram smiled faintly.

…Nine years ago, just after Ram (having lost her horn) had been taken in by Roswaal, the total amount of mana she was able to manipulate inside her body was vastly reduced, and her body, unable to withstand the alteration, fell ill many times. Each time, Rem cared for her at her bedside.

She’d overdone it for the first time in a long while. The bill for that was falling into the same sort of condition that she had back then. Perhaps the reason she couldn’t laugh at it at all was because the one caring for her was no longer her little sister.

Back then, while caring for Ram when she’d fallen ill, Rem would often hold her hand.

On nights when it seemed like Rem would be crushed by needless guilt, of course Ram held her hand as well.

Perhaps it was because, thanks to Subaru's banter, she was able to remember that sort of thing.

"…Barusu."

"Hmm?"

Assaulted by a sudden sleepiness, Ram was on the edge of losing her hold on consciousness, unable to endure the weight of her eyelids.

Just before that, she spoke unexpectedly, her voice calling out to the boy beside her…

"…"

What she had said at the end, she wasn't sure.

Still unsure, Ram once again submerged into a deep, deep sleep.

4

"…Nee-sama is sleeping soundly, then?"

"Mhmm, like a log. I guess it's impressive that she kept up the verbal abuse right until she went to sleep."

As he looked down at Ram's sleeping face, Subaru responded to Rem (who had returned from shopping) with a wry smile. Insistently proving that the body and heart are separate things, Ram remained herself, even if weakened.

Removing her gaze from Subaru's pained smile, Rem's eyes went wide with a 'Hmm?'.

"Subaru-kun, are you holding nee-sama's hand for her?"

"Right at the very end, she went and called out to me with a really forlorn look on her face. Maybe not forlorn, it was more of a… dunno, it's hard to put into words."

Subaru thought to himself about what was meant by the emotion

Ram showed at the end, and her thin, soft voice. But, Rem shook her head at Subaru’s troubled thoughts.

“Rem is sure it could only mean that nee-sama has finally accepted Subaru-kun. There’s a part of nee-sama that’s just a tiny bit more suited to being aloof than most people, after all.”

“You could take that different ways, but basically you’re saying she’s a bit difficult to handle, then.”

“No, that’s not true at all. The part of her that’s just a little bit stubborn is precious, that’s all.”

“When I hear you say that, it really does feel like you two are sisters…”

Holding a strong belief in her heart, and being unwilling to let others sway her from it. When Subaru responded with that nuance, Rem tilted her head with a “Is that so?”, seemingly unaware of his meaning.

Subaru’s wry smile deepened at her reaction, then he looked down at his own hands. His right hand was, even now, still grasped in Ram’s palm as she lay on the bed.

Seeing her face as she slumbered, Subaru let out a little sigh.

“You’d be cute, too, nee-sama, if only you could always look as gentle as this.”

That was his appraisal of Ram with a peaceful look on her sleeping face.

Librarian Beatrice’s Log: Restart (Volume 7; Melon Books)

1

With a soft thump, she gently closed the book she had finished reading.

Shutting the thick, skillfully-bound book that rested on her knees, the girl let out a sigh that seemed incongruous with her child-like appearance, one that somehow carried the weight of years.

The girl sat atop an aged stepladder, constructed of wood. Wrapped in an elegant dress, with her pale, cream-colored hair in curls, she was a person with doll-like beauty.

The girl’s name was Beatrice—she was the librarian of this silence-filled library, known as the ‘Forbidden Library’, and a magic user of rare quality who had passed many a year here.

“No matter how many times I read it, ‘The Guillotine of Magritsa’ never loses its charm; just a masterpiece, you know.”

Whispering in satisfaction, Beatrice’s fingers traced the title of the book on her knees.

Countless shelves, and innumerable books collected on them. Story after story acclaimed as masterpieces, specialized treatises from the past that were now difficult to acquire, or even forbidden books that no one knew the history of; the ‘Wisdom’ that existed in the Forbidden Library in the form known as books was limitlessly vast.

In a sea of books that one couldn’t finish reading in a lifetime, it was no surprise that there were stories that Beatrice was fond of, and had read over and over. The book she had just finished reading, too, was one such story.

“What sort of book shall I read next, I suppose?”

The calm that fell over the Forbidden Library was, to Beatrice, who was both a librarian and a reader, the best possible environment.

Through Beatrice's spell, known as 'Door Crossing', the Forbidden Library was entirely isolated from the outside world. Not only were light and darkness shut out, but even bothersome interpersonal relations could not be brought into this place. The only thing that made a sound in the room was herself, and there were countless books to read—truly a utopia that a book lover would drool over.

However…

"Of course, after a tragedy, something that would ease the heart would be…"

"Beatrice-sama…"

"Mhmm, losing oneself in another tragedy while still carrying this feeling of melancholy would be…"

"Beatrice-sama? Where are you?"

"It might be amusing to read the same story again, once more from the start…"

"Beatrice-sama…? Beatrice-sama…?"

"Aagh! Could you be any more noisy, annoying, and clamorous, you know?!"

Popping down off the stepladder, she ran towards the door of the library with the book still clasped under her arm. When she placed her hand on the knob and opened the door, for just a moment, a distortion formed in the space between the Forbidden Library and the outside world it was connecting to. Breaking through that thin, film-like sensation, Beatrice flew out into the mansion's hallway. At the end of the hallway, facing the other direction, was a blue-haired girl; Beatrice glared at her back.

"You've been going on with this noisy bustle for a while now, I suppose! Exactly what business do you have with Betty this late at night, you know?!"

“My apologies, Beatrice-sama. But thank goodness. You were still awake, then.”

As the girl turned towards her, Beatrice still held the book to her chest as she frowned.

In the direction of Beatrice’s pouting gaze, a girl wearing a servant’s uniform approached. She was the younger of the servant sisters who were responsible both for the mansion and its inhabitants—the more capable one. Her name was Rem, wasn’t it?

When Rem stood before Beatrice, she politely bowed her head to one who outwardly looked far younger than herself, and said,

“As it happens, Beatrice-sama, Roswaal-sama is calling for you. It seems there is a matter that he simply must have your assistance with.”

“For him to be leaving it to a servant to summon me, he must be thinking quite highly of himself, I suppose. He seems to have forgotten that there is no hierarchical relationship between himself and Betty, you know.”

“…”

As Beatrice showed the poor mood she was in after having her reading time disturbed, Rem held her silence. Offering her opinion and incurring the displeasure of either Beatrice or Roswaal would be troublesome.

Seeing Rem tighten her cheeks and the corners of her eyes in an effort to remain expressionless, Beatrice sighed.

Even though she exceeded her older sister in capability, there was a part of her that was behind in mentality. It also felt to her like the older sister was simply far above average in that respect, but none of that mattered to Beatrice.

“…Aah. Hurry up and show Betty the way, before she changes her mind, I suppose.”

“…! Yes, thank you. Rem will guide you.”

When she agreed to compromise, Rem gave off an air of relief as she bowed her head again.

The girl wasn't very good at concealing what she was feeling. As it was, it seemed unlikely she'd be able to hide her thoughts from anyone who wasn't truly lacking in perception. There wouldn't be that many people who were so unobservant, though.

While Beatrice was harboring that impression, a voice unexpectedly reached the back of her mind. It wasn't a voice that maintained a distinct form, but due to it being a voice with 'Power', it's intentions were conveyed clearly.

"Mm… I've received instructions from Bubby. It seems you should prepare hot water, a clean washcloth, and a single guest room, I suppose."

"A guest room?"

"That's right, you know. It seems that half-wit girl is bringing someone back with her, I suppose."

With an air that suggested someone was bringing something bothersome for her, Beatrice let out a gloomy sigh.

While following the maid who was thinking over her instructions, Beatrice adjusted her grip on the book she was carrying.

"Good grief, this is honestly so much trouble."

Looking back at it, Beatrice was completely shocked at how bad everyone aside from herself was at handling their responsibilities.

…That was setting aside for now how poorly she'd handled her own responsibilities and desire to meddle in the affairs of others, in that she'd forgotten to tidy up her books, and, unable to tolerate the noise outside what should have been a quiet Forbidden Library, she had rushed out of it.

2

"O~h my, you found her much faster than I had expe~cted. Was this a victory for Rem's dogged determination… or perhaps simply a defeat for Beatrice's will to fight on?"

When they arrived, guided by Rem, at the mansion's entrance hall, a tall man who had already arrived turned to face them.

He was a strange fellow with long indigo hair, white makeup applied to his face, and eccentric clothing. This man with his nonsensical air was Roswaal L. Mathers, both the master of this mansion, and Beatrice's long-time acquaintance.

As he gazed down at her cheerfully, Beatrice narrowed her eyes, and snorted softly.

"You must think quite highly of yourself to summon me like this, I suppose. You really shouldn't be giving such cruel orders to your own servants, you know."

"Despi~te that, I expected that you would be more likely to appear if I had Rem search for you than if I searched myse~lf. Su~rely, if I had started searching the mansion high and low, you'd have been so entertained by it that you wouldn't have come out to see me, wouldn't you sa~y?"

"…Now that you mention it, that might be true, I suppose."

The sight of Roswaal, who never lost his relaxed attitude, walking around the mansion searching for her would be a rare thing. Since it was Rem, she took pity on her and showed her face, but she couldn't deny the possibility that if it had been Roswaal, she'd have taken some time to enjoy it.

"You see, isn't it just like I sai~d?"

"Hmf, having you stand there looking like you've seen through everything isn't much fun. So, is it still not time for the errand you called Betty for?"

"The errand itself should be calling momentarily. …Rem?"

After his pretentious reply, Roswaal called to Rem, who was standing at his side. The girl lightly lifted up her own blue hair, and placed a hand on her well-shaped ear.

“… Yes, the senses nee-sama is sharing are getting closer. It seems they should be reaching the gate soon. Would it be alright for Rem to go and greet them?”

“I’d be pleased if you wou~ld. Ah, I don’t think there will be a problem, but… do be careful.”

Nodding to Roswaal’s instruction, and then bowing to Beatrice, Rem headed towards the entrance. When she opened the large doors and went outside, a cool evening breeze blew into the manor, and one could catch a glimpse of the mansion’s front grounds and front gate on the other side of the door. Near the iron gate, a dragon carriage raised a cloud of dust as it arrived.

In the carriage’s driver seat, a girl identical to Rem—her elder twin sister could be seen.

“The older of the sisters has returned as well; I’d like to see Bubby soon, you know.”

At the return of her only family, Beatrice’s expression had softened. The best outcome here would be for this to be simply rejoicing together at meeting again, but there was both the thoughts that were sent to her earlier, and Roswaal’s summons. There was no way it would end that easily.

“The return of your dear older brother… bu~t, I’m a little jealous. You and I are old acquaintances, too, but you’ve never made that face for me.”

“You shouldn’t say such creepy things, I suppose. And you’re being far too obvious, you know. You aren’t interested in Betty, or anyone else, I suppose. There’s only ever been one person on your mind, you know.”

“We~ll, you’re not wrong about that. But that doesn’t mean that it’s a lie to say that I feel like I’d like to get along well with you. … Although this matter is separate from that.”

“I can’t feel anything but worried about that, I suppose.”

Simultaneously, Beatrice's face tightened at Roswaal's words, and Rem met up with her older sister Ram in front of the gate. After the sisters had spoken together about something, they immediately moved to the carriage, and a silver-haired girl descended from it. … To Beatrice, it was someone who put her in a complicated state of mind.

But this time, there was someone who drew her attention more than the silver-haired girl. It was…

"It seems there was some sort of blackened, dingy-looking fellow riding with her, you know."

"I'm not sure if you would say riding, or being carried along. I'm su~re you've realized it, but that's the reason that I ca~lled for you."

"You can't be serious, I suppose."

Realizing that her worries had been right on target, Beatrice furrowed her brow, and waited for the girls to arrive.

The boy being lowered from the carriage was unconscious, and the maid sisters were each lifting one end of his body, which swayed back and forth as they tried to move him.

"Um, um! That boy really helped me out, so… I wish you'd carry him a little more gently… Um, are you listening? That looks rea~lly painful, doesn't it?"

Near the boy who was being carried, the silver-haired girl ran about, flustered and looking concerned. Neither her shoulder nor her silver hair showed any sign of the little shadow that Beatrice was seeking.

"…It seems I've drawn the short end of the stick, you know."

Beatrice's sigh reeked of age, completely at odds with her child-like appearance.

It seemed that the boy who had been carried in had made crucial efforts in overcoming a problem that occurred for the silver-haired girl—Emilia—during her journey in the capital.

From what was said, after Emilia carelessly had her precious emblem stolen, not only had he tenaciously determined its whereabouts in her stead, and struggled to do this and that to return it to Emilia, but he had gone on to risk his own life to protect Emilia's.

"Ah, this is much too suspicious, I suppose. There's no doubt that someone like that is a spy or something, you know. It would be best to make a clean break of things here and let him die naturally, I suppose."

"Well, it's certainly true that it's far too convenient. What would you have us do, Emilia-sama? Shall we let him die?"

"Why are you saying such cruel things?! Please, help him."

Flustered by the cold suggestion offered by Beatrice, who had listened to the explanation, and Ram, who had given the explanation, Emilia requested healing for the boy.

The unconscious boy had a fairly serious wound in his abdomen. Currently, the wound had only been closed by simply healing magic, and even if it was only left as it was now, he could be expected to recover if he rested quietly.

To be sure, this was speaking of only if he did absolutely nothing but rest in bed.

And, she got the feeling that this boy, left on his own, definitely would not remain in bed.

"There's little choice so I'll heal him, but… this is something that I normally absolutely wouldn't do. I'm doing you a favor, so tomorrow, I'll have you let me take Bubby all day, I suppose."

"…! Very well. If that's what you'd like, I'll make sure to speak to Puck about it. Thank you, Beatrice. I am indebted to you."

"…That's an old-fashioned way of putting it, you know."

"Huh?!"

Setting aside Emilia as she expressed surprise, Beatrice set right to healing the boy and getting it over with. Before the immense power of Beatrice, the maintainer of the Forbidden Library, it was a trivial task.

Despite that, she'd demanded a proper reward, so the terms weren't bad for her. It would be troublesome if their relationship developed into one where she was called upon casually. Beatrice was no one's errand girl.

Beatrice's role was the librarian of the Forbidden Library, nothing more and nothing less—on that point, she would never budge.

"There now, I've healed him up, I suppose. Take care of the rest as you please, you know. Do make sure not to let him push himself, I suppose."

"Mhmm, thank you, Beatrice. I'm indebt… I'm… I'm most grateful!"

"That's old-fashioned talk, too, you know."

As Emilia smiled openly, Beatrice pointed out the expression she'd used and turned her back.

Such a straightforward gaze was difficult for her to deal with, but Beatrice lacked the will to tell Emilia that directly.

4

With the boy's healing taken care of, Beatrice retired quickly to the Forbidden Library.

Most likely, the boy would wake up sometime in the morning. Although his body had been restored, it would take time for his stamina and such to recover after being so exhausted. Having said that, Beatrice's healing magic was even capable of producing results in restoring said stamina and the like, so it was unlikely that any significant problems would remain.

"It seems that those girls have returned to their room as well; with that, we should be able to get back to a peaceful night."

Seating herself on a stepladder in the center of the room, she sighed as she brushed at her knees.

The Forbidden Library was essentially safe from the influence of the outside world, but Beatrice's perception was wide-ranging, and it was that indeed that allowed her to grasp what was going on inside the mansion. In the end, the serenity that Beatrice truly loved would only come when all the residents of the mansion were sound asleep.

However, there had been a few too many fusses tonight. Somehow, she couldn't even work up the urge to reread the book she was carrying.

"It was such a nice night, and now look what's become of it, you know. Bubby is out of mana and resting, and I can't see him until morning; what a day, I suppose. If it was going to turn out like this, why did Betty… Hmhm."

Just as the day was reluctantly drawing to a close, Beatrice hummed softly to herself at the tail end of it.

Just as was stated earlier, Beatrice knew what was going on inside the mansion like the back of her hand. Something was nagging at her perception. It was…

"That injured boy's room. He's woken up, I suppose."

Paying special attention to his situation, just in case of sudden changes, had yielded results. Sensing the boy get up off his bed and move around, Beatrice pursed her lips.

That was quick, was her first thought. Of course, her healing had been perfect. She was confident that she had restored the boy completely, without so much as a scar. She was confident, but he had gotten used to the healing magic oddly quickly. For this to be possible, either there was something peculiar about the nature of his body, or he had good compatibility with Beatrice's magic.

"Ah, ew, ew… what a revolting thing to imagine, you know."

Repulsed by what she'd thought up by herself, Beatrice felt like she was nauseous in her chest. In the same moment, a plot sprouted in her heart to use this boy to clear up the nausea.

"Now that it's decided, I'll just play with him a little bit, I suppose."

While still seated on the stepladder, Beatrice fully mobilized the power of her own shadow magic, she "remade" the space of one floor of the mansion—a corner of it that included the guest room that the boy was in.

Originating from the guest room he was in, she connected the space of the end of the hallway to the other end, forming an endless corridor. An illusion made it impossible to see where the corridors met, and she chose a perpetual darkness for the outside of the windows, with no sign of light.

With this, she had completed the trap. With no way to tell which way to go, and no way out, the boy would be psychologically cornered.

"On top of that, any door except the correct door… the door to the first room, will have a special gimmick, you know. Your body will forget about gravity, your consciousness and awareness of reality will be exactly opposite, and there will even be upside-down rooms, I suppose."

It felt like she might have gone a bit overboard with her control and alteration of her territory, but she was satisfied with the result.

Incidentally, this prank used many different shadow magic spells that had been lost to time, and some researchers into magic would faint if they saw it mis-used this way, but Beatrice wasn't concerned about that.

"Now, do a grand dance in the palm of Betty's hand, you know!"

This, that, and all of it was solely for the purpose of seeing the boy running about frantically, snot dribbling from his nose. She was simply letting off steam after being unable to meet with her brother, so although he had saved someone’s life, he could at least entertain her for a little…

“…Or perhaps, the possibility that the first door is the goal, as it tends to be.”

The Forbidden Library’s door opened with a click, and a foolish face peered inside.

Snap judgement, an instant choice, an immediate breakthrough—feeling a sense of wasted effort that wasn’t suitable compensation for the amount of work she’d expended, Beatrice put on her sourest face.

“…What a profoundly aggravating man you are, I suppose.”

And so, for the first time, she tasted a sensation she would repeat time and time again in the days to come.

It was the beginning of the end of the quiet days she had spent in the Forbidden Library.

Librarian Beatrice's Log:

(Ex 2; Melon Books)

1

The Forbidden Library was filled at all times with solemn serenity.

Beatrice, who saw herself as the librarian of the Forbidden Library, felt that's how it was, and that was how a library was meant to be. A treasure trove of tales and knowledge only attained it's proper state when filled with blessed silence.

Hence, the Forbidden Library was one of the most prominent sanctuaries for 'Books' in the world—and it now faced an unprecedented crisis.

"Mornin'. Is Beako here?"

"…No, she isn't, you know."

"Ah, she's not, I see… Hey, don't pull that old trick on me. She's right here."

"At the very least, I don't recall having opened the door for you, I suppose."

Roughly closing the book she had been reading, Beatrice jumped down from the top of the stepladder and glared at her visitor. The one who had walked into the library, looking as though he owned the place, was a black-haired black-eyed boy with a cheerful smirk on his face.

Natsuki Subaru—an impertinent fellow who had recently been entering and leaving Beatrice's Forbidden Library as he pleased.

Carried into the mansion only a few weeks earlier, the boy had, since then, worked as a servant, but he'd acted exceptionally familiar with Beatrice. Perhaps his peculiar nature, that allowed him to more or less come and go as he pleased to the Forbidden Library (where outsiders shouldn't be able to arrive easily), was a factor in the development of his attitude.

"What on earth have you come here for, you know? Despite what you may think, Betty is busy, I suppose."

"When you say busy, it's just reading, right? Children should be outdoors! If you're going to play, go play outside."

"Don't be ridiculous, you know. As if Betty would frolic like a child, I suppose."

"Don't go pouting just because you don't know anyone. Should I go talk to Petra and the others for you?"

"Why do I even bother speaking with you, you know?! No one is speaking of such simplistic things, I suppose!"

When it came to dealing with Beatrice, Subaru's attitude was always like this. While having her tranquility disturbed by this exchange, Beatrice played with the curls in her hair irritably.

"Regardless! Get to the point, state your business and get out! Come now, quickly!"

"Um, that was my business. I just came to say that since the weather is nice, maybe you'd like to go play outside."

"…! Mind your own business, I suppose!"

"Geroppa?!"

Towards the one who rubbed her the wrong way more than she would have thought possible, she unleashed a wave of magical force from the palm of her extended hand. Struck by an invisible shockwave, Subaru shrieked as he was thrown out of the room—the door closed, and space itself wavered.

'Door Crossing' activated, and the library connected to another door in the mansion. With this, the room's quiet would return.

Sighing at what had occurred, Beatrice turned to resume reading the book she was holding on to…

“…I’ve entirely forgotten how far I’d read, you know.”

With her desire to read entirely crushed, Beatrice’s ‘tsk’ conveyed annoyance from the bottom of her heart.

She couldn’t help but think that lately, this, that, and everything just wasn’t working out properly.

2

In truth, ever since Subaru had come to stay at the mansion, the environment that Beatrice lived in had been in a state of ongoing change.

It had begun with Subaru, and his over-friendly way of interacting with her, but there had been changes in the others that lived in the mansion as well. For instance, the maid sisters that she had known for a relatively long time were a good example of this.

“Beatrice-sama, pardon me. May I have a moment of your time?”

“…You called me, so I came, but what sort of cargo is that, I suppose?”

Hearing a voice calling, she had connected the door to the mansion’s front entryway. Upon doing so, she found there the peach-haired maid, Ram. Carrying many baskets filled with vegetables, Ram boldly straddled the threshold of the library and bowed her head.

“Oh, it’s just that all these baskets are so much trouble, so Ram was wondering if you would kindly convey her to the kitchen via the library.”

“Since when has Betty become your handywoman, you know?!”

“Well then, that means that you won’t allow it?”

“Mggh… J, just this once, I suppose…!”

After using ‘Door Crossing’ to connect the Forbidden Library to the kitchen, it did indeed reduce the trouble with the packages a little. When Ram passed through the door and gave a quick curtsey in thanks, Beatrice sniffed her nose at her to display her displeasure.

“Ah, Beatrice-sama, please wait a moment.”

“…And now it’s the younger of the sisters. If it’s some foolish errand, I won’t allow it, you know.”

Having been in the kitchen, Rem noticed Beatrice and quickly walked over to her. She shook her head to Beatrice with a ‘I wouldn’t dream of it’, and then, lowering her voice, asked,

“Rem would like to add pepples to this evening’s supper; how many of them can she add before you wouldn’t want to eat it?”

“…If it’s no more than three, I’ll put up with it, I suppose.”

“Understood. With that, we’ll add four, so please try your best.”

“You…!”

“It isn’t good to be picky, no matter the situation. You still have room to grow, Beatrice-sama.”

“What do you mean about the future… no, never mind, you know. I’m starting to get a headache, I suppose.”

In response to Rem speaking to her in a fashion that could only be called motherly, Beatrice bent her lips into a truly impressive frown.

Her attitude was clearly different from the way that she had interacted with Beatrice until only recently. Faltering before that change in the sense of distance between them, Beatrice dejectedly withdrew into the Forbidden Library.

But, as she left, just before she closed the door…

“What did Beatrice-sama say?”

“It seems she’ll do her best with up to four pepples. Let’s put five in!”

Hearing that sort of unsettling conversation, Beatrice at last looked up to the ceiling as though lamenting.

“All of this is from that man’s bad influence…”

3

…As that sort of day piled one on top of the other, the very limits of Beatrice’s tolerance were plumbed.

And the limits of that patience were suddenly, abruptly torn through.

“…Beako! Beako! You gotta get me to my room!”

While narrowing her eyes at the disrespectful tone of voice, Beatrice glared at the room’s entrance. Unable to conceal her irritation at the commotion, she completely forgot her anger at the scene that came next.

“Y…you! What are you doing looking like that, I suppose?!”

As Beatrice spoke in a voice that was all but a shriek, before her eyes was Subaru, dripping wet. Soaked in water from head to toe, he was half-naked, clad only in his underwear.

“Puck got me good! I’m soaked thanks to that jerk! I wanna get changed, so please connect the library to my room. I can’t go around the mansion getting everything wet.”

“It won’t do to get the library wet, either! Quit joking around, I suppose!”

Obviously, simply hanging around the entrance wouldn’t get the books wet. However, this was holy ground where tranquility was prized. Absolutely not a place where a half-naked, half-drowned rat would be admitted.

“You really do the most selfish things… this isn’t funny, you know!”

"I'm sorry, this is an emergency measure. I'll never use it this way again."

"You said that last time, too, when you used it as a shortcut to the bathroom! If you think I'll allow it because you call it an emergency measure, you're entirely wrong, you know!"

"Yeah, but that was an emergency measure, too, c'mon! I'm sorry about this time, too!"

With her head boiling over at Subaru's complete lack of any sign of regret, Beatrice snapped her fingers. Just as he'd asked, "Door Crossing" connected the entrance and his private room. However, she had no intention of allowing him to leave peacefully.

"Just like always, get out… I suppose!"

"Bonjobi!"

Struck head-on by the shockwave, Subaru was blown away, tumbling head-over-heels into his room.

Without even watching him go, Beatrice used "Door Crossing" to seal off the Forbidden Library. Hurriedly grabbing a cleaning cloth, she cleaned up the floor that Subaru had gotten wet. And when the cleaning was done…

"That man… he absolutely will not get away with this, you know. He must learn what Betty's anger means, I suppose."

With anger smoldering in her chest, and a cloth clutched in her hand, Beatrice's voice trembled.

4

Closing the door that connected to the Forbidden Library, Beatrice began walking ponderously on the mansion's carpets.

For Beatrice to go outside of the Forbidden Library, without a specific task in mind, was rare. It was her belief that, as long as she had the role of constantly caring for the library as it's librarian, she should remain there as much as possible.

Bending that belief, she was now taking action outside the Forbidden Library. The truth behind that was…

“If Betty isn’t inside the library, he shouldn’t be able to come and go so easily, you know.”

She resented it, but the reason that Subaru was able to reach the Forbidden Library was that he had good compatibility with her wavelength.

Put simply, Subaru was finding the Forbidden Library by using Beatrice as a landmark. It was likely that he wasn’t aware of it, but it was irritating nonetheless. Regardless, to prevent his invasion of the library, she was separating herself from it. In a certain sense, she was getting her priorities confused, but Beatrice hadn’t noticed that.

“What’s more, this time I just can’t let it go, I suppose. I’m going to give him a piece of my mind, you know.”

Treating her as a handywoman was one thing, but the vandalism of the Forbidden Library had finally crossed a line inside of Beatrice. With a soaked cleaning cloth in one hand, Beatrice was thinking of providing Subaru with some disciplinary action.

As she was getting goosebumps over her idea, imagining that it would go on to become a revenge drama famed throughout the world, just at that moment Subaru came into view on the far end of the hallway.

“I’ve found you, I suppose. I’ll get right on with…hmm?”

At the instant she’d thought of running over and landing a flying kick, her feet stopped moving as she became aware of a presence at Subaru’s side.

Before Subaru’s eyes, floating in front of his face, was Beatrice’s dear older brother, Puck.

Without thinking, Beatrice held her breath at the sight of the two of them, apparently deep in conversation about something. The air about them suggested she mustn’t disturb them, and yet the one she needed vengeance on was right in front of her; Beatrice was caught between a rock and hard place. On top of that…

"…! They're coming this way, you know!"

Having finished their conversation, Beatrice saw them heading towards this part of the hallway. Fearing that they'd find out she'd been eavesdropping, she frantically tumbled into a nearby guest room. But, through some twist of fate, she heard them stop in front of the room. To further avoid them, Beatrice hid in the closet.

Not a moment too soon, just as someone entered the room, Beatrice finished hiding. Quietly peeking outside as she heard the door close, she saw Puck floating in the center of the room.

She wouldn't mind being found if it was only Puck, she thought, but she had no way to explain why she was hiding. Thinking that she had no choice but to stay hidden and avoid being found, Beatrice held her breath…

"…Meow! Meoweow, me~w"

"…?!"

In the room that Beatrice was peeking into, Puck abruptly began rolling on the floor and crying out sweetly. On top of that, as he curled up his tail and looked around with big, round eyes, his charm was off the charts, and Beatrice, not grasping what Puck was doing, could only watch the kitten's antics in fascination.

…Bubby, what are you doing?! Ah, but how adorable you are, I suppose!

5

"Beako~, you the~re?"

"…I'm not, you know."

"Are you planning to make a habit of that? You're right here, aintcha? …Seriously."

On the afternoon of the same day, Subaru came to visit Beatrice after she'd returned to the Forbidden Library. Glancing at him, she saw he was carrying cleaning tools and smiling weakly.

“What brings you…Please tell me you’re not going to say you want to do some cleaning, and need me to connect to another room, I suppose.”

“Nah, that ain’t the plan. C’mon, this morning I dripped water in the entrance and caused trouble, right? So, I thought maybe I could do some cleaning in the Forbidden Library to show I was sorry…”

“An admirable thought, you know. However, there’s no need, I suppose.”

As Subaru showed a rarely-seen subdued attitude, Beatrice shook her head while smiling faintly. Seeing her reaction, Subaru widened his eyes as though surprised.

“…Your expression is strange, you know.”

“Uh, I’d say you’re being stranger here. Usually you’d be angrier… though I’m glad you’re not angry. You look kinda happy, did something nice happen?”

“Not really… Oh, yes, yes. There was something I wanted to say to you, I suppose.”

“Oh, I know, right? That’s more like my Beako. Alright, bring it on! I can take it!”

As if he were strengthening his resolve, Subaru crouched down where he was, and positioned himself as though preparing to be struck by something. Indeed, this was a posture that might allow him to endure a shockwave.

It’s just that the words Beatrice tossed towards him were, just this once, something else entirely…

“Now and then, even you can do a half-decent job of something, you know. My compliments, I suppose.”

“…eh?”

“You showed me something nice, you know.”

The reason wasn’t really clear to her, but it seemed that Puck looking cute like that had been an idea hatched by Subaru.

Well then, she felt like she ought to express her unabashed thanks for being able to see it. In regards to having gotten the Forbidden Library wet, she wouldn’t mind allowing this accomplishment to offset it.

Subaru’s mouth opened in shock at Beatrice’s carefree sentiment.

“B, Beako… have you got a fever or something?! This is terrible! It must be because you’re stuck in a place like this with no sunlight…! I, I’ll call a doctor! You’ll be well soon…”

“You should accept someone’s gratitude a little more graciously, I suppose!”

“Maikou~~!”

After she reappraised him in only a moment, Beatrice’s shockwave washed over Subaru and he was flung from the Forbidden Library.

The noisy boy disappeared, and the serenity it deserved once more descended on the Forbidden Library. Accepting that with a blissful feeling, Beatrice thought to herself.

…For the sake of this feeling of gratitude for the peace and quiet, perhaps she might be willing to allow a bit of noise now and then.

“No, that would be spoiling him too much, you know…”

Raising a hand to her forehead as though exhausted, Beatrice returned to the top of her stepladder and immersed herself in a book.

The faint hint of a smile etched onto her face was something that not even she herself would recall having seen before.

Librarian Beatrice's Log:
Page 3
(Volume 8; Melon Books)

1

…In truth, the situation was more or less as she had expected.

The ominous foreboding was itself something that Beatrice had been unable to escape.

In the first place, the premonition had started the moment she had heard who had been selected to head to the capital this time around.

The first two were Emilia and Roswaal; that was fine.

She hadn't been told the details, but the two aforementioned had business at the capital's castle. Naturally the two of them would be going. There was no question that Puck would accompany Emilia, so although that was lonely, it couldn't be helped.

Further, it seemed that Natsuki Subaru, the boy who had been hanging around Emilia these last few weeks, would be going along as well. On top of that, he had been the one to drop in to the Forbidden Library to tell her about it.

Going on and on about something she hadn't asked about, Subaru showed entirely no consideration for Beatrice as she was trying to concentrate on reading. He was a truly infuriating fellow, so she was relieved that she wouldn't have to see his face for a while.

Finally, one of the maids would accompany them to handle seeing to their needs. Normally, the older of the maid sisters would take on that role, the one who was unwaveringly loyal to that good-for-nothing Roswaal.

However, just this once, it didn't turn out that way. The one who had asked to accompany them was the younger of the maid sisters.

The older one had yielded that role to the younger, and as a result, the older sister and Beatrice would be the two to remain in the mansion.

That fact itself wasn't something that she minded. Beatrice hadn't particularly gotten close to anyone in the mansion—Puck was an exception—and she had no intention of being friendly to them.

No matter who it was that she would be spending several days alone with in the mansion, it wasn't something that she would give a second thought to.

…That was based on the assumption that her routine as a librarian was not disrupted.

"Good morning, Beatrice-sama. This is your breakfast of steamed yam."

"I see, I suppose. Leave it there, you know."

"It's noon, Beatrice-sama. I've prepared a steamed yam for your lunch."

"Hmm, I see, I suppose. I'll put the plate out later, you know."

"Here is your supper, Beatrice-sama. This evening, perhaps a steamed yam will do."

"…I, I see, I suppose. Steamed yams aren't bad, you know. Hmm, that's fine, I suppose."

"Good morning, Beatrice-sama. Breakfast has been especially steamed with extra effort."

"For pity's sake, I suppose! There are limits to what Betty can take, you know!!"

When, a bit more than a day after the party had left for the capital, a meal of steamed yams was offered for the fourth time, Beatrice reached her limit, came flying out of the Forbidden Library, and poked the older of the maid sisters with her finger.

The girl, Ram, with peach-colored hair and faint red eyes, and an altered maid outfit that exposed white skin, held a steaming plate in one hand and tilted her head; her expression showed no reaction to what Beatrice had pointed out.

“Beatrice-sama, if you need to visit the bathroom, there’s no need for you to go to the trouble of telling Ram about it.”

“Oh, come now! Who was speaking about that kind of limit to endurance?! You’ve been disrespectful nearly from the beginning, but lately it’s been happening a little too often, you know?!”

“You’ve gone and unmasked her, have you? Ram has been like this since she was born.”

“And now you’re showing too much of your true face, I suppose! There are limits to impudence as well, you know!”

Ram’s haughty irreverence wasn’t something that had begun recently, but before now, she would not have talked back directly to Beatrice’s face. In light of this change, no, this deterioration, Beatrice ended up stamping her foot.

“You can’t get away with overdoing that, just because Roswaal is away, I suppose. I demand that you shape up in your duties as a servant, you know. Firstly, put some effort into improving the food situation, I suppose.”

“You say that, but Ram has been laboring diligently each time on the flavor of the steamed yams. The salting, the duration of steaming, the selection of yams and mayonnaise… Isn’t it too early to be getting tired of them?”

“What matters! Is that it’s all the same meal, you know! Can you not make anything besides steamed yams, I suppose?!”

“Ram isn’t proud of that fact.”

“That’s exactly right, you know! It’s nothing to be proud of, I suppose!”

As Ram gave a faint impression of standing her ground proudly, Beatrice spoke roughly to her, wide-eyed.

She couldn’t stand the warm scent of salt that drifted faintly in the hallway. Atop a plate were placed freshly steamed yams, and next to them white mayonnaise—the curious condiment that Subaru had devised—was arranged as well. There was no question it would be delicious. Beatrice loved mayonnaise.

However, if she were to show approval here because of that, she couldn’t hope for the situation to improve.

“So, for now, Betty must harden her heart, and briefly forget about mayonnaise.”

“Depriving yourself like that… munch munch could have ill effects on your health, Beatrice-sama.”

“That’s Betty’s steamed yam, I suppose! Don’t think you can just go ahead and eat it, you know!”

As they were speaking, Ram’s hand had reached for the plate. Stealing her breakfast from that hand, and while snarling like a cat, Beatrice glared at Ram and asserted herself.

“You rely too much on your little sister… munch munch You’re entirely forgetting… munch munch your duties as a… munch munch servant, I suppose… munch munch”

“Beatrice sama, some tea?”

“munch munch…I’ll take some, you know.”

From a teapot placed on the serving cart, the fragrant aroma of tea was spreading through the hallway. Accepting the tea poured into a cup, Beatrice’s eyes narrowed in satisfaction at the warm flavor.

The steamed yam, delicious. The tea that Ram brewed, this was also delicious. Honestly, although one could hold nothing but doubt about Ram’s ability as a servant, her yam steaming and tea brewing were perfect. Satisfaction.

“But this is no time to be satisfied, I suppose!”

“Beatrice-sama… Hasn’t Barusu been rubbing off on you lately?”

“There’s no call for that kind of insult, you know!! I can’t believe you, I suppose…!”

Trembling furiously, Beatrice expressed her indignation at having something like that pointed out. It was unthinkable for her to be under the influence of the black-haired youth who had come to stay at the mansion. How long did they think she had spent here?

There was no way that she would be open to change now, after all this time.

“Setting that aside, it’s quite strange, isn’t it. Normally, Ram is the one to accompany Roswaal-sama, so it’s exceptionally rare to have a chance to be alone in the mansion with Beatrice-sama.”

“…At this moment, Betty, too, is painfully aware of that.”

“Are you always making demands of Rem like this, when she stays together with you?”

“Demands! Did I say demand, I suppose?! I didn’t say that! Your little sister can do anything, so there’s no need for Betty to go to the trouble of saying anything, I suppose.”

As Beatrice clutched the hem of her dress and ground her teeth, Ram nodded at her solemnly. Although Beatrice had just plainly stated that Rem exceeded Ram in ability, Ram showed no sign of concern.

Not only that, she smiled faintly at Beatrice.

“Ram is very proud of her little sister Rem, after all.”

“If nothing else, I’m impressed by the strength of your heart…”

When placed in a situation of being compared to someone else, being found inferior is hard to take for anyone. Even for Beatrice, it was something she had personal experience with. It was something she felt more particularly when she was next to Puck.

There was no doubt that he was her beloved big brother. Despite that, she did feel an urge to envy him over the difference in the circumstances they had been placed in.

“Ram loves everything about Rem, after all, including her surroundings. It’s a different situation than yours, Beatrice-sama.”

“…Listen to you, talking as though you know anything about it, I suppose.”

“It’s just a bit of conversation. Besides, Ram has her hands full with her own concerns…Please be at ease.”

“At ease, you say? I wasn’t particularly worried, you know.”

While Ram spoke with a sparkle in her eye, Beatrice responded while licking at the salt and mayonnaise that had stuck to her hand. Then, after draining the cup of tea, the meal was finished. After wiping her fingertips with a cloth, Beatrice turned towards the hall’s doorway—the door that connected to the Forbidden Library. Behind her…

“Beatrice-sama.”

“What is it, I suppose? Let me remind you I’m expecting something more palatable for lunch, you know.”

“It’s not that; it’s only that something like eating while standing in the hallway is poor manners…”

“Setting aside that you nibbled at it first, what an outrageous bit of abuse, I suppose!!”

With her hand still on the door, Beatrice bellowed at Ram as she returned to the serving cart. Ram maintained her unruffled expression, and continued her speech with an “In addition, “.

“Ram has a full plate of jobs to attend to. Because of that, she has no time or effort to expend on meeting Beatrice-sama’s demands. Please extend your understanding to her.”

“That doesn’t sound like how someone hoping for understanding would put it, you know…?”

“Whether it’s stated politely or rudely, the steamed yam future will not change, after all.”

“Then at least say it politely, I suppose!”

As Beatrice seethed, Ram once more smiled faintly, and curtsied politely where she stood. If nothing else, the gesture was the perfect image of a maid, and Beatrice let loose a drawn-out sigh.

She watched Ram’s back as she pushed the serving cart, moving off into the distance.

“…This might be the most I’ve ever looked forward to the return of Roswaal and the others, you know.”

She whispered that with a tired-out face and voice.

2

With that sort of heartwarming exchange as a basis, Beatrice passed the dragged-out days of her time watching over the mansion.

The return of Roswaal and the others was on the fourth day after they’d left by dragon carriage—in other words, having no one but Ram for company went on for three days, and during that time, it should be noted that the meals were all steamed yams.

Regardless, thanks to their safe return from the capital, most of the problems that had been making Beatrice suffer stopped being problems. That was not, however, thanks to Rem, who, on her return to the mansion, took care of all of Ram’s accumulated chores at once, and offered meals other than steamed yams.

Unfortunately, Rem had not returned to the mansion. And it was not only Rem, but also Subaru who had gone along with her to the capital. The two of them remained at the capital, and the group that returned to the mansion consisted of the pair of Roswaal and Emilia, and Puck along with them.

As well, the various problems were not resolved; rather the matter was concluded with a decision that they would be set aside for later and shelved.

All of that came about thanks to Roswaal's first visit to the Forbidden Library in a long time…

"Beatrice. It's been so long, do you mind if I come i~n?"

"…Oh, it's you, I suppose."

When the man dressed as a clown opened the door and brazenly stuck his head inside, Beatrice sighed.

Beatrice was seated atop a wooden stepladder. When spending time in the Forbidden Library, that was her constant position. In truth, it wasn't that often that she met with Roswaal in this room.

Indeed, what was occurring here today was something that hadn't happened for several years. She didn't remember it that well, though.

"What brings you here, you know? Just so you know, Betty won't lend you any help with that crestfallen girl, I suppose. That's your jurisdiction, and not something Betty needs to involve herself with, you know."

"Tha~t's quite cold of you. Even when the Great Spirit whose so important to you is heartbroken over Emilia-sama? Even though you were kind enough to lend Subaru-kun a ha~nd?"

"…"

Although the provocative words seemed to be testing her, Beatrice held her silence and narrowed her eyes. Seeing her guarded attitude, Roswaal shrugged, and then walked over right to her side. He smiled, and though perhaps it was her imagination, he seemed to be enjoying himself; Beatrice found it suspicious.

"Somehow, you look like you're in a good mood, I suppose."

"Does it look that wa~y? Me, in good spirits?"

"…It does, you know. If you enjoy that girl being saddened in the capital that much, you'll forgive me if I question your tastes, I suppose. Maybe it was too late for that from the point you started wearing makeup, you know."

"O~h, don't be like that. It's the sort of thing that tends to put one in a good mood. For me~, the time for my dearest wish is coming steadily closer. With what's just happened, I'm sure of it, you se~e."

"When you say your dearest wish, you can't mean…"

"The dearest wish of the Mathers clan, indeed. If I put it that way, it's easier for you to understand, perha~ps? To you, who are both the guardian and librarian of the Forbidden Library, handed down from the time of the first Roswaal, yes?"

Roswaal closed one eye, and Beatrice, caught in the gaze of his yellow pupil, was at a loss for words.

The facts that Roswaal had spoken of were something that only Beatrice could grasp the true significance of. Seeing a slight glimpse of its meaning was something only Roswaal and Puck could do. And, by now…

"By now, Betty… is no longer concerned about what will happen, or what might happen, I suppose."

"That's a terribly sad thing. Howe~ver, there's something to look forward to. Hope, too, still remains. I know of your kindness and weakness. Isn't that right, Betty?"

"Why you…!"

Called by a familiar nickname, Beatrice lifted her head as though she were ready to lash out.

However, that exact reaction was what Roswaal had hoped for. He nodded at her, looking satisfied. Seeing that for herself, Beatrice immediately brought her rampant emotions under control.

Then, hugging her knees atop the stepladder, she turned her face away from Roswaal as though escaping from his gaze.

“Hope and expectations both have long ago dimmed, faded, and worn away. So Betty will always stay here… I wish for nothing more or less than that, I suppose.”

“I suppose you could say that. But… if possible, I would wish for you, too, to obtain happiness. You are worthy of that.”

“…There, indeed, you can say whatever you want when it’s only words, you know.”

As Beatrice’s cheeks bent into a cynical smile, Roswaal’s eyes lowered with just a hint of sadness. But, when he raised his head again, not a trace of that pity remained on his face.

He simply clapped his hands, and continued “That’s fine.” with his usual demeanor.

“No matter what sort of choice you decide on, I just wanted to let you know first. You’ve had as much time as you could want to worry over it, bu~t that time was necessary regardless. In order for you to be properly prepared.”

“…”

“I will head to ‘Sanctuary’. On the surface, it will be seen as going to explain about the Royal Selection to Garfiel and the others, but the truth of it is exactly as you are already aware. At the tomb, Teacher is waiting.”

“…We aren’t awaited, I suppose. At the very least, neither Betty nor yourself.”

“Ah, that’s true. I can’t disagree. …That’s why we must go to meet her. That’s what the time was for. That’s what this chance is for. That’s all there is t~o it.”

Loosening his lips, Roswaal showed a smile.

It was something different from the smiles that frequently showed up on his face, based on irony or mockery.

It was simply a genuine smile that looked forward to the future that awaited, anticipating wholeheartedly seeing it with his own eyes, the smile of a young man full of youthful innocence.

"…"

Finishing with that, Roswaal turned away from Beatrice, and withdrew from the Forbidden Library.

Exactly as he said in his last words to Beatrice, he would head to 'Sanctuary'. If that occurred, Beatrice had a fairly good idea of what would happen.

Left alone in the Forbidden Library, Beatrice reflected on Roswaal's words, and closed her eyes.

"After all this time…"

After all this time, she couldn't think that anything would change. Unlike Roswaal, she wasn't able to hold on to hope or expectations.

But on the other hand, just maybe, if something were to be set into motion…

"Mother… How much longer must Betty…?"

That sad whisper, that nevertheless carried a faint intensity, fell to the floor of the Forbidden Library, and vanished.

The Great Spirit Puck’s Nyan Nyan Sunny Day (Volume 7; Toranoana)

1

“Hey, Subaru…can we stop doing something like this?”

“What are you talking about, Miss Rabbit? Quitting right now would be like throwing away my manhood.”

“I don’t think you would lose it, and who’s Miss Rabbit?”

Such peaceful words were being exchanged at Roswaal Manor at noon. A boy and a beautiful girl were exchanging words in a slightly hushed and mature manner. They were Natsuki Subaru and Emilia, respectively.

They were close to each other, moving without making a sound in the hallways of Roswaal Manor, which was where they were currently staying. They were carefully executing a stealth operation—to be precise, they were following their target.

“We’ll be in trouble if our target notices us. Emilia-tan, be as quiet as possible… And you smell really good when you’re this close. Are you wearing perfume or something?”

“I’m not wearing any, but…leaving that aside, I don’t think there’s any point in doing something like this. Even if we act foxy like this, we’ll be spotted immediately.”

“Nobody uses the word foxy in this day and age…”

“Su-Ba-Ru.”

They exchanged their usual lines, but Emilia looked angry this time, surprisingly. Subaru thought her angry face was cute, too, and at the same time glanced at the end of the corridor again—

“Ah, damn it! We’ve lost our target! Emilia-tan, dash! Dash while being sneaky!”

"Huh? Wha? Dash?"

"It means to run while being sneaky! Watch and learn!"

"I can't do something skillful like…woah, Subaru, you are good at the sneaky dash."

Emilia hurriedly chased after Subaru, who was ahead of her demonstrating a peculiar running skill without making a sound. She desperately tried to mimic his running style, but it wasn't so easy to do.

Her effort is heartwarming, but for now, our priority is to pursue our target. He saw a long tail disappearing around the corner in the corner of his eye. It was a familiar-looking long tail that must have belonged to their target, a calm and laidback cat spirit—Puck. They didn't know where Puck went after leaving Emilia's side and flied freely around the mansion. To find that out was their goal—to conduct biological research on the Great Spirit Puck's behavior, that was the duty they were given.

"Oh, Subaru! Look, I was able to do the sneaky dash! Look, I can be reaaally quiet!"

"You improved really quick?!"

Even if you didn't make a sound while running, you wouldn't be able to tail someone if you didn't talk quietly.

It was a desperate tailing scene by two people who needed to look the definition up in a dictionary.

2

It all began after they'd finished today's breakfast and were taking a post-meal break.

Usually, the weird events at Roswaal Manor began with Subaru's words, and mostly when everyone in the mansion had gathered for meals. There was an unspoken agreement that everyone at Roswaal Manor would eat together unless there was a grave issue. It was a loose rule, something that a normal family had, but Subaru liked rules like that at Roswaal Manor. He believed that the more people you shared meals with, the better. In fact, many new discoveries were often made during meals, and it was also fun. The atmosphere where everyone chatted freely was a far cry from the formalities of your typical nobleman's house, and it was a time in which you could relax a bit. Also, him having questions often lead to events during such meals, but his question this time was a very simple one.

And that was—

"Well, what does Puck do when he isn't with you, Emilia-tan?" Subaru asked while tilting his head in the dining room after they'd finished eating and washed the dishes.

"Huh?" Emilia, who was having her after meal tea was surprised when she heard Subaru's words. There was no sign of the cat spirit in question on her beautiful hair or on her thin shoulders. And that was something to be expected since Puck floated out of the dining room alone a moment ago after letting Emilia know.

Emilia widened her eyes at that question.

"No, you see," Subaru said with a shrug. "It's a known fact that you and Puck have a contractual relationship, and I know that Puck is usually by your side, but…there are times when he moves around freely like this, right? So do you know what he does during that, Emilia-tan?"

"Puck when I'm not around…?"

Emilia looked as if she had never thought about it when Subaru asked. It seemed like her policy was to not interfere in Puck's affairs, for better or worse, and to not impose her will too much in Puck's activities during his free time.

"Well, I think the key to making a pet live long is to not stress it out, but I also think they need some tough love sometimes."

"Ah, Subaru, you are making fun of Puck, aren't you? Puck would definitely be angry if he heard that, so don't say something like that," Emilia chided as she lifted her eyebrows sharply, which was unusual for her, after her contracted spirit was treated like a pet.

“Listen here,” Emilia said after lifting her finger at Subaru. “Puck is a lot more mature than you think. I’m sure that he’s doing something reaaally important when he isn’t with me. Puck is, of course, always working hard for world peace.”

“What’s up with that really vague kinda understanding? It’s like the opinion of a kid who doesn’t know what their parent does but thinks that they are probably doing something great!”

Subaru had no idea what his father did for a living when he was a child, but he had such a vague trust in him. He still didn’t know much about it even though he’d grown up. But now he thought that it was something that equaled world peace since it was a job that was enough to sustain his wife and son.

“In any case, since you don’t know about it, I need to get serious and start investigating. I don’t have to work until the afternoon today, so I might as well go after him.”

“That’s in bad taste… I think it’s better not to do it.”

“You can’t stop something that’s already set in motion. And Emilia-tan, aren’t you a bit curious deep down? I’m not saying that he’s doing something bad, but if he is really working hard for world peace then it’s more of a reason to see what he’s doing.”

“Well, that’s…”

“Let’s go check it out!”

“…Ok.” Emilia, who easily gave in when pressured, got persuaded by Subaru while in a state of bewilderment.

This was how the two of them rushed out of the dining room and how they started following Puck.

3

—Luckily Puck, who had left the dining room before them, was found immediately, and the tailing began. However, it couldn’t be said that the subsequent pursuit of Puck was very fruitful. It wasn't that they had lost him or that he had found out about them following him, the problem was what he was doing.

"Puck is scratching the wall of the mansion with his claws, but why do you think he's doing that?" Subaru asked.

"He's probably checking the mansion's durability," Emilia answered. "Puck is patrolling around checking things like that to make sure that everyone stays safe. He's amazing."

"To me it just seems like he's taking care of his overgrown nails."

"Oh, Subaru, look! Puck started moving really fast! He might have found something."

"He rushed into the restroom with such speed, so isn't it that? The thing called 'Toilet High' where cats get really energetic before and after using the toilet."

"That's not… Oh! He came out just as fast. We are going to lose him!"

"He's flying around the mansion quite energetically. Is something happening in here…?" Subaru wondered.

"I get it!" Emilia exclaimed. "Since we had a witchbeast commotion before, he is checking whether there's an opening in the barrier or not. Or he's secretly putting up a new barrier just in case…"

"To me, it just looks like he is searching for a place to sunbathe, or he's patrolling his territory."

"He went into the kitchen!" Subaru shouted.

"He probably, has something reaaally important…"

"He got a small fish from Rem and came out eating it."

"Snacking! He's going to get fat!"

"Is that what the issue is?

While they were keeping an eye on Puck, he did whatever he wanted to since it was his free time—a bit too free.

I mean, as far as I have observed, his behavior is completely like that of…

"A cat… And it looks like he's a housecat that has completely forgotten its wild instincts."

"I was thinking about it, but I don't think Puck's nails grow, so he doesn't need to file them. He doesn't need to use the restroom either. And he just needs my hair and shoulders to be his territory. See, Puck isn't weird."

"You found something to cling to, and now you're trying like mad to refute everything I said."

Usually, Emilia often lost against Subaru's arguments, however, she couldn't afford to lose when it was about her only family. She kept pushing back, and she was certainly trying to make a point with her words.

I didn't doubt it till now since Puck was really acting like a cat, but Puck is a spirit, and I don't think he needs to do all the things that cats have to do. It's like Emilia said, there might be a reason behind him filing his nails and being in a toilet high.

"But, snacking in the kitchen doesn't really mean anything, right?"

"Ma…Maybe he is saving up his energy for an important task later?"

It seems like Emilia also doesn't think that it was very convincing since her sentence ended with a question. And the idea of him having an important task later also seems fishy. And if Puck curls up and starts sleeping, then even Emilia would have to admit defeat. But—

"—Alright, I guess it's almost time," muttered Puck, who had become full after swallowing the small fish he'd received.

His voice was deep, and his side profile looked tense—the atmosphere had changed.

"Could it be that he really has something to do…? Is it something like fighting other cats to be the boss cat?"

"There's no way Puck would fight stray cats. Puck's territory is inside my body. It's in here."

"You made an unintentional erotic comment, but Puck is on the move now. Let's go after him."

As Puck floated up with a serious look and started moving in a straight line, they began pursuing him. The way he flew, glancing around, clearly showed a sense of tension and caution that he didn't have before. Seeing things like that made Subaru and Emilia tense.

Eventually, Puck arrived in front of a room with his hair standing on end due to his cautious state. Subaru and Emilia looked at each other after realizing whose room it was.

"…That's…my room?"

"Maybe Puck has some business with you, Subaru…"

Subaru and Emilia looked at each other and tilted their heads. From everything they'd observed so far, they had a pretty good idea as to how Puck behaved. But they weren't sure how it connected with him visiting Subaru's room.

"…" Then Puck put his tail on the doorknob without saying a word and slowly opened the door. It was surprising to know that he used his tail to open doors, but it was even more surprising that he had snuck in without saying anything.

Naturally, Subaru's mind recalled the recent witchbeast commotion.

—He recalled the difficult relationship between him and the twins that had flared up during that. At the time, the two of them suspected my origins and were watching me to see if I was a dangerous person, so maybe Puck is cautious like that.

"Subaru…" Emilia softly called Subaru, who had looked down anxiously with listless eyes.

He came back to his senses after hearing her voice and shook his head, forcing a smile. "I'm fine," he said. "Let's go clear things up."

I'm prepared to work hard and clear up the misunderstanding if Puck is suspecting me. I was able to do it with Rem and Ram, so I can do it with Puck too—

"—Hm?"

He was just about to put his hand on the doorknob and step into the room since he was thinking of talking with Puck. He heard a rather loud rustling noise from inside the room.

Hm? It's sounds somewhat familiar, but I wonder what it could be? Subaru tilted his head in wonder. And then it hit him.

And then—

"Hey, you! You good for nothing cat."

"Meow?!"

Puck, who was frolicking on the bed, got startled when Subaru entered the room. Puck looked back with his round eyes widened, and only half of him was visible for some reason—it was because he was playing around in the plastic bag from the convenience store and making rustling sounds.

"I was wondering what was up with that serious look, and then this turns out to be the punchline! You are a cat! Just a cat!"

“Hey, don’t startle me,” Puck replied. “It’s my private time now.”

“If we are going to talk about private things, then this is my private room! What are you doing playing with someone else’s plastic bag? You are totally a cat!” Subaru shouted at the unapologetic Puck, criticizing his suggestive attitude.

Then Subaru looked back at Emilia and pointed his finger at Puck. “Hey, look, Emilia-tan! This is his true form! He’s a cat!”

“No, maybe he’s just trying to do something great using your white bag… I’m sorry, I can’t do this.”

“Emilia-tan gave up on supporting him!”

At the end, it developed into a situation where Emilia gave up on supporting Puck and the ordeal ended noisily.

After everything was said and done, they came to the conclusion that ‘Puck during his free time is free!’

—After that, Emilia started to be seen making Puck report what he had been doing during his free time at the end of the day. Seeing that, Subaru thought that it definitely looked like a pet being disciplined.

The Great Spirit Puck's Nyan Nyan Nyan Sunny Day (Ex 2; Toranoana)

1

"—Lately, I feel like Lia's eyes look cold when she looks at me," Puck said, looking serious with his arms crossed as he floated in front of Subaru's face.

It was in the morning, right after everyone was done with breakfast. Rem was in charge of cleaning up the dining table, and Subaru was on his way to clean the bathhouse in the basement of the mansion as directed by Ram. As usual, he showed his affection towards Emilia and exchanged snarky remarks with Beatrice, but then he was stopped when he came out of the dining room.

"In the past, Lia believed me unconditionally and was fooled by me, but nowadays I feel like she has become less naïve. Subaru, what do you think?"

"First off, I'm starting to get worried about leaving Emilia-tan in your care."

The fact that he doesn't have any malicious intent makes it worse.

Subaru lost interest in taking it seriously and headed for the bathhouse, but Puck didn't seem to care and followed him, flying around the back of his head.

"Hey, hey, take it seriously. I am serious about it, this is a serious matter."

"Alright then, I'll answer you with some seriousness. Since you demonstrated being a really good for nothing cat, she might be pumped up as the owner and wants to discipline you, I guess?"

"Stop that! I'm not in a mood to hear jokes like that. You are quite rude."

Puck puffed his cheeks as if he was offended and started slapping Subaru's face with his tail. But Subaru didn't mean to joke around, and for the most part, it was his honest opinion. It was only the other day that Subaru and Emilia found out what Puck did when he was on his own. His behavior was that of a house cat for the most part, which shocked Emilia, who had believed that Puck was contributing to world peace.

"Until then, Emilia-tan had innocently believed that her parent was doing an admirable job…"

"It's not good to say things like that. There's no such thing as a noble or lowly job. Every job is admirable. If you word it like that, then…"

"There's no such thing as a noble or a lowly job, but in your case, that isn't a job! It's just your natural instincts!" Subaru shouted at Puck, who was being shameless, then took his jacket off in the changing room, rolled up his pants, and entered the bathroom with a mop in hand.

He then proceeded to clean it with a practiced hand.

"But even so… I'm worried about Lia. So many things have changed for her, so maybe she's feeling tired because of that."

"I think your behavior recently has been her greatest source of fatigue."

"My my… It's quite troubling that her greatest source of fatigue is unaware."

The sources of her headache were blaming each other, but things couldn't be judged since Emilia wasn't there.

Puck then clapped his hands as if he'd struck upon a great idea. "Maybe, she is in her rebellious age…? A lot of things would make sense if I think that way…!"

"Does it make sense though?"

"I feel like the skin-to-skin contact between Lia and I has been lacking lately. Lia is busy nowadays, and I've been letting her off the hook since I felt like she should be independent from her parent… This isn't good!"

"It's not she who needs to let go of her attachment to her parent, but you who needs to let go of your attachment to your daughter, isn't it? Before you could even do that, you were losing your sanity and about to turn into a cat. Not a stray, either, but a house cat," Subaru called out after he finished mopping, but Puck didn't have any intention of listening to his opinion.

Subaru shook his head at the pondering spirit and pointed at the water inside the bathtub. "Hey, Puck. Use that water to wash the floor in exchange for the consultation fee. It'll be much faster than using the hand tub. You can do that much, right?"

"Hmmmm?"

Even though he was inattentive, Puck extended his hand towards the bathtub at Subaru's request and concentrated his mana. And then—as expected of his large mana reserves—the water in the bathtub rose and started floating around the tub.

"Woah! Amazing! That's sooo cool, man!"

It wasn't quite jelly-like, but the surface of the water rippled as it floated around. And as long as it slowly descended to the floor, Subaru's request would be fulfilled. But…

"—Yeah, I'm sure of it. The thing Lia and I are lacking is parent-child communication!"

"Waiiiii—?!"

As soon as Puck had come to some sort of conclusion to his thoughts, he stopped controlling the solidified water.

Immediately, the de-solidified water came crashing down, turning into an overwhelming wave. The rough waves smashed into Subaru at the waist, flipping him upside down and taking him into its murky flow.

“Bah! Hey! It isn’t on the same level as boxers getting wet ya know?!” Subaru shouted while shaking his head after popping his head out from the tub.

However, as the culprit had already disappeared from the bathtub, his cries echoed in vain.

And while Subaru was left soaking wet alone—

“You are making a lot of noise, Barusu. Don’t play around just because no one is looking…”

“Ah.”

Ram had opened the door to the changing room and peeked inside. She looked at Subaru, who was submerged in the bathtub and all wet, squinted at him, and let out a deep sigh. “Do you want to drink the used water so badly that you’d resort to such cheap tricks? Disgusting.”

“I’m not that advanced!!”

In the first place, it’s the warm water that both Roswaal and I have soaked in, and it gets changed every time, anyway.

—I’ve only thought about it once or twice.

2

After the incident in the bathroom, Subaru changed his clothes even after taking Ram’s mild eyes of disdain. Since he’d gotten his servant attire dirty, he was wearing his tracksuit now.

He touched his partially dry hair and walked down the corridor thinking of what to do with Puck. “That piece of shit ran away after doing all that to me. I won’t let him get away with it…” He reached the stairs with that in his heart.

“Oh?”

Something suddenly fell on the stair landing from the floor above. A small ball had hit the wall and rolled towards Subaru’s feet. It was palm-sized and probably something like a tennis ball. He picked it up and found that it felt and weighed like a tennis ball, too.

“Why is there a…tennis ball here?”

“Oh, Subaru.”

Emilia had showed herself from the floor above while he was tilting his head with the tennis ball in his hand.

She looked at the ball in Subaru’s hand and scrunched up her pretty eyebrows in an apologetic way. “I’m sorry. I didn’t mean to startle you.”

“I wasn’t startled, but is this yours, Emilia-tan?”

“No, it’s more like it’s Puck’s but…no, never mind, it’s fine. Can you return that to Puck? Since I’m busy now.” After saying that quickly, she tapped on Subaru’s shoulder and went further downstairs.

“That’s fine by me but…oh well.”

Subaru felt like something unusual was going on since she wasn’t usually that bossy, but someone else came towards him there.

“Subaruuu.”

“What’s up with that pathetic face and voice? Emilia-tan said that she’s busy.”

Puck dizzyingly and weakly swayed down to Subaru. Subaru caught his body with his left hand and Puck started at the ball in his hand with a pathetic face.

“Aah, so you had it… Unfortunately, the communication strategy has failed. I took your advice, but it didn’t work.”

“Since when did this become my idea? But what did you do? I would hope not, but was it something like you getting the ball that Emilia-tan throws?”

If that’s the case, then it is undoubtedly communication between a pet and its owner. And that's not the kind of relationship owners have with a cat, but with a dog.

Puck stretched his ears angrily at that. "It's not thattt. It's a game of catch of course, when it comes to parent-child interaction. I wanted to get closer to her by asking questions like 'What does Lia want to be in the future?'"

"You wouldn't get it, but what, are you like from the Showa period?! You already know what Emilia-tan wants to become! She wants to be the ruler of this country!"

"No, no, what Lia really wants to become is…oh wait, it isn't the right time to say it."

"That's something deep! No, I don't need to know something like that!"

Subaru started to doubt if Puck really wanted to repair their relationship as they continued to talk like that. But it seemed like Puck was taking a real toll from his atrophied ears and tail.

"Well, if the relationship between you and Emilia stays cracked then you guys might not be able to coordinate well in a critical moment. That would be troublesome for you."

"Yeah…so I have thought of my next plan."

"Tell me."

"After giving it some thought, it's possible that Lia has gotten used to my charm. So, I thought of going back to the basics and doing it more unscrupulously."

"Say what?"

"Weren't you the one who asked for it?"

"I said that because I was expecting you to say something decent!"

Having come to an odd conclusion, Puck flew off softly from Subaru's hand. Subaru followed Puck without a second thought as he crossed through the stair landing and went towards the corridor lined with guest rooms. Puck picked one of the guest rooms and energetically turned back at Subaru in front of the door.

“I’m going to train here from now on to overcome my past self. It’s futile to try to stop me.”

“I won’t stop you, and I won’t peek, either. All of our talk up until now was meaningless.”

“—I’ll go, in order to regain our family bond and—to be a family once again.”

“The only thing super cool about it is your dialogue.”

Puck went into the guest room right in front of him with a melancholic air. After staring at the door, Subaru didn’t peek, but put his ear next to the door to listen to what was happening inside.

“—Meow! Meow! Meaaa.”

“…” Hearing the sounds of training, Subaru sighed deeply, then moved away from the door to complete his remaining chores. He dragged his unusually tired body around even though it was only midmorning.

3

“Subaru, isn’t it almost time for a break? Would you like some tea?” Emilia asked after entering the garden to reward Subaru for his hard work as he was putting away the tools after finishing the last chore of the morning, which was tending to the garden.

“Oh, it makes me really happy that it’s an invitation from you, Emilia-tan. Have my daily efforts finally paid off?”

“—? I don’t really get it, but if you are working hard, then I hope they paid off.”

“That answer of yours tells me I’m not putting in enough effort. Thank you,” Subaru said, giving Emilia, who didn’t get it, a wry smile, then washed his hands and joined her.

“Let’s do it in my room,” Emilia said, inviting Subaru.

While they were walking towards her room, Emilia suddenly started talking in a hushed voice. “Hey. Is Puck bothering you?”

“He is bothering me a lot, but it isn’t something you need to worry about. It’s a man’s destiny to get into trouble with his father-in-law… That being sad, he was feeling down.”

“I thought so. Maybe it’s because I’m being harsh with Puck.”

“Oh, so Puck wasn’t imagining it.”

Seeing that Emilia looked serious, Subaru scratched his head.

It seems like Puck wasn’t wrong about Emilia acting like that on purpose.

“Can I ask you why?”

“It’s…well, maybe I am sulking a bit. I thought Puck would be more mature, but I really lost my energy due to that incident the other day.”

“Oh, just like I thought…”

The cause and the things that followed being the same as Subaru had speculated, he put his hand on his forehead, but then immediately laughed at the worried-looking Emilia.

“It isn’t a big deal,” he said. “I can understand your feelings, Emilia-tan, but he needs to learn a lesson sometimes. He wouldn’t bat an eye if anyone else did that to him, so knocking him down a peg like that will do him some good, too.”

“Is, that…so. Yeah, you are right. Puck needs to reflect on things a bit.”

“That’s the spirit! And I really think that there’s something wrong with what he did…”

Subaru had no other option but to be considerate to Emilia.

And Puck brought this situation upon himself for the most part, so he needs to reflect upon it and feel down.

It seemed like Subaru's words had eased Emilia's mind since she didn't look anxious anymore. And then they reached her room.

Let's go in and have some tea—

"Well then, Subaru. I have prepared tea for…"

"—Meowwww."

Emilia's feet stopped the moment she stepped into the room. Her gaze was directed to the front, at the center of the room, from where she heard a sweet, flirtatious cry. Subaru frowned at that and looked inside the room over Emilia's shoulder. And…

"Meo, meo, meow. Meeoowww…"

There was a cat dancing in a cute, calculated manner, twisting his long tail, his round eyes glistening. The sight of his fluffy fur, quivering ears, and the sad purr was a sweet trap that stimulated the primitive human desire to protect something. —It was the ultimate calculated charm, perfected by a house cat.

"Puck…"

"Meow, meow, mew, mew…"

Emilia's voice trembled after seeing Puck like that. Recalling her conclusion from before, it was clear how she would react to the sight of Puck, who had lost his wild instincts. But—

"Oh no, Puck, you are so cute…! What happened to you? Cute…!" Completely losing against Puck's calculated charms, Emilia picked him up, blushing.

She then proceeded to rub her cheeks against his. It seemed like her conclusion and resolute decision had completely faded away.

"Meow…make up," Puck requested in a sweet voice.

“Make up? Yes, sure, sure,” Emilia said, easily giving in. “Puck, you are so cute. I am sorry for being stubborn.”

Puck thrust out his palm energetically at Subaru, who was looking at them with a blank face.

He’s acting like ‘It all went well thanks to you’, but that’s a false accusation. Anyway, leaving all of that aside… “The reason why a house cat gets too cocky is because there’s a problem with the owner’s way of disciplining it…” Subaru muttered in a resigned voice as he witnessed Puck and Emilia playing with each other.

They probably won’t stop playing until the tea gets cold, he thought to himself.

—And in fact, their adorable merrymaking didn’t end until lunch was called.

The Great Spirit Puck's Nyan Nyan Tricks (Volume 8; Toranoana)

1

An air of strained tension drifted on and on inside the dragon carriage.

In the Kingdom of Lugunica, in the royal capital Lugunica, was found the royal castle Lugunica. In front of it, many dragon carriages headed to the castle were currently waiting in an orderly line before the castle gate.

Normally, it would be rare to have this many people streaming into the castle, but today was a special day. Due to that, many people were making their way to the castle, security had been strengthened, and everyone was being checked carefully as they entered.

Inside the dragon carriage as it continued to inch its way forward, one could hear the sound of the frame swaying, rocked by the wind. A ground dragon's Blessing of Wind Evasion protected against wind and sound that would interfere with travel, but when a ground dragon stopped moving its feet, the blessing's effect was lost. This vast traffic jam was enough of a slowdown to cut off the blessing.

"It looks like we can't get into the castle any time soon."

Gazing at the state of things outside the window, a beautiful silver-haired girl murmured that to herself. Amethyst eyes drenched in sorrow, the girl who spoke with a silver bell voice was named Emilia.

"There shouldn't be any need to worry about being late. But your cheeks are getting all stiff, Lia. If you don't relax a little, your cute face will go to waste, won't it?"

Picking up on what Emilia had whispered, a tiny shadow responded to her with a carefree, joking voice.

With a grey fur coat, a cat small enough to easily sit on the girl's narrow shoulder – he looked like nothing so much as a kitten, but was nevertheless a being that had the intelligence to comprehend human speech, a Great Spirit.

"It's fine. There isn't a girl anywhere that can beat Lia in cuteness. I can guarantee that for you."

"This isn't a day to be talking about who is cute and who isn't. I know you're doing your best to cheer me up, Puck, but that's rea~lly missing the point."

"Oh, is that so? The other candidates are all girls, too, so I was sure that was it."

"…Oh, you really are hopeless."

Emilia had to cover up a laugh as the spirit, Puck, played the fool for her on her shoulder. Seeing the tension on the side of her face disperse, if only a little, Puck nodded in satisfaction. Then…

"A~s expected of the Great Spirit, handling Emilia-sama is something you have a firm grasp of, i~sn't it."

Their exchange was complimented by an individual sitting across from them, dressed as a clown – Roswaal. He crossed his long legs elegantly, and continued while sending his gaze towards the scenery outside the window.

"Having said that, I can't entirely disagree with what the Great Spirit has surmised. This is a ceremony to select who will next sit on the throne, but currently, the only ones chosen by the dragon gem fitted to the emblem have been women… Indeed, the writings on the dragon tablet mention five priestesses, after all. It's only natural to think of that as the dragon's preference, the~n."

"In truth, if you think of it as continuing the bloodline, it's probably convenient for all the candidates to be girls, but… it's favoring one side a little too much. The candidates all have cute faces, too."

After responding to Roswaal's ironic smile, Puck turned back to Emilia with an 'Oh'.

"But there's no need to worry, no one can hold a candle to you, Lia, no matter who it is. Have confidence in yourself."

"I'm not really sure what kind of confidence you're talking about, but… Mhmm, alright. But…"

Cutting her words off there for a moment, Emilia tilted her head. Placing a finger on her lips, she continued.

"What do you mean when you say 'thinking about continuing the bloodline'? Why would girls be better?"

"…?"

Emilia's eyes were wide, and her expression said she didn't get it. Roswaal narrowed his eyes at that reaction, and then stared at Puck, sitting on her shoulder.

"Great Spirit, isn't that a little too overprotective, h~mm?"

"She can't be interested in what she doesn't know. This, indeed, is the very best of defensive measures for my daughter. That's my thinking, and that's what I've put into practice."

"Allow me to correct myself. That's not overprotective, but rather fairly controlling, wouldn't you sa~y?"

Puck looked somewhat hurt as he shrugged at what Roswaal pointed out. However, Emilia didn't quite grasp the meaning of what they were talking about. It did seem certain that they were talking about her, however.

However, they weren't given the time to go any deeper into the matter.

"Oho, it seems we've started moving. The front gate's come into view. Please prepare to enter the castle soon.”

“…Yes, I see. I’m all set.”

“Ready your heart as well, of course.”

Just as she nodded in response to Roswaal’s repeated words, the dragon carriage arrived at the castle gate.

When the doors of the various carriages were opened, Roswaal was the first to descend from the carriage. Following after his tall body, Emilia, too, moved to the outside. With her hair blowing in the warm breeze, she faced forward.

“…”

All at once, she could feel the tension in her surroundings on her skin, and Emilia drew her lips together sharply.

The clear recognition directed at her appearance, her silver hair and amethyst eyes. Even though she’d been preparing for it, it clawed at Emilia’s heart despite her preparation. However…

Burrowed into her hair, she had family treating her kindly, close enough that she could feel his breath.

As her heart was rescued by that presence, Emilia looked up at Castle Lugunica, towering before her eyes.

On this day, at Castle Lugunica, the talks regarding the ceremony to select who would next take the throne would be held.

2

After the identity check at the castle gate was finished, Emilia was shown into the VIP waiting room.

Inside the warmly colored, well-ordered room, expensive furnishings and paintings were beautifully arranged.

One of the paintings was of the three heroes spoken of in stories handed down in the kingdom – “God Dragon” “Master Swordsman” “Sage”, and stone statuary using the “God Dragon” as a motif could be seen at various locations around the castle.

Not feeling like he could look on it favorably, Puck decided that it was in rather poor taste.

“If they’re going to be decorating with this sort of thing, they’d be better off just hanging pictures of fruit. Why, I might even draw one or two for them, myself.”

“O~h, this is unexpected. To think that the Great Spirit makes a hobby of dabbling in art.”

“Well, I’ve never painted, but maybe I can paint. See, I’m just a bundle of possibilities. The philosophy of not letting one’s whims be bound by rules, doesn’t that sound like an artist?”

“I feel like that sort of trait is closer to a cat than an a~rtist.”

Saying that entirely without malice, a smile of amusement appeared on Roswaal’s face.

In his attitude’s words and hidden meanings, he was making no effort to treat Puck with the respect due to a Great Spirit.

In truth, Puck himself didn’t care for thoughtless respect or worship. Even calling him a Great Spirit was just something the people around him had begun doing by themselves. He wasn’t proud of it; it meant nothing to him.

“Well then. You’ve gone to the trouble of calling me here and leaving Lia alone in the waiting room. Is it alright for me to think that you’ve called me to talk about something important?”

“Naturally, an important task is waiting for Emilia-sama. She needs time to unify the spirits… if I were to say that, you wouldn’t believe me, then? In truth, it’s something di~fferent.”

Shaking his head with a clownish gesture, Roswaal folded his short arms and looked up at Puck.

Just as was said, there was no sign of Emilia in the room the two were meeting in. After they'd been shown to the waiting room, Emilia was left there by herself, and Puck was called by Roswaal to another room.

Leaving Emilia behind when she was uneasy was a concern, but Roswaal didn't seem like the sort that would take meaningless action at a time like this. Reluctantly, he had responded to the summons.

"Of course, if you're playing some kind of prank, I'll leave right away. I enjoy a good prank, too, but right now, when Lia is shaking like a kitten, I'm worried for her like a father cat."

"You truly do care for Emilia-sama, Great Spirit. I assure you I understand your worries fo~r her. For Emilia-sama, this may become her great moment in the spotlight… or an embarrassing debut."

"…I'm still not very happy with the idea of having that girl standing up in front of people. Lia says she'll do it no matter what, so I'm just doing what I can to help out."

It was easy to imagine the harsh situation Emilia would be placed in, several hours from now. For that alone, Puck was emotionally opposed to not only the events of today, but participating in the Royal Selection from the start.

There really was no reason for her to be unjustly injured, or to go to the trouble of making herself a target.

He kept Emilia distant from everything that would hurt her. That was Puck's reason for existing.

"However, Emilia-sama has already chosen her path. Well then, our duty is to clear and pave the road that she will walk, as well as we are able, wouldn't you say?"

"…If you'd quit beating around the bush, we could get this over with."

"We~ll then, I'll be brief. A few hours from now, Emilia-sama will stand on the stage of the Royal Selection. At that time, it is certain that those who do not think kindly of her origin will shower her with heartless condemnation. Their distrust is deeply rooted, and it's plain to see that they are vulgar enough to jump at the chance to abuse someone while maintaining appearances."

Roswaal fluidly explained his rather cruel conjecture to Puck.

Puck listened in silence; by and large, he was thinking the same thing. It wasn't hard to imagine after the looks that were directed at Emilia when she arrived by the other who had business at the castle.

"When the Royal Selection begins, the candidates will be given a chance to express their own thoughts. Something you might call a public declaration of belie~fs."

"A public declaration of beliefs… something about it seems quite overblown."

"It's a big affair for the kingdom, after all, so it's only natural for it to be overblown and exaggerated. Also, I've informed Emilia-sama about the declaration. However,"

Cutting off his words there, Roswaal closed one eye and pierced Puck with an amber gaze. With a slight pause in his speech, Roswaal's head wobbled as he shook it.

"The time of public declarations is likely to be an excellent opportunity for those who loathe Emilia-sama's origin. I even have some idea of who may speak up fi~rst."

"Hmm, and what then? Are you going to reprimand the one you're thinking of before the Royal Selection starts?"

"Tha~t's an option, too, but they have a strong belief in never giving in to the threat of violence. We're somewhat well-acquainted with each other, so there's no doubt they'd brush me off."

"Well then, what do you want to do? I don't enjoy saying it, but I'm not that much use outside of situations that call for brute force. Unless they're an unparalleled cat lover."

At that point, Puck continued “Or perhaps,” as he washed his face.

“Is that person in fact an unparalleled cat lover? You intend to subvert them, not with feminine wiles, but with feline wiles?”

“I’m acquainted with them, but I couldn’t say with any confidence that they love cats that much. So~, let’s try something else. Won’t you join me in putting on a little play?”

“A play?”

The intriguing word ‘play’ suddenly jumped out at him. Roswaal had referred to what lay in Emilia’s immediate future as a stage. The word ‘play’ was certainly not unrelated.

“When you say ‘play’, what do you plan to make a play of, and how?”

“As I was saying earlier, the candidates’ declaration of beliefs – It’s easy to imagine things getting out of hand when they attempt it. The reason for that is not restricted to Emilia-sama; it’s a gathering of candidates with truly unique, original ways of thinking.”

“So they’re not just pretty faces, then. Well, I suppose that makes sense, too.”

“It’s just that, even in that setting, Emilia-sama’s origin makes her an easy target. Both the unchangeable circumstances of her birth, and the kingdom’s deeply-rooted rejection of half-devils are pasts that are difficult to change, after all.”

“…That’s true. I see your reasoning.”

“Hence, what we need to change isn’t the perception of half-devils. Rather, it’s the perception of Emilia-sama herself.”

Roswaal snapped his fingers, and set the end of one of them aglow.

The magical process of gathering mana from the surrounding air, and changing it into vividly-colored light, looked simple but required an extremely high level of concentration. This was proof that Roswaal was a rarity amongst magic users.

“The reason I’m allowed to act as I do is simple. Certainly, there’s the accomplishments of all the Mathers that came before me, but… the greatest factor is that I have the ability to overwhelm others.”

“You mean you want Lia to show she can, as well? No, that’s not it. You want me to become that for Lia, then.”

Having taken in what Roswaal was saying, Puck curled his long tail around himself and thought about it. The idea certainly did have some merit. But it was also a scheme that carried risks.

“But, don’t you think that this could invite even more opposition from the others? In the eyes of those that fear Lia because she’s a half-elf, wouldn’t it make them even more afraid if Lia is strong?”

“Certainly, that might happen. Ho~wever, we know Emilia-sama’s character. Even if Emilia-sama is exposed to baseless condemnation, she would never do something like using the Great Spirit’s power to unleash her anger. All that we need to do is convey that to those who will be in attendance today, by means of this gathering and our play.”

Saying that, Roswaal noted “In order for that to happen,” as he continued.

“Great Spirit, your power will be necessary. “The Beast of the End” of the Elior Forest. When Emilia-sama has you you by her side, you who laid low the “Mediator”, one of the four great ones, and yet she shows that she will not resort to using that power, then to them, she will surely change from being a “half-devil” to the candidate named “Emilia”.

“…You’re quite good with words. I understand a little of what Lia must have felt when she was taken out of the woods.”

His tone held neither desperation nor earnestness. Yet despite that, Roswaal’s words had a power to them.

His words had the power to make one feel that they held the best possible method of dealing with the situation that awaited them. They not only showed consideration for the desires of others, but bestowed what they craved without hesitation.

Precisely because of that, though, it was easy to think of them as the honeyed words of a swindler or something like that.

“Out in front of the castle, you went and called me controlling, but I think maybe you’re doing quite a bit of that, too.”

“I’m aware of it, yes. So~, what is your reply? Of course, if you turn me down, Great Spirit, I’ll simply move ahead with a different pla~n.”

“The right to choose is entirely in my hands. …It’s unfair of you to be trying to make me feel that.”

He thought deeply as he considered taking the devil’s, or rather Roswaal’s, proposal. In the back of his mind was the image of Emilia sitting nervously in the waiting room. Lately, it seemed that his mental image of his dear daughter was always nervous.

If it reduced the burden on her, even if only by a little, then he was of a mind to put on an act or do whatever else it took.

“…Fine. I’ll accept your proposal. I take it I can’t tell Lia about the arrangement?”

“The mere idea of having Emilia-sama try to put on an act is u~nthinkable.”

“You’re not saying that to be polite, you mean exactly what you said. Well, I don’t think Lia is good at keeping a straight face, either, so I agree with you.”

He felt proud of how he’d raised Emilia to be open, honest, and straightforward, but she was fatally unsuited to intrigue.

Despite that, if the scene was properly prepared, he was sure she would perform up to his expectations.

“So about the act, then, what are you going to do, and how? You’re not going to wreck the castle, are you?”

“The best outcome would be to give everyone a strong impression of the Great Spirit’s presence, in a way that doesn’t damage the castle. …Fortunately, he should create an opportunity for us to do tha~t.”

“He who?”

“Why, Subaru-kun, of cou~rse.”

When an unexpected name was suddenly brought up, Puck widened his eyes at Roswaal.

It was the boy that, outside of the castle, Emilia had distanced herself from so he wouldn’t get dragged into today’s events. Emilia had made him promise to wait, and Subaru was supposed to have nodded in agreement to that, but…

“You gave him some sort of instruction that would make him break his promise to Lia? I can’t say I’m pleased to hear that.”

“Certainly not. I’m well aware how important promises and contracts are to spirit arts users. Even then, there’s no way to stop him. …That’s a~ll I meant to say.”

Immediately, Roswaal to Puck bowed with a dramatic flourish, and Puck sighed at him. At the same time, an image passed through the back of Puck’s mind of Emilia, and the boy who it seemed may be running to her side.

Would Subaru end up running to the castle then, just as Roswaal hoped? Or was he waiting quietly at the inn for Emilia, just as he’d promised her?

Either way, the thing that Puck prayed for would not change. The only thing.

…May there be nothing but joy in his dear daughter’s future.

Wishing that, Puck continued to lend an ear to Roswaal’s plotting.

Emilia and Ram's Bumpy Master-Servant Relationship (Short Story Collection 2; Melon Books)

"Ugeh…"

The moment the girl entered the guest room without even knocking, she ended up raising her voice at the sight that awaited her within.

The girl possessed sweet, lovely features. Sporting short, uniform hair, her almond eyes shone a light crimson. But contrary to her lovely appearance, the girl seemed to have a sharp, intellectual aura about her.

But even that aura dissipated as she grimaced at the unpleasant sight before her.

"—That voice, is that you, Ram? Sorry to surprise you."

The next voice did not come from the girl—From Ram, it came from a person who was already in the room beforehand.

This voice was as clear as a silver bell, and merely hearing it would shake the listener's heart for better or for worse. But this time around, the voice sounded strangely confined as it reverberated through the room. This was only natural.

The reason being that the owner of the voice was in this room with a bucket completely covering their head.

"…What is this, Emilia-sama. To cover your head with a bucket in a place like this."

"Fufufu, can you not tell just by looking?"

"I can only imagine that this is Barusu's fault."

"You're kind of acting like this is reeeally weird? Also, Subaru does have something to do with this whole bucket thing, but I'm keeping this secret from him. Please keep quiet about this."

"Barusu has something to do with this, but it's a secret from him…? That's rather complicated, Emilia-sama."

With the bucket still on her head, Emilia was sitting in a chair in the middle of the guest room. Ram's conversation with her while unable to even see her face failed to touch on the heart of the matter, and was thus going nowhere.

"Hmm, Alright, I'll explain. Off you go."

Perhaps having noticed Ram's frustration, Emilia slowly took her bucket off.

As she did so, her long, glistening silver hair spilled out of the bucket. This hair which was alluring as moonlight itself flowed down her back as she blinked and set her amethyst eyes on Ram.

All the while, she held the bucket to her chest as if it was precious to her. Ram knit her brows.

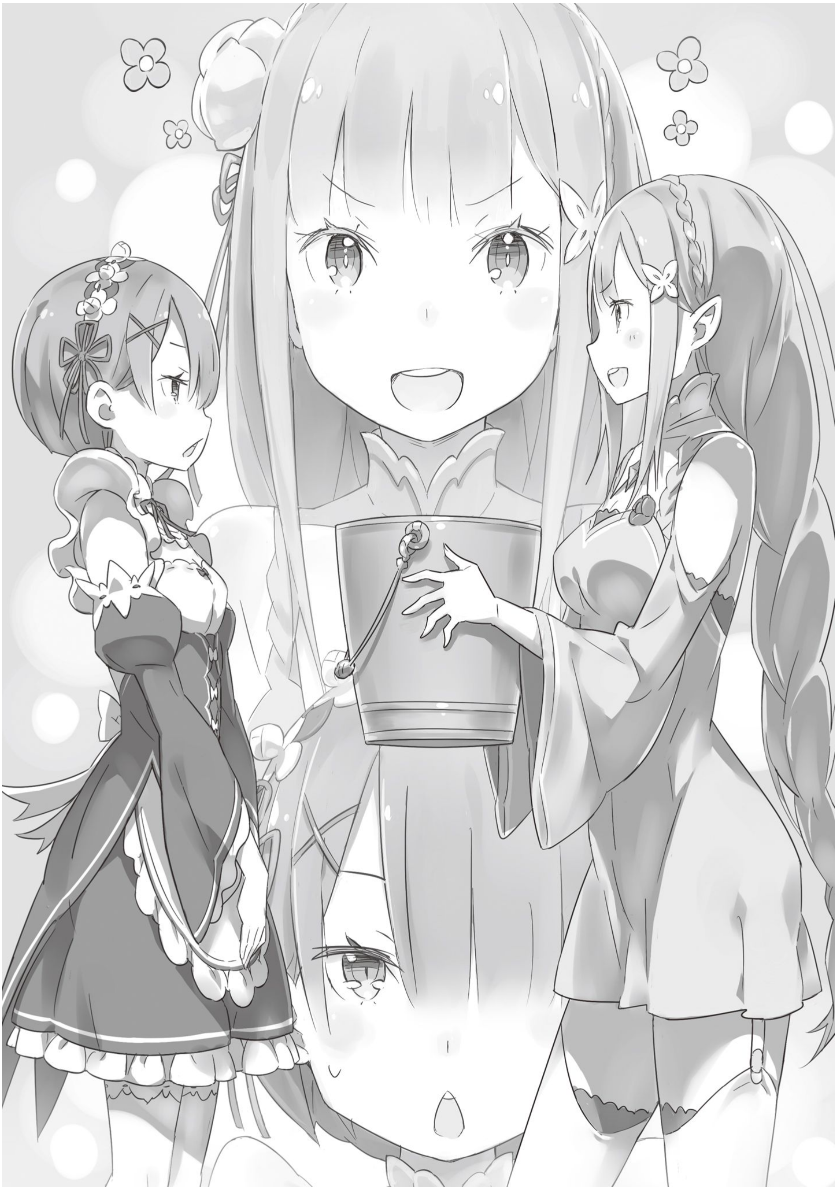
"As far as Ram remembers, you were not afflicted with a perverse obsession with buckets."

"Yeah, it's not like I'm particularly crazy about buckets either. But this bucket right here is my sensei, so that's why things ended up like this."

"…"

She was awaiting a normal response, so this answer that made her head hurt all the more caused Ram to narrow her eyes. In response to this reaction, Emilia hurriedly waved her hands,

"Ah, no, that's not it! Umm, I'd better explain from the start. Do you remember what happened this afternoon? Not that I really want you to…"



"Are you referring to that singing that sounded like a bird's death throes?"

"Th-That's… What I'm talking about, yeah, right…"

When Ram bluntly got right to the point, Emilia hung her head with a sad smile.

As Ram cast a sidelong glance at Emilia's disheartened state, the events of several hours ago replayed in her mind. This was during their short break after they had finished the first stage of work in the mansion, and everyone had some free time to do as they pleased.

Ram was walking around the mansion looking for her much beloved little sister when she heard it, a completely bizarre voice entered her ears when she passed by the dining room. Suspecting that this voice that sounded very much like a bird being strangled to death was yet another one of her colleague Subaru's pranks, Ram barged into the room, but—

"But what I actually found within that room was your unfortunate figure sincerely attempting to sing."

"Don't call it unfortunate! Although I will admit that that was kind of horrible."

"Kind of."

"Reeeeally horrible! Are you happy now? You're so mean, Ram! Beh—!"

Tormented by a strange sense of stubbornness, Emilia's attitude turned completely sullen. However, Ram tilted her head, not feeling the sense of disappointment she had expected from this response.

Ram had assumed that Emilia who knew of her tone deafness was someone who was easily influenced.

"Despite this, you are not discouraged. Does this mean you've suddenly become defiant in this short time?”

“I don’t know what kind of impression you have of me, but I haven’t become defiant or discouraged or anything! Nor do I even have time for that sort of thing, I’m burning up!”

“Heeh, is that right.”

“Yes, that’s right. I’m burning up. I’m seeeeeriously on fire.”

In response to Ram’s indifferent reply, Emilia’s eyes sparkled as she repeated herself any number of times. Her expression was very clearly saying, ‘Ask me what I’m so excited about, ask me, ask me’, causing Ram to sigh.

“Emilia-sama, it truly does seem to me that Barusu has had a hand in this.”

“I don’t think that’s the case, though…”

“…Well then, for what reason exactly are you burning up?”

“Ah, you want to know? Fufu, and with that I shall return to the tale of the bucket. This must be quite the shock, isn’t that right?”

“I suppose so, it would be absurd if the bucket had no relation to this.”

As Emilia showed off the bucket she was holding, Ram momentarily felt relieved that they were finally returning to the topic at hand. Emilia’s fingers gently stroked the bucket’s surface as she continued,

“Subaru told me about this. That there are some ways to correct t-tone… Deafness.”

“Please continue without shame.”

“And then, he said the first step was to put a bucket over my head to confirm my tone deafness. It thought that was another one of his pranks at first, but that wasn’t the case at all. Subaru was seriously thinking about how to help me, so I figured I should do my best as well.”

Her enthusiasm was splendid, but the connection between her tone deafness and this bucket remained unclear. Although reflecting on their conversation thus far, Ram could hazard a guess as to what was going on here.

“You wanna know what the connection is between tone deafness and buckets?”

“Yes, absolutely. When you have a bucket over your head, the sound of your voice reverberating within would allow you to comprehend the extent of your tone deafness. If there exists some other explanation, please do elaborate.”

“…Ram, could it be that you actually knew what buckets could do all along?”

“Well, Ram has been using buckets for quite some time after all.”

The contents of their conversation were utterly meaningless and thus her responses became increasingly perfunctory as well.

As Ram boldly boasted in her formal manner, Emilia’s attitude seemed to be one of comprehension, “I see.” This straightforward reaction made Ram feel just a little uneasy.

—From Ram’s perspective, her relationship with Emilia posed some unusual difficulties.

It went without saying that to Ram, her one and only master for life was none other than Roswaal. Her body, mind, and soul, everything she had—Barring her love for her little sister, it would be no exaggeration to say she devoted all of herself to him.

And Emilia was absolutely indispensable to Roswaal’s plans. Consequently, Roswaal welcomed her into his mansion and treated her as someone even higher than himself.

Of course, Roswaal had ordered Ram and Rem to follow his example, but—

“…She’s completely unreliable.”

That was the sort of impression Ram had of Emilia.

When she accompanied her to the capital, she separated from Ram and ended up having the insignia that qualified her as a royal selection candidate stolen from her. Such incidents caused Ram's wariness to steadily build up over the four months they'd known each other.

At the very least, Emilia was not someone Ram felt like she could count on just like that. She was also completely lacking in refinement, there was a limit to how flawed she could be as a person.

"So you have decided to practice on your own in order to correct your tone deafness, Emilia-sama? And moreover, at this hour."

"Umm, That's how… It is. I mean, if I were to sing in my room it would probably be an inconvenience to everyone else. There's no one around this part of the building, so I thought it would be fine to sing here."

"Meaning you did not expect Ram to come looking around here. Ram does not do this very frequently, however."

Showing consideration in her own way, Emilia had decided to move elsewhere and Ram had ended up happening upon her, that appeared to be the gist of it. Perhaps one could call this a false alarm. All the more so now that she had discovered that Emilia was merely practicing to correct her tone deafness.

"Although I do not think this is something one ought to go as far as to cut into their sleeping hours for."

"Even I can't say anything in response to that. But I ended up bothering Subaru and the others a whoooole lot today, so… I want to do this properly."

"…"

"The truth is that the reason everyone went along with my singing practice was for my sake, isn't that right. Not to correct my tone deafness, but to, umm… How do I put this?"

“To relax, is it?”

“Right, to relax. It was reeeeally fun, but in all that fun the tension ended up leaving me, so I wonder if that was how it was.”

Emilia donned a faint smile as she spoke, Ram who was an outsider could not give her an accurate answer.

However, she could make a guess.

The reason Roswaal let Emilia have some time to enjoy herself even though she should have been studying every single day in preparation for the royal selection—Everyone in the mansion knew that Emilia had been pushing herself too hard these past several days, and that willpower of hers was going nowhere.

Simply put, Subaru and Roswaal were working together in secret in order to change Emilia’s mood.

“Even though he is Barusu, to think he had fun conspiring with Roswaal-sama, what a crafty little…”

“Ram? Your eyes kind of look super fierce right about now, are you okay?”

“Yes, I am fine. I merely lost my cool for a moment. Well then…”

Having noticed the consideration of those around her, Emilia whose mood should have changed was now staying up late to practice singing. This was completely backwards, or rather, Ram got the feeling that their original objective was a failure.

As Ram thought such things, Emilia placed a finger on her lip and smiled in response.

“It’s alright. Everyone came together to teach me how to relax properly. Now, while I’ll be sure to remember that, I also want to be able to sing.”

“Although it seems to me that having you sing was secondary to them.”

“I know that. But I want both. Is it wrong to say that?”

As Emilia tilted her head, her attitude displayed the simple desire to overcome her shortcomings, and Ram assented having understood this. Emilia really was a little different after all.

“Do you not think you have become greedier than you used to be, Emilia-sama?”

“Don’t you know, Ram? That I’m actually trying to become the ruler of this country.”

Compared to the scale of this goal of hers, most other things were hardly even worth mentioning. This response of hers caused Ram to smile.

This was not a wry smile nor was it one of ridicule, it was a rare smile from the bottom of her heart.

“Ah, you’re smiling. Did I say something funny?”

“I wonder? It’s just, Ram’s opinion of you has changed ever so slightly.”

“Really? That makes me pretty happy then.”

Those words meant that Ram was looking down on her before, but Emilia decided to ignore that part and accepted it wholeheartedly.

Honest and easily deceived, one might think she would be easy to manipulate as a puppet. But due to her flaws, she could also do things that were completely unexpected. This girl’s nature was truly bothersome.

However—

“But to earnestly give it your all despite your flaws… I cannot say I dislike it.”

That nature was something Ram always saw in her darling other half.

No matter how different they were from her beloved little sister, Ram could not hate anyone who strived to overcome their shortcomings. Because that was a feeling Ram could not understand.

"Did you say something just now?"

Emilia looked puzzled, she could not quite catch Ram's murmur which was as quiet as a whisper. Meeting her gaze, Ram shrugged slightly.

"Yes, I did say something. I was wondering if your rigorous training has produced any results, Emilia-sama."

"Mm, I can't overlook what you just said. Very well. You came at exactly the right time, so listen closely. The truth is I improved quite a bit in the afternoon alone. But I've advanced even further beyond that now!"

"Well then, please give it your all."

Extending her hand towards Emilia who was full of vigor, Ram sat down on the guest room's unused bed. This ruffled the sheets slightly, but it was Subaru who would have to fix them tomorrow. No problem.

"La, la, lalala—"

Receiving Ram's signal and her gaze, Emilia looked just a little tense as she started singing. Her voice was slightly too shrill when she started, but it settled down soon enough. She was actually singing.

Considering she started with a sound that could be described as a bird's death throes, her current advancement could be considered a historic achievement.

"…"

She started burning up as she sang and swayed her shoulders as she became increasingly engrossed in her singing. Even Ram who was listening intently ended up closing her eyes and devoting herself to the song before she knew it.

‘The Sword Demon’s Love Song’ was an extremely popular love song passed down in the kingdom for generations. Liliana, a traveling minstrel who had once stopped by the mansion, had performed it so well that even Ram was secretly taken in. Of course, Emilia’s singing was still lacking a number of ways compared to hers. She still made mistakes that stood out. But it wasn’t bad.

“…”

When the song approached its end, it was as if the scenes the lyrics described were manifesting in her closed eyes. Realizing just how deeply absorbed she was in this song, Ram smiled wryly.

And with that smile still on her face, the song came to a close, and Emilia turned to look at Ram.

“That is all. Your impressions, please.”

“Yes… Nine points.”

“Eh! You mean out of nine?”

“You’re quite audacious all of a sudden. I mean out of a hundred, of course.”

This scathing appraisal caused Emilia to drop her shoulders in dejection. However, she immediately clenched her fists tightly and looked up.

“But I’ve gotten a little better, right? How many points would I have gotten when I first started?”

“It is rather absurd that you think you would get any points at all.”

“It was that bad?!”

To begin with, even calling it singing would be an insult to the concept of songs. That was how bad it was. So compared to that, Emilia’s current level definitely got a passing grade.

“But I’m sure a passing grade is not enough to satisfy you.”

“I suppose so. I wanna work harder and become better. Also, it looks like I’m still no good with songs besides the Sword Demon’s Love Song after all…”

Scratching her cheek in an embarrassed manner, Emilia pointed out her flaws. Ram sighed at Emilia’s ambition and the enthusiasm that came with it.

At this rate, this singing practice that was supposed to be a change of pace for her might once again cause her to overexert herself, putting them back at square one.

“Very well, then let us do this every other day. You shall practice here only on a fixed schedule. Ram shall free up some time as well.”

“…You’ll do this with me? Ram, with me?”

“It would be worrisome if there wasn’t someone watching over you.”

This was what Ram truly felt, of course she also had the ulterior motive of doing it for Roswaal’s sake.

But even setting that aside—The song wasn’t bad, she thought.

“Thank you, Ram. I’ll do my best with you and bucket-sensei!”

“Please do not place Ram on the same level as that bucket.”

And with this bumpy conclusion, it was decided that for now, these nightly practice sessions would continue.

Beatrice and Rem’s Cumbersome Cleaning (Short Story Collection 2; Toranoana)

1

“Gah, I suppose.”

The moment the door was opened without a knock, the girl was greeted with that sort of voice by the room’s owner.

The girl had a face with soft, lovely features, and light blue eyes that made one think of the calm surface of a lake. Her hair, the same color as her eyes, was trimmed short, and her body was wrapped in a maid outfit that had been altered to provide more exposure. Her round eyes held both faint surprise and relief, and surprise won out for the moment.

Her gaze was directed towards the middle of the room, where someone was seated on a stepladder in the center of the forbidden library.

“Beatrice-sama, please forgive me for bothering you so late at night.”

The maid, Rem, was late in bowing her head because of her surprise—the room’s owner let out a long sigh at her.

The room’s owner was a little girl who appeared far more childlike than Rem. However, her sigh carried a curious sense of age, and was terribly mismatched with her doll-like outward appearance, which was well-suited to her gorgeous dress.

It goes without saying that judging her by human standards might itself be a mistake.

“Truly, to be visiting someone this late, you haven’t learned your manners, you know.”

“Yes, I have nothing to say for myself. But…”

“You shouldn’t say ‘But’ right after saying ‘I have nothing to say for myself’, I suppose!”

Going red in the face, and shaking her unmistakable curled hair, the little girl, Beatrice, raised her voice. While once again lowering her head at this reaction, Rem nevertheless spoke her thoughts.

“Beatrice-sama, it seems that you are more irritable than usual this evening.”

“…Well, listen to you, you know. What would you know about Betty?”

“This is only Rem’s intuition, but perhaps it’s related to a bucket?”

“…?! Wh, wha, what evidence do you have to go and say something like that, I suppose?!”

“It’s because you’re cradling that bucket so carefully, Beatrice-sama.”

“Drat, you know…!”

In a single moment, the chill in the air was dispersed by Rem’s pointed question. All that was left was Rem’s victorious look after laying hands on the truth, and Beatrice, wide-eyed after being found out.

And in Beatrice’s arms, just as Rem had pointed out, a bucket was cradled…For the last few days, there had been an important connection between the Roswaal manor and buckets.

“Rem was surprised as well. To think that you were concerned about being tone-deaf, Beatrice-sama.”

Letting out a sigh composed of surprise and admiration in equal parts, Rem nodded several times.

Beginning from the stay of the minstrel Liliana, Emilia’s tone-deafness came to light, and she began training to correct it. After that, it seems that the situation expanded further, and Beatrice’s tone-deafness came to light as collateral damage…

“Rem, too, has heard that buckets are useful for correcting tone-deafness. Honestly, when she first heard that from Subaru-kun, she was skeptical, but Emilia-sama’s ‘Sword Demon’s Love Song’ has improved markedly…Rem wishes you good luck!”

“You should really do something about the habit you have of occasionally rubbing salt in people’s wounds without realizing it, I suppose!”

“…?”

Being reprimanded after trying to offer support, Rem tilted her head to the side with a questioning look on her face. At Rem’s response, Beatrice held up the bucket while looking even more weary.

“Setting that aside! Setting that aside, it would be troubling if you were to misunderstand! It’s not like Betty is being moved to action over a meaningless measurement of this and that about singing, I suppose. I would never agree to let someone make me wear a bucket, and saying that I’m tone-deaf, well, calling that a bold-faced lie would be generous.”

“Well then, may I request a verse from ‘Sword Demon’s Love Song’?”

“Even if you request it, I won’t sing, I suppose!”

“It’s fine. As a result of Emilia-sama’s state of affairs, Rem has recently been carrying earplugs with her.”

As Rem took white earplugs from a pocket, Beatrice scowled at her. However, not wanting to get caught up in the flow of things, she firmly shook her head.

“A, anyways, Betty being tone-deaf is nothing but a lie spread by that man, I suppose. He’s trying to ensnare Betty with evil rumors, you know. You shouldn’t be deceived, I suppose.”

“…In that case, Beatrice-sama, why are you holding a bucket?”

“If you think about how a bucket is used, you’ll understand that right away, you know.”

"Besides wearing it?"

"Would you stop talking about wearing it, I suppose!"

A use for buckets besides wearing them; when she was asked that, Rem was immediately lost in thought.

Was there actually a use for them besides wearing? Recently, anyone around Rem who had been speaking of buckets was either wearing one, or trying to get someone to wear one.

"Goodness, I can't think of anything besides the usual, using it for cleaning up…"

"That's! Correct! You know! What other way to use it would there be, I suppose?!"

"I see, you really outwitted me. Nicely done, Beatrice-sama."

"I wasn't, I wasn't trying to outwit you, you know…"

As Rem showed her admiration with a curtsey, Beatrice let her shoulders sag with an exhausted expression. The little girl atop the stepladder cradled the bucket to her chest, and let out the biggest sigh yet.

"I didn't think of you as the sort of girl who would say such outlandish things, I suppose…"

"Beatrice-sama, too, has never spoken like this with Rem in the past."

"…and you never spoke so impertinently, either, you know. As well,"

Glaring reproachfully, Beatrice stared at Rem. And then, she finally drew her attention to what had been at Rem's feet, ever since she entered the forbidden library.

For her midnight visit to the forbidden library, Rem had not come empty-handed. Around her feet where several different cleaning tools, and amongst them was, of course, a bucket…

"…I'll at least ask what you've come here to do, I suppose."

"That would be to allow the bucket you are holding to be used for its original role, Beatrice-sama."

If one wasn't wearing it, then the original role of a bucket was none other than being a cleaning tool.

As Beatrice narrowed her eyes at that reply, Rem smiled faintly and announced:

"…I thought we could begin a simple top-to-bottom cleaning of the forbidden library."

2

"Simple, and yet a top-to-bottom cleaning, I have some doubts… you know."

Remaining seated on the stepladder and looking nonplussed, Beatrice mumbled quietly to herself. Paying no mind to what she heard, Rem used a feather duster to delicately brush the bookshelves that filled the forbidden library.

It was a vast, grand forbidden library. The Roswaal manor was a fairly large-scale building, but even then, fitting in a library of this size was no simple matter.

Unrestrained by real space, it was a monumental feat only made possible by mastery of shadow magic, the superspell that connected another dimension with this one, Beatrice's "Door Crossing".

In the forbidden library that was completely cut off from the influence of the outside world, it was said that even the passage of time could go unnoticed. Whether that was true or not, even the books in the forbidden library that were clearly ancient showed no sign of deterioration. For that very reason, the precious tomes remained in their original condition.

Unfortunately, Rem wasn't equipped with the sort of discerning eyes that would allow her to see their value at a glance.

“Damaging or ruining the books will not be permitted, I suppose. Be extremely careful, you know.”

“Yes, I understand. It’s only a matter of brushing off the dust, and wiping them clean.”

Without stopping her cleaning, Rem quietly responded to the cautionary words that Beatrice tossed to her.

The important point of cleaning a library was, as you’d expect, taking care not to damage the books. Paper absorbs water and oil easily. It seemed unlikely that mold would grow in the forbidden library, but if dust could accumulate then perhaps mold could grow as well. Using as little water as possible, Rem focused on using the duster.

“…”

For a short time, silence reigned in the forbidden library, broken only by the swish-swish of Rem wielding her duster. As that went on, Beatrice’s eyes were lowered to the book she had been reading, but she turned the pages slowly. Repeatedly turned back to the same page, she eventually muttered “Oh, enough” and raised her head.

“Isn’t there something you want to say to Betty, I suppose?!”

“Something from Rem to Beatrice-sama? Ah, you are adorable as always this evening, Beatrice-sama. Please be at ease. Sadly, you’re no match for nee-sama, but…”

“Why is Betty being belittled over an unrelated matter, you know?! Never mind that; don’t you think there’s anything strange about the situation where you’re being made to do the cleaning all alone?”

As Beatrice swung her legs while seated on the stepladder, Rem tilted her head with a ‘Hmm’.

Rem hadn’t the faintest idea what Beatrice was trying to say. Originally, it was the events of the bet a few days ago between Subaru and Beatrice that led her to decide on cleaning the forbidden library.

Giving Beatrice a sense of belonging in the mansion…While scratching her head at the meaning of the plan Subaru had hatched, Rem gained a chance to enter the forbidden library for the first time in a long while. At that time, there was something inappropriate to the serene space—put plainly, the air smelled of a lack of sufficient cleaning.

Since then, she'd been walking about in the mansion night after night, cautiously looking for an opportunity…

"Rem is doing just as she had wished to do, so she doesn't feel any problem in particular…"

"It looks like the servant mentality has seeped into your very bones, you know. The fact that Betty is holding a bucket is because she planned to use it…not wear it, I suppose."

"If you weren't planning to wear it, then you, too, were going to clean the library, Beatrice-sama?"

"Lately, someone's been entering and leaving the forbidden library without permission, and so the influence of the outside world has been streaming in frequently. Normally, feather-dusting is unnecessary here… that's how it should be, but despite that, well, as the librarian of the forbidden library, this is a serious state of affairs."

"…"

Mumbling and going red in the face, Beatrice spoke quickly as she strung together various reasons. Looking straight at the face of the girl who wasn't looking her way, Rem came to a sudden, strange realization.

It was unclear what sort of whim it was, but it seemed that Beatrice wanted to help with the library's cleaning. However, she was sensitive about it, and couldn't bring up the idea herself. Rem, too, was familiar with being unable to openly talk about one's own desires…In the past, she'd caused trouble for her older sister Ram time after time because of it.

Rem, who was timid and lacked courage, was saved many times by her sister's consideration and kindness. The days of trying to be a replacement for her sister were something she'd put behind her, but…

"I won't hesitate to imitate nee-sama's good points."

Even if she couldn't become her replacement, there were hundreds and hundreds of things about Ram that were worth imitating. Thinking about this moment as one of those times, Rem was able to gracefully extend her hand.

As Rem offered the hand opposite the one holding the duster, Beatrice looked down at it.

"What's this?"

"Normally, it would be very rude to ask Beatrice-sama to help out with the cleaning, but… I do understand your sense of responsibility as the librarian. So, just this once."

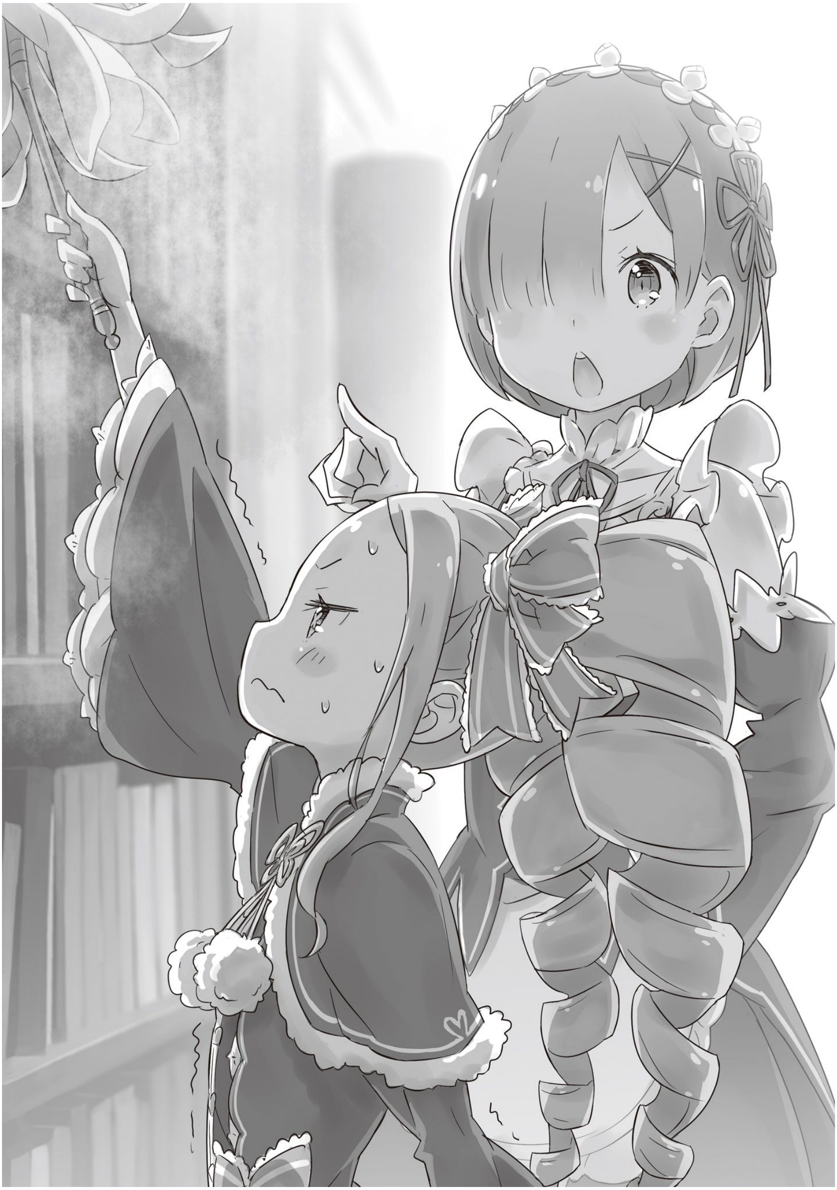
Imitating Subaru and Roswaal, Rem winked at Beatrice.

Glancing sideways at that expression, Beatrice took Rem's hand with a resigned attitude.The young girl stepped down from the stepladder, and lightly brushed the hem of her skirt.

"In that case, I'll take you up on that offer, you know. As a special exception, I suppose.It's not like I ran my mouth off about having the bucket for cleaning, and after that you actually started cleaning so I had no choice but to go along with it, you know. Don't get the wrong idea, I suppose."

"At this moment, Rem understands the circumstances of the situation better than anyone else in the world, so there's no need to worry."

As Rem nodded in response to the absurd excuse, Beatrice sniffed and took the duster from her. Holding it as she turned slowly towards a bookshelf, she began dusting violently. Rem rushed to speak up in response to the rather majestic use of the duster.



“Th, that won’t do, Beatrice-sama.If you use it that roughly…”

“…? But, to get the dust to come off, you have to use about this much strength, you know.”

“Even so, the books will be damaged! When the dust has hardened…you can remove it with an old toothbrush, like this. Ah! Please don’t move a book around holding onto just the cover…!”

“Such a fussy girl, I suppose. Really, the books of the forbidden library aren’t like the flimsy books outside it. They’re nothing but good solid books, so something like this won’t damage or break them…ah.”

Grasping the cover of a thick book, Beatrice had been shaking it violently. A fairly dramatic sound occurred near her hand, and the contents of the book fell completely out, leaving the cover behind.The dislodged pages scattered on the floor.

An unpleasant silence settled over that scene, and Beatrice cleared her throat.

“Well, this sort of thing happens now and then, you know.”

“Where did the sense of responsibility of the forbidden library’s librarian go…No, thinking back calmly about it, it does seem like Beatrice-sama has always been throwing and stepping on her books…”

As she thought back on it, Rem didn’t have that many memories of interacting with Beatrice. However, even with her scarce experiences with setting foot inside the forbidden library, between the numerous books piled on the floor, and the books that had been thrown at Subaru over these last few weeks, she’s seen poor treatment of the books fairly frequently.

“Beatrice-sama, this isn’t good. With this, the great spirit will be upset with you as well.”

“Thi…this has nothing to do with Bubby, I suppose! On top of that, if Betty isn't good enough, then what about that foolish girl? Bubby never scolds her, I suppose."

"That's because Emilia-sama's way of doing things is simply a bit masculine; she can still manage most things."

The topic of Emilia's life skills came up, but Rem's evaluation of her was exactly as she said. Further, Emilia made no excuses for her limitations. Rem envied her in that.

Setting that aside…

"While it may be presumptuous, it seems there's no choice but for Rem to give Beatrice-sama some guidance."

"There's not really any need to get so serious about it…"

"It simply won't do. Once you've decided to do it, do it properly. Rem, too, wouldn't want to do something halfway. Let's get cracking!"

While Beatrice suddenly began to have second thoughts, Rem approached with a serious look on her face, and announced that. A sense of responsibility filled her chest, and Subaru's voice echoed in the back of her mind. Studying letters, doing odd jobs around the mansion; when Rem stood in for Ram as the one in charge of guiding him, he would call her this.

"Tonight, Rem is Beatrice-sama's 'Spartan demon instructor'."

"I don't think you understand what that means, you know!"

"It appears that Subaru-kun is fond of demons, so it probably means something very good. Now I'm blushing. But blushing aside, let's Sparta."

"nga~h! What a turn of events, I suppose!"

With her pale blue eyes burning brightly, Rem caught Beatrice as she attempted to flee. Then, turning up the sleeves on the little girl's dress, she gave her a duster and a dry cloth.

“Firstly, cleaning must be done from the top. It’s far more than can be done in a single day, so even when Rem isn’t here, please do your best and keep working at it, Beatrice-sama.”

“A~h, why did it turn out like this? …This, that, and all of it, it’s all his fault, you know.”

Pushing Beatrice onward as she pouted, Rem instructed the little girl in everything she needed to know about “Library Cleaning”.

Under that demon instructor’s Sparta, the librarian who had served for so long was rebuked time after time—each time, she ended up cursing the black-haired young man.

Felt’s Job
(Volume 1; Gamers)

1

“…So I’d like for you to pick up the dragon-shaped insignia from that woman. The reward will be ten holy gold coins… would this be enough for you to take the job?”

It couldn’t be better. I shook hands with the black-clothed woman whom had made the request.

For all her feigned absent-mindedness, she’s got a tracking gaze that’s like a snake, I thought.

Still, this is the slums, so there ain’t any nice people who’d ask ta steal stuff around here.

I didn’t ask for the details of the circumstances, since we had a tacit agreement that I didn’t need to know.

That’s why we only spoke about the target’s appearance and location whereabouts, where to deliver the stolen goods, and parted without any other questions. …Ta be honest, I should be happy about that.

After all, it’s an important job worth ten holy gold coins. It’s a large bounty that’s ton more than ma savings from doing odd jobs up until this point, I can’t let this chance get away.

In this world, if you want to do anything, you need money. You need money to be happy.

I refuse ta spend ma last days in this den of losers. I’ll definitely get outta here someday, I’ve had enough with living in such a gloomy place.

“With this reward and my savings, I…”

I won’t have ta sneak around in the shadows of the capital. I can go out in the open without worries.

It won’t just be me, definitely someday…

2

This city that I was born and raised in is apparently the biggest one in the kingdom, and is called “the capital.” Honestly, even if I didn’t know about the other cities, I still would’ve considered this city too big.

Still, even though I live in the capital, it’s at the bottom rung slums—a stupid place where shadows gather. The world of the capital sure lacks glamour.

This is how I would best describe the capital. The aristocrat district is where rich people’s homes are lined up, and a place where I could earn some small change by sneaking around; the commoner district beneath is a world’s difference; and the shopping district is filled with greedy shops that would do anything to even earn a single copper coin. Lastly, below everyone are people like us from the slums, who desperately try and steal from those above us.

Weaklings become food, that’s the ironclad rule of this world. This is even more so in the slums, where you can only rely on your own strength to survive. In my case, I used my agile hands to steal from other people’s pockets.

At first, they were petty jobs like stealing a coin purse from someone I passed by on the streets. At some point, I broadened out and began working by stealing based on people’s requests.

By the time I realized it, I had become a master thief. I was no longer doing it just to earn money, I was working for the sake of a greater goal. Step by step, I was getting closer to it, I was sure of it.

…Then this important job happened to land in my lap, and now I’m one step away from my goal.

Ten holy gold coins. Of course, the higher the reward, the more difficult it is ta steal. But I’m not carefree enough ta be scared of something like that. It’s a great chance ta escape from the slums, and that’s good enough.

Then…

“-is it really alright to go for that woman full of openings?”

Hearing that conversation held at the street, I turned my head to look for the woman described.

White clothes with golden birds woven on it, and long, dazzling silver hair. Even though her clothes and appearances are uncommon and eye-catching, ma attention seems to be elsewhere.

“She’s sorta jumpy… like she came from da countryside.”

The woman was looking around restlessly as she carefully walked along the edge of the street. Since I was also rotten and raised in the capital, I could tell at a glance who was unfamiliar with the capital, and was therefore easy prey.

My intuition from my many years of experience told me that she was obviously a country bumpkin. She gave off the feeling that she was not cautious of her surroundings, but rather, worried about being swallowed by the crowd. …Her defenselessness is enough ta make me want ta hold my head in anguish.

“Just as I thought, she gathered a bunch of us to go after Ms. Grey…”

Keeping my distance while tailing the woman, the faces I saw a moment ago started appearing on the streets.

They’re the same as me, thieves with their target set on this defenseless woman. It’s only natural for ruffians ta congregate in a flash towards someone who’s that unaccustomed ta the capital. It’s a painful lesson she’s going ta have to learn.

“For you guys, stealing that might mean today’s grub money, but if I get it, I’m swaggering away with ten holy gold coins!”

I was seriously troubled on how I could properly threaten them so that they would leave. Well, since so many of these guys are terrible at tailing, it would be easy ta just stick a knife in one of their backs.

But right before I got ready to act… "…?"

One of the men tailing the woman had a puzzled look on his face as he looked around. He then tilted his head, changed directions, and disappeared down the streets as if he had forgotten about the woman.

If that was the only case, it was simply a matter of the man realizing his inexperience and withdrawing, but when others also began leaving as well, that's another story.

"Wha…? Why did every single one of them disappear?"

When I realized it, all the people whom I thought were going to pursue the woman had vanished.

Only two people remained. The carefree woman, completely oblivious to having just been targeted by a group of people, and I, who had maintained a careful distance while following.

Confused about what had just happened, I studied the woman from behind. Staring, staring, staring… and suddenly, the woman's figure looked blurry. I shook my head.

"What was that just now…?"

What a strange feeling. I think it might be magic or something.

Old Man Rom told me stories about how this world has mirrors that can talk ta people from far away, flying clowns, and even walls that people can walk through. That woman can probably use those kinds of magic.

"So that's why she could walk around the capital while being so defenseless… Shit, this is bad."

In front of me was a woman casually strolling around the capital, but unlike before, looking at her back from afar now sent shivers up my spine.

As expected of ten holy gold coins, it won’t let me have it that easily.

“Alright, if that’s how you’re gonna be, I won’t lose to you. I’ll definitely get that insignia…”

Fired up again, I was about to clench my hands and chase after the woman when I found myself taken aback. That was because…

“Oh, I’m sorry.”

She was shyly apologizing to some bastard who had bumped into her on the street. It seems like she’s embarrassed because she wasn’t paying attention in front of her, but that wasn’t the case. That other guy did it on purpose.

At that moment, that person had quickly stolen the woman’s coin purse. “What’s even happening?! Argh, shit! It can’t be helped then!” Scratching my head in frustration, I reluctantly ran forward.

The one I ran after was not the woman who was merrily touring the capital, but rather, the man who took the purse from the woman.

Seeing him pull ahead even though we had the same aim hurts ma reputation.

Plus, if the requested insignia is in that purse… This is the worst possible outcome.

Even if I were ta look away for a bit, it would be hard ta miss someone who stands out as much as her. So I should prioritize the thug who would not be easily found once he enters the slums…

“His movements aren’t bad, but the alleyways are like ma backyard ta me.”

His ability to slip into the crowd was amateurish compared to mine, so I had planned on cornering him somewhere unobtrusive by waiting at the end of the alley he escaped towards.

“…Looks like you meddled with someone quite out of your league.”

But it seemed like there was a scary old gramps holding an awfully magnificent sword at the throat of the thug.

From head to toe, the old gramps was in a nicely tailored black formal wear. And though he seemed calm relative to the contents of the words he spoke, that calm impression was offset by savageness of the upheld sword.

Above all else, his body emitted a distinct aura—something unique to extremely dangerous people.

Very occasionally will the capital get these people who give off this sort of vibe, and I hate it. They might be disguised as a patrol guard, or act as a shopping district store's security… this old gramps is also one of them.

"Take out what you stole. If you do that, I shall let you go."

He had a smile on his face, but his eyes showed no signs of joy as he spoke.

The bastard being glared at probably already looked inside, I thought, as the man hurriedly placed the coin purse onto the outstretched hand of the old gramps, and sprinted away as soon as the sword left his throat.

Conversely, I failed to escape, and was left with no choice but to stand there with a stunned "what should I do" look.

"It looks like you had the same idea, Miss." I gulped.

The old gramps standing in front of me gently looked down, but I couldn't see his smile as anything other than malicious. I genuinely thought I was going to be eaten.

"What a sharp child. It seems I still have much to learn… Now then, here."

After saying that, the old gramps handed the purse over to me. I quickly accepted it, and was surprised by how light it was compared to what I expected.
